The court also refused to allow the following: "What impression did the reading of these articles make on your mind? Counsel then asked: Could you enter upon the trial of this case with the presumption that the defendant is innocent until he was proved guilty, or would you enter upon the trial presuming that defendant is guilty, and desiring to see him vindicated by the testimony of the witnesses here? Answer. I don't think I could. Question by Counsel for the Defense. That is, you don't think you could enter upon the trial of the case with the belief that the defendant is innocent? A. No, sir. Q. by Counsel for Defense. Do you think you could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial? A. I think I could, notwithstanding I have an opinion from what I have heard and read. It would take good evidence to remove that opinion. Q. In other words, you would be of opinion that defendant is guilty until he had proved himself innocent; isn't that the exact state of your mind?" Objected to as being irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.

All of these rulings against the defendant were duly excepted to, and the juror was challenged for actual bias. The juror proceeded to say further, in reply to the district attorney, that he could and would give the defendant a fair trial, etc. The court denied the challenge, and the defendant exhausted all of his peremptory challenges before the panel was completed.

The precise question before the court was as to the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror which would or might prevent him from acting with entire impartiality, and without prejudice to the rights of defendant. It was evident the juror had a fixed opinion as to the guilt of defendant, which he said would require good evidence to remove. The purposes of the attempted examination was to ascertain, so far as possible, the extent of this opinion, its character, and whether it resulted to any extent from prejudice against defendant or his case. We think the examination was proper, and that the court erred in sustaining the objections of the district attorney. This matter was discussed in the case of People v. Hamilton, 62 Cal. 377. The precise point here made was, perhaps, not involved in that case, but we are satisfied with the reasoning upon this subject in that opinion.

Misapprehension upon this seems to have arisen from the fact of the former practice under a different statute, and the decisions based upon it. The former statute made an unqualified opinion upon the subject of defendant's guilt a disqualification, without reference to the state of the juror's mind in other respects. Of course, on such an issue, it was not important to know whether the opinion was favorable or unfavorable. But even then, when the challenge for actual bias was interposed, it was competent to ask the questions here excluded. Now, the whole inquiry is made upon the challenge for actual bias, and is not confined to the question as to whether the juror has a fixed opinion or not, but extends to all matter of prejudice which would tend to establish that the juror would not be impartial. Entertaining a fixed opinion that the defendant is guilty would seem, under the present statute, to be sufficient to sustain a challenge, unless the court finds something else, to-wit, that he can and will act fairly and impartially upon the matters to be submitted to him. The court is not bound to take the simple statement of the juror upon these matters, but counsel have a right to make such inquiries as will bring out the character and force of the conviction he has. How else can the court determine whether he is able, notwithstanding his prejudice, to act fairly and impartially?

The other question raised may not arise upon the new trial, or, if it should, the circumstances may be very different. The cases upon the subject are very numerous, and from them it is very difficult, probably impossible, to deduce any rule or body of rules which would satisfactorily indicate when a witness may be allowed to give his opinion. A decision of this question, therefore, which may not again arise, would serve no practical end.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HALEY v. HALEY. (No. 11,778.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1887.)

1. DIVORCE—GROUNDS OF—CHARGE OF UNCHASTITY.

A charge by a husband, in a cross-bill filed by him for divorce, that his wife was pregnant by some one other than himself when he married her, and that she concealed the fact from him, tends to cause the wife "grievous mental suffering," and is a sufficient ground to sustain a subsequent bill by the wife, where it appears that the charge was false and malicious, and that the husband's bill was dismissed.¹

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The provision of Civil Code Cal. § 130, that "no divorce can be granted upon the uncorroborated * * * testimony of the parties," has no application to a case where the wife seeks a divorce on the ground of a false and malicious charge against her by the husband of concealed pregnancy by another man at marriage, although she is the only witness who gave testimony as to what her feelings about the charge were. Where the court finds that the charge was false, and there is nothing in the record to negative the fact that the wife is a pure and virtuous woman, the presumption is that such a charge had its natural effect on such a woman, and caused her "grievous mental suffering."

3. SAME—DECREE—ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGMENT TO WIFE.

Where the court, upon decreeing a divorce in favor of the wife, finds that there is a judgment outstanding against her in favor of the husband, and that the judgment, which was wrongfully rendered, was for money which he had given her in consideration of the relinquishment by her of her rights in the homestead, so that he might sell it, the court may order the judgment to be assigned to her.

4. ESTOPPEL—JUDGMENT—DIVORCE.

A decree dismissing a bill filed by the wife for divorce, and also dismissing the husband's cross-bill, because the charges of neither party had been sustained, does not operate as an estoppel upon the wife to bring another bill against the husband on the ground that the charges in his cross-bill, which the court had found to be false, amounted to cruel and inhuman treatment.²

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

In 1884, some time between June 7th, at which date the parties were married, and September 19th, Presentacion B. De Haley, respondent, commenced suit in the superior court of Los Angeles county against her husband, Salisbury Haley, appellant, for divorce. The bill was based upon a charge of "cruel and inhuman treatment, in that he had accused her of having committed adultery." This suit, which is known and referred to in this statement as No. 3,449, resulted October 7, 1884, in a decree in favor of the wife of absolute divorce. A motion was made by the husband, December 16, 1884, for a new trial, which was overruled, and an appeal was thereupon taken to the supreme court, which, May 14, 1885, reversed the superior court, and granted a new trial. Haley v. Haley, 7 Pac. Rep. 3. The motion for the new trial in the superior court was supported, in part, by the affidavit of the husband set out below. On May 8, 1885, the husband filed a bill for divorce against the wife. The substance of this bill is also set out below. This bill was dismissed, on advice of counsel, May 13, 1885, pending the appeal in No. 3,449. When the remittitur in that case reached the superior court, the husband filed a cross-complaint containing the substance of the bill filed by him May 8, 1885, and subsequently dismissed. A supplemental complaint was filed by the wife, June 17, 1885, setting out the affidavit used by the husband on his motion for a new trial, and the bill filed by him, May 8, 1885, and alleging statements by him to various persons that his wife was pregnant by some one other than himself, and that she had had a child by some other than himself. This bill was demurred to, and the demurrer was sustained. The court (BRUNSON, J.,) found January 14, 1886, as a matter of fact, among other things, "that defendant, during said marriage, and before plaintiff left his house, never accused her of being pregnant by some or any man other than himself, or desiring to have sexual intercourse with some or any man other than himself; nor did he taunt or accuse her of committing adultery, or of desiring to commit adultery with some or any man other than himself." As to the cross-complaint of the husband, the court found, among other things, "that at the time of said marriage, June 7, 1884, plaintiff was not actually or at all pregnant with child by the paternity of any individual." The complaint and cross-complaint were thereupon dismissed, and the divorce refused.

The wife then filed this bill, alleging in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 as follows:

"Fourth. Plaintiff alleges that, since said marriage was consummated, the said defendant has treated the plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner, and particularly in this: On or about the sixteenth day of December, 1884, the said defendant filed in this court an affidavit, verified by himself, in a certain action then and there pending between plaintiff and himself, which said affidavit was thereafter read by and made known to a number of persons, and is in words and figures, to-wit:

"IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

"Presentacion Haley, Plaintiff, vs. S. Haley, Defendant.

"S. Haley, being duly sworn, deposes and says that on December 12, 1884, the plaintiff in this action arrived from San Francisco, since which time affiant has seen her numerous times, and finds that she is in an advanced state of pregnancy; and, as she appears to affiant, she is from six to seven months advanced in pregnancy; that affiant first discovered that she was pregnant in July last past, in seeing that her belly, breasts, and feet were swelling, of her having nausea in the morning, since which time affiant, on every occasion of seeing her, discovered that she was advancing in pregnancy, and on the fourth of October, at the trial of this cause, affiant discovered unmistakable signs of pregnancy in plaintiff. Affiant and plaintiff intermarried June 7, 1884, and affiant had no connection with plaintiff until June 19, 1884.

"S. HALEY.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this sixteenth day of December, 1884.

"A. W. POTTS, Clerk.

"By A. RIMPAU, Deputy Clerk.'

"All of which statements in said affidavit contained were wholly and absolutely false and malicious, and became known to many persons in this community, and were communicated to this plaintiff, by reason whereby she suffered grievous mental pain and anguish.

"Fifth. Plaintiff further alleges that on or about the eighth day of May, 1885, defendant caused to be prepared and filed in this court a complaint in a certain action entitled 'Salisbury Haley vs. Presentacion Ballestero De Haley,' in which said complaint he charges plaintiff, to-wit: 'That heretofore, to-wit, on the seventh day of June, 1884, the plaintiff and defendant were intermarried as husband and wife. Now plaintiff shows to the court and avers that the defendant, by his inducement of this plaintiff to enter into marriage with her, perpetrated a grievous fraud upon this plaintiff, and that the defendant did willfully deceive and cheat this plaintiff as to the defendant's capacity to fulfill the duties, obligations, and ordinary incidents of marriage, in this: That at the time of the intermarriage of plaintiff and defendant, on the seventh day of June, 1884, as aforesaid, this defendant was in fact, unknown and unsuspected by this plaintiff, actually pregnant with child by some person other than this plaintiff, and that this plaintiff was entirely ignorant of the fact of this defendant's pregnancy at the time of the intermarriage of plaintiff and defendant as aforesaid. And plaintiff avers that such pregnancy of this defendant was not by this plaintiff, and plaintiff avers that he never had sexual intercourse with defendant prior to the marriage of plaintiff and defendant on the seventh day of June, 1884, as aforesaid.'

"Sixth. That each and every of said allegations and statements were false, unfounded, and malicious, and were made by the said defendant for the sole purpose of grieving the said plaintiff, and that, before the commencement of this action, the same were made known to this plaintiff, and that thereby she was subjected to great shame, and to grievous mental anguish and suffering, and was made sick, and her life rendered miserable and wretched. Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment."

There was a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. The husband then filed a cross-complaint, alleging desertion. On May 3, 1886, the court passed a decree dissolving the marriage, allowing the wife to resume her maiden name, and awarding her $1,500 and costs. The decree was based on the following findings of facts:

"(1) That all the allegations of the complaint herein are true, and that the articles set forth in said complaint as cause of action are complete, are not misleading, nor are they mutilated.

"(2) The judgment made and entered in the action of P. B. De Haley vs. S. Haley on January 14, 1886, in said court, was not and is not an adjudication of any of the matters charged in the cross-complaint in this action, or of any of the issues tendered thereby.

"(3) That on the eighth day of April, 1886, the defendant herein filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff praying for a decree of divorce upon the ground of desertion.

"(4) That the allegation of desertion pleaded in said cross-complaint is true.

"(5) That plaintiff and defendant intermarried on the seventh day of June, 1884, at the city and county of Los Angeles, state of California; that after said marriage, and on the same day, the defendant filed his homestead declaration upon certain lands and premises situated in said city of Los Angeles, and upon which he and the said plaintiff then resided; that said homestead declaration was in all respects duly made, certified, and recorded as the law required; that on the trial of the cause of P. B. De Haley vs. S. Haley, (No. 3,449,) this court awarded to the defendant, S. Haley, the said homestead, and to the plaintiff, P. B. De Haley, the sum of $1,500, for and on account of her interest therein; that subsequent to said decree, and while the same was in full force, the said S. Haley, being desirous of selling said homestead property, paid to the plaintiff herein the said sum of $1,500, whereupon, and by reason of such payment, this plaintiff made, executed, and delivered her abandonment of said homestead in due form of law, and quitclaimed all her right, title, and interest therein, as directed by the said S. Haley. Thereafter the said judgment was, on appeal to the supreme court, reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and said action was thereafter, and after the filing in this court of the remittitur from the supreme court, tried, and the prayer of the complaint denied; that subsequent to such determination of said action, the said S. Haley commenced an action in this court against the plaintiff herein for the recovery of the said sum of $1,500 so as aforesaid awarded to her in lieu of her interest in the said homestead property, and the action herein last above referred to came on regularly for trial, and thereupon, to-wit, on the twenty-first day of April, 1886, a judgment in favor of S. Haley, plaintiff, and against the said P. B. De Haley, defendant, was duly made, given, and entered; and it appearing to the court that the money for which said last-named judgment was given, equitably and of right represented the interest of the said P. B. De Haley in and to the homestead so declared as hereinbefore found, it is further found that plaintiff herein is entitled to have awarded to her, as and for her interest in the estate and homestead of the defendant, S. Haley, the said judgment of $1,500 and costs, and the whole thereof, rendered as aforesaid on, to-wit, the twenty-first day of April, 1886."

The husband thereupon took this appeal.

S. Haley and D. Lyons, for appellant. Hupp & Glowner, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Mrs. Haley instituted an action for divorce against her husband, Salisbury Haley. She alleged and proved that, in a former action for divorce instituted by him against her, he had, in his pleading and affidavits filed in the cause, charged her falsely and maliciously, and for the purpose of grieving her, with having been pregnant at the time of their marriage by a man other than himself, and that she had concealed her condition from him, and by such concealment induced him to marry her. The averments of the complaint were found to be true.

We think that such a charge tends to cause "grievous mental suffering," and comes within the rule laid down in Powelson v. Powelson, 22 Cal. 358. The plaintiff testified that it did in fact cause her grievous mental suffering. It is contended, however, that, inasmuch as no other witness gave evidence as to what her feelings were, her testimony on this point is uncorroborated. But the court finds that the charges were false, and there is nothing in the record to negative the fact that Mrs. Haley was a pure and virtuous woman. This being the case, we think the presumption is that the charge had its natural and usual consequence, and that it is no more necessary to prove that it induces suffering than to prove that bodily injury is followed by pain. The court was entirely justified in its finding on that point.

The judgment made and entered in a former action between these same parties was not such an adjudication of the matters set up by the cross-complaint in the present action as would bar the plaintiff's right of recovery; for, although Mr. Haley's charges against his wife of a want of chastity, etc., had been previously passed upon by the trial court in the former action, yet that court found adversely to him on the point, and repudiated the charge as being untrue. Therefore it would be a violation of Mrs. Haley's legal right to say that because her husband had in that first action made groundless and cruel charges against her, on which the court had fixed the seal of disbelief, that she, in this action, may not, by her complaint, make such charges so made the proper basis of present judicial inquiry, with a view to determine whether such conduct on his part did or not entitle her to seek for and obtain a divorce from him.

We perceive no error in the trial court's assigning to her the judgment for $1,500, which her husband had formerly obtained against her; for to enforce that judgment would have been inequitable, since the money, which was the basis of the action wherein that judgment was recovered, had been voluntarily given to her by him on the settlement of a former suit, and he had no just right to recover it back.

Upon the whole record, we observe no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte MCCARTHY. (No. 20,314.)

VAGRANCY—COMPLAINT.

Where the acts relied upon to establish vagrancy are that the accused was "an idle and dissolute person, who wandered and roamed * * * about the streets of the city at late and unusual hours of the night," the complaint is sufficient to charge the offense under Pen. Code Cal. § 647, defining who are "vagrants." If it sets out those facts, it need not allege that the person prosecuted is "without visible means of support," and, having "the physical ability to work, does not, for the space of 10 days, seek employment, nor labor when employment is offered."

On habeas corpus.

M. S. Wert and Martin Quinlan, for petitioner. E. B. Stonehill, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The petitioner, Alice McCarthy, was convicted of vagrancy in the police court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and upon an appeal to the superior court the judgment was affirmed. She now asks to be discharged upon the ground that the complaint against her stated no offense of which the court could take jurisdiction, and hence that the judgment is void.

The substance of so much of the complaint as is necessary to be stated is that Alice McCarthy, on and from the twenty-sixth day of April to the twenty-sixth day of May, 1887, at the city and county of San Francisco, committed a misdemeanor, and during said period "willfully and unlawfully was, has been, and during said time continued to be, and still is, an idle and dissolute person, who wanders and roams, and has during said time wandered and roamed, about the streets of said city and county at late and unusual hours of the night."

Section 647 of the Penal Code, under which petitioner was convicted, specifies various acts as constituting vagrancy, among which are common prostitutes, common drunkards, etc., including, also, idle and dissolute persons who wander and roam about the streets, etc., using the language of the complaint herein. The first clause of the section is in the following language: "Every person (except a California Indian) without visible means of living, who has the physical ability to work, and who does not for space of ten days seek employment, nor labor when employment is offered him, every healthy beggar who solicits alms as a business, * * * is a vagrant."

The contention of petitioner is that the statute is to be construed in the light of this first clause, and as though its requirements were repeated in connection with each of the other acts defined as constituting vagrancy, and that to charge a defendant with being a common drunkard, a healthy beggar, an associate of known thieves, etc., is not sufficient to constitute him a vagrant, without further charging him to be without visible means of living, etc. I do not so construe the statute. It enumerates in several groups certain acts which shall constitute vagrancy, and he or she who is guilty of the acts thus enumerated in any one of these groups is liable to the penalty of the statute.

People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 508. The complaint charges all of the acts specified in one of these groups, and is therefore sufficient. The fact that it states, in addition, some of the acts specified in other and independent groups of the same section does not invalidate it.

The case of People v. Forbes, 4 Parker, Crim. R. 611, relied on by petitioner's counsel, is not in point. In that case the defendant was shown to have been convicted as a vagrant in this, to-wit: "That she is a common prostitute and idle person." In that state (New York) there were two separate statutes under which a conviction of vagrancy could be had. One applied to "all common prostitutes who had no lawful employment whereby to maintain themselves," under which the defendant was presumed to have been convicted, and as the record only showed that she was a common prostitute, etc., and failed to show or charge that she was "without lawful employment," etc., it was held sufficient. Under our statute, as was well said in that case, every word which defines the class or makes a part of the description, is material and important, but those words which go to define any other class of vagrants need not be inserted. The doctrine of People v. Forbes, supra, applies to those of the charges set out in the complaint which fail to state all the requisite facts to constitute vagrancy, but has no application to the charge against defendant herein quoted, which, standing alone, is sufficient to maintain and uphold the judgment.

The court had jurisdiction of the prisoner, and she was convicted of an offense within the statute. The prayer of the petitioner is denied, and she is remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

PEOPLE v. WATSON. (No. 20,282.)

LARCENY—ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP.

Where the information charges larceny from the person of one "Lizzie G.," and that the property was the personal property of "Lizzie G.," it is sufficient, under Pen. Code Cal. § 956, providing that "an erroneous allegation as to the person injured * * * is not material" when the "offense * * * is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act," although "Lizzie G." was a married woman, and the property stolen was bought with the money of her husband.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Indictment for grand larceny.

J. T. Rogers, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of grand larceny of a purse. The information charges larceny from the person of one Lizzie Golden, and that the property taken was the personal property of Lizzie Golden. On the trial the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if they find the said Lizzie Golden, at the time of the larceny, was a married woman, and that the purse was bought with the money of her husband, they should acquit the defendant. The court not only refused the instruction, but gave instructions of an exactly opposite effect.

Section 956, Penal Code, seems to settle this appeal: "When an offense involves the commission of, or the attempt to commit, a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, is not material." In this case there can be no question whatever as to the sufficiency of the description to identify the act.

The order and judgment are affirmed.

SCAMMON v. DENIO. (No. 11,909.)*(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1887.)1. CONTRACT—FOR BUILDING—ACTION.

In an action to recover for building a house for defendant under a contract, the court refused to allow for extra work claimed to have been done, the contract providing that claims for extras should be submitted to arbitration, and deducted the expense incurred by defendant in completing the house, plaintiff having refused, upon notice, to complete it, in which case defendant, under the contract, had a right to do so himself; held, that there was no error.

2. COSTS—OFFER OF JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 997, providing for the entry of judgment upon an offer of compromise, if accepted within five days, and, in case plaintiff does not accept the offer, and fails to recover more than the amount of it, that he shall pay the costs from the date of the offer, plaintiff is not affected by an offer, not accepted by him, in case the trial comes on, and is concluded within five days after the making of the offer.

Appeal from superior court, county of Los Angeles.

Action to recover balance due on building contract, and to enforce a lien.

Barclay, Wilson & Redick, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by appellant (plaintiff in the court below) to recover $1,348.10, the alleged balance due upon a written contract by which appellant was to build a house for respondent, and to enforce a mechanic's lien against the house and premises on which it was erected. The court gave judgment to appellant for $483.72 only, and without costs or attorney's fee, and also gave judgment for respondent for all costs which accrued after the date of a certain offer to compromise herein-after mentioned. The judgment provides for the enforcement of the lien for the amount above stated. Appellant appeals from that portion of the judgment which allows him only $483.72, and also from that portion of it which denies him costs and attorney's fees, and gives costs to respondent. The case was tried without a jury.

1. Appellant complains of the refusal of the court to consider evidence about certain extra work and materials which he claims to have done and furnished during the construction of the house. But the court finds that the contract provides that claims for such extras should be submitted to arbitration, and that appellant made no request or offer to so submit them, and the finding is apparently correct. The court finds that appellant neglected and refused, after notice, to furnish workmen and materials to finish the house, and that respondent was compelled to furnish, and did furnish, the same at an expense of $58.45, which sum the court allowed respondent. This ruling is assigned as error. The court finds that respondent was allowed to do this by the contract; and, as the whole contract was introduced in evidence, although only a part of it is put into the transcript, we see no error in the finding. It does not appear that this expenditure comes within the arbitration clause of the contract, as contended by appellant. We think, therefore, that the judgment of the court below, as to amount found due, should not be disturbed.

2. On the day of the trial of the action, which was the day on which it regularly came on to be heard, but before the trial had actually commenced, respondent served on appellant a notice in writing offering to allow him to take judgment for the sum of $500; and, as appellant finally recovered a little less than $500, the court refused to allow him any costs, and gave judgment to respondent for costs accruing after the date of the offer. This ruling was made in supposed pursuance of section 997 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But that section, after providing for such an offer of compromise, proceeds as follows: "If the plaintiff accept the offer, and give notice thereof within five days, he may file the offer, with proof of notice of acceptance, and the clerk must thereupon enter judgment accordingly. If the acceptance be not given, the offer is to be deemed withdrawn, and cannot be given in evidence upon the trial; and, if the plaintiff fail to obtain a more favorable judgment, he cannot recover costs, but must pay defendant's costs from the time of the offer."

It will be observed that this section requires no affirmative action on the part of a plaintiff unless he elects to accept the offer, and then he must give and file a notice of acceptance. There is no provision for an affirmative refusal to accept, and he may give and file the notice at any time within five days. The offer, therefore, has no effect whatever until after the expiration of five days, unless before that plaintiff accepts in the mode provided. It is clear that the Code does not mean that a plaintiff, on the very eve of a trial, with his witnesses perhaps all present, and his expenses nearly all incurred, shall, on the spur of the moment, be forced to determine at once the important question whether he shall yield a part of what he may consider a just and legal claim, or run the hazard of losing all his costs and necessary disbursements, and having judgment against him for costs of the other party. The clear meaning is that he shall have five days in which to consider the proposal made by the defendant. And if, in the mean time, without acceptance by plaintiff in the manner prescribed, the trial shall have regularly progressed and been concluded, the offer of compromise, as against plaintiff, simply goes for naught. Whether or not, in such a case, after the trial had progressed, and plaintiff had discovered his case to be much weaker than he supposed, he could stop at any time, within the five days, and accept the offer, is a question that does not present itself here; but a case can easily be imagined where the question would be an exceedingly interesting one to a defendant who sought an advantage by serving the offer to compromise on the eve of trial. The above views are entertained by the courts of New York with respect to a similar provision in the Code of that state. Herman v. Lyons, 10 Hun, 111; Pomeroy v. Hulin, 7 How. Pr. 161; Walker v. Johnson, 8 How. Pr. 240.

It is true that the court found that appellant refused to accept the offer; but, in the first place, there is no provision for a refusal, except by a failure to serve and file a notice of acceptance, which may be done at any time within five days; and, in the second place, there is no evidence at all to support the finding. It was evidently based upon the mere fact that appellant proceeded to trial. But he had the right to go to trial on the day regularly set for it, and within the five days, without regard to respondent's offer. He could treat it at that time as of no avail. Section 1195, Code Civil Proc., provides that, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the plaintiff may recover as costs money paid for recording the lien and a reasonable attorney's fee. The court found that the expense of recording was $7.70, and that $100 was a reasonable attorney's fee.

It is ordered, therefore, that the parts of the judgment which adjudge that plaintiff do not recover any costs, disbursements, or attorney's fees, and that defendant recover her costs accruing after the date of the offer of compromise be reversed, and the superior court is directed to modify its judgment so as to adjudge to appellant his costs, including his expenses for recording his lien and his attorney's fee of $100, as found by the court, and so as to direct the sheriff to apply the proceeds of the sale of the premises to the satisfaction of the amount found due appellant, viz., $483.72, together with his costs, including said expense of recording his lien, and his said attorney's fee, and not to apply any of said proceeds to the costs of respondent. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

LASSEN CO. v. CONE. (No. 11,877.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1887.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LICENSE TAX—DISCRIMINATION.

A so-called license tax, levied by a board of supervisors on all sheep pastured in the county, from which those who list their sheep, and pay taxes on them, in said county, are exempted, held unconstitutional, under section 21, art. 1, Const. Cal., forbidding grants of special immunities and privileges, as a discrimination against sheep-owners in other counties.¹

Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Chipman & Garter and E. V. Spencer, for appellants. E. R. Dodge, and A. L. Shinn, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered against Cone, in favor of Lassen county, whereby there was recovered from him a certain sum of money, viz., \$500, being $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents upon each of 20,000 sheep, which he had pastured in that county, and for the further sum of \$100, as a penalty in not paying the first-named sum, which, by an ordinance passed before that time by the board of supervisors of said county, had been denominated a license tax.

The county claims the right to collect such license fee and penalty by virtue of section 35, part 27, of the county government act, the portion of which, as it is alleged, that gives power to make and enforce such an ordinance, being in these words: "To license for purposes of regulation and revenue all and every kind of business not prohibited by law." Deering, Pol. Code, 845.

The ordinance under consideration, as we think, discriminates in favor of those engaged in the business of raising sheep in Lassen county, as against persons who raise sheep and pay taxes upon them in other counties in the state, and, although denominated a license tax upon business, is in reality a tax upon property. It levies a tax of $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per head upon all sheep which are pastured in that county, for any period of time during any given year, which tax is, however, not to be paid by those who list their sheep as taxable property in that county, and pay taxes on them as such. Thus it undertakes to force sheep-raisers from another county of the state to pay a tax upon property in Lassen county upon which they had already paid a property tax in another county, where it is listed and assessed for taxation. If this is a mere police regulation, why excuse those of the same class from paying it, if they pay a property tax upon it to Lassen county?

Does not this appear as if the two taxes were considered by the board of supervisors as interchangeable and similar? The sheep-raiser of Lassen county need not pay the so-called license tax, if he will pay in lieu thereof the property tax levied and assessed. Taxes for revenue is what the county wants, and to get it, as against those who do not have their property listed and assessed in that county, it levies upon the property of residents of other counties, who have already paid a tax upon it for revenue in their own county, that which is called a license tax, i. e., $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents upon each head of sheep that Cone grazes in Lassen county for a few months in the year, (upon his own land mainly,) upon which he has already for that year paid full property taxes in Tehama county.

It appears to us clear that this ordinance cannot be regarded as a police regulation, and that, so far as the defendant is concerned, it is a discrimination against him upon his property, as a citizen of this state, which is not applied to others of his class, and that it grants an immunity to the same class of persons in Lassen county which is not given to the defendant as one of that class. We are of opinion, therefore, that the ordinance in question is violative of that part of section 21, art. 1 of the state constitution, which is as follows: "Nor shall any citizen or class of citizens be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens," and which applies as well to an ordinance as to a legislative act.

The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to render judgment for the defendant on the findings.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for malicious prosecution for indecent exposure, a nonsuit was entered on the ground that the evidence failed to show want of probable cause for such prosecution. Plaintiff's evidence showing that, at the time of said alleged exposure, he did not know that he was in sight of any person, or in a place where he was likely to be seen, that there was in fact no indecent exposure, and that he supposed the place was frequently used for the purpose for which he was using it, held, that the nonsuit was erroneous, and the evidence should have been submitted to the jury.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.
Curtis & Otis, for appellant. Rowell & Rowell, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution. The nonsuit was granted on the ground that the evidence failed to show want of probable cause in the prosecution complained of. There was no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence as to malice, or that the charge had been dismissed, and we think there was evidence to sustain the charge that the prosecution was without probable cause. The plaintiff was prosecuted for indecent exposure of his person; and, if his testimony in this case be true, there was no ground whatever for making such a charge against him. He testifies that he did not know that he was in sight of any person whatever, or at a point where any one was likely to see him, and, in effect, also, that there was in fact no improper exposure of his person. He further testified that, at the time, he supposed the place was one frequently used for the purpose for which he was using it, and did not know that the prosecuting witness or his family were likely to see him, or be offended by the act. If this be so, the mere fact that he was seen would not constitute a violation of the law. At all events, there can be no doubt that the evidence made a case for the jury.

1. ATTACHMENT—LEVY—HOW MADE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 542, requiring the sheriff in levying an attachment upon real estate, after recording the attachment papers, to serve them upon the occupant of the property if there is one, otherwise to post them upon the property, posting instead of serving is proper, if the officer, when he goes to make the levy, can find no occupant.

2. SAME—POSTING PAPERS.

In attaching a lot having a small building upon it, posting the attachment papers upon the building complies with the requirement of the statute that they shall be posted in a conspicuous place upon the property.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action to quiet title.

Hundley & Gale, for appellant. Park Henshaw, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action to quiet title, and the only question in the case is whether a writ of attachment was so levied as to constitute a lien on the premises prior to the conveyance under which the plaintiff claims title. The premises constitute one-half of a lot in the town of Chico, having a frontage of 33 feet; and extending back 132 feet. One Ashbrook, at the time of the levy, had an office upon the lot in a small building, the dimensions of which were said to be 12 by 15 feet. No copy of the writ or notice was left with Ashbrook, but the levy was made by posting on the house as though the premises were unoccupied. The sheriff was examined as a witness, and testified: "Question. Do you know whether or not, at that time, there was any one living on the premises? Answer. I do not. When I went there to serve the papers, I did not find any one in the house. I waited there quite a while without finding any one, and * * * I posted the papers on the house. Think there was a table, and perhaps a chair or so, but it did not look to me as though it was occupied by any one. There was a light burning in the room, and I waited a long time, but no one appeared. * * * I found nobody in possession when I went there, and no person came while I was there, and there was no occupant at all there that I saw."

It is insisted that the levy is void, because a copy of the writ and a notice was not served upon Ashbrook, who, it is claimed, was, at the time of the levy, an occupant within the meaning of section 542, Code Civil Proc.

The portions of section 542 which are material to this discussion are as follows: "The sheriff, to whom the writ is directed, must execute the same without delay, * * * as follows: (1) Real property * * * by filing with the recorder of the county a copy of the writ, together with a description of the property attached, and a notice that it is attached; and by leaving a similar copy of the writ, description, and notice with an occupant of the property if there be one. If not, then by posting in a conspicuous place on the property attached."

It must be admitted that the most ordinary meaning of the word "occupant" is "one who occupies or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in the possession of a thing." Occupancy is said to be the act of holding possession. It will be presumed that the word is used in its most usual sense, unless there can be discovered something in the statute itself which indicates a different use of the word in this particular instance. And we think such intent is readily found. The officer is required to execute the writ without delay. Promptness is generally essential to the beneficial use of the writ at all. The sheriff would be held responsible for any lack of diligence by which loss should accrue. It is not always easy to find out who is in possession of property. In view of the promptness required, it must have been intended that the occupant should be easily discoverable,—in fact, some one visibly occupying the property,—so that, when the officer visits the property for the purpose of completing the levy, he can determine then, by what he can see, whether he shall serve the copies by leaving with an occupant, or by posting.

Again, it was evidently intended that all real estate not by law exempt should be subject to be attached for the debts of the owner. But, if the word "occupant" means simply one in the actual possession of land, there would be a large amount of such property not declared to be exempt, and yet which could not be levied upon. One may be in the actual possession, and yet not be in the county or state. And there might be no other occupant. In such case, there could be no levy if the position of respondent be correct. One fearing an attachment would have but to lock up his place, and go out of the county to be beyond the reach of the writ, so far as his real estate is concerned, of which there was no other occupant. A construction which would lead to such a result is of course inadmissible. Subdivision 2 of section 542, Code Civil Proc., seems to favor this view. That provides for the levy of the writ when the property, though belonging to the debtor, stands on the records of the county in the name of another. It requires copies of the papers to be left with the occupant, if any, and also with such other person, or his agent, or at the residence of either, if within the county. That is to say, it specifically directs, when the property stands in the name of another, the papers shall be served upon him or his agent; and, if they cannot be found at the residence of either, while it omits to provide that, if the occupant cannot be found, it shall be left at his residence. Therefore we conclude, repeating what we have already said, the provision as to the occupant is a direction to the officer as to posting when he goes upon the land to complete his levy. If he find an occupant, he must leave the copies of the papers with such occupant; but, if he can find no such occupant, he must post them in a conspicuous place upon the land.

It is also claimed that the levy is void because it is not stated in the return that a copy of the writ, with a description of the property attached and the requisite notice were posted in a conspicuous place on the land. On the trial the officer testified that the papers were posted on the building which was upon the place. The return, prima facie, is sufficient. Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 172. Under the circumstances, we think the evidence must be held as showing a compliance with the statute in this respect. The land levied upon was a small lot, vacant except as to the portion occupied by the building used as an office. It would appear that the building must necessarily be the most conspicuous place on the land. The attention of the parties in the court below seems to have been engrossed with the question as to whether there was an occupant or not, and the particular point now under consideration was apparently not thought of. On the new trial, the whole matter can be more thoroughly investigated.

Judgment and order reversed, and new trial ordered.

Ex parte LEZINSKY and another. (No. 12,131.)

CONTEMPT—WITNESS—NOTARY PUBLIC—POWER OF COURT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1991, providing that disobedience to a subpoena may be punished by "the court or officer issuing the subpoena," the court cannot punish for disobedience to a subpoena issued by a notary public before whom a deposition is to be taken. The matter is governed by that section, and not by section 1209, "in respect to a court of justice, or proceedings therein."

Certiorari to superior court, Contra Costa county.

George Lezinsky, for petitioners. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. Proceedings on certiorari to review the orders of the superior court in and for the county of Contra Costa adjudging the petitioners, Lezinsky and Mason, guilty of contempt of said court, and punishing them therefor by fine. The facts are these: In a certain action pending in said superior court the plaintiff therein served a notice upon the defendants therein that the deposition of the petitioner John Mason would be taken at a certain time and place before a certain notary public. The notary issued a subpoena requiring said Mason to appear before him at said time and place, and depose and testify as a witness. This subpoena of the notary was served on Mason, who appeared at the time and place mentioned; but, upon the advice of the other petitioner, Lezinsky, who is an attorney at law, and was attorney for an intervenor in the action, and who contended that plaintiff in said action had no right to proceed with it, or to take testimony therein, Mason refused to testify, or to be sworn. The notary certified these facts to the superior court, whereupon the court adjudged both of the petitioners guilty of contempt,—one for refusing to testify before the notary, and the other for advising him to refuse,—and imposed a fine upon each. And the question to be determined is, was such action beyond the jurisdiction of the court?

Proceedings in contempt, being in their nature arbitrary, can be upheld only in a case which comes within "the provisions of the law by which such proceedings are authorized; for mere presumptions and intendments are not to be indulged in their support." Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 414. And we are not able to find any "provisions of the law" which authorize a superior court to punish a person for contempt because he has refused to obey a subpoena issued by a notary public before whom his deposition was to have been taken upon notice. In such a case there is certainly no actual contempt of the court, because the party has committed no act in the presence of the court, nor has he, without the presence of the court, disobeyed any of its judgments, orders, or processes. Section 1986, Code Civil Proc., provides that, when a subpoena is issued to require attendance "before a court," it must be under the seal of the court; and that, when the attendance is to be "out of court, before a judge, justice, or other officer," the subpoena must be issued by such judge, justice, or other officer. And section 1991 provides that disobedience to a subpoena may be punished by "the court or officer issuing the subpoena." This means, construed with the context, by "the court issuing the subpoena," or by "the officer issuing the subpoena." It does not mean by "the court not issuing the subpoena." In such a case the offending party is not guilty of two contempts, or subject to two punishments. These two sections govern the matter under discussion, and not subdivision 10 of section 1209, which is "in respect to a court of justice or proceedings therein."

Counsel for respondent complains that a notary has no power to punish for contempt, (and whether or not he has we do not here decide,) and that, therefore, if the above views are correct, a party cannot enforce the taking of a deposition before such officer. But he would have had a similar grievance of more magnitude if the legislature had not provided at all for taking testimony out of court. The right to take and use a deposition is a mere statutory privilege, and can be exercised and enforced only in the manner and to the extent provided by the statute which gives it. And if a party selects, out of the officers before whom depositions may be taken, one who cannot punish for contempt, he puts himself, so far as that method of enforcing the attendance of his witness is concerned, out of the reach of legislative grace, and must rely upon the provisions that the disobedient witness forfeits to the aggrieved party $100, and all damages sustained by his failure to attend, and that, if he be a party, his complaint or answer may be stricken out. Sections 1991, 1992, Code Civil Proc. Whether or not the power to enforce the attendance of witnesses out of court should be enlarged, is a question for legislative determination.

The orders adjudging petitioners guilty of contempt, and punishing them therefor, are annulled, and the court below is directed to dismiss the proceeding.

HEDGES v. DAM and others. (No. 11,612.)*(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1887.)1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—RIGHT OF.

Defendant filed a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, and thereafter, and before the issue of law raised by the demurrer was heard, filed an amended demurrer by leave of court, a copy of the same being served upon the attorney of plaintiff before the motion for leave to amend was made. Held permissible, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 472, which provides that "any pleading may be amended after demurrer, and before the trial of the issue of law thereon, by filing the same as amended, and serving a copy on the adverse party.

2. COUNTIES—ACTION AGAINST SUPERVISORS—COMPLAINT.

In an action against the members of the board of supervisors of a county for having wrongfully allowed certain claims, a complaint which does not show the nature of the claims allowed, or wherein the acts complained of are unlawful, and simply alleges that the defendants "wrongfully paid out large sums of money," and "that the said claims were wrongfully and without authority of law ordered paid," states mere conclusions of law, and is insufficient.

3. SAME—JURISDICTION.

Such a complaint does not charge a cause of action, under the provisions of section 4086, Pol. Code Cal., which prescribes the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.

4. SAME—PARTY PLAINTIFF.

Where an action is prosecuted in behalf of a county by a tax-payer, instead of the district attorney, facts must be alleged in the complaint showing a refusal or neglect on the part of the district attorney to institute the action.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

Cross & Simonds, for appellant. E. A. Davis and A. L. Hart, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. 1. This action was commenced on the thirty-first of July, 1885. A demurrer was filed on August 11, 1885. Thereafter, and before the issue of law thus raised was heard, the court, on motion of counsel for defendants, allowed defendants to file an amended demurrer. The attorneys for plaintiff were served with a copy of the amended demurrer before the motion was made, and were present in court at the hearing. Section 472, Code Civil Proc., provides that "any pleading may be amended once by the party of course, and without costs, at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer and before the trial of the issue of law thereon, by filing the same as amended, and serving a copy on the adverse party. * * *" The amended demurrer, having been served and filed before trial of the issues of law raised by the original demurrer, took the place of the original, and the court committed no error in allowing it to be filed. Appellant contends that the "pleading" referred to after demurrer is the complaint; but the section says any pleading, and, of course, a demurrer to the complaint is a pleading, and, for the purpose of raising an "issue of law," is as important as the complaint.

2. The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It alleges that "said board of supervisors misappropriated, wrongfully, unlawfully, and illegally allowed and paid out, large sums of money, and ordered the same to be paid out of the county treasury of said Yuba county, which sums of money were paid out upon demands presented against said Yuba county to said board of supervisors, which demands were not legal demands against said county of Yuba, nor had said board of supervisors any authority or right to allow or audit or order them paid. But said board of supervisors, as such, did examine, allow, audit, and order paid all of the said illegal demands, well knowing them to be illegal demands, and all of said demands were paid out of the county treasury of said Yuba county because the said board of supervisors did examine, allow, audit, and order the same paid." Then follows a list of 49 names, with simply dates and the amounts set opposite thereto, amounting in the aggregate to $13,007.08, and the complaint concludes with the following allegation: "That each and all of the said demands were wrongfully, unlawfully, and without authority of law allowed and ordered paid by said board of supervisors, and by reason of being so allowed and ordered paid were afterwards in fact paid out of the county treasury of said county, whereby the said county treasury has been depleted to the extent of the said amount of $13,007.08." The defendants Flathman, Dam, and Babb were the three members of the board who voted for the allowance and payment of said claims, and the other defendants are sureties on their official bonds. There is nothing to show the nature of the claims allowed, and the complaint is clearly insufficient. Allegations that the members of the board "misappropriated, wrongfully, unlawfully, and illegally allowed and paid out, large sums of money," and "that the said demands were wrongfully, unlawfully, and without authority of law allowed and ordered paid," are mere conclusions of law. It has been held repeatedly that the facts must be stated showing wherein the acts complained of are unlawful, wrongful, or illegal. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220; Branham v. San Jose, 24 Cal. 585; People v. San Francisco, 27 Cal. 655; Triplett v. Munter, 50 Cal. 644; Smith v. Ling, 68 Cal. 324, 9 Pac. Rep. 171. If plaintiff bases his right to maintain the action under the provisions of section 4086, Pol. Code, it is sufficient to say that the complaint does not charge even in the general language of that law.

3. No reasons are set forth in the complaint why this action is prosecuted by and in the name of plaintiff, a tax-payer, instead of by the district attorney, in the name of and in behalf of the county. It is not alleged even that any demand was made by plaintiff either for the money, or for the institution of an action for its recovery. The county is the real party in interest, and the district attorney is the proper person to prosecute actions in the name of the county. Pol. Code, § 4256, subd. 3; section 136, County Government Act. If it be admitted that a tax-payer has the right, even in the absence of an express statutory authority, to prosecute actions of this kind, yet we think facts should be alleged showing a refusal or neglect on the part of the proper officer to institute an action. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McFARLAND, J.; TEMPLE, J. We concur in the judgment on the last ground stated, and also agree to the views expressed in relation to the amended demurrer.

COLLINS v. ANGELL and others. (No. 9,642.)

1. EXECUTION—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—PRACTICE—WAIVER.

A judgment creditor secured an order from the court, requiring the judgment debtor to appear before a referee, and answer concerning his property, which order was obtained on an affidavit that was not filed until the filing of the report of the referee. Held that, after service of the affidavit and order on the debtor, and after he had appeared before the referee, and gone through the examination without objection, any irregularity was waived.

2. SAME—NECESSITY OF AFFIDAVIT.

But, where an execution has been returned unsatisfied, the judgment creditor has a right to an order requiring the debtor to appear and answer concerning his property without an affidavit, under section 714, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides for supplementary proceedings against debtors.

3. SAME—INTEREST IN PROPERTY—ORDER TO ASSIGN.

Where, in supplementary proceedings against a judgment debtor, he is ordered to assign all his "right, title, and interest" in certain letters patent to his creditor, it is immaterial that he claims to have no property in the patents.

4. SAME—ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGMENT—EFFECT.

A judgment creditor, after execution returned unsatisfied, in supplementary proceedings against the debtor, stated in his affidavit that he had assigned his judgment. Held that, even if the proceedings were based upon the affidavit, the order requiring the debtor to appear and answer concerning his property should not be reversed, on the ground that the creditor was not the real party in interest, since the supplementary proceedings could not be regarded as a new action.

5. SAME—INTERPLEADER.

The refusal of the motion of a judgment debtor in supplementary proceedings against him, when he has been ordered to assign his interest in certain letters patent "for leave to commence an action to interplead certain other parties to compel them to litigate their claims to the said patents," is not error.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Gray & Haven, for appellant. S. W. & E. B. Holladay, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Plaintiff having recovered judgment against defendants for $2,742, with interest and costs, and an execution issued thereon having been returned wholly unsatisfied, he procured an order from the judge of the court in which the judgment was rendered, requiring defendants to appear before the court commissioner, as referee, at a certain time and place, to answer concerning their property. Defendant H. B. Angell appeared before the referee, who took the evidence offered, and reported the same to the judge. Thereupon the court made an order that said defendant execute and deliver to A. B. Forbes, a receiver appointed for that purpose, assignments of his right, title, and interest in and to certain letters patent issued to him by the United States, to be thereafter sold in such manner as should be directed, for the satisfaction of respondent's said judgment. From this order the defendant Angell appeals.

Appellant's first contention is that the order requiring him to appear before the referee was void, and therefore all subsequent proceedings invalid, because the affidavit made by the respondent at the time said order was made was not filed by the clerk until the filing of the report of the referee. This contention goes upon the assumption that there is a radical distinction between the provisions of section 714 and those of section 715 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But, admitting this to be so, the point is too inconsiderable to bear the weight it is expected to carry. It would have been more regular, of course, to have filed the affidavit before its presentation to the judge. And, no doubt, it would have been filed immediately at any time, or a new proceeding would have been commenced, upon suggestion or objection by appellant. But, after service of the affidavit and order upon appellant, he appeared before the referee, and went through with the examination without any objection whatever. Thereupon the report of the referee, together with the affidavit, were filed; and the order appealed from was made after such filing. Under these circumstances the point that the whole proceeding is void for want of jurisdiction is untenable.

Bryant v. Bank of California, 7 Pac. Rep. 128, cited by appellant, decides no more than that, when papers are offered to prove a judicial record, it must appear that they came from the files of the court and the custody of the clerk. But, as the execution in this case had been returned unsatisfied, respondent was entitled to the order without any affidavit, as provided in section 714 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The main distinction between that section and section 715 seems to be that, under the latter, supplementary proceedings may be commenced before the return of the execution, provided it has been issued, and that in such case an affidavit is necessary showing that the judgment debtor has property which he refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment. In other respects, the proceedings under these two sections, and those which follow on the same subject, seem to be the same. The fact appearing in the affidavit, if the latter is to be considered at all, that respondent, upon information and belief, had some knowledge of certain specific property of appellant, is immaterial.

Appellant also makes the point that it does not appear from the evidence that he had any property in the letters patent. But there was evidence to that effect, and the conclusion to which the court came upon the question is not assailable upon the ground that there was no evidence to support it. Moreover, appellant was only ordered to assign all his "right, title, and interest" in the patents. Appellant, assuming that this proceeding is equivalent to a new suit, and that the affidavit should be regarded as a creditor's bill, contends that the order should be reversed because respondent states in the affidavit that he has assigned the judgment, but still claims a contingent interest in the same. This view, however, would not be correct, even if the order had been made under section 715, and necessarily based in part upon an affidavit. It would still have been a proceeding in the original case, auxiliary and supplementary thereto, and not a new action. But, as before stated, the order was based on the record facts of the judgment and the returned execution. The affidavit merely informed the judge of those facts which an inspection of the record would have disclosed. The affidavit on the trial of an issue involving the extent of respondent's interest in the judgment might, like any other declaration, be admissible as an item of evidence, but in other respects it has no virtue.

Appellant also appeals from another order—or rather from another part of the same order—"refusing to grant the motion of said H. B. Angell for leave to commence an action to interplead plaintiff and Elizabeth A. Risdon with certain other parties to compel them to litigate their several claims to said patents." This motion was based on section 386, Code Civil Proc.; but, as that section refers to cases where "an action is pending," it is doubtful if it applies at all to a "proceeding" like this. Assuming, however, that it might apply here, the section provides for an application to "substitute" some other person as defendant in place of the moving party, not "for leave to commence an action to interplead" other parties. And then the defendant must be in the position of a stakeholder having no interest in the litigation, which is not the position of appellant here. Lastly, the appellant could have commenced his proposed action without any "leave."

No questions as to the requirements of a legal assignment of patent rights, or as to what title purchasers from the receiver would get, arise in this case. The orders appealed from are affirmed.

MERRIAM v. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF YUBA CO. (No. 11,611.)

INJUNCTION—COUNTY SUPERVISORS—ILLEGAL PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

In California an injunction to restrain the anticipated action of the board of supervisors of a county, in paying certain alleged illegal claims, will not be granted, it being hardly claimed that there is an excess of jurisdiction on the part of the board. McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

This action was commenced by Joseph Merriam, a tax-payer, on behalf of the tax-payers of Yuba county, to restrain the supervisors from paying certain attorney's fees, and other claims against the county, alleged to be illegal, amounting to about $10,000. The defendant filed a demurrer, and afterwards obtained leave to file an amended demurrer, based upon the incapacity of the plaintiff to sue, and that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

E. A. Forbes, E. A. Davis, and A. L. Hart, for respondent. Cross & Simonds, for appellant, Yuba county.

TEMPLE, J. It is not necessary to consider the alleged error in allowing the amendment to the demurrer, as the only questions which we find it necessary to consider arise upon the general demurrer, which are the same in each demurrer filed. The case appears to be clearly within the rule laid down in Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 171. In other states, it is true, such suits have been maintained, although the rulings do not seem to be uniform upon the subject. It is hardly claimed here that there is an excess of jurisdiction. It may be that facts exist which would justify the board in allowing the claims. We must presume that the board will do its duty, and we cannot assume that the claims will be allowed improperly. How can the plaintiff know, or this court decide in advance, that the claims will not be rejected for the objections alleged against them by petitioner? Besides, as stated in Linden v. Case, supra, even if the board should allow them, the county and tax-payers are not without remedy. The auditor ought not to draw his warrant for an illegal demand even, although allowed by the board, and, if he does so knowingly and willfully, he is personally responsible, and may be made to refund the money thus illegally paid. The same rule applies to the treasurer. The warrant drawn by the auditor would be no excuse for the payment of a claim known to be not a lawful charge. Then the district attorney is required to look after the affairs of the county, and it is his duty of his own motion to commence suits to recover moneys illegally paid out. Section 4086, Pol. Code; section 8, County Government Act. The members of the board would themselves be individually responsible for moneys willfully paid out without authority of law. They are trustees of the funds for certain specified purposes, and cannot, except by violating their oaths, allow them to be applied to other purposes. They act judicially, it is true, and will not be held accountable for mere errors, but they will not be excused on the ground that they have acted honestly, merely because they do not steal the funds. If they willfully appropriate moneys for a purpose not authorized by positive law, they are liable civilly and criminally. If other safeguards are needed, the legislature can provide them. It is not the province of the courts. Judgment affirmed.

BROWN and others v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,383.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—FELLOW-SERVANTS.

A mixed train of 20 cars, run by a crew consisting of the conductor, head, middle, and rear brakemen, and engineer and fireman, parted, on a clear night, while running down a slight grade. The forward part, on which were the engineer, fireman, and head brakeman, went on some distance before the separation was discovered. The brakeman, who, under the rules, had control of the detached part of the train ordered it backed, to couple with the part left. That part had continued down grade of its own momentum. There was a collision, and the conductor was killed. At the time of the accident the rear and middle brakemen—the latter by the conductor's express orders—were in the baggage car with the conductor. The engine gave no signals as it came back. Held, in an action by the heirs of the conductor, that he was guilty of negligence in not having the two brakemen at their stations, and that the head brakeman was also guilty of negligence in backing up, and that there could be no recovery, as the conductor's death had been caused by his own negligence as well as by that of his fellow-servants.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

This is an action to recover damages brought by the widow and children, as heirs, of Gilman George Brown, deceased, for the death of the latter, through the alleged negligence of defendant, a railroad corporation. Plaintiffs had a verdict and judgment for $10,000 and costs, from which judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals.

On rehearing. See 12 Pac. Rep. 512.

Glassell, Smith & Patton, Creed Haymond, and W. C. Belcher for appellant. Howard, Brousseau & Howard, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Since the former decision (12 Pac. Rep. 512,) the case has received a thorough discussion, which has induced a change of view.

Gilman G. Brown was conductor on one of the defendant's trains running between Los Angeles and Yuma. During the night of April 7, 1877, his train parted. The forward portion, on which were the engineer, the fireman, and the head brakeman, ran ahead of the rear portion, on which were the conductor and the two other brakemen. When the forward portion had got considerably in advance, the head brakeman discovered what had occurred, and he thereupon had the engine stopped, and, going upon the top of the rear car, signaled the engineer to back. The engineer obeyed the signal, and, the other portion of the train coming on of its own momentum, a collision occurred, which caused the death of the conductor. His widow and heirs bring this action against the company.

Nothing can be plainer than that, if two bodies keep moving towards each other on the same track, a collision must result. It is evident, therefore, that somebody on those trains must have been guilty of negligence. Who was it,—those on the forward portion, or those on the rear portion, or both? We think that there was negligence on both sides.

1. The track being slightly down grade, the head brakeman ought to have known that it was imprudent to back. He ought to have kept his portion of the train moving on, "even to the next station, if necessary," or, at least, he should have allowed ample time to elapse before starting back to see what had become of the other portion of the train. The course adopted was, under the circumstances, dangerous in the extreme, and was one of the main causes of the accident. But the blame rests upon him, and not upon the engineer. The uncontradicted evidence is that when a train parts, under the circumstances shown in this case, the head brakeman becomes the conductor of the portion on which he is, and has control of the engineer. Rule 44 is not in conflict with this. The injunctions laid by that rule upon the engineer are not intended to prevent his obeying the higher authorities. If the conductor or head brakeman is there, the engineer must obey his instructions, and the evidence shows that he did obey them. This being the case, the evidence introduced to show the incompetence of the engineer becomes immaterial. The negligence was that of the head brakeman; and since he was the fellow-servant of the deceased, and no want of care in his selection is imputed to the company, it cannot be held liable for what occurred. And if it be said that, conceding the engineer did right in obeying the signals to back, yet that, in backing, he ought to have sounded his whistle and rung his bell, the answer is that the inducing cause of the accident was backing at all, and that, this having been done, there is only a bare possibility that the taking of the precautions mentioned would have made any difference, especially in view of the fact that neither of the brakemen on the other portion of the car was at his post, and that nobody there was aware that the train had parted.

2. There seems to have been even greater negligence on the part of those on the rear portion of the train. They were not aware that the train had parted. This resulted from the brakemen not being at their posts. The middle brakeman and the end brakeman were in the baggage car with the conductor. They should have been at their posts; one towards the middle of the train, and the other at the end. In view of what happened, it was especially important for the middle brakeman to have been attending to his duties. He testified as follows: "Question. Had you been there could you have had an opportunity of finding out that these rear cars had become detached and uncoupled? Answer. Most assuredly I should have seen it." There was not the shadow of an excuse for his absence. He had been called into the car by the deceased to assist in calling off way-bills, a thing which he should not have been taken from his post to do, and was allowed to lounge there after the calling off of the way-bills had been concluded, which was inexcusable. There is some testimony that he was "sick" at the time; but it is not pretended that he was incapacitated from attending to his duties; and nothing short of incapacity would have justified the conductor in jeopardizing the lives and property on the train by allowing the brakeman to neglect his duty.

The rear brakeman was in the car, "assorting out some mail that I had to distribute." It is not suggested that he had any connection with the post-office, and we do not understand what business he had with the mail. Just before the accident he had taken a seat in the baggage car. He says: "I had no more than seated myself in the end of the coach than the collision took place."

All this showed negligence on the part of the deceased. It was his duty as conductor to see that the brakemen were at their posts. He not only did not do this, but he was the direct cause of the absence from duty of the most important of them. He was therefore directly chargeable with the consequences.

Either of the foregoing grounds constituted a defense to the action; and the evidence in support of each is uncontradicted. If it be said that the presence of the middle brakeman at his post might have made no difference, because he might not have discovered the parting of the train, the answer is that he testifies that he would have discovered it; and this testimony is not only uncontradicted, but is in accordance with all the probabilities. And if it be objected, with reference to the other ground, that if the engineer, when backing, had blown his whistle and rung his bell, it might have apprised those on the rear portion of the train of their danger, the answer is that backing at all was, under the circumstances, the fatal move, and that, in view of the state of things on the rear portion of the train, there is no reason to suppose that the precautions mentioned would have made any difference in the result.

But if we assume that the accident might possibly have been avoided in the contingencies mentioned, the negligence of the fellow-servant in the one case, and the contributory negligence of the deceased in the other, being clearly shown, and directly conducing to the accident, the mere possibility that it might or might not have been avoided in a certain contingency is but slight evidence; and the provision of the Code is that slight evidence will not support a verdict. Code Civil Proc. § 1835.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

GREENWADE v. DE CAMP. (No. 11,835.)

PUBLIC LANDS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE—SUCCESSIVE APPLICATIONS.

Section 3417, Pol. Code Cal., relating to contests for the privilege of purchasing state land, provides that, after an order of reference to a court, by the surveyor general, unless the contestant bring his action within 60 days, "his rights in the premises and under his application cease." Plaintiff, having once failed to bring his action under such reference, filed another application, obtained a second reference, and brought his action. Held, that he was not debarred from bringing such action by his first default, and that the second reference conferred jurisdiction on the court to try such action.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Plaintiff filed with the surveyor general his application to purchase certain state lands, and his intention to contest the title of defendant, who was then holding said lands under a certificate of purchase, in the manner prescribed by sections 3414, 3415, Pol. Code Cal. A reference was made to the superior court of San Bernardino county, but plaintiff neglected to bring his action within the 60 days prescribed by section 3417, Id. Thereafter he made a second application, obtained another reference, and brought his action. The court held that, by his former default, he had forfeited his right to contest defendant's title, and that the second order of reference conferred no jurisdiction to try the case. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

Byron Waters, for appellant. Paris & Goodcell, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is a contest for the privilege of purchasing state land. The defendant first made application for the right to purchase June 21, 1884. The plaintiff afterwards made application to purchase the same land, and initiated a contest with the defendant under sections 3414 and 3415, Pol. Code. The order of reference was made, but the plaintiff did not commence his action in the proper court within 60 days, and no action was ever brought to determine such contest. November 8, 1885, after the lapse of the 60 days, the plaintiff made another application to purchase the land, and procured another order in due form, referring the case to the superior court to try the contest. Section 3417, Pol. Code, is as follows: "Unless the party contestant commences his action within sixty days after the order of reference is made, his rights in the premises and under his application cease."

It is contended that, not having brought suit on the contest inaugurated on the first application within 60 days, the plaintiff was barred from contesting the validity of the defendant's certificate of purchase, and that the second order of reference did not confer jurisdiction upon the court. We see no ground whatever for such contention. Even if the effect of the failure to bring suit on the first reference would have the effect of depriving plaintiff of the right to make a second application to purchase, still the last order of reference gave the court jurisdiction to try the contest. The court might have determined the case for the defendant on the ground that plaintiff had failed to bring his suit within 60 days. But we do not think such failure to bring suit could have that effect. No doubt the effect was to work a forfeiture of all rights of plaintiff, both in the application and in the premises. But he then stood just like any other person. If there was any way in which he could afterwards acquire a right, there is nothing in this statute to prevent. If he had no right in the premises, he was in no worse position with reference to the land than any other person who had no right. His last application cannot in any way be helped out by the first, for his rights to the premises ceased when he was in default. This section goes no further.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

DEAN v. GRIMES. (No. 11,638.)

1. INSOLVENCY—NOTICE TO CREDITORS—COMPUTATION OF TIME.

Under an amendment to the California insolvent act of 1852, (St. 1863, p. 750,) the county court, on the filing of the insolvent's petition, is required to issue notice to the creditors calling them to meet on a day not less than 30 days thereafter. Held, that such a notice issued on December 7th, and returnable January 6th following, was sufficient.

2. SAME—VALIDITY OF DISCHARGE—COURT AND JURY.

Where, in an action on a promissory note, a discharge in insolvency, under the California insolvent act of 1852, was pleaded, and the court, after reading to the jury certain sections of that act, and of the amending act of 1876, relating, not only to fraud and misconduct on the part of the insolvent as avoiding the discharge, but also to the form of the proceedings, instructed them that any failure to comply with said sections would avoid the discharge, held error, as not only submitting the question of fraud or misconduct, but also of literal compliance with the formal requirements of the statute, which was a matter of record to be passed on by the court.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

If such instructions mean that the jury should scrutinize the petition, schedule, and affidavit in the insolvency proceedings for any false statement of the insolvent, they are erroneous as omitting to charge on the fraud necessary to avoid the proceedings.

4. SAME—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

An instruction that, the statute being novel and extraordinary, and in derogation of common law, everything bearing on the question of jurisdiction must appear affirmatively, held error, as the jurisdiction of a county court is a question for the court; and, if the record shows want of jurisdiction, it should not have been admitted in evidence.

5. SAME—FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES.

Under section 8 of the California insolvent act of 1876, forbidding preferences, and declaring void all assignments of parts of the insolvent's estate within two months of the filing of his petition, an instruction that a failure to comply with said section would avoid the insolvent's discharge is erroneous, since the only penalty prescribed by the statute for attempting to prefer a creditor within the two months is a recovery of the property by the assignee. To constitute a fraud which will avoid the discharge, the transfer must have been made out of the usual course of business.

6. SAME—ACTS AVOIDING DISCHARGE.

In such case the sole question for the jury is whether the defendant, having had the benefit of the insolvent act, "had concealed any part of his property or estate, or given (knowingly) a false schedule, or committed any fraud under the provisions of the act" of 1852, and its amendments.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Schell & Bond and R. H. Ward, for appellant. Wigginton, Creed & Hawes, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The action was brought on a promissory note, the defense being a discharge under the insolvency act of 1852. It is urged by plaintiff (respondent) that the county court never acquired jurisdiction of the estate of the defendant, alleged insolvent, because there was no sufficient publication of a notice for the appearance of his creditors. By an amendment of the insolvent act of 1852, the county judge, on the filing of the insolvent's petition, was required to order the clerk to issue notice calling the creditors to appear on a specified day, not less than 30 days from the first publication of the notice. St. 1863, p. 750. In Grimes v. His Creditors, the first publication was on December 7, 1878. The return-day was January 6, 1879. The order of the judge, and the publication thereunder, were sufficient to bind the creditors of the insolvent. Wilson v. His Creditors, 55 Cal. 476.

The court below, as portion of its charge, read to the jury sections 2, 3, 4, 7, 27, 28, 29, and 32 of the insolvent law of 1852, and section 8 of the act of March 31, 1876, (St. 1875-76, p. 582;) and then instructed the jury: "If you believe from the evidence that the defendant, I. C. Grimes, violated any of this law, or failed in any manner to fully comply with all provisions and requirements of said law, your verdict must be for the plaintiff. These insolvency proceedings are novel and extraordinary,—created by statute in derogation of the common law,—and should be strictly enforced. The proceedings in insolvency are special, and no intendments can be made in favor of the jurisdiction. Everything bearing upon that question must appear affirmatively.” The defendant duly excepted.

The instructions were erroneous and misleading. They did not alone submit to the jury the issue whether the defendant had committed any of the frauds, or been guilty of the misconduct mentioned in section 32 of the act of 1852, and in section 8 of the act of 1876, but they also left to the jury to decide, and apparently informed them that their verdict should turn on the decision, whether the defendant had literally complied with the requirements of sections 2, 3, and 4 of the act of 1852, which treat of the form and contents of the insolvent's petition, his schedule, and his oath. But the petition, schedule, and affidavit were introduced as evidence in the present action, and were proved by record. Whether they were defective “in any manner” was a question of law for the court, and ought not to have been submitted to the jury. If such was not the intention of the instructions, but one other meaning can reasonably be given them. They must have been intended to inform the jury it was their duty to inquire whether the petition or schedule or oath contained any statement which was false, and, if they found such false statement, to render a verdict for the plaintiff. But, if that interpretation can be given the instructions, they were clearly erroneous, since they eliminated from the conditions which would justify a verdict for plaintiff the element of fraud. Tetis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 128; Dean v. Baker, 64 Cal. 232. Thus, for instance, the jury were told that the insolvency proceedings were “novel and extraordinary,” in derogation of common law, and “special;” and, if the defendant had failed in any manner to comply with section four, their verdict must be for the plaintiff.

The clause of the instructions given, that everything bearing on the question of “jurisdiction” must appear affirmatively, is, like the rest, somewhat ambiguous. If by “jurisdiction” was meant the power of the county court to enter the judgment of discharge, no question as to its power could arise except such as were presented in the record of the proceedings in Grimes v. His Creditors. Every such question was one of law, which it was the duty of the court in this action to decide. If the record in Grimes v. His Creditors showed want of jurisdiction, the court below should not have admitted it in evidence. No other objection to the jurisdiction has been argued than the one considered at the beginning of this opinion. It was not for the jury to inquire whether the judgment discharging defendant, Grimes, from his debts was or was not valid, as they should deem the publication of notice to creditors was or was not sufficient. The question for the jury to determine was whether the defendant, having had the benefit of the insolvent act, “had concealed any part of his property or estate, or given (knowingly) a false schedule, or committed any fraud under the provisions of the act” of 1852 and its amendments. St. 1852, p. 75, § 32.

The court below told the jury that, if defendant violated or in any manner failed to comply with section 8 of the supplemental act of 1876, (St. 1875-76, p. 582,) the verdict must be for the plaintiff. This was error. The mere giving of a preference to one creditor, without intent to delay or defraud others, is not in itself, and independent of the statute, a fraud. Section 8 of the act of 1876 provides that the assignment of any part of an insolvent's estate, within two months prior to his filing his petition, is void, and that the assignee may recover the property attempted to be assigned. The penalty imposed upon an attempt to prefer a creditor within the two months is the recovery by the assignee in insolvency of the property which the insolvent has sought to transfer. If section 32 of the act of 1852 refers at all to section 8 of the act of 1876, still to constitute a fraud as against a creditor, which can be asserted after the discharge, it must at least be made to appear that the assignment was not made "in the usual and ordinary course of business of the debtor."

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

HEGAR v. CALIFORNIA INS. CO. (No. 11,073.)

1. FIRE INSURANCE—POLICY—DEPRECIATION CLAUSE—EVIDENCE.

The material question under the "depreciation" clause in a policy of fire insurance is, what was the actual condition and value of the property insured at the time of the fire? And, where there is no evidence for the company upon that point, it is harmless error to refuse to admit testimony as to the probable depreciation prior to the issuance of the policy.

2. APPEAL—WHAT OPEN—PROCEEDINGS BELOW.

A motion, on appeal, to consider the judgment roll only, on the ground that the proceedings in the court below for a new trial were not had within the time allowed by law therefor, should be overruled, where no objection was made in the court below to the proposed bill of exceptions, or to the hearing of the motion for a new trial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county.

Action on a policy of fire insurance. On rehearing. See 11 Pac. Rep. 594. E. W. McGraw, for appellant. W. W. Kellogg and R. H. F. Variel, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. It is urged by respondent that the proceedings in the court below for a new trial were not within the time allowed by law therefor, and that in consequence thereof we should consider only the judgment roll on this appeal. It is sufficient to say, in answer to this proposition, that no objection was made in the court below to the proposed bill of exceptions, or to the hearing of the motion for a new trial. The appellant prepared and served its proposed bill of exceptions. The respondent, without objection, proposed amendments thereto. The court, without objection, settled the bill, fixed a time for argument, heard and decided the motion for a new trial, without any suggestion from respondent that the proceedings had not been commenced in time or prosecuted with diligence. Under these circumstances, we think that the respondent's objections ought not to be heard in this court. The record is silent upon the question whether any extension of time was given by order or stipulation. Gray v. Numan, 63 Cal. 220. The plaintiff recovered a judgment of $1,950, and from that judgment, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant appealed.

It is contended by appellant that the plaintiff ought not to recover because he overvalued the property, and because he falsely represented that he was the sole owner of the property insured. The policy contained stipulations that, in the event of false representations in regard to any of these matters, the policy should be void. Upon these issues the court found in favor of the plaintiff, and the findings are supported by the evidence.

In the policy upon which the plaintiff founded his right to recover, there is this provision as to the measure and mode of computing the damages: "In no case shall the claim be for a greater sum than the actual damage to or cash value of the property at the time of the fire. * * * The cash value of property destroyed or damaged by fire shall in no case exceed what would be the cost to the assured, at the time of the fire, of replacing the same; and, in case of the depreciation of such property from use or otherwise, a suitable deduction from the cash cost of replacing the same shall be made to ascertain the actual cash value." Upon these provisions in the policy, and the rulings of the court on the evidence offered on this topic, the appellant places its chief reliance for a reversal of the judgment. The record is as follows:

"William Kinzie, witness for plaintiff, testified: 'Am a carpenter and mechanic. Know the cost of building in Quincy for many years past. Was well acquainted with Hegard's saloon that was burned. At the time of the fire it would have cost $1,264 to replace that building. In October, 1883, materials were a little higher than at the time of the fire, and then it would have cost $1,334. Cross-examination. What is a reasonable deduction from your cost of replacing the building for depreciation in the value of the original building, which was built in 1856 or 1857? [Objected to as not cross-examination; that the question was irrelevant and immaterial. Objection sustained, and defendant excepted.]'

"G. B. Somner, called for plaintiff, testified same as witness Kinzie.

"DEFENDANT'S TESTIMONY.

"G. B. Somner, recalled for defendant, testified: 'Of the $1,264, cost of replacing that building, $809 would be for the original building, and the rest for the additions. Question. What would be a reasonable deduction, from your estimate of the cost of replacing the building, for depreciations in the value of the original building, which was built in 1856 or 1857? [Objected to by plaintiff as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent.] The Court to Counsel for Defendant. Depreciation from what time? Mr. McGraw. From the time the building was built. The Court. That is not proper. I will allow you to prove depreciation since the policy was issued, but not before. [Objection sustained. Defendant excepted to the ruling.]'"

This point of contention raised between counsel and the court as to the period of depreciation, it seems to us, is one of form and theory, and without merit or application. The age of the building is not an essential element of the criterion for damages which is prescribed by the contract. The material questions—the ultimate facts to be determined—are, what was the actual condition of the building immediately before the fire? To what extent was it worn or dilapidated by use or by the elements? How much worse was its condition than a new building of the same plan, form, and execution, and what is a reasonable deduction for the depreciation? The time when the building was erected is immaterial. The house may have been built at one time, painted at another, decorated still later, improved at intervals, and the exact time when it reached its best finish be forgotten. How, then, shall we apply the rule contended for by defendant? The facts in this case illustrate its inapplicability. Many and great changes had been wrought in the form and substance of the building. After a quarter of a century the original building was transferred to another lot. A part of the sills had been removed, and new ones put in their places, portions of the floor were treated in like manner, new lathing was substituted, the ceiling was plastered, the walls were "patched," and papered, the wainscoting repaired, and a brick chimney added. In January, 1882, a new wing was attached, and in August, 1883, an addition was erected, which appears to have been fully half as large as the original building. To enable a witness to apply intelligently the rule contended for in this case he must have watched for nearly 30 years the changes which had occurred in the building by use thereof, and by action of the elements. But, as stated before, the period of time through which the building had passed is immaterial; the material question being what was its actual condition and value at the time of the fire? The word "depreciation" seems to have been used by the parties to the contract rather in the sense of deterioration than in its strict signification.

No other effort was made by defendant to show the condition or value of the building than as shown in the above copy of the record. We think, therefore, that the failure of the defendant to show the actual detriment, if any, for which a deduction should be allowed, was due to its adherence to an immaterial matter. The fact that the court erroneously proposed another and more limited period of "depreciation" was not, under the circumstances, such an error as could have operated to the prejudice of the defendant.

The witnesses Kinzie and Somner were experts, knew the building, and could have stated, no doubt, how much less the old building was worth than the new one, the value of which they had fixed in the sum of $1,264. The evidence is sufficient to justify the findings of the court as to the value of the building. Mr. Dorsch, agent for defendant, testified that he examined the whole property insured, including the building, and thought the values were fair. It is conceded by respondent that the judgment is excessive to the amount of $185, the value of certain articles which the court below considered under the description of "bar-room fixtures."

The cause is remanded, with directions to the superior court to modify the judgment by substituting the figures "$1,765," for the figures "$1,950." In all other respects the judgment and order are affirmed.

THOMPSON and others v. SPRAY. (No. 11,791.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 14, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—MINING CLAIMS—RIGHT TO LOCATE—MINORS.
Minors, who are citizens of the United States, may locate placer mining claims.
2. SAME—EVIDENCE OF CITIZENSHIP.
The uncontradicted testimony of a father that his children were born in California is sufficient proof that they are citizens of the United States for the purposes of the mining law. The provision in Rev. St. U. S. § 2321, for proof of citizenship by affidavit, is not exclusive of other modes of proof.
3. SAME.
Proof of birth within the United States is sufficient to establish the citizenship of one setting up a claim to mineral lands, in the absence of a showing of subjection to a foreign power.
4. SAME—NOTICE OF LOCATION.
The fact that the notice of location was recorded before it was posted, does not render the location invalid.
5. SAME—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—RATIFICATION.
The bringing of a suit by the principal to quiet title to a placer mining claim located for him by his agent, without his knowledge, is a sufficient ratification of the agent's location.
6. QUIETING TITLE—COMPLAINT—NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS.
A complaint in a suit to quiet title to a placer mining claim is not defective for failing to allege that the plaintiff is a citizen of the United States.
7. SAME—EVIDENCE—AMENDED NOTICE.
In a suit, by a father and his five children, to quiet title to a placer mining claim, an "amended" notice of location is admissible in evidence although it omits the names of two of the children on the first notice, and inserts the names of two of the others in their place.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Amador county.

Suit to quiet title by appellants, Alex. Thompson, Matilda Thompson, Margaret Thompson, Bedelia Thompson, James Thompson, and Alex. Thompson, Jr., a minor, by his guardian ad litem.

The complaint is as follows: "Now come the above-named plaintiffs, by their attorneys, Eagon & Armstrong, and for cause of action allege that on the nineteenth day of June, 1883, by an order of superior court of said Amador county duly made on that day, and before the filing of this complaint, the said James Thompson was appointed guardian ad litem for A. Thompson, a minor; that plaintiffs are now, and for a long time hitherto have been, the owners of, in the possession of, and entitled to the possession of, that certain piece or parcel of land situated, lying, and being in the county of Amador, state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows: The N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17, and the W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 16, township (5) five north, range ten east, M. D. M., containing 70 acres; that said defendant claims an estate and interest in the above-described tract of land adverse to the said plaintiffs; that the said claim of defendant is without any right whatever, and that the said defendant has not any estate, right, title, or interest whatever in the said land or premises, or any part thereof. Wherefore plaintiffs pray for judgment (1) that defendant may be required to set forth the virtue of his claim, and that all adverse claims of the defendant may be determined by a decree of this court; (2) that, by said decree, it be adjudged that the defendant has no estate or interest whatever in or to said land in this complaint described, and that the right, title, and interest of plaintiffs therein to said land is good and valid; (3) that the defendant be forever enjoined," etc.

J. A. Eagon and A. C. Brown, for appellants. Rust & Caminetti, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The action is in relation to a placer mining claim in Amador county, and was brought by Alex. Thompson, Sr., and his five children mentioned below. At the trial a notice of location was introduced in evidence, dated January 20, 1882, and signed with the names Alex. Thompson, James Thompson, Alex. Thompson, Jr., and Matilda Thompson. The plaintiffs then offered what they styled an "amended" notice, which bore the same date, and contained a fuller description of the property, and was signed with the names Alex. Thompson, Matilda Thompson, Margaret Thompson, and Bedelia Thompson. It will be observed that the second notice omits two of the names on the first, and inserts two new names in their place. The defendant objected to the introduction of the second notice, on the ground that it was not an "amended" notice inasmuch as the names were not the same, and that no abandonment of the first notice had been shown. The court sustained the objection, and excluded the evidence.

We think this was error. There does not appear to be any statute of this state providing for amending notices of location as is the case in Colorado. But we see no reason why, if locators have any apprehension as to the sufficiency of their notice, they may not put up another one. Whether the second notice is to be treated as an original notice, or whether it relates back to the posting of the first one, is a question as to its effect which it is not material to consider. In the present case the rights of James Thompson and Alex. Thompson, Jr., whose names were on the first notice, but not on the second, could not be affected by the posting of the second notice. Morton v. Solambo Co., 26 Cal. 527; Gore v. McBrayer, 18 Cal. 588. Margaret and Bedelia Thompson had nothing to do with the first notice. Their rights rested on the second, which, as to them, was an original notice; and they were certainly entitled to have it introduced in evidence. With respect to the two who were on both notices, we think that they also were entitled to have the second introduced in evidence. The second would not operate as an abandonment of the first. Weill v. Lucerne Co., 11 Nev. 212, 213. But it was not necessary to show such abandonment to render the second notice admissible.

The question as to the rights of the plaintiffs, as between themselves, does not arise in this action.

Upon the close of the plaintiffs' evidence several motions for nonsuit were made and granted. The first motion was as to Margaret and Bedelia Thompson. Their notice of location having been excluded, the motion was granted; but, as above shown, the exclusion of the notice was erroneous. The defendant then moved for a nonsuit as to James, Matilda, and Alex. Thompson, Jr. This motion was denied as to Matilda, and granted as to the others. It was upon four grounds, viz.: That they were not citizens of the United States; that they were minors at the time of the location; that the use of their names was unauthorized; and that the notice was recorded before it was posted.

Were the plaintiffs citizens of the United States at the time the location was made? We think the evidence shows that they were. The father testified as follows: "I and each of my co-locators were, at the time of location of said mining claim, citizens of the United States. My children were born in the state of California." The testimony that all the locators were "citizens" would perhaps have been excluded, as being a conclusion of the witness, if it had been objected to. But, it having been allowed to go in without objection, we think it was of itself sufficient to prevent a nonsuit upon this ground. With reference to the children, the matter was put beyond cavil by the statement that they were born in California. The provision of the statute is that "all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are declared to be citizens of the United States." Rev. St. § 1992. Here citizenship from birth is the rule. Subjection to a foreign power is the exception. A case will not be presumed to fall within the exception. Hence proof of birth within the United States is sufficient, in the absence of a showing of subjection to a foreign power. See Golden Fleece Co. v. Cable Con. Co., 12 Nev. 325, 326. The testimony of the father was good evidence of the place of birth. The provision for proof of citizenship by affidavit, if it applies, (Rev. St. U.S. § 2321,) is not exclusive of other modes of proof.

Does the fact that these plaintiffs were minors at the time of the location invalidate the notice as to them? We have not been referred to any decision which holds that it does. The provision of the statute is that mineral deposits in public lands are open to "citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention," etc. Section 2319. No requirement that the citizen shall be of any particular age is expressed; and, unless we are prepared to affirm that minors are not citizens, we do not see how we can say that they are not entitled to the benefit of the act. This conclusion is strengthened by the circumstance that in some instances the statute expressly requires that the citizen shall be of age. Thus, in reference to coal lands, the provision is that "every person above the age of twenty-one years who is a citizen of the United States," etc. Section 2347. So with reference to homesteads the provision is that "every person * * * over the age of twenty-one years, and a citizen," etc. Section 2259. The expression of a requirement as to age in some instances, and the omission of it in others, is significant. Nor is there any reason in the nature of things why a minor may not make a valid location. After the preliminary steps are taken, all that is required is that a certain amount of work shall be done. If the minor can do it, or can get any one to do it for him, the condition imposed by the statute is fulfilled. If he cannot, his claim lapses, and the mine is open to location by others. It may be added that, so far as we know, it is the practice, in many mining communities, for minors to locate claims.

Did the father's want of authority from his children invalidate the notice as to them? He testified as follows: "I had no power of attorney to sign the notice for my children, nor to authorize Mr. Price to sign their names. None of them gave me or him authority to sign their names. * * * I acted for them, but without their knowledge, until after their names were signed, notice recorded and posted." Unless there is an implication from the foregoing that he acted with their knowledge after their names were signed, etc., it does not appear that there was any ratification by all the children, except the bringing of the suit.

It cannot be doubted that the location of a mining claim may be made by agent, (Gore v. McBrayer, 18 Cal. 587;) and wherever there is a local custom to that effect, it is not necessary that the person in whose name a location is made should be aware that it has been made, (Morton v. Solambo Co., 26 Cal. 534.) In the absence of evidence of such a custom, we think that there must be either authority in the first instance or a ratification. Whether a ratification will be presumed, in accordance with what is said in Gore v. McBrayer, above cited, and whether, if presumed or proven, it will relate back to the posting, so as to cut off intervening rights, (compare Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, 4 Pac. Rep. 473, 8 Pac. Rep. 46,) need not be decided; for the bringing of the suit, which must be taken to have been by authority, is a sufficient ratification; and, as far as the record goes, we cannot know that there were any intervening rights,—the assertions in the answer being denied by force of the statute, and the defendant not having introduced any evidence.

Does the fact that the notice was recorded before it was posted render it invalid? We think not. No record is necessary in the absence of a custom requiring it. Golden Fleece Co. v. Cable Con. Co., 12 Nev. 323; Southern Cross Co. v. Europa Co., 15 Nev. 384; Jupiter Co. v. Bodie Co., 7 Sawy. 114, 11 Fed. Rep. 666. No such custom was proved in this case; and it is clear that the doing of an unnecessary act cannot vitiate the notice. But, if such a custom were shown, we do not think the mere order in which the acts are done of sufficient importance to render them of no effect. See, generally, North Noonday Co. v. Orient Co., 6 Sawy. 313, 1 Fed. Rep. 522.

This motion, therefore, was improperly granted. After it had been granted, the defendant moved for a nonsuit as to the two remaining plaintiffs, viz., Matilda and Alex. Thompson, Sr., partly upon grounds already considered, and partly upon the ground that the dismissal of the action as to the other plaintiffs left these two claiming more than they were entitled by law to hold. But in such case the location is good for as much as the party is entitled to hold, and void for the excess only. Richmond Co. v. Rose, 114 U. S. 576, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1055.

It results that the nonsuit as to Matilda and Alex. Thompson, Sr., was improperly granted.

The respondent, however, seeks to uphold the judgment on the ground that the action is under section 2326 of the United States Revised Statutes, and that, so treating it, the complaint is defective in that it does not aver that the plaintiffs are citizens. But there is nothing in the complaint to lead any one to suppose that it was brought under the provision mentioned. It is sufficient as a complaint to quiet title to a mining claim. See Pralus v. Jefferson Co., 34 Cal. 559; Pralus v. Pacific Co., 35 Cal. 34. The plaintiff's motive in bringing the action, or the use which he may be able to make of the judgment, should he obtain one, cannot affect the question of the sufficiency of the complaint.

In the case of Lee Doon v. Tesh, 68 Cal. 44, 6 Pac. Rep. 97, and 8 Pac. Rep. 621, the complaint itself showed that it was brought under section 2326, and the question whether it could not have been upheld as a complaint in an ordinary action to quiet title was not made or considered. The court did not hold that, in all actions in relation to mining claims, the complaint must aver the citizenship of the plaintiffs. It guarded its decision from any such inference by saying: "We must not be understood as holding that in all actions in relation to mining claims, it is necessary for plaintiffs to aver citizenship." And we think that in ordinary actions in relation to mining claims the general allegation that the plaintiff is "the owner," etc., covers all the essential elements of ownership.

We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

BEAL v. STEVENS and others. (No. 11,819.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1887.)

1. MORTGAGE—ASSIGNMENT—RELEASE—BONA FIDE PURCHASE.

A mortgage, as recorded, secured five notes. When the first note was paid, the mortgagee, who had assigned the mortgage, by the direction of the assignee entered the following satisfaction on the margin, signing and acknowledging it himself: "Full payment and satisfaction of the within note and mortgage hereby acknowledged." The assignment of the mortgage was not put on record. Held, that the satisfaction was not notice to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value and mortgages that the remaining four notes were unpaid.

2. SAME—SERIES OF NOTES—DEFAULT IN ONE—SATISFACTION—PERSONAL DECREE.

The right given in the mortgage to the mortgagee to declare all the five notes secured to be due upon default in any, is not taken away by a satisfaction put on record by direction of the mortgagee, upon payment of the first note; and, although not entitled to a decree against the property, the mortgagee may yet have, if he elects to use his option, a personal decree against the mortgagor upon the last three notes, on his failure to pay the second.

3. WITNESS—PARTY—FEES.

A party not subpoenaed by his adversary, who appears and testifies in his own behalf is not entitled to fees and mileage.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Hargrave & Gray, for appellant. Harris & Allen, Curtis & Otis, and H. C. Rolfe, for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. The action is to foreclose a mortgage on certain real estate, given January 18, 1883, by defendants Stevens and Seymour, to secure their five promissory notes of even date with the mortgage, payable to J. S. Loveland or order, one, two, three, four, and five years from date, with interest specified. The defendants Curtis, Soule, and Stacy are charged in the complaint with having or claiming some interest in the premises, which, if any, is subject to the Loveland mortgage. With respect to every matter, except a certain question of costs, as to which there is a bill of exceptions in the record, the cause has come to this court on the judgment roll, including the findings of fact and law. The court below found that, on the day of their date, the notes were indorsed for value, and delivered to the plaintiff, and the pleadings admit that the plaintiff has ever since been the owner and holder of the five notes, except the first, which matured in January, 1884, and was paid. There is also a finding that no part of the four last notes has been paid except one year's interest on each of them. On the day of its date the mortgage was duly recorded. The defendants Stevens and Seymour failed to pay the second of the promissory notes when it became due, or any part thereof, or any part of the interest, making default therein. The mortgage sought to be foreclosed contained a stipulation by which it was covenanted that, in case default should be had in the payment of the principal of any note, or any installment of interest, as the same should become due, then the whole sum of all the notes unpaid, principal and interest, should become at once due and payable, at the option of the mortgagee or his assigns, and that suit could be immediately brought for the foreclosure of said mortgage, etc. On default occurring in the payment of the second note, the plaintiff exercised her option to treat as due the whole amount of the unpaid notes, and commenced this action to foreclose for the whole, on the third day of December, 1885.

The court found that on the nineteenth day of February, 1884, the "plaintiff caused J. S. Loveland, the mortgagee, to discharge the mortgage; and the said Loveland thereupon, with his own consent and the consent of the plaintiff and the defendants Stevens and Seymour, discharged the said mortgage by an entry in the margin of the record thereof, signed by the said mortgagee, J. S. Loveland, acknowledging the satisfaction of said mortgage, in the presence of the recorder, who certified said acknowledgment; which entry of satisfaction and certificate of acknowledgment are in the words and figures following, to-wit: 'Full payment and satisfaction of the within note and mortgage hereby acknowledged. J. S. LOVELAND. Signed and acknowledged before me this nineteenth day of February, 1884. W. F. HOLCOMB, County Recorder, by E. A. NISBET, Deputy.' "

On the nineteenth of February, 1884, and after said mortgage was discharged, the defendant Curtis loaned to the defendants Stevens and Seymour $1,200, and took a note therefor, with interest, payable one year after date, to secure the payment whereof Stevens and Seymour executed and delivered to Curtis their mortgage on all the real property described in the complaint, which mortgage was duly recorded on the day of its date. And on the thirtieth of July, 1884, the defendants, Soule and Stacy, purchased the property of Stevens and Seymour in good faith, and for a valuable consideration; and on the day last mentioned Stevens and Seymour executed and delivered to Soule and Stacy a deed of conveyance of the property aforesaid, which deed was duly recorded on the same day. The court found that neither the defendant Curtis, nor the defendants Soule and Stacy, or either of them, when they parted with their money, respectively, had any notice or knowledge that any of the notes set forth in the complaint had been indorsed to plaintiff, or that plaintiff had any interest in the same, or any part thereof, or in said mortgage.

The court declared, as conclusions of law, that plaintiff was entitled to a personal judgment against defendants, Stevens and Seymour, in the amount of the second of the promissory notes only; but that the third, fourth, and fifth of the notes described in the complaint had not matured when the action was commenced, because the mortgage mentioned in the complaint was, on the nineteenth of February, 1884, completely canceled as to all its conditions and covenants. Further, that the plaintiff recover nothing as against the defendants Curtis, Soule, and Stacy, and that they recover their costs, and that the real property described in the complaint is free from the Loveland mortgage.

The court erred in refusing the plaintiff a personal judgment against the defendants Stevens and Seymour for the last three notes set forth in the complaint. The contract between the plaintiff's assignor and those defendants is contained in the notes and mortgage. All those instruments are to be read together, and, in case of the default mentioned in the contract, the plaintiff, at her option, was entitled to treat all the notes as due. The court, as a court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction by reason of the issues with respect to the existence or non-existence of a mortgage lien, the equity which authorized and required a personal judgment for the amount of the second note authorized and required a personal judgment for all the unpaid notes, since the court finds that no part of the last three notes had been paid. The satisfaction in the margin of the record of the mortgage, if it operated a discharge of the mortgage lien, did not extinguish the mortgage in so far as, with the notes, it constituted the contract of loan. The plaintiff was not estopped from asserting her right to have the last three notes paid, according to the terms of her contract, by a marginal entry the scope and purpose of which was to release the lien. Even if the acknowledgment of payment of "the note" is evidence of a receipt of the sum due on all the notes, such evidence was entirely overcome, to the satisfaction of the court below, as appears from the finding that no part of the last three notes had been paid, except one year's interest.

The question remains to be decided, what was the effect of the marginal entry upon the rights of the subsequent mortgagee and subsequent purchasers? In effect, the second defense of the fourth amended answer of the defendants Stevens and Seymour is that on February 12, 1884, they agreed to pay, and Loveland, the payee named in the notes, agreed to accept, in extinguishment of their obligation to pay the principal and accrued interest of all the notes, the sum of $303; that in pursuance thereof, and on the nineteenth of the same February, they paid him $303; and that thereupon Loveland did in writing release them from all liability and obligation on said mortgage, "and satisfied the same by an entry in the margin of the record of said mortgage." Further the defense alleges, "on information and belief, that at the time of the agreement mentioned Loveland had the notes and mortgage in his possession. Further, that the plaintiff knew of all the transactions of Loveland with the said defendants, and was fully aware of said agreement, and consented and agreed thereto, and was fully aware of the release of these defendants, and of the satisfaction of said mortgage, and consented thereto at the time of the * * * satisfaction of said mortgage."

It is urged by counsel for the plaintiff that the finding of the court below that the plaintiff "caused J. S. Loveland, the mortgagee, to discharge the mortgage," and that Loveland, "with the consent of the plaintiff," discharged the same, is without the issues, because no one of the defendants avers in his answer that plaintiff caused Loveland to discharge the mortgage. But, as we have seen, defendants Stevens and Seymour aver that the discharge was with the consent of the plaintiff, and the court found that the discharge was with her consent, given at the time. It is not necessary to decide whether the plaintiff's demurrer to the above-stated second count of the fourth amended answer was well taken, inasmuch as, so far as such defense or count was a plea in the nature of accord and satisfaction, the court below found upon it adversely to the defendants Stevens and Seymour, in the finding that no part of the four last notes had been paid except one year's interest on each.

It is contended by appellants that an assignment of negotiable notes before maturity carries with them the security, and a satisfaction of a mortgage entered on the record by the original creditor, after he has sold and delivered the notes, is a mere nullity; that the party buying mortgaged premises must at his peril ascertain who then owns the notes accompanying the mortgage, and whether the same have been actually paid. Even if it should be conceded (in the absence of an assignment of the mortgage and its registration) that a subsequent purchaser is bound to know, notwithstanding a discharge of record executed by the mortgagee, that he has transferred the notes the mortgage was given to secure, and the mortgage itself as an incident to the notes,—and we do not concede it or decide the question,—yet if the indorsee or transferee of the notes consented to and approved of the discharge of the mortgage by the mortgagee, how stand the equities of the respective parties?

In the case at bar the plaintiff comes into equity to assert the continuance of the lien, as against the mortgagors, a subsequent mortgagee, and subsequent purchasers. Clearly she ought not to be permitted to do this in the face of her established consent to its discharge.

Section 2938 of the Civil Code provides: "A recorded mortgage may be discharged by an entry in the margin of the record thereof, signed by the mortgagee, or his personal representative or assignee, acknowledging the satisfaction of the mortgage in the presence of the recorder, who must certify the acknowledgment in form substantially as follows: 'Signed and acknowledged before me this _____ day of _____, in the year _____. A. B., Recorder.'

It is not required by the statute that the entry in the margin of the record shall state anything with respect to the indebtedness to secure which the mortgage was given. It is manifest that an acknowledgment of satisfaction of the mortgage, signed by plaintiff, would have been sufficient, and that the words "full payment" and "note" are surplusage. The entry, signed by Loveland with plaintiff's consent, must be construed in like manner. When the mortgage was discharged the lien ceased, and unless the marginal satisfaction was induced by fraud, or was a mistake, with the knowledge of defendants Curtis, Soule, or Stacy, they were not bound to inquire what, if any, was the consideration for the discharge of the lien. A mortgagee may voluntarily discharge his mortgage, relying upon the general credit and responsibility of the mortgagor, or he may do so in consideration of receiving other security, or for any other reason satisfactory to himself. If the marginal discharge expressly recited that it was executed in consideration of the payment of the first of the five promissory notes, the lien would have ended.

It is insisted that defendants Curtis, Soule, and Stacy were not "in good faith," because the marginal entry informed them that only one note had been paid. But, in the first place, the matter with respect to payment of "the note" was not properly of record as part of the marginal entry; therefore no constructive notice. In the second place, the discharge was complete if made in consideration of the payment of one note. If it be said the insertion of the words, "full payment of the note is acknowledged," was evidence to put the subsequent parties on inquiry that Loveland (acting with the consent and approval of plaintiff) was induced by the fraud of the defendants Stevens and Seymour to sign the marginal entry, or that it was done under a mistake, the matter unnecessarily inserted in the marginal entry was, at most, evidence tending to prove notice of fraud or mistake, if any existed, and no such fraud or mistake was pleaded, proved, or found. The court below denied the plaintiff's motion to retax by striking from defendants' cost-bill two items, one being a charge for mileage as to witness of E. E. Stacy, party to the suit, taxed at $16, and the other his fees for two days' attendance as a witness, $4. Stacy was not subpoenaed as a witness.

The parties to a suit are competent witnesses. Code Civil Proc. § 1879. The statute in force in San Bernardino county gives to witnesses fees for attendance and mileage. Hitt. Code, 2720. In the present case the court below could have allowed or refused to allow costs to the defendants other than the mortgagors named in the complaint, or could have apportioned costs between them and the plaintiff. Code Civil Proc. §§ 1022, 1024, 1025. The object of section 1879 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as it relates to parties to an action, is to change the common-law rule, and to render such parties competent to testify. Fairly construed, the statute which allows fees and mileage to witnesses relates, in ordinary cases, only to witnesses who may be compelled by subpoena to attend the trial, or to give their deposition, and, in case of a party, to one who has been subpoenaed by the opposite party. It may be that a witness not a party, who is subject to subpoena, may ordinarily be allowed, not only his attendance, but mileage, although not actually subpoenaed. But it appears from the bill of exceptions that Stacy, who was a party, was not subpoenaed. If he testified on his own behalf, it must be presumed he supposed his attendance was necessary for that purpose, even if, in support of the action of the court below, we assume that he was called to the stand by the plaintiff or a co-defendant. We think it is not intended by the statute that he should be allowed compensation for his voluntary attendance on the trial, or mileage. His presence must be referred to his natural interest as a party to the litigation. We are informed it has been the practice of the superior courts almost uniformly to refuse to allow such charges.

Judgment reversed, with direction to the court below to enter a judgment in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; PATERSON, J.

COBURN v. GOODALL and others. (No. 9,592.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 10, 1887.)

1. COVENANTS—IN LEASE—RUNNING WITH THE LAND.

A covenant in a lease to surrender, at the expiration of the term, with such improvements as shall have been erected, runs with the land, and binds the assignees of the lessee, although they are not mentioned in the lease.

2. LEASE—ASSIGNMENT—JOINT LIABILITY OF ASSIGNEES.

Assignees of the whole of the demised premises, though in unequal proportions, are jointly and severally liable for the entire damages sustained by the lessor by reason of a breach by them of a covenant in the lease to surrender possession at the expiration of the term.

3. ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT—EJECTMENT—OUSTER.

In ejectment when the claim for mesne profits has been withdrawn, there are but two material questions left, viz., right of entry by the plaintiff, and wrongful possession of the defendant on the day the action was brought. The judgment in the suit is therefore not an estoppel as to the time of ouster.¹

4. SAME—ELECTION OF REMEDIES—COVENANT.

A landlord is not estopped to proceed against the assignees of his lessee for a breach of covenant, to deliver possession, on the ground that he has elected to treat them as trespassers, by reason of the fact that he has successfully maintained ejectment against them, when in the ejectment suit he expressly withdrew all claim for damages.

5. EVIDENCE—WRIT AND RETURN.

In a suit by the lessor for damages for a breach of covenant to surrender, against the assignees of the lessee, a return of "executed" by the sheriff on a writ of restitution issued in another suit to which the assignees were not parties, is only prima facie evidence that the lessor was so put in possession.

6. INTEREST—RIGHT TO—UNLIQUIDATED DEMAND.

When the plaintiff's claim is an uncertain and unliquidated demand, and the amount due cannot be ascertained from the face of the contract in suit, but has to be settled by process of law, he is not entitled to interest, eo nomine, under Civil Code Cal. § 3287, providing that "every person who is entitled to recover damages, certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled to recover interest thereon from that day," etc.

7. SAME—CONTRACT.

Interest can be had under Civil Code Cal. § 3288, only for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract. Where, therefore, the court finds that the plaintiff's case is for a breach of an obligation arising from contract, he is not entitled to interest under that section.

8. DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

The court is entitled to be put in possession of all pertinent facts and circumstances from the consideration of all of which the ultimate fact of the quantum of damages is to be deduced.

9. APPEAL—QUESTION OF FACT.

It is not for the appellate court to say that the court below ought to have believed certain witnesses rather than the one on whose testimony the findings is based.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Action by Coburn, respondent, against Goodall and others, appellants, to recover damages for failure to deliver certain premises on the sea-shore, to which a wharf and chute were attached, leased by him (Coburn) to one Brennan, and by him assigned to the appellants.

¹As to when a judgment is not an estoppel, see Haley v. Haley, (Cal.) 14 Pac. Rep. 92; Bigley v. Jones, (Pa.) 7 Atl. Rep. 54; Dicken v. Hays, Id. 58; Riverside Co. v. Townsend, (Ill.) 9 N. E. Rep. 65, and note; Weiss v. Guerinian, (Ind.) Id. 399; Richardson v. Richards, (Minn.) 30 N. W. Rep. 457; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Meyer, 29 Fed. Rep. 225.

Fox & Kellogg and McAllister & Bergin, for appellants.

The conclusion of law and the judgment are in conflict with each other; the one does not support the other, and neither is supported by the findings of fact.

The findings of fact are: (1) That the defendants entered under lease. (2) That the following named persons are the defendants who so entered, and that they held in the following proportions, to-wit: The defendant Sudden one undivided fourth; the defendant Fake one undivided fourth; the defendant Goodall one undivided eighth; the defendant Nelson one undivided eighth; the defendant Wensinger one undivided eighth; and the defendant O'Farrell one undivided eighth. (3) That these defendants so named continued in possession (of the five acres here demanded) until the commencement of this suit. (4) That said defendants oppressively withheld the possession (although there is no such allegation in the complaint.) (5) That the value of the use and occupation is $10,000, and that that is the measure of plaintiff's damage, by reason of all the acts of all these defendants. There is nothing in all the findings to show that any of the defendants have succeeded to any of the interests or liabilities of any of their co-defendants, or that for any cause any of the defendants have ceased to be liable; and yet the conclusion of law is that plaintiff is entitled to judgment against four of the defendants only,—Goodall, Nelson, Wensinger, and Sudden, representing five-eighths of the interest found, and five-eighths of the wrong,—for the full amount of all the rents and profits and damages found, $10,000, and that that amount shall bear interest from November 24, 1875; and the judgment is entered against the said four defendants, not for $10,000, or for that sum, with interest from November 24, 1875, as ordered, nor for any sum which is equal to the said $10,000, with interest added for the time mentioned, but for $16,520, a sum which is more than $1,700 in excess of the damage found, with the interest added.

It thus appears (1) that the judgment is erroneous, even if it ran against all the defendants, because it is in conflict with and is not supported by the findings; (2) that it is erroneous because it does not run against the defendants found liable; (3) that it is erroneous because the conclusion of law is not supported by the findings of fact; (4) that it is erroneous because it is not in conformity with the conclusion of law.

If the defendants against whom the findings ran are jointly, or jointly and severally, liable, then the defendants against whom the judgment runs are injured by the judgment, for that it cuts them off from the right to enforce contribution. On the other hand, if five defendants against whom the findings run are only severally liable, and each for his proportion as found, as the findings imply, then the judgment is against law, in that it makes the judgment defendants liable for a large sum of money, for which the court found that others, and not these, were liable. So that, looking at this judgment in any aspect that we may, it is erroneous and against law. It therefore becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether the liability of the defendants named in the findings is joint, joint and several, or several only.

Plaintiff is estopped by the judgment in the former suit of Coburn v. Ames, Templeton, Goodall, and Nelson.

This action was commenced November 24, 1875. The case of Coburn v. Ames, Templeton, Goodall, and Nelson, commenced January 16, 1875, was an action of ejectment to recover possession of about six acres of land, and $5,000 damages for the detention of the same. Judgment was rendered against said defendants, June 15, 1876, for the possession of the demanded premises, but without damages. That judgment was affirmed by this court in October, 1877, and remittitur filed January 14, 1878. The evidence of plaintiff himself in this case shows that, before the commencement of this suit, he was in possession of all of the 40-acre tract mentioned in the complaint in this action, except the 6 acres described in said former complaint. And the plaintiff himself introduced the judgment roll in said former case in evidence, and argued that it was conclusive of the fact of detention by these defendants of the 6 acres, part of the said 40 acres; and all the evidence in this case, as to the damage sustained, is directed to this 6-acre tract, and the findings themselves say that the adverse holding was of 5 acres. This judgment roll was offered by plaintiff generally, and admitted without objection. It is evidence for all the purposes to which it is applicable in the case. It was claimed by the plaintiff to be conclusive, as between these parties, as to the legal condition or relation of the parties to that six acres of land; and it was so conclusive, at least as between the plaintiff and the defendants Goodall and Nelson, under section 1908, sub. 1, and section 1962, sub. 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the same sections, it was equally conclusive on the question of the damages sustained by the plaintiff, and of his right to recover damages for the detention of said lands.

A judgment is conclusive, and operates as an estoppel, as between the parties and their privies, not only as to the matters expressly determined, but also as to all matters which might have been given in evidence under the issues. Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. 436; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 272; Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 521; Pheian v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Estate of Pico, 56 Cal. 413; Parnell v. Hahn, 61 Cal. 131; McCreery v. Ful-ler, 63 Cal. 30.

This question of damages was directly within the issues of that former case, being alleged in the complaint, and denied in all the answers. Under the authorities cited, it is no answer to say that it was not adjudicated; it might have been. Complaint in ejectment; damages alleged, and issue thereon; judgment for possession, but no judgment for damages. That judgment will be a bar to any further action to recover the same damages. Belcher Con. G. M. Co. v. Deferrari, 62 Cal. 163.

The evidence is insufficient to support finding 9, and the same is against both fact and law.

This finding is directly responsive to an issue tendered by all the answers, and is directly in conflict with all the evidence on the point. The lease under which defendants entered expired October 1, 1872. The evidence shows that on the nineteenth of June, 1872, an action was commenced in the Twelfth district court, San Mateo county, by the Pacific Lumber & Mill Company and J. P. Ames, against this plaintiff and his co-tenant, and their lessees, these defendants, to acquire the said five acres of land by condemnation, under the statute as it then stood. On the twenty-seventh day of September, 1872, in that cause, an order was made and given, signed by his honor, Judge McKINSTRY, then judge of said court, authorizing the plaintiffs in that cause, to take possession of the said five acres, and hold and use it for the public uses named in said order, and staying all proceeding against the plaintiffs therein on account thereof. This order was fully authorized by the terms of the statute as it then stood. Code Civil Proc. 1872, § 1254.

On granting this order, the undertaking required by said section was duly given and approved by the court. Under this order, which ran as well against the plaintiff as against the defendants herein, these defendants were ousted, before the expiration of the term of their lease, and at the expiration of said term, as to these five acres, it was impossible for them to put plaintiff in possession; and these defendants were never afterwards restored to that possession. On the contrary, the tract was surrendered by the parties who held under the order, not to these defendants, but to this plaintiff, in October, 1873. Whatever scramble for possession occurred after that was between this plaintiff and other parties, not with these defendants, for they never in any manner interfered with it. In further proof of this, it appears from the record in this case that afterwards, in another action brought by Ames and Templeton

(the latter of whom had succeeded to the interest of the Pacific Lumber & Mill Company) against this plaintiff and his co-tenant, Clarke, and to which these defendants were not parties, those plaintiffs were put in possession of the land, first under an order dated May 26, 1873, which order was vacated June 9, 1873, and another order of possession made March 14, 1874, the court having first, however, by its writ of restitution, executed by the sheriff of the county, put this plaintiff into full possession of the property on the twenty-fourth of January, 1874. Thus these defendants were put out in September, 1872, and the court itself authorized another to take possession. In October, 1873, the plaintiff was put in possession by the parties then holding it. Not satisfied with that, he applied to the court, and its officer put him in possession in January, 1874. And still the court finds in this case that these defendants remained in possession and kept the plaintiff out until the commencement of this suit, November, 1875.

Garber, Thornton & Bishop and Craig & Meredith, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. It was decided in Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 395, that the wharf and chute were not on the demised premises, were not affixed or appurtenant thereto, and therefore were not "improvements," within the meaning of that term as used in the lease. The court held that the plaintiff had no such right to the possession of the land below the line of high water as to enable him to maintain ejectment, and the judgment of the lower court was modified accordingly. Pending the appeal in that case a receiver was appointed in the trial court to take possession of the property, collect tolls, and manage the wharf and chute. After judgment was modified in accordance with the order of this court, the receiver, under directions from the court in which he was appointed, paid over all the money in his hands to the plaintiff. The defendants, among whom were Goodall and Nelson, defendants herein, again appealed to this court, and it was held that, as the plaintiff was not entitled to the possession of the wharf and chute, he was not entitled to all of the profits derived from the use of them pending the litigation. The cause was accordingly again remanded for the adjustment of the accounts. Coburn v. Ames, 57 Cal. 204.

This action was commenced on November 25, 1875. The lease which is made the basis of this suit contained a covenant that Brennan, the lessee, at the expiration of said lease would surrender to Coburn and Clark (the lessors or their assigns) with such improvements as shall have been erected or made thereon, but there was nothing in the covenant providing in terms that the lease should be binding upon the assigns of the lessees. The defendants are all assignees of undivided parts, amounting to five-eighths of the whole interest in the lease, viz., Sudden, one-quarter; Goodall, one-eighth; Nelson, one-eighth; and Wensinger, one-eighth.

The action as to defendant Fake, who owned one-quarter, was dismissed. The other defendant, O'Farrell, who owned one-eighth, died pending the action, and his representative has never been substituted. Judgment was rendered against the defendants Sudden, Goodall, Nelson, and Wensinger for $10,000, with interest thereon from commencement of suit, $6,520; total, $16,520; and costs of suit.

It is claimed that these four defendants, if liable at all under the covenant to surrender, (which is denied,) are liable only in respect of their privity of estate, and that such liability is several and proportionate to the interest acquired by each of them. To this proposition we cannot assent. There are some authorities to that effect, but the weight of opinion, we believe, is contrary thereto; and with better reason it is held that, while assignees of a leasehold are tenants in common, they are jointly and severally liable on covenants to repair and to deliver up at the end of the term. These covenants which are connected with the estate run with the land, and vest in point of benefit and liability in the assignee, while the personal privity of contract between the lessor and lessee remains unaffected by the transfer. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 435, 329; 2 Platt, Leases, 351; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. (7th Ed.) § 530, note; Hayes v. Morrison, 38 N. H. 95; Fitch v. Johnson, 104 Ill. 117.

The authorities cited which relate to questions concerning the apportionment of rent, are not applicable, as payment of rent is an exception to the rule. Freem. Co-Tenancy, § 346.

The demurrer was properly overruled, if our view of the liability of tenants in common, assignees of the whole of the demised premises, though in unequal proportions, is correct, i. e., that they are jointly and severally liable on all covenants and obligations of the assignors, except, perhaps, the payment of rent. The possession of one of the tenants is the possession of all. There is no unity of interest, title, or time as in joint tenancy, but as to unity of possession they are identical. So far as enjoyment of possession goes, they are all equal, whatever may be the difference in shares held by each. If they are not jointly and severally liable, one tenant in common owning a small undivided interest might prevent the delivery of the property in its entirety which the lessor is entitled to under his contract with or without an express covenant therefor. We see no hardship in this rule, for the assignees in possession, upon authority and in reason, stand in the shoes of the lessee; and so long as they occupy such relation to the lessor and his property they are bound by the terms of the contract with the lessee, and the obligations implied therefrom by law. While one of the tenants in common remains, the unity of possession is undivided, and as to those at least who continue in possession by themselves or by agents the unity of obligation flows from unity of possession. There is nothing in the judgment which will prevent the four defendants against whom it was entered from enforcing contribution from Fake and the representatives of O'Farrell, if the right to contribute exist.

The evidence is sufficient, we think, to sustain the finding that the defendants continued in possession of the five-acre tract from the expiration of the lease to the time this action was commenced. This tract or parcel, as described by the court in its findings, is "commonly known as 'Pigeon Point' shipping point, and used for the purpose of handling and shipping freight, and lying above and bounded on one side by ordinary high-water mark." As between these defendants and this plaintiff, the grant of the wharf franchise by the board of supervisors to Templeton and Moore, in 1870, is immaterial. It was the duty of the defendants to deliver to plaintiff the possession of the five-acre tract. We think there was evidence sufficient to warrant the court below in finding that Ames did not deprive the defendants of possession. There was evidence tending to show that defendants were using the name of Ames as a disguise for their own possession. Furthermore, there seems to be no longer any doubt that orders like that of the district judge, made in the case referred to September 27, 1872, putting plaintiffs in the possession of the land during the pendency of the action for condemnation, are void. Sanborn v. Belden, 51 Cal. 266; San Mateo Water-Works v. Sharpstein, 50 Cal. 284. With respect to the possession which it is claimed Coburn secured by virtue of the writs of restitution served in the case of Templeton and Ames v. Coburn and Clark, it is sufficient to say that the evidence is conflicting as to the fact of possession. The return of the officer upon the writ was only prima facie evidence of the fact stated. Pol. Code, § 4178. Plaintiff testified that he had no actual possession; that the moment the sheriff left "they just jumped right in, and took possession again."

It is claimed by appellant that the ejectment suit of Loren Coburn, as plaintiff, against Josiah P. Ames, Ellen Templeton, administratrix of the estate of Horace Templeton, Charles Goodall, Christopher Nelson, and George C. Perkins, defendants, commenced on the sixteenth day of January, 1875, and the findings and judgment therein, establishes an election by Coburn to treat

Goodall and Nelson as trespassers, dissolves all their relations with him as assignees of said lease, and adjudicates facts which are inconsistent with the claim of plaintiff in this action. In that case all claim for damages the findings therein show was expressly withdrawn by plaintiff. If this had not been done, there is no question that the judgment would be conclusive on the question of damages, as it was made an issue in the case. "An adjudication is final and conclusive, not only as to the matter actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated, and have had decided as incident to or essentially connected with the subject-matter of the litigation, and every matter coming within the legitimate purview of the original action, both in respect to matters of claim and of defense." Freem. Judgm. § 249. When, however, the record on its face shows that the issue was withdrawn from the consideration of the court, the presumption that it was adjudicated no longer applies. The right to recover possession, and the right to recover mesne profits, were not necessarily united in the action in ejectment. The right to join causes of action for both is a mere privilege granted by statute. That the record in that case is not an estoppel as to the time of ouster is equally clear, (Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 465;) for if the question of mesne profits may be considered out of the case by virtue of the finding of a withdrawal thereof, then there were but two other questions which could have been material in that action of ejectment, viz., right of entry by plaintiff, and wrongful possession of defendant on the day suit was commenced.

Appellant, claims, further, that the bringing of the suit in ejectment was an election of a remedy inconsistent with this action, and concludes him from maintaining the latter. The rule stated in the syllabus, taken from Jones v. Carter, 15 Mees. & W. 718, is doubtless correct: "The service by lessor upon lessee of a declaration in ejectment for the demised premises, for a forfeiture, operates as a final election by the lessor to determine the term; and he cannot afterwards (although there has not been any judgment in the ejectment) sue for rent due, or covenants broken, after the service of the declaration." That was an action of covenant in a mining lease in which breaches were alleged, the first for non-payment of rent, and others for violation of covenants requiring defendants during the continuance of the demise to keep six men searching for mineral for certain periods in each year, for keeping legible accounts of ore extracted, etc., but the principal question related to rent. The case before us, however, is not for rent, or for damages caused by a breach of covenant subsequent to the commencement of the ejectment suit. The plaintiff's right to recover both possession and damages arose immediately upon the failure of the defendants to deliver at the expiration of the lease, and in both actions the defendants are treated as wrongfully in possession and charged with a continuous wrongful withholding from the time the covenant was broken down to the commencement of the action.

There was evidence to support the finding of the court that Wensinger and Sudden continued in possession of the tract from the expiration of the lease to the commencement of the action. It is not for the appellate court to say that the court below ought to have believed certain witnesses rather than the one on whose testimony the finding is based. There are circumstances tending to corroborate plaintiff's testimony and claim that Scotty held possession for and as agent of Wensinger and Sudden. Coburn failed to obtain possession under the written surrender executed by Sudden to him, and, of course, if such failure was due in any degree to the act or neglect of Sudden, it was inoperative. Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 406.

It is claimed that the court erred in allowing, against the objection of defendants, evidence as to profits derived from the wharf and chute; that such was improper data for the assessment of damages; and it will be presumed that injury resulted from the admission of such evidence. The court evidently did not hold that the defendants were bound to deliver the wharf, nor was the amount of profits derived from the wharf and chute taken as the measure of damage; otherwise a much larger sum would have been fixed by the court as the damage suffered by plaintiff. In determining the amount of damage sustained by plaintiff, we think that the question of profits derived from the wharf was a proper subject of inquiry, providing it was not taken as the measure of damage. If it be true that the defendants were wrongdoers in refusing to deliver possession to plaintiff, the question is, how much was Coburn damaged by the failure of the defendants to do what it was their duty to do? If it be assumed that those profits would necessarily have been less, if they had delivered to him the portion above high-water, retaining the part below themselves, it was easy to arrive at and deduct the difference. All he had to do was to complete it, and the cost of completion was capable of demonstration. He was not allowed to recover, as such, the profits of the whole property. But in this, as in similar cases, it was proper and necessary to put the court in possession of all pertinent facts and circumstances from the consideration of all of which the ultimate fact of the quantum of damage was to be deduced. The court below allowed damages for the detention only of that part of the demised premises which it found was actually and exclusively detained, used, and possessed by the defendants from the expiration of the lease, October 1, 1872, to the commencement of this action, November 24, 1875; and whether we take into consideration the results flowing from the acts of defendants under the doctrine of encroachment contended for by plaintiff or not, $10,000, the principal amount of damages allowed is reasonable and just.

We think, however, that the court erred in allowing interest on the $10,000. Section 3287; Civil Code, reads as follows: "Every person who is entitled to recover damages certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover which is vested in him upon a particular day, is entitled also to recover interest thereon from that day, except during such time as the debtor is prevented by law, or by the act of the creditor, from paying the debt." But the damages were unliquidated and uncertain, and could only be made certain by proof and adjudication. Where the plaintiff's claim was an uncertain and unliquidated demand, and the amount due could not be ascertained from the face of the contract, but was to be settled by process of law, this court has held that interest eo nomine cannot be allowed. Brady v. Wilcoxon, 44 Cal. 245. Nor could interest be allowed under section 3288, Civil Code; for interest under this section can only be allowed for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, and in case of oppression, fraud, or malice. If plaintiff shows any case at all, it is for breach of an obligation which does arise from contract, and the court so finds.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be and it is hereby modified by striking therefrom the sum of $6,520, and, as so modified, the judgment shall stand.

PEOPLE v. KRAKER. (No. 20,285.)

CORROBORATION OF ACCOMPLICE—RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

In a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, it is error to allow the jury to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the thief, without leaving to them to find whether such witness was not in fact an accomplice of defendant, so as to require his testimony to be corroborated.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Chas. B. Darwin, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of receiving stolen goods knowing them to have been stolen. At the trial, one H. G. Matthewson, who was charged in the information with the stealing of the goods, was a witness against the defendant, evidently the principal witness. At the conclusion of the testimony and argument the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury substantially in the language of section 1111 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence, which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof."

The court refused to give the instruction asked, and, in the charge to the jury referring to the claim of defendant's counsel that Matthewson was an accomplice, said: "I charge you, in plain terms, that if you believe the testimony of Horace G. Matthewson, and from that testimony you are satisfied to a moral certainty that the defendant did receive the property mentioned in the information from him, and that, at the time of the receipt thereof by the defendant, he knew and was informed that it was stolen property, and he so received it for his own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing it, then you are authorized to convict the defendant on the testimony of said Matthewson." Subsequently, on motion for new trial, the learned judge had some doubt as to the correctness of his instruction, but, deeming it best to have the question settled, denied the motion, giving the defendant the benefit of a certificate of good cause.

We think the instruction given by the court was erroneous. The proposition has never been directly passed upon in this state, but in People v. Levi-son, 19 Cal. 99, the court, in commenting upon certain rulings, said: "It also leaves the inference that the unsupported testimony of the thief is sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt." An accomplice includes all persons who have been concerned in the commission of an offense, and the grade of guilt of the witness is not important. Abb. Law Dict.; Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152.

In England, where there is no statutory provision against a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the judges always instruct the jury that the uncorroborated testimony of the thief, in cases of this kind, is not sufficient. Reg. v. Robinson, 4 Fost. & F. 43; Reg. v. Pratt, Id. 315.

In that portion of the charge quoted above the court took from the jury the question whether, as a matter of fact, Matthewson was an accomplice, considering, it seems, only the abstract proposition of law as to whether the mere fact that the witness was the thief made him an accomplice of the one who received the goods. But the question as to whether the witness was an accomplice in the commission of the offense is a question of fact for the jury. State v. Schlagel, 19 Iowa, 169.

In Texas, under a statute like section 1111, supra, the court held that, if the witness was an accomplice in any material fact, the jury should have been instructed as to the value of his evidence without corroboration. Miller v. State, 4 Tex. App. 251. And in Massachusetts it is held that "the court should instruct the jury as to what constitutes an accomplice, and leave it for them to determine whether the witness was in fact an accomplice." Com. v. Elliot, 110 Mass. 106; Com. v. Ford, 111 Mass. 394.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for new trial.

FITZELL v. LEAKY. (No. 11,424.)*(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1887.)1. HOMESTEAD—EXEMPTION—APPURTENANCES—DITCH.

Plaintiff made an agreement to give a right of way over his homestead for a ditch, and to pay one-fourth of the expense of constructing it, in return for one-fourth of the whole ditch, and of the water flowing through. Such part of the water was to be used in irrigating said homestead, which would be valueless without the use of water; the remainder to be used by the other party to the agreement, to irrigate his lands, through which the ditch ran. Held, that plaintiff's interest in the ditch and water is part of his land,—the right of the other party being merely an easement to have the water flow down to his land; and said interest, being part of plaintiff's homestead, is exempt from sale to the full extent to which homesteads are exempt.

2. SAME—DECLARATION OF—PENDING SUIT.

A declaration of homestead, regular in form, filed by the defendant in an action after the findings of the court have adjudged a debt to be due from him to the plaintiff therein, but before judgment entered, is not in fraud of creditors, but is valid, for such is the very purpose of the homestead law. Civil Code Cal. §§ 1240, 1241.

3. VENDOR'S LIEN—GENERAL JUDGMENT—WAIVER.

A vendor's lien on real property can be enforced only in a suit brought for that purpose, and is waived by taking a general judgment, which, if docketed, is a lien upon all the debtor's real property.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

C. G. Kelley, for appellant. E. V. Spencer, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The action is to enjoin the defendant from selling, as sheriff, one-fourth of a water ditch, and of the water flowing through it, claimed by plaintiff as appurtenant to and part of his homestead. The court below decreed an injunction. At the trial the defendant introduced in evidence the judgment roll in an action wherein one G. F. Kelly was plaintiff, and the plaintiff herein was defendant. That action was brought by the plaintiff to quiet his title to a tract of four and one-half acres of land, described by metes and bounds, so as to include the land occupied by a ditch, in part the ditch above mentioned, and in part the continuation of the same through and within the general limits of the lands owned by one George Riddle. The tract, the title to which was sought to be quieted, was further described: "The westerly one-half of the same being the same lands heretofore purchased by the plaintiff [Kelly] from one George Riddle, by deed of date June 28, 1880, and the easterly one-half, or remainder, being the same lands purchased by said plaintiff of H. G. Fitzell [plaintiff herein, and defendant in said action,] by deed of date June 28, 1880, and was all purchased for the purpose of constructing a ditch thereon for irrigating purposes."

The defendant in that action (plaintiff in this) answered, and such proceedings were had thereafter that on July 28, 1883, a judgment was entered, whereby it was adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff therein was the owner of an undivided three-fourths interest, and the defendant therein of an undivided one-fourth interest, in the right of way and irrigating ditch situate and being on the lands described in the complaint therein, and barring each of the parties from asserting any claim to the interest adjudged to the other; and, further, that the plaintiff therein have and recover from the defendant therein the sum of $275.

In its findings in the action aforesaid, the court found that the plaintiff therein was not the owner of the lands described in the complaint, nor of any interest in the same, except as specified; that on the twenty-eighth June, 1880, the plaintiff therein procured a right of way from the defendant therein across the latter's land for the purpose of constructing an irrigating ditch, and on the same day granted to the defendant therein one-fourth interest in said easement or right of way, upon condition that said defendant would bear his proportionate part of the cost and expenses of constructing the irrigating ditch; that thereafter the said plaintiff and defendant jointly constructed the ditch upon and across the strips of land described in the complaint, and have since jointly maintained the same; that plaintiff is the owner of three-fourths interest in such right of way, ditch, and water-right, and the defendant of one-fourth; that since the twenty-eighth June, 1880, the plaintiff in said action had claimed to be the sole proprietor, etc.; that the defendant therein did not, on the twenty-eighth June, 1880, convey the described land by deed to the plaintiff therein, but only granted a right of way; that the plaintiff therein had paid out $275 more than three-fourths of the cost of construction of the ditch; and that the defendant therein had paid $275 less than one-fourth of the cost of such construction. For this sum, as we have seen, a money judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff in such action.

The present plaintiff's declaration of homestead was regular in form, and was filed after the findings of the court in the action above described, but (considerable delay intervening between the findings and judgment) before the judgment was entered. It is by virtue of an execution issued upon the money judgment in favor of Kelly that the present defendant, as sheriff, has advertised and threatens to sell the plaintiff's interest in the ditch and water therein flowing.

Can the plaintiff's interest in the ditch and water be said to be a portion of the homestead created upon a tract of land through which the ditch flows? The plaintiff here agreed to give the right of way through his land, and to pay one-fourth of the expenses of constructing the ditch, in return for one-fourth of the whole ditch, and of the water flowing through it. Looking below the form, this was the real nature of the contract.

And in the findings in the present action the court below found that the interest of this plaintiff in said water-ditch was acquired for the purpose of irrigating the land of plaintiff embraced in his homestead declaration; that the ditch crosses said lands before coming to the lands of said Kelly; and that plaintiff takes one-fourth of the water out of said ditch upon the homestead lands for the purpose of irrigating the same, which is necessary for the production of the staple crops of the country, and that said land would be actually valueless without the use of the water. The case, as a whole, clearly shows that the object of the plaintiff and defendant in jointly constructing the ditch was to secure water for the purpose of irrigating their respective tracts of land. Under these circumstances, we think the flow of the water through plaintiff's land, to the extent of his interest therein, was part of his land inseparably connected with it until he should part with it voluntarily, or until it should be sold under a judgment which could be enforced against the homestead.

This is not the case of a partnership formed for the purpose of appropriating water, and vending it to third persons. There is nothing in the nature of the transaction which made the ditch, as a mere conduit, or the water flowing in it as such, assets of a copartnership, or which created a lien upon them in favor of one of the partners advancing more than his proportion of the capital. The plaintiff and Kelly diverted a stream from its natural course to give value to their lands by irrigating them. As to third persons, creditors of either, they should be treated, with reference to the flowing water, like riparian proprietors upon the same natural stream; both being bound, inter sese, by their contract for the distribution. If the water had been brought to his land by the plaintiff alone, it would have become annexed to the land; and it would be difficult to apply a different rule, because, by convention between him and a lower proprietor, he is entitled to one-fourth, or any definite proportion, of it. The owners of adjacent tracts of land led the water to their tracts, and their rights are substantially the same as if the channel were a natural channel. The statute, and decisions under it, which seem to require that, in case of the declaration of a homestead upon property held in common with another, the declarant must have the exclusive possession of the land, do not affect the rights of the parties hereto. The statute none the less operates to exempt from forced sale the land embraced in the homestead, and all its incidents, in a case where a lower proprietor may own an easement to have the water flow down to his land.

The adjacent proprietors were not tenants in common in the water in any other sense than as all the riparian proprietors are entitled to the common use of a stream. Each had exclusive possession of his own land, and of the water flowing over it as a part of his land. As to Riddle, occupant above, they might perhaps assert he had no right to use the water, because he had granted the right of way for a ditch carrying it all; but, as to the creditors of plaintiff or Kelly, the flow of the water over the tract of each was, in legal contemplation, part of his land. Kelly was entitled to have the water flow from plaintiff's land to his own, subject to reasonable use by the plaintiff, but this did not make him tenant in common in any part of the land embraced in the homestead. The owner of an easement upon land has no right of entry, nor has he any right to possess the land as such. San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 585. One who owns an easement upon the land of another has a right to enter on the land to keep the easement in repair; but, aside from this and analogous purposes, he has no right of entry. Pico v. Colimas, 32 Cal. 578.

By virtue of the contract between plaintiff and Kelly, the former was authorized to use one-fourth of the water, and could not deprive the latter of any part of three-fourths of it. But, whatever his contract with the lower proprietor as to the use of a specific share, the water flowing over the plaintiff's homestead was a portion of his homestead. It is possible that, independent of their relation as owners of the dominant and servient estates, Kelly had such an interest in the ditch, as a mere artificial conduit, as would authorize him to enter upon the homestead to repair the ditch; or that, in case plaintiff should advance moneys to keep the ditch in condition to conduct the water to Kelly, he would have a right of contribution, to be enforced by the equitable action for money paid, laid out, and expended for Kelly's benefit. But, if such rights exist, they grow out of the contract under which the water was originally brought to the lands, or are referable to the easement. Their existence does not depend upon, nor is it connected with, any right of possession in Kelly to plaintiff's land, or in the water as part of the land. The existence of such rights would not separate the water from the land, nor carve out of it a distinct property or estate, to be treated as entirely disconnected from the land.

As a judgment creditor of the plaintiff, having no specific lien which antedates the declaration of homestead, Kelly occupies precisely the same position as if he were not the owner of the land below, and had no interest in the flow of the stream. It follows that, whatever the share of the water which plaintiff may be entitled to use as against Kelly, the water flowing over his land is part of the land. Being an appurtenant to and legally incorporated with his homestead, it is exempt from forced sale to the full extent that homesteads are exempt.

On this appeal the defendant and appellant urges that the homestead was declared by plaintiff in fraud of his creditors, and especially in fraud of Kelly, the judgment creditor. It was declared, as we have seen, before the Kelly judgment was entered. The homestead is exempt from forced sale except as provided in the Civil Code. Civil Code, § 1240. The very purpose of the homestead law is to give to one—except as against an indebtedness already merged in a judgment; and as against a judgment of peculiar character subsequently entered—the right to preserve and protect a homestead from forced sale. It has never been held that a homestead was invalid because the declarant was in debt, or declared the homestead to protect it from existing debts.

It is not invalid because made during the progress of litigation which subsequently results in an ordinary money judgment against the homesteader, or because made at any time before the entry and docketing of such a judgment. The law authorizes a debtor to erect a barrier around the home, over which the sheriff, although armed with final process under such a judgment, cannot pass. With the policy of the law, or the abstract morality of a particular transaction, we have nothing to do. The doctrine bearing upon conveyances made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors has no application to the creation of a homestead. If any doubt remained as to the intention of the legislature, it ought to be set at rest by the language of sections 1240 and 1241 of the Civil Code, which, after declaring generally that the homestead is exempt, enumerates as an exception that it is subject to sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained before the declaration of homestead was filed, "and which constituted liens upon the premises." A judgment obtained after a declaration of homestead, unless secured by a mortgage, or mechanic's, laborer's, or vendor's lien, cannot be enforced against the homestead, even although an attachment was levied upon the premises before the filing of the declaration. McCracken v. Harris, 54 Cal. 81; Sullivan v. Hendrickson, Id. 258.

The homestead is subject to sale in satisfaction of judgments obtained on debts secured by mechanics', laborers', or vendors' liens. Civil Code, § 1241. There is no pretense here of any mechanic's or laborer's lien.

It is contended, however, that Kelly's judgment was "on" a debt secured by a vendor's lien. We pass the question as to whether a vendor's lien ever existed in favor of Kelly. The lien which the vendor of real property retains, after an actual conveyance, for the unpaid purchase money, is not a specific and absolute charge upon the land, but a mere equitable right to resort to it upon failure of payment by the vendee. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186. It is in its nature a personal privilege, unassignable, which the vendor can assert only in a suit brought for the purpose of having it decreed and enforced. If Kelly ever had the right to have a vendor's lien adjudicated and declared by a court of equity, he has never commenced proceedings to that end, but has waived his lien by taking a general judgment, which, if docketed, was a lien on all the real property of the plaintiff. His right, as against the real property granted, (supposing any such grant,) was a mere equity, which, to become of any force or effect, was to be established by the decree of a court of equity. Barum v. Grigsby, 21 Cal. 178. The judgment on a debt secured by vendor's lien, mentioned in section 1241 of the Civil Code, is a judgment in a suit brought to have a vendor's lien and its amount declared and enforced upon the real property sold and conveyed by the vendor claiming the lien. Such a judgment relates back to the date when the conveyance was made, or when the court of equity decrees the equity of the vendor attached; and, if the homestead declaration was filed after that date, declarant cannot avail himself of his homestead protection against the lien of his vendor. But the existence of the vendor's lien in favor of Kelly was never asserted in the action wherein the judgment for $275 was rendered in his favor, and we think that the defendant in the present action, who relies upon an execution issued on the general judgment for damages, ought not to be permitted to disregard that judgment, and to try herein the question whether, if Kelly had so elected, he might have obtained a decree establishing a vendor's lien.

The appellant having claimed in argument that the title to one-fourth of the ditch and water passed from Kelly to the plaintiff herein, and therefore a vendor's lien for a portion of the purchase price unpaid, proceeds to assert that the title never passed; that the sale from Kelly to the plaintiff was not absolute, but conditional upon full payment. Again, putting aside the question whether the plaintiff bought any property of Kelly, it is enough to say that if he did the sale was absolute, since it clearly appears Kelly relied upon plaintiff's personal promise to pay one-fourth of the cost of constructing the ditch, and took a judgment against plaintiff for the part of the one-fourth of the cost which he failed to pay.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BRADY. (No. 20,288.)

1. MURDER—VERDICT—QUESTION OF FACT.

In a trial under an information for murder, when the evidence is contradictory, and there is some testimony which, if credited by the jury, demands from them a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, a verdict to that effect will not be disturbed, because the jury are the sole judges of the degree of credit to be given to the testimony.

2. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—DISCHARGE OF JUROR—SUBSTITUTION OF ANOTHER.

When, during a trial for murder, and before any evidence was taken, one of the jurors became sick, and was discharged, and the court refused to comply with the request of the defendant to discharge the other jurors, and impanel a new jury, but granting to each party the right to challenge any of said other jurors, swore in another in place of the one discharged, and there appeared to be no good reason for discharging all the jurors, held, that the course pursued by the court was eminently proper, under Pen. Code Cal. § 1123, which provides that, if a juror becomes sick during a trial, so as to be unable to perform his duties, "the court may order him to be discharged. In that case a new juror may be sworn, and the trial begin anew, or the jury may be discharged, and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled."

3. EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATION.

On the day after the deceased was cut, when a physician had stated in his hearing that his wound was mortal, and that he was going to die, and he had announced repeatedly that he had no hope of recovery, he made a statement before a justice of the peace, in the presence of several persons, which was taken down by a reporter in short-hand, written out, read and assented to by the deceased, who signed and swore to it, and died soon after. Held, that the statement was admissible in evidence on a trial for murder as a dying declaration, it not appearing that there were any questions put or answers given after the statement had commenced which did not appear in it as presented, or that anything was said by the deceased previous to the formal dying declaration which conflicted with it.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county.

William Frazier, for appellant. G. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed in the county of Colusa, on the twenty-first day of June, 1885, by the killing of one W. A. Bristow. He entered a plea of not guilty, and upon a trial had was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and the punishment fixed at imprisonment for life in the state prison.

The first point made by the appellant is that the verdict is contrary to and not warranted by the evidence; that, at most, it only made a case of manslaughter, and was lacking in the elements from which malice is presumed. The testimony was, as is usual in such cases, more or less contradictory, and it only need be said that there was testimony which, if credited by the jury, demanded from them the verdict rendered. As they were the sole judges of the degree of credit to be given to the testimony, the verdict cannot be disturbed for the cause indicated in the error assigned.

¹Dying declarations are admissible in evidence in homicide cases, if made under a sense of impending death. State v. Mathes, (Mo.) 2 S. W. Rep. 800, and note; State v. Partlow, (Mo.) 4 S. W. Rep. 14; Cook v. State, (Tex.) 3 S. W. Rep. 749; State v. Leeper, (Iowa,) 30 N. W. Rep. 503, and note; Puryear v. Com., (Va.) 1 S. E. Rep. 512; State v. Johnson, (S. C.) 1 S. E. Rep. 510; State v. Saunders, (Or.) 12 Pac. Rep. 441; Jordan v. State, (Ala.) 1 South. Rep. 577; Hill v. State, (Miss.) Id. 494.

It is further urged that the court erred in refusing a new trial upon the ground of error committed in discharging a juror, and in refusing to discharge the remainder of the panel, and to commence de novo and impanel a jury. It appears from the record that after the jury was sworn to try the cause, and before any evidence was taken, Henry Gurnsey, one of the jurors, was taken sick; and, being unable to continue on the jury, was discharged by the court. Counsel for defendant excepted to this action of the court, and requested that the remaining eleven jurors be discharged, and that their names, in common with all others summoned, be placed in the jury-box, and that the jury be impaneled anew to try the cause. The court declined to pursue this course, and retained the 11 jurors, subject to the right of counsel to challenge said jurors. Defendant interposed no challenge. The prosecution challenged one of the 11 peremptorily, and thereupon the jury was filled and sworn in the usual manner.

Section 1123 of the Penal Code provides: "If, before the conclusion of the trial, a juror becomes sick, so as to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged. In that case a new juror may be sworn, and the trial begin anew, or the jury may be discharged, and a new jury then or afterwards impaneled." The course pursued by the court was eminently proper under the Code. There appeared no good reason for discharging all of the jurors, as the court might have done, and, as the right of the defendant to challenge the jurors retained was expressly accorded to him, there was no error committed. People v. Stewart, 64 Cal. 60.

The only other error urged upon our attention relates to the admission of the dying declarations of the deceased, and to the refusal of the court to strike out such declarations. The testimony shows that the deceased was cut by defendant on the evening of the twenty-first day of June, 1885, so severely that his bowels protruded, and he held them with his hands while walking from the scene of the difficulty to his cabin. A physician was called, who, upon an examination of the wounds, of which there were several, pronounced the injuries mortal, and stated in the hearing of the patient that there was no hope for him. On the following day (June 22, 1885) deceased announced repeatedly that he had no hope of recovery, and that he was going to die, and expressed a desire to make a statement of the circumstances attending the conflict with defendant. His statement was then made to a justice of the peace, in the presence of several persons, taken down by a reporter in short-hand, written out at length, read and assented to by deceased, who signed and swore to it. He died the same night or the following morning.

Counsel for defendant based a motion to strike out the dying statement on the ground that the written statement, as introduced, did "not contain all of the statements made by the deceased at the time, and does not contain all the questions and all the answers put to and answered by the declarant with reference to this homicide at that time." The motion was denied because it failed to appear that any questions were put or answers given which did not appear in the statement as presented. The record shows: First, that before the statement was commenced there were several persons present who put questions to deceased touching the affray, which were answered by him; second, that, having expressed a desire to make a formal statement, it was taken down by question and answer literally, and every word of it written out and assented to as hereinbefore stated.

If there was any statement made by deceased which conflicted with his formal dying declaration, it might have been competent to prove it; but nothing of this kind was attempted or, so far as we can see, claimed. It was neither necessary nor proper to include in the dying statement all the deceased said from the time he received the mortal wound. The parties met him, and after an informal interview, directed, so far as appears, mainly to his condition and expectation of speedy death, proceeded in a formal manner to take and read his dying statement. The court below was satisfied that this statement was made in such immediate and certain expectancy of speedy death, as entitled it to admission as a dying statement, and in this view we think there was no error.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WISE and others v. WILLIAMS and others. (No. 9,829.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—PROOF OF RELATIONSHIP—ESTOPPEL.

Where a man and his wife, who had dealt with, as a partnership, and were indebted to, J. H. Wise and Thomas Denigan, composing the firm of Christy & Wise, have executed to said partnership a note and mortgage, neither they, nor their personal representatives, can be heard to dispute the firm relationship.

2. SAME—PLEADING.

In a suit by a partnership on a note and mortgage executed to the firm, the showing of the copartnership relation of the plaintiffs is not indispensable in the caption, if in the body of the complaint it be specifically averred that the plaintiffs are in fact copartners, and it appears, from the facts alleged, that the obligation relied upon is one that has been created in favor of such copartnership.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ACTION AGAINST—PLEADING.

In a suit against an administrator, it is sufficient to allege that defendant is sued as administrator, and it is not necessary to allege matters showing his appointment as such.

4. SAME—CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1569, which provides that "no claim against any estate, which has been presented and allowed, is affected by the statute of limitations pending the proceedings for the settlement of the estate," the statute does not run against a note, the estate of the maker of which was not closed when the suit was brought, and the claim under which note had then been allowed.

5. SAME.

In a suit against the administrator of decedent the burden is upon the defendant to show that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. Hence, unless such fact clearly appears on the face of the complaint, from the date of defendant's appointment as executor, a demurrer thereto is bad, and the objection must be made by answer.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Edward P. Cole and E. Jackman, for appellants. J. K. Law, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. The demurrer of the defendants Hallinan, administrator of the estate of Sarah Connell, deceased, and J. B. Connell, a minor, by Hallinan, his guardian, was sustained, and, plaintiff having refused to amend, judgment was entered in favor of said defendants for costs of the action. The grounds of demurrer are that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff, in this: that said note and mortgage were executed to Christy & Wise, and John H. Wise and Thomas Denigan have brought this action as individuals, and have shown no assignment from Christy & Wise to them.

The amended complaint was filed August 22, 1883. The note and mortgage were made May 2, 1877, and became due May 2, 1878. The note was executed by John, and the mortgage by him and his wife, Sarah Connell. On October 24, 1877, John and his wife filed a declaration of homestead on the land mortgaged to plaintiffs. Thereafter John died, and on July 19, 1880, Sarah, his widow, qualified as administratrix. December 21, 1880, the claim of plaintiffs, which had been presented to the administratrix and the judge, was allowed and filed. December 27, 1880, the court set aside to Sarah Connell the land in suit as a homestead. February 17, 1882, Sarah Connell died. February 20, 1883, Williams was appointed administrator of the estate of John Connell. Hallinan was appointed administrator of Sarah Connell's estate, but the date of his appointment is not stated. The other defendants are heirs of said John and Sarah Connell.

1. The complaint sets forth a copy of the note signed by John Connell, which is made payable to the order of Christy & Wise. It is then alleged "that, in order to secure the payment of said note, the said John Connell and his wife did execute and deliver to John H. Wise and Thomas Denigan, composing the firm of Christy & Wise, a mortgage on those pieces of land," etc., describing them. The complaint further avers that on the second day of May, 1877, said John H. W. and T. D. were copartners doing business under the firm name of C. & W., and that said J. C., being indebted to said firm, executed and delivered to them his said promissory note. Having thus dealt with plaintiffs as a firm, neither John nor Sarah could be heard to dispute the firm relationship, and their representatives stand in no better position to contest the same.

While a pleading should show, in cases of this kind, the copartnership relation of the plaintiffs in the caption of the complaint, such a showing is not an indispensable matter if in the body of the complaint it be specifically averred that the plaintiffs are in fact copartners, and it appears from the facts alleged that the obligation relied upon is one that has been created in favor of such copartnership. Thus it is said in Bliss on Code Pleading, (section 145:) "It is not absolutely necessary that the title describe the parties as partners, and give the partnership names, provided the fact appears in the body of the complaint." And in New York it is held that, if the names are intelligibly given in the body of the complaint, it is sufficient. Hill v. Thaxter, 3 How. Pr. 407. See, also, Shear v. Ward, 20 Cal. 660; Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 174.

The case of McCord v. Seale, 56 Cal. 262, was decided upon the evidence introduced showing a copartnership transaction; the plaintiffs insisting upon a liability to them as individuals. The intimation made therein to the effect that the allegation of a copartnership might be treated as surplusage is, as matter of pleading, mere dictum.

2. It was sufficient to allege that the defendant J. H. is the administrator of the estate of Sarah C., deceased. Where a plaintiff sues in a representative capacity, he must allege matters showing his appointment, but such is not the case as to defendants, who are sued as executors or administrators. "In actions against executors or administrators, it is not necessary to allege in the complaint facts showing how the defendants became invested with this representative character, but simply that they are such executors or administrators." 2 Wait, Pr. 374.

3. As to the statute of limitations. The Code (section 1475, Code Civil Proc.) requires all claims against a homestead to be presented to the administrator. Camp v. Grider, 62 Cal. 21. It does not appear that the estate of John Connell was closed when suit was brought; and the note and mortgage having been presented to his administratrix on the twentieth day of December, 1880, and allowed, the statute ceased to run. "No claim against any estate which has been presented and allowed is affected by the statute of limitations pending the proceedings for the settlement of the estate." Section 1569, Code Civil Proc.; Estate of Schroeder, 46 Cal. 317; Dohs v. Dohs, 60 Cal. 255; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Hutchinson, 68 Cal. 53, 8 Pac. Rep. 627.

4. It is claimed by respondent that as to Sarah Connell, unless the complaint contains some averment showing that the statute had not run against her, the action is barred. The burden, however, is upon defendant to show that plaintiff's cause of action is barred. Unless it clearly appears from the face of the complaint that plaintiff's cause of action is barred, the issue must be raised by answer. It does not appear from the complaint when the administrator of Sarah Connell was appointed. Hence the question cannot be raised upon demurrer. Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 449; Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 491; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Hutchinson, 8 Pac. Rep. 638; Cameron v. San Francisco, 68 Cal. 390, 9 Pac. Rep. 430.

PLEADING—DEFECTS—CODE CIVIL PROC. CAL. § 475.

When the cross-complaint, in an action to quiet title to a certain parcel of land, prays for the correction of the certificate of acknowledgment of the deed of a married woman, which constitutes one link in the chain of title, but fails to state that said land was the separate property of said married woman, and the court decreed that the correction be made, held, that said omission is not such a defect in the pleading as to mislead appellant, and hence, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475, which provides that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of any defect which does not "affect the substantial rights of the parties," is no ground for reversing the judgment.

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

W. J. Hunsaker, for appellant. John R. Jones and E. W. Hendrick, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to quit title. The defendant put in a cross-complaint praying for the correction of the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed of a married woman, which deed constituted one link in the chain of title. The court found that the property was the separate property of the married woman, and that the acknowledgment had in fact been made, but that, by a blunder of the officer, the certificate was defective, and decreed that it be corrected. It is not contended that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding, or that upon the facts found the judgment was improper. The single point made is that the cross-complaint did not aver that the property was the separate property of the married woman, and that, therefore, there was no cloud, and consequently that the court erred in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer for ambiguity. While we think the pleading was obnoxious to criticism, it does not seem to us that it is so radically defective as to fail to support the judgment; and the provision of the Code is that "the court must, in every stage of an action, disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of such error or defect." Code Civil Proc. § 475. Where a pleading is demurred to for ambiguity, we think that, if the party was not misled to his prejudice, the ambiguity cannot be said to "affect the substantial rights of the parties." And we do not think that in this case the appellant was misled. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

Lindley & Spagnoli and Reddick & Solnisky, for petitioner. Blanchard & Swisler and Eagon & Rust, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. Petitioner, as surviving partner of the firm of Ruoff & Baughman, prosecuted an action in the superior court against one R. B. Reed, and in the prayer of his complaint, among other demands, asked that a receiver be named to take charge, "pending the action," of certain grain, in which, in said complaint, he claimed an interest. Upon the complaint the superior judge appointed one A. J. Wilson receiver "to take charge of and hold, preserve, and keep" the grain, "and for that purpose to take such measures and employ such help as may be requisite." Wilson qualified as receiver, and took possession of the property. Afterwards the defendant in the action demurred to the complaint on the ground that it stated no cause. The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff neglecting and refusing to amend, final judgment in favor of the defendant was entered in the superior court. Subsequently the defendant moved said court to set aside the order appointing the receiver, and that the receiver be discharged. The prayer of the complaint did not give such character to the appointment as that, in case of an appeal, the receiver could not be discharged until the final determination of the cause in this court. The defendant has an undoubted right to move for the discharge of a receiver pendente lite. High, Rec. 846.

The present application is that the superior court be prohibited from hearing or determining the motion of defendant in the action aforesaid for the discharge of the receiver. It is claimed the superior court has no jurisdiction to determine the motion, inasmuch as the plaintiff in the action had appealed from the final judgment. Section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a receiver may be appointed "by the court in which an action is pending, or the judge thereof." The action above mentioned was not brought to procure a judgment appointing a receiver. The appointment by the court or judge is a matter ancillary to the main proceedings in an action, and is for the purpose of protecting property or a fund until the judgment in the superior court, and to secure its application as, in express terms or by implication, may be required by such judgment. Section 946 of the same Code provides that whenever an appeal is perfected it stays all further proceedings in the court below "upon the judgment or order appealed from, or upon the matters embraced therein," and the appeal releases property levied on, "but the court below may proceed upon any other matter embraced in the action," etc.

In Ireland v. Nichols, 40 How. Pr. 85, 9 Abb. (N. S.) 71, the supreme court of New York said: "In the present case the appointment of the receiver was a provisional remedy in the action, and ancillary to it. It was made by the court in the exercise of its discretionary powers, not as a matter of strict right, but purely as a matter of favor to the plaintiff, and is entirely independent of the judgment from which plaintiff appealed." Commenting upon section 339 of the New York Code,—which is like section 946 of our Code,—the court remarked that the proceedings stayed by the appeal "must be construed to be such proceedings as may be instituted by the respondent for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the judgment," especially as the same section reserves to the court below "the power to proceed upon any other matter included in the action," etc. And the court concludes: "According to the current authorities, the entry of the judgment in favor of the defendant has the effect of ending the functions of the receiver, but the receiver is not discharged thereby. The court, may, according to the exigencies of the case, upon good cause shown, either continue or discharge him by further order."

Where a bill upon which the appointment of a receiver is made is afterwards dismissed on demurrer, the duties of the receiver cease, as between the parties to the action. And so, where the defendant finally obtains judgment, the entry of judgment would seem to have the effect of terminating the receiver's functions, although plaintiff perfects his appeal to the appellate court. But the abatement of the action, or entry of final judgment, does not discharge the receiver ipso facto. Although, as between the parties, his functions terminate with the determination of the suit, he is still amenable to the court as its officer until he has complied with its direction as to the disposition of the funds he has received as receiver. And when the bill is dismissed on demurrer it is the plain duty of the court to direct the receiver to restore the fund or property to the person from whom it was taken. High, Rec. 833; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Beverley v. Brooke, 4 Grat. 220; Ireland v. Nichols, supra. It would seem that where the decree, in terms, provided that one of the parties should take certain property from the receiver, the late receiver did not hold the property after decree as receiver, but as trustee of the party, although there had been no formal order of discharge. Very v. Watkins, 23 How. 475. It has been said a receiver will be "discharged" by a decree in the cause in which he is appointed, unless he is expressly continued. Daniel, Ch. Pr. 1601. But the discharge spoken of evidently refers to the surcease of his functions as receiver proper, leaving on him the duty of properly accounting under the order of the court. But whether, when his office is not expressly continued by decree, he should afterwards be called receiver or not, he is subject to the orders of the court with respect to the winding up of his affairs as receiver,—as to accounting and application of funds. In these respects he continues liable until he is discharged of his responsibilities as trustee, and we see no impropriety in his being designated "receiver" up to the date of such discharge.

The adoption of the foregoing views will not deprive petitioner of any substantial right, since the statute authorizes the court, in a proper case, to appoint a receiver for the preservation of property during the pendency of an appeal. Code Civil Proc. § 564. It may be said that the superior court will, unless prohibited, not only discharge the receiver, but attempt to set aside the order by which he was originally appointed. It is at least doubtful whether the motion is to be construed as anything more than a motion to discharge. At all events, the motion would authorize the court to discharge the receiver, and the petitioner avers that on the twenty-ninth of April, 1887, and after the appeal from the judgment was perfected, "the superior court, at the application of the defendant, made and gave its order that said motion to discharge said receiver be heard, considered, and determined by said superior court on Friday, May 13, 1887." It is the hearing and determination of the motion, as a motion to discharge, which the petitioner claims will be beyond or in excess of the jurisdiction. It may be added that the petition does not distinctly show that objection was made to the proposed action of the superior court, on the ground that it would be beyond its jurisdiction. It has been repeatedly held here that prohibition will not go from this court unless the attention of the court whose proceedings are sought to be arrested has been called to the alleged excess of jurisdiction. Southern P. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 475.

In re Estate of POTEN, Deceased. (No. 11,827.)

APPEALABLE ORDER—MONEY IN COURT—MOTION TO PAY OVER.

An order refusing to direct the clerk of court to pay over to a special administrator a sum of money, allowed him as compensation for his services, held not appealable.

Department I. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

G. P. Harding and R. Clark, for respondent.

One Jerry Desmond gave to R. Clark an order on the county clerk of Yolo county for $320, which he claimed was due to him from Poten's estate. The claim had not yet been allowed; the administrator of Poten's estate having filed objections to it. Desmond and one Frees, the executor or administrator, made a settlement, whereby Frees withdrew his objections to the allowance of the claim. After such withdrawal, the clerk of the court paid the $320 to Clark on the written order of Desmond. Some months afterwards an attorney appeared for Desmond in the superior court of Yolo county, ex parte, and asked that the clerk be compelled to turn over the money to Desmond. The superior court took proof in the matter on such application, and denied the motion on the ground that the clerk had properly turned the money over to Clark.

The order is not appealable. It does not come within any of the provisions of section 963, Code Civil Proc., or any of the sections of that chapter. Neither does it fall within the provisions of section 933, Code Civil Proc. There are no other provisions of the Code that we know of that allow appeals from the superior court to this court in cases of this kind.

P. M. Sullivan, for appellant.

BY THE COURT. The order of the probate court complained of is clearly not an appealable order. The motion to dismiss the appeal must therefore be granted. So ordered.

BOWDEN v. PIERCE. (No. 11,004.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1887.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—EXECUTOR DE SON TORT—CALIFORNIA PROBATE PRACTICE.

There is no such officer as executor de son tort recognized under the California probate practice.

2. SAME—EXECUTOR DE SON TORT—REFUSAL TO ACT.

The fact that one who was named in a will as executor applied for letters, which the court granted, does not make him a trustee of the estate when he refused or neglected to qualify; and contracts made by him with the executrix, if fair and just, are not void, although they redounded to his benefit.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

McAllester & Bergen and Jas. L. Crittenden, for Bowden, appellant. Robinson, Olney & Byrne, W. N. Cope, and A. L. Rhodes, for Pierce, respondent.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff, who is an heir and devisee of A. H. Houston, deceased, commenced this action February 9, 1881, to have certain contracts of sale from the executrix to defendant Pierce declared fraudulent and void; to have defendant adjudged to be a trustee for the devisees as to all moneys realized under the sea-wall contracts so purchased by him, and to require him to account therefor. The answer denies all charges of fraud and undue influence upon the executrix, and, as a separate defense, pleads the statute of limitations. It appears from the findings that Houston, on July 23, 1867, entered into two contracts with the board of state harbor commissioners for the construction of certain sections of the sea-wall; that on December 8, 1868, said A. H. Houston, being in failing health, departed for the Sandwich islands, the work being still incomplete; that said Houston prior to his departure, and on the eighth day of December, 1868, executed a general power of attorney to said Pierce, which was duly accepted and recorded by Pierce, and Pierce, acting under this power of attorney, thereafter collected all moneys paid under said contracts; he first heard of the death of Houston on March 28, 1869; that Pierce, on April 2, 1869, received $29,952.22 from said board on contract for section 3, and immediately applied the same to the use of said estate; that on April 3, 1869, an attorney, at the request of Pierce and said Caroline, (named in the will as executor and executrix,) filed Houston's will for probate, and Pierce's and Mrs. Houston's joint petition for letters testamentary to Pierce and Mrs. Houston; and that on April 14, 1869, the will was admitted to probate in the probate court of the city and county of San Francisco, and letters testamentary ordered to be issued to Mrs. Houston and Pierce; that Pierce did not qualify and did not file at any time any written renunciation of his executorship, and that Mrs. Houston alone qualified as executrix, (April 20, 1869;) that an inventory of the property of the estate was prepared, verified on April 23, 1869, by Mrs. Houston, and filed on May 5, 1869; that on April 7, 1869, said board advertised for bids for the construction of section 4 of the sea-wall; that negotiations thereupon commenced for the sale of said contracts and of the plant to Pierce, which resulted in an agreement of sale before April 21, 1869; and that the agreement was "subject to the condition that it was to be executed only in case Pierce obtained from the state board of harbor commissioners the contract for section 4." After the contract for construction of section 4 of the sea-wall had been awarded to Pierce, the agreement made previously between him and the estate of said deceased was reduced to writing, and signed by Pierce on May 6, 1869.

Mrs. Houston and said board and Pierce executed on June 24, 1869, an agreement of release and discharge, showing that the work on Nos. 1 and 2 had been completed, and that Pierce had become the successor in interest of said Houston. No report was made to or order made by the probate court of San Francisco respecting said sales to Pierce, except a statement on August 21, 1871, in the account of Caroline L. Houston as executrix, in these words: "To sale of contracts with state harbor commissioners, horses, carts, tools, dredging machinery, etc., used about sea-wall, office furniture, 30 cords of wood, and 30,000 feet of old lumber, and claim due for grading McHenry lot, $90,000;" and a statement in the report that "your petitioner has, as directed by the will of said deceased, sold * * * certain contracts in the inventory mentioned, and the horses, carts, tools, etc., used in the construction of the sea-wall, the subject of said contracts, all of which will fully appear by said account;" and thereafter, to-wit, on December 12, 1871, the referee to whom said account was referred reported in favor of its approval. An attorney appointed by the court for the minor heirs appeared before the referee on the hearing of said final account. On December 13, 1871, the probate court adjudged and decreed that the report of the referee be confirmed and allowed and approved, and declared settled, and a decree of final distribution was made on the twenty-second day of March, 1872.

The executrix and defendant were advised by their attorney (Clarke) that she, as executrix, had the power to make the sale referred to, and that no confirmation by the court was necessary. The court also found that the contract with Pierce was fair and just, and that no advantage was taken of Mrs. Houston, and that defendant did not in any manner cheat, injure, or defraud the estate, or any devisee, but, on the contrary, that the sale was an advantageous one to the estate, and to its best interests in all respects. The court further found, and the evidence sustains the finding, "that the superstructure required by the Houston contracts to be erected upon said embankments could not have been erected except after great delay, and at a loss to the estate of said deceased."

The defendant made large profits out of his contracts with the harbor commissioners, but we think the fact is made quite clear that those profits were all made out of the work on section 4, for which the estate could not bid or contract. All the executrix could do was to complete the contracts on hand at the time of the death of Houston. We can find nothing improper in the refusal or failure of Pierce to qualify as executor. He was advised by his attorney "that he could better serve his sister-in-law—Mrs. Houston—by buying the plant and the contracts than by qualifying as executor."

If the findings of the court to which we have referred are supported by the evidence, and we think they are, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether there is a sufficient finding upon the issue raised by the plea of the statute of limitations. The defendant was a trustee by implication for a brief period after the death of Houston, but the estate was in no way injured by his acts during that time. The fact that he was named in the will as executor, and actually applied for letters, did not constitute him a trustee for the estate at the time the contract of sale was made. There is no such officer recognized under our probate practice as executor de son tort. Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 400; Valencia v. Bernal, 26 Cal. 335; Estate of Hamilton, 34 Cal.

468. The refusal or neglect to qualify was a disclaimer of the trust. 1 Perry, Trusts, 262.

The estate of Houston could not bid for a contract to do the work on section 4. No profit could have been realized from the McHenry contract. There was no place in which the estate could have used the rock, and the court was justified in its finding that the sale to Pierce "was fair and just, and upon sufficient consideration to the estate, and to its best interests." The profits derived by Pierce came from his contract for the construction of section 4, and his purchase of the estate contract and stock was made upon condition that the board of harbor commissioners should award him the contract for section 4. Even if it be assumed that the sale to Pierce by the executrix was void, and that Pierce was enabled to secure the contract for section 4 because he had secured the Houston contracts, we do not think that he can be held as a trustee of the estate with respect to the contract for section 4. The estate did not and could not have any interest in that part of the work. If Pierce had not paid full consideration for the property purchased by him, or if he had made any profit from the work done under the contract, which the estate could have completed, he could be compelled, perhaps, to account therefor, notwithstanding the good faith of the parties; but such, as we have seen, are not the facts in this case. Order affirmed.

WINTERS v. PEARSON. (No. 9,646.)

1. ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—ALTERNATIVE FORM.

An affidavit for attachment, framed or stated in the alternative, is totally defective; following Wilke v. Cohn, 54 Cal. 212.

2. SAME—AFFIDAVIT—AMENDMENT.

On a motion to discharge a writ of attachment on the ground that it was improperly or irregularly issued, the affidavit on which the writ was issued is not amendable, under section 473, Code Civil Proc. Cal., but must be discharged under section 558, which provides for the discharge of the writ if improperly granted.

3. SAME—DISCHARGE.

The release of property attached, provided for by sections 554, 555, Code Civil Proc. Cal., by the execution of an undertaking, is not a waiver by the defendant of his right under section 556 to apply to discharge the writ of attachment.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

Wm. M. Pierson, for appellant. Neuman & Eickhoff and Edward Lynch, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The attachment was improperly and irregularly issued within the ruling of this court in Wilke v. Cohn, 54 Cal. 212. On a motion to discharge a writ of attachment on the ground that it was improperly or irregularly issued, the affidavit on which the writ was issued is not amendable. This, in our opinion, is in accordance with section 558, Code Civil Proc., which provides that if, on such an application, it satisfactorily appears that the writ was improperly or irregularly issued, it must be discharged. To allow the affidavit to be made good by amendment, and upon such action refuse to discharge the writ, would, in our judgment, violate the requirements of the section just above cited. The defendant in the action did not waive his right to apply to discharge the writ under section 556, Code Civil Proc., because he had previously released the property from the operation of the writ under sections 554, 555, Id. The right to make the application under section 556 is expressly given, though the defendant has previously proceeded under sections 554 and 555.

The orders of the court must be affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

In an action to recover for the wrongful conversion of certain shares of capital stock of a corporation, the complaint averred generally that plaintiff loaned the stock to defendant, and that he converted it to his own use. The proofs showed that it was loaned for the special purpose of being used by defendant to raise money to pay and take up a certain promissory note of which defendant was maker and plaintiff accommodation indorser; and, further, that defendant did not use it for that purpose, but converted it to his own use. The answer denied the borrowing of the stock at all, and that the plaintiff owned it, and averred that he had bought it of the plaintiff. Held that, under the pleadings, the variance was not one that "actually misled the defendant to his prejudice in maintaining his * * * defense upon the merits." Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 469.

2. SAME—DAMAGES—PROVINCE OF JURY.

The ascertainment of the value of the property in controversy in an action to recover for the wrongful conversion of shares of capital stock of a corporation is for the jury, and their determination will not be reviewed on appeal, when there is a conflict in the evidence, and there is some testimony on the part of the appellant to sustain it.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Wm. H. Fifield, for McElrath, appellant. Clement, Osment & Clement, for Hitchcock, respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to recover for the wrongful conversion of certain shares of capital stock of the Saucelito Land & Ferry Company, a corporation. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendant appeals therefrom, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Appellant relies mainly—First, upon a variance between the averments of the complaint and the proofs; and, second, upon errors committed in overruling his objections to certain testimony touching the value of the property alleged to have been converted.

1. The complaint avers, generally, that plaintiff loaned the stock to defendant, and that he converted it to his own use. The proofs show that it was loaned for the special purpose of being used by defendant to raise money to pay and take up a certain promissory note of which defendant was maker and plaintiff was the accommodation indorser, and, further, that defendant did not use it for that purpose, but converted it to his own use. This is claimed by appellant to have been a fatal variance. But appellant, in his answer, denied that he borrowed the stock at all; denied that respondent owned it at the time of the alleged conversion; and averred that appellant had bought the stock of respondent, and was the owner of it. Under these circumstances it is impossible to see how the variance was one which "actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits." Code Civil Proc. § 469. We think, therefore, that the position taken by appellant on this branch of the case is not tenable.

2. There was great difficulty in determining the value of the property converted. As there had been no movements of sale and purchase of the stock of the corporation, it had not that kind of market value which attaches to stock frequently dealt in. Recourse was had, therefore, to the value of the property owned by the corporation. This consisted, in part, of wharves and ferry franchises, but mainly in land lying in and near the town of Saucelito, on the water front of the bay, and running back into the hills. The corporation was a land company, and a main branch of its business was to sell its land at Saucelito in small lots for residences, as purchasers could be found. Under these circumstances, the purpose of counsel for respondent at the trial, seemed to be to induce the court, as far as possible, to allow testimony tending to show what the land was worth if sold in small quantities, and in the usual course of business, and supposing the affairs of the company to be properly managed. On the other hand, the effort of counsel for appellant seemed to be to confine the testimony strictly to the question: How much would the land sell for as a whole, at forced sale, upon 20 days' notice? The court did not fully adopt the theory of respondent. It went, however, too far in that direction, and, if it appeared at all that the value found by the jury rested upon answers of some of respondent's witnesses to one or two questions improperly admitted, there might be ground for a reversal of the judgment. There was, however, ample evidence—and considerable of it coming from appellant's own witnesses—to support the verdict, which was for $4,050, even upon the extreme theory of value contended for by appellant. And, then, the court, on the motion for new trial, reduced the amount of the judgment to $983, which respondent accepted. We are satisfied, therefore, that no injustice was done the appellant.

If we have not here noticed in detail all of the many points specially made by appellant, it is not because we have not considered them.

Judgment and order affirmed.

CONNER v. STANLEY, Adm'r, etc. (No. 11,648.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1887.)

1. FRAUD—UNDUE INFLUENCE—SPIRITUALISM.

In an action on a contract, evidence that the defendant's intestate was 72 years old, and feeble both bodily and mentally; that he had long been a firm believer in spiritualism; that he relied upon supposed spiritual advice in his business and financial relations; that he was a mental wreck after the death of his only child; and that a medium could do anything with him, is sufficient to support a finding that a relation of personal confidence existed between him and plaintiff, who was a medium, within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 2219, declaring persons voluntarily assuming a relation of personal confidence trustees; and by § 2235, which, in cases of contract between such persons, raises a presumption of undue influence, there is a presumption that all transactions between such persons, by which the person trusted obtains an advantage, are entered into under undue influence.¹

2. SAME—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PROOF.

In an action on a contract impeached for fraud, evidence that plaintiff told witness that she (plaintiff) and defendant's intestate had words when the contract in suit was executed; that she locked the door of the room, and kept it locked for two hours; that he had a contract drawn, and the next day had forgotten that he had done so; and that he acted as if he were drugged or crazy,—tends to prove undue influence and adverse pressure.¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

This action was brought on an antenuptial contract, by which defendant's intestate promised, in consideration of the mutual affection and agreement to marry existing between him and the plaintiff, to deliver to her, on or before marriage, $10,000 worth of bonds. Plaintiff averred herself as having been always ready to consummate the marriage, but defendant's intestate refused, and so continued to refuse until his death. Plaintiff seeks to recover the value of the bonds.

Robt. T. Devlin, W. H. Beatty, and A. P. Catlin, for appellant. Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

¹As to what constitutes undue influence, and its effects, see June v. Willis, 30 Fed. Rep. 11, and note; Kerrigan v. Leonard, (N. J.) 8 Atl. Rep. 503; Conover v. Conover, Id. 500; *Osthaus v. Rep. 529, and note.

TEMPLE, J. The contract on which this action is founded is set out in full on the former appeal. 65 Cal. 183, 3 Pac. Rep. 668. It is there said to be valid as an antenuptial contract. The defendant set up as a defense that at the time the alleged contract was made his intestate was insane, and incapable of entering into a contract, and that it was procured by the use of undue influence by the plaintiff. The court found that all the allegations of the complaint were true, except as to the capacity of Jarvis to contract; and that all the affirmative matters set up in the answer were true, except that plaintiff and P. B. Nagle did not, nor did either of them, coerce Jarvis otherwise than by taking advantage of his weak and unsound mind. The findings, therefore, plainly cover all the issues in the case, and the only question for our consideration is whether there is any evidence which could justify the conclusion. Upon this proposition there can be no doubt.

1. There was evidence tending to prove insanity generally, and not merely that he was insane on the subject of spiritualism. J. Miller, an intimate acquaintance, thought he was insane. To the same effect is the testimony of Mrs. A. Walker, J. W. Houston, S. B. Lusk, and Lee Stanley, and it is shown that plaintiff herself stated that she believed him insane. And then there is much testimony as to facts which would tend to show an unsound mind.

2. There is much testimony tending to prove that Jarvis was insane on the subject of spiritualism. That there is such evidence is not controverted, but counsel indulge in a long argument, and cite many authorities, to the point that a belief in spiritualism does not prove insanity. As an abstract proposition, no doubt this is so. The law pronounces no one insane for mere religious belief, no matter how unreasonable it may appear to the judge. But this does not meet the case made. A belief in the doctrines maintained by the Methodists, Presbyterians, or the Catholics would not establish insanity. Still one might be a monomaniac as to either form of religion, and so as to spiritualism. And that is precisely the effect of the great mass of testimony in this case.

3. There is much evidence tending to show undue influence. It is established that the relation between the parties was confidential, in consequence of her claim to power as a medium, through which she had great control over him. This being established, the burden was cast upon her of showing that there was no undue influence. The rule applies with peculiar force to the relation of one and his priest, confessor, clergyman, or spiritual adviser, and certainly with no less force to the relation between one who is a firm believer in, not to say a monomaniac upon, the subject of spiritualism, and the medium in whom he has confidence, and upon whom he habitually relies. The cases upon the subject are numerous, but the law, so far as necessary here, is crystallized in the Civil Code. Section 2219 provides that every one who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another is a trustee, and section 2235 raises the presumption that all transactions between such persons, by which the person trusted obtains an advantage, are entered into under undue influence. It becomes important, then, to inquire whether the relation did exist.

Jarvis was 72 years old, feeble both mentally and physically. He was a widower, his wife having died in August, 1881, a few months before the contract questioned here was entered into. He had lived for a great many years at Folsom, a quiet life, with no family except his wife. They had had one child, a daughter, who married the defendant, and died 20 years ago, leaving two children. Jarvis had been a music-teacher, and had accumulated some property. He was for many years a firm believer in spiritualism. The belief had grown upon him until, in the opinion of the witnesses, it had become a monomania. His mind would drift to the subject upon all occasions. He relied upon supposed spiritual advice in his business transactions. When warned against trusting certain persons, he said: "It will be all right in the next world; they are spiritualists." He sold a farm for $2,000 to be paid for in installments of $200 a year, without interest. He had been offered $250 a year rent. He said the spirits told him he must sell; that he was governed entirely by the spirits. The purchaser was a spiritualist. He invested several thousand dollars in mines, under the supposed advice of spirits. Most of this money was lost. He offered a lady $1,500 to attend seances, and become a medium. To another lady he offered to convey a piece of land if she would become a medium. He believed he could reform all the convicts if he could get them to read a spiritualistic paper. He said he had got the right idea of spiritualism, and was going to publish a work which would astonish the world. He admitted that he was controlled by mediums.

One witness said he was a mental wreck from the time he lost his daughter, and there is much evidence that he became still worse after the death of his wife. His conduct was very strange during her last illness. He did not believe in giving her medicine or nourishment. The medium said she would die, and the spirits would keep her until then. He did not wish a doctor, as the spirits would do nothing if he had one. He objected to cooking being done in the house, the smell would keep the spirits out. The doors and windows must be left open so they could come in. He was angry when they gave her stimulant, because if she were to die intoxicated she would remain so in the spirit land. He knew of one man who was killed while drunk, and who was still drunk, 15 years after his death.

In this condition of health, mental and physical, Jarvis met the plaintiff. She is said by her counsel to be an artist, who has a studio in San Francisco; a highly educated, refined, and accomplished lady. When Jarvis first made her acquaintance does not definitely appear, but it was evidently shortly after the death of his wife, when he went to consult her as a medium to find out how much money he should give his granddaughter to use. In February, after Mrs. Jarvis' death, plaintiff was giving seances at Folsom. Jarvis had induced her to go there to be developed as a medium, and gave her $50 per month to come. She remained on these terms for some three months, giving seances, which were attended by Jarvis, and to which he invited his friends. The evidence shows that he had the most exalted opinion of her powers as a medium, and that he was much under her control. He said himself that she had great influence over him when she was around. There is evidence that plaintiff herself said that she believed that Jarvis was crazy, and a medium could do anything in the world with him.

We think this is sufficient to show that there was evidence upon which the court could find the existence of a relation of a peculiar trust and confidence between them, similar to that between a religious devotee and his spiritual adviser and the proof of which would throw upon the plaintiff the burden of showing fair dealing.

But the record contains evidence of undue influence and adverse pressure. Mrs. Walker testified: "Speaking of the time when the contract that is in suit here was executed, she said that they had had trouble and had words. She said that she wished him to settle something on her, and he asked her if she was afraid that he would not leave her anything, or would not leave her as well off as her other husband had left her, and she said that she locked the door, and kept him in the room for about two hours, and that she put the key in her pocket. * * * They talked about the matter in my presence, and they both told me that which I have stated. She said that they finally came to a settlement, and he agreed to settle something on her, and she opened the door, and got a boy, and sent him down to Nagle's office, and he came up and drew a draft of the contract that day, and the next day she told me that Jarvis came in, and she asked him if he would have a chair, and she said he acted queerly. Then she said that she told him he would not have time to sit down if he was going down to keep his word, and sign that contract. He asked her what contract, and he said I have made no contract. * * * She said that at that time he acted as if he was either drugged or crazy, and that he did not act as if he knew what he was about, and did not seem to know that he had ever drawn up a contract. * * * She expressed herself as believing that he was an old fool, and did not know what he was about. She said at that time she believed that he was crazy."

There was evidence on the part of plaintiff contradicting some of this evidence, but this only creates a conflict. If we could consider the testimony, however, as a trial court, we could not say that the evidence does not sustain the finding.

Judgment and order affirmed.

ALLISON v. THOMAS and others. (No. 11,847.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1887.)

1. JUDGMENT—VALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS—MISNOMER.

The designation in an action in a justice's court of the defendant, "John C. McDonald," as "John McDonald," does not affect the validity of those proceedings.

2. COURTS—JURISDICTION—AMENDMENT OF RECORD.

When the court had in fact jurisdiction of the defendant, but the return of the constable failed to show that fact, the record may be amended after judgment so as to show jurisdiction, if there are no intervening rights to be affected.

3. JUDGMENT—LIEN—PURCHASE FROM JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

The purchaser from the judgment debtor of all his right, title, and interest in the land attached in such action takes subject to the judgment rendered in such action.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Appeal by defendants from a judgment of the superior court of San Bernardino county. Defendants claim title to the land in question by virtue of a sale under a judgment rendered in a justice's court in their favor against one John C. McDonald, on whom process was served, but who was designated in the proceedings as "John McDonald."

Harris & Allen, for appellants. Curtis & Otis, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. The omission of the initial letter of the middle name of McDonald, in the proceedings in the justice's court, is a matter of no consequence, and does not in any way affect the validity of those proceedings. The rule undoubtedly is that the record in the justice's court must show affirmatively jurisdiction of the person, or the judgment will not be valid. Here there was in fact jurisdiction, but the return of the constable failed to show due service. After the judgment was entered, this record was amended, and as amended did show jurisdiction. In the mean time, however, the land attached had been sold. The judgment debtor had also conveyed to plaintiff all his right, title, and interest in the land. As against the judgment debtor there was no impropriety in allowing an amendment to the record according to the fact. The officer may always amend his return if there are no intervening rights which would be affected. And we think it plain there was no error in allowing it as to the purchaser. He purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor, and took subject to all equities and secret defects.

We do not overlook the case of Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341, in which it was held that under the twenty-sixth section of the recording act, then in force, a quitclaim deed received in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, would prevail over a prior unrecorded deed. That decision is made to turn upon the language of that statute defining the word "conveyance."

This ruling was followed in Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 343, where the description of the estate conveyed was "all my right, title, and interest" of the grantor. Unless these cases are justified by the peculiar wording of the statute, they seem to be against the decisions elsewhere upon the subject. It has been uniformly held that a conveyance of the right, title, and interest of the grantor vests in the purchaser only what the grantor himself could claim, and the covenants in such deed, if there were any, were limited to the estate described. Coe v. Persons Unknown, 43 Me. 432; Blanchard v. Brooks, 12 Pick. 47; Brown v. Jackson, 3 Wheat. 449; Adams v. Cuddy, 13 Pick. 460; Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. 458; Sweet v. Brown, 12 Metc. 175; Pike v. Galvin, 29 Me. 183.

This construction is in accord with the obvious meaning of the language. The grantee in such a deed necessarily takes only what the grantor then had, and subject to all defects and equities which could then have been asserted against the grantor. To this rule this court has made an exception founded upon the recording act, and still another has been recognized in reference to sales made by the sheriff under execution. There the statute provides that the purchaser acquires all the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor. It has been held that such deed is good as against a prior unrecorded deed. Roberts v. Bourne, 23 Me. 165.

These are both exceptions to the general rule, founded upon special statutory provisions, and rather tend to confirm the rule than to overthrow it.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

PEOPLE v. LEE SARE BO. (No. 20,256.)

1. EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATION.

A declaration by a dying man as to the manner in which he came by his death, made within three or four minutes before his death, and about the same time as a statement by him that he was going to die, is admissible in evidence as a dying declaration, whether it was made before or after the statement that he knew he was going to die, as all the circumstances showed in him at the time a knowledge of impending death.¹

2. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY AT CORONER'S INQUEST.

A paper purporting to contain the testimony of witnesses taken before the coroner, at the inquest upon the body of the murdered man, but not authenticated otherwise than by the statement of counsel, is properly rejected.

¹ Dying declarations are admissible in evidence in homicide cases, if made under a sense of impending death. State v. Partlow, (Mo.) 4 S. W. Rep. 14; Cook v. State, (Tex.) 3 S. W. Rep. 749; State v. Mathes, (Mo.) 2 S. W. Rep. 800; Puryear v. Com., (Va.) 1 S. E. Rep. 512; State v. Johnson, (S. C.) Id. 510; Hill v. State, (Miss.) 1 South. Rep. 494; *State v. 3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

Where the court, in instructing the jury as to the meaning of the words "reasonable doubt," used some expressions which were weak and ambiguous, but others so strong and clear that the jury could not possibly have been misled, an assignment of error, based on the ambiguous portion of the charge, should not be sustained.²

4. SAME—ALIBI—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The defendant, in a prosecution for murder, attempted to set up an alibi. Held, that such a defense, as in the case of every defense resting on extrinsic facts not arising out of the res gestæ, must be proved by a preponderance of evidence.³

5. JURY—PROVINCE—INSTRUCTION ON WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In order to hold an instruction erroneous on the ground that it is a charge upon the weight of evidence, an invasion of the prerogative of the jury, and violative of the constitutional provision inhibiting charges with respect to matters of fact, it is necessary to show that there was a conflict of evidence upon the question on which the jury were instructed; and in a prosecution for murder the court, in charging the jury, may assume the fact of the killing by the defendant, if such fact as testified to is not contradicted.

6. SAME.

An instruction to the jury that, if they were satisfied that the defendant killed the deceased under the particular circumstances of that case, it would be murder in the first degree, and that if they desired that the defendant should suffer the death penalty they were so to return their verdict, was held not erroneous, as a charge upon matters of fact.

7. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—REMARKS OF JUDGE.

The court in instructing the jury remarked: "I do not desire to have any question in this case at all. There are some instructions asked for by the defendant which I will give in addition to those which I have already given." And again: "In this case, gentlemen, I do not deem it necessary to give the instructions which I usually give in homicide cases." Held, that although it is possible for the trial court by innuendo, facial expression, or vocal emphasis or slide, to indicate a prejudice against the defendant, yet in this case the expressions must have been merely apologetic, as the court had already given the substance of the instructions asked for by defendant, and more favorably than requested on his behalf.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

John D. Whaley, for appellant. Atty. Gen. G. A. Johnson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Defendant was convicted of murder, and sentenced to be hanged. His counsel presents for our consideration seven assignments of alleged error.

1. Gon Yen, widow of Ah Chuck, whom it is alleged defendant killed, was called as a witness by the prosecution, and testified, against the objection of defendant, to a declaration made by her husband immediately after the shooting, in which he stated that the defendant shot him. The prosecution claimed that the statement was made by Ah Chuck under a sense and belief of impending death, and without any hope of recovery, and was therefore admissible as a dying declaration. Counsel for defendant claimed that there was no foundation laid for its admissibility; that all the evidence shows is a bare fear of death; and, the declaration having been made before the statement that he would die, it is inadmissible.

There was no evidence concerning the condition of the declarant's mind other than that given by the witness, Gon Yen, who testified through an interpreter, in substance, that immediately after the shooting she ran to Ah Chuck, and had him carried into the house. "He died seven or eight minutes after he was brought in, and quit talking three or four minutes before he died. When he first came in he told me he thought he was dead, or would die. All I can remember is he told me he was afraid he was going to die; afraid of death. He said: 'I will die.' That is among the first things he said. No; first he said he wanted me to be sure to have Ah Po Qui Po,—that means dark-skinned Po,—the defendant there, arrested; that he was the man that shot him. After he had said a few words of that kind he said: 'I think I will die.'"

We think it quite apparent from this testimony that the wounded man felt that the finger of death was upon him, and, in view of the fact that all he said was uttered in the brief period of three or four minutes, it is immaterial whether the declaration was made before or after the statement that he was going to die. An express statement by the declarant that he believes he is about to die is not necessary at any time, provided the circumstances show in him at the time a sense of impending death. People v. Taylor, 59 Cal. 640; People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164.

2. The court did not err in refusing to admit the paper in evidence which counsel for defendant claimed to be testimony of witnesses taken before the coroner at the inquest. Conceding that, if properly authenticated, it would have been admissible for the purpose claimed, it is sufficient to say that there was nothing to show that it was testimony taken before the coroner except the statement of counsel in offering it. Furthermore, there is nothing in the record to show what the paper contained.

3. In the charge to the jury the court, speaking on the subject of reasonable doubt, gave Mr. Chief Justice SHAW's definition thereof, which has been so often approved here, but, unfortunately, threw in this meaningless expression: "But mere probabilities of innocence or doubts, however reasonable, which beset some minds on all occasions should not prevent such a verdict." What the court meant by mere probabilities of innocence or doubts which beset some minds on all occasions, in view of the correct and unambiguous language of the charge upon the same matter before and after this expression it is difficult to conjecture; but from the language following it would appear that the court desired to say to the jury that mere chimerical or fanciful doubts should not prevent a verdict if they were satisfied to a moral certainty of the guilt of the defendant. The court went on to say: "In other words, gentlemen, a reasonable doubt, in a legal sense, is a doubt which has some reason for its basis; it is not a doubt arising from mere caprice or groundless conjecture, but it must arise from the facts proven in the case. You have no right to go outside of the evidence to hunt for doubts, nor should you entertain those which are merely chimerical, or based on groundless conjectures. It is that state of the case which, after an entire consideration and comparison of all the evidence, leaves your minds in that condition that you cannot say you feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. * * * The hypothesis contended for by the people must be established to an absolute certainty, to the entire exclusion of any rational probability of any other hypothesis being true, and, if a reasonable doubt is entertained by the jury on any material fact in the case, they should acquit." The language of the sentence to which this objection is addressed is so ambiguous, and the charge in other portions so strong and clear on the question of reasonable doubt, we think the jury could not have been misled.

4. Defendant claims that the court erred in saying to the jury: "If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the party was killed as alleged in the information, at the time and place specified therein,—upon that you will have very little difficulty,—I assume; will be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, then the next question for you to determine is whether it was done by the defendant or not.” It is said that this is a charge upon the weight of evidence, an invasion of the prerogative of the jury, and violative of the constitutional provision inhibiting charges with respect to matters of fact. So far as the transcript shows, there was no controversy with respect to the killing and death of Ah Chuck. It is stated that there was evidence “tending to show that defendant, on the fifth day of October, 1882, in the city and county of San Francisco, shot the deceased, Ah Chuck, who, in about seven or eight minutes thereafter, died from the effects thereof. Gon Yen testified to the shooting and death of Ah Chuck, and there is no evidence to the contrary. Conceding that the instruction assumes a fact or expresses an opinion on the weight of evidence, in order to hold that it was erroneous we should have to assume that there was a conflict of evidence upon the question of the killing. This we cannot do. There is positive evidence in the bill of exceptions that Ah Chuck was killed at the time and place alleged, and if there was any evidence to the contrary the fact should be stated, or the evidence should be given in the transcript.

5. The court further said: “If I understand the testimony for the defendant, it is simply that he was not there, and did not know anything about it, and, of course, had nothing to do with it; that is what in law is called an alibi, and he is not required to establish that beyond a reasonable doubt, but may establish it by a preponderance of testimony; and in this matter, gentlemen, before you can find a verdict against the defendant, of course you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he was at the time there.” Appellant quotes the first clause of this sentence, and upon that bases an assignment of error upon the ground that it casts upon the defendant the burden of proving his innocence by a preponderance of evidence. The court had told the jury many times that the burden of proof rested upon the prosecution that every material fact must be established by the prosecution to the satisfaction of the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt. The first clause in the sentence quoted was intended to meet circumstances like those referred to in the defendant’s instruction No. 4.

At the request of defendant the court instructed the jury, among other matters, as follows: “(4) The policy of the law, as evidenced by the presumption of innocence and the doctrine of reasonable doubt, would require the public prosecutor to introduce such proof as will give a fair account of the transaction. This being done, the defendant may produce in evidence his defense, and he is not required to prove the circumstances thereof beyond a reasonable doubt, or to the extent of satisfactorily establishing his defense. He is only required to prove the same as any other facts are required to be proved, and, if the matters relied on be supported by such proof as would produce a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to the guilt of the defendant, when the whole evidence concerning the transaction comes to be considered by the jury, the rule of law is that there must be an acquittal. But if a defendant enters upon an independent defense, and attempts to prove extrinsic facts, not arising out of the res gestæ, the rule is that when the defense set up is, in itself, purely extrinsic, the allegations of the information not being denied, it is necessary that such defense be sustained by a preponderance of proof. (5) It must be established beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was present, and committed or participated in the commission of the offense, and, if the proof leaves it doubtful in the minds of the jury whether the defendant was present at or absent from the place at the time the crime was committed, he must be acquitted.”

6. Defendant excepted to the following instruction on the ground that it is a charge as to matter of fact: "If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, at the time and place specified in the information, killed the party alleged to have been killed, under such circumstances as under the testimony as given before you and the law that I have given you, it would be murder in the first degree, and you desire that he shall suffer the death penalty, the form of your verdict will be: 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree.'" While the instruction is artificially drawn, it would require a most astute philologist to show wherein the language, with its punctuations, asserts that the killing, if it occurred at the time and place specified, would, under the testimony and the law, be murder in the first degree.

7. The last assignment of error is that the court erred in remarking, while engaged in charging the jury: "I do not desire to have any question in this case at all. There are some instructions asked by the defendant which I will give in addition to those which I have already given." And again in saying: "In this case, gentlemen, I do not deem it necessary to give the instructions which I usually give in homicide cases." The court had already given in its oral charge the substance of the instructions asked by defendant, and the first statement quoted was doubtless apologetic for the repetition. It cannot be fairly assumed that the court intended to prejudice the jury against the defendant by an intimation such as appellant draws from the language used, i. e., that the case was one of unusual enormity, and the instructions favorable to the defendant omitted or given under protest. Of course it is possible for the trial court by innuendo, facial expression, or vocal emphasis or slide, to indicate a prejudice against the defendant on trial for crime, and thus grievously injure his case; but there is nothing in this case to indicate any such feeling or disposition on the part of the judge who presided at the trial. On the contrary, the instructions given by the court of its own motion are replete with expressions more favorable to defendant than any found in those which were asked on his own behalf. We have examined the affidavits used on motion for a new trial, and think the court below correctly held that they were insufficient.

Every point made has been considered, and we find no error.
Judgment and order affirmed.

GRANT v. DE LAMORI and others. (No. 11,712.)

DEED—TITLE CONVEYED—LIMITATIONS.

The alienating force of a deed, which by plain terms purports to pass the grantor's entire interest, is not restricted by the fact that it contains an allusion to an executory contract which the grantor has with a third party respecting the land, and from whom he is to get a quitclaim deed, when the allusion is made simply for the purpose of describing more particularly the premises conveyed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Suit by John Grant, respondent, to quiet title in himself to a tract of land, against the administratrix and children of Louis Lamori, deceased. The plaintiff claimed title under a deed to him from Francisca Urquidez de Lamori, the widow of Louis, and a deed made to her by her husband in his life-time. The defendant and appellant Mrs. Plummer claimed title as one of the heirs at law of Louis Lamori. The complaint is as follows:

"That the said plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple of all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, forming part of the Rancho Los Feliz, and bounded and more particularly described as follows, [describing it;] that the said defendants, Francisca Urquidez de Lamori, administratrix of the estate of Louis Lamori, deceased, Juan Lamori, Miguel Lamori, Alfredo Lamori, Domingo Lamori, Fabio Lamori, Solomon Lamori, Antonio Lamori, Umpara Lamori de Plummer, and Louisa Lamori de Urquidez, claim an interest or interests in said land and premises adverse to the plaintiff; but said claims of said defendants are without any right whatsoever, and that the defendants have not, nor has either of them, any estate, right, title, or interest of, in, or to said land and premises, or any part thereof; that the said Louis Lamori died in the said county of Los Angeles on the eighth day of January, 1881, being at the time of his death a resident of said county; that by an order of the superior court of said county, duly made and given on the seventh day of July, 1881, the said Francisca Urquidez de Lamori was appointed administratrix of the estate of said Louis Lamori, deceased, and thereupon said Francisca Urquidez de Lamori duly qualified as such administratrix, and letters of administration upon said estate were duly issued to her by the clerk of said court, under the seal thereof, which letters have not been revoked; and that said Francisca Urquidez de Lamori thereupon entered upon the discharge of the duties of her trust, and ever since has been, and still is, administratrix of the estate of said Louis Lamori, deceased; that the said Louis Lamori left him surviving, as his sole heirs at law, his widow, the said Francisca Urquidez de Lamori, and his children, [naming them;] that the said Francisca Urquidez de Lamori, as administratrix of the estate of the said Louis Lamori, deceased, and the said surviving children of said deceased, claim that the land and premises above described were owned in fee-simple by the said Louis Lamori at the time of his death, and that the said land and premises now form and are a part of the estate of said deceased, which said claims are without any right whatever, and said land and premises were not, nor was any part thereof, or interest therein, owned by said Louis Lamori at the time of his death, nor do said land and premises, or any part thereof or interest therein, form any part of the estate of said deceased.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment that said defendants claiming interests in said land and premises as aforesaid may be required to set forth the nature of their several claims, and that all adverse claims of the said defendants, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this court; and that by said decree or judgment it be declared and adjudged that said plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple of said land and premises, and that said defendants claiming interests therein, as aforesaid, have not, nor has either of them, any right, title, interest, or estate whatsoever, of, in, or to the said land and premises, or any part thereof; and also that said defendants, claiming interests therein as aforesaid, and each of them, be forever debarred from asserting any claim whatever in or to said land and premises, or any part thereof, adverse to the plaintiff; and that by said decree it be declared and adjudged that neither the said land and premises, nor any part thereof, nor any interest therein, form any part of the estate of said Louis Lamori, deceased; and also that said estate has no interest in said land and premises, or any part thereof; and for such other and further relief as to equity shall seem meet."

The following was put in evidence by the plaintiff:

"LOS ANGELES COUNTY Tuesday May 31, 1881. Know all men in this presence that I Luis Lamorez of the county of Los Angeles state of California I party of the first part confirm to and give all my interest and right which I may have or can have in a right of 22 acres of land being located and situated in the ranch of Lick or Los Feliz rancho a right to Francisca Lamorez party of the second part of the same county and state being all my interest and right Thomas Rowan the representative and agent to arrange and deliver the title at the end of the settlement of the Rancho of Lick in the bargain which I confirm and certainly give to Francisca Lamorez party of

The arrangement referred to with Thomas Rowan was as follows:

"DECEMBER 20, 1880.

"In consideration of Louis Lamoreux giving to the James Lick trustees a deed to all his right, title, and interest in the Lick tract of the Los Feliz rancho, except 20 acres as reserved by said Lamoreux in said Lick tract of the Los Feliz ranch by said deed, I agree, on the arrival of R. S. Floyd, of the Lick trust, in San Francisco, to get a deed from the Lick trustees to Louis Lamoreux of the 20 acres as reserved by him in his deed to the Lick trustees.
THOS. E. FRAZER, Agent for the Lick Trustees."

The deed from the widow to the plaintiff was also put in evidence. The defendant offered in evidence a deed from one Ramon Vejar to Louis Lamori, as tending to prove that Louis Lamori's estate, of which he was so seized in fee-simple on the said thirty-first day of May, 1881, was by a title other than that which was expected to accrue from the Rowan executory contract; and that, although Louis Lamori at that time assigned to his wife all the estate or interest which might accrue from that contract, still the estate or interest which he had prior to that time by another title remained to him, notwithstanding his assignment of that contract to his wife on the said thirty-first of May; and that he died seized of that prior estate in fee on the following eighth day of June, as alleged in the answer.

The court found that on May 31, 1881, "Louis Lamori, by deed of conveyance, duly conveyed all of said tract of land to the defendant Francisca Urquidez de Lamori, who thereafter, and prior to the commencement of this action, by deed of conveyance, duly conveyed all of said tract of land to the plaintiff, John Grant."

H. Allen, for appellants. Howard & Scott, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Tested by what we conceive to be now the well-settled rule in this state, the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer to it was properly overruled.

As we construe the deed of Louis Lamori, it conveys all his interest in the land to his wife. The contract with the trustees of the Lick estate is clearly referred to in the deed for the purpose of describing more definitely the premises conveyed, and it makes no difference what its legal effect might be. No one connected with this action claims anything under it. The objection to its introduction in evidence was properly overruled. The deed of Louis Lamori to Vejar, of a date subsequent to that made to Mrs. Lamori, was wholly immaterial, and the objection to its introduction in evidence was properly sustained.

We discover no error in the record. Judgment and order affirmed.

HERRLICH v. McDONALD. (No. 12,161.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—BOND—MISTAKE IN TITLE OF CASE.

An undertaking on appeal, in due form of law, is not rendered ineffective by a mistaken indorsement of the title of the case.

2. SAME—NOTICE OF APPEAL—MISNUMBER.

The true title of a cause was Julia Herrlich v. Maggie McDonald. The notice of appeal was entitled Julia Herrlich v. H. M. McDonald. Held that, the notice being sufficient in other respects, it was not vitiated by the incorrect title.

3. SAME—TRANSCRIPT—CORRECTNESS.

As against the certificate of the clerk, the mere statement of counsel, on a motion to dismiss the appeal, that errors exist in the transcript, does not establish the fact.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

On motion to dismiss appeal.

W. B. Tyler, for McDonald, appellant. Chas. F. Hanlon, for Herrlich, respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. The order of the superior court appealed from was made and entered February 18, 1887. Notice of appeal was filed and served April 14th, and the undertaking filed April 18, 1887. A transcript on appeal, duly certified, was delivered by the clerk below to the appellant on the twenty-fifth day of May, served on respondent on the same day, and filed in this court on the twenty-sixth May, 1887, within 40 days after the appeal was perfected. Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground, among others, that the transcript was not filed within the 40 days. On the day of the service on him of the paper purporting to be a copy of the transcript, the attorney for respondent notified appellant that he refused to certify to the transcript as correct, in his notice pointing out certain alleged errors and mistranscriptions of the record or papers on file. But, conceding there is any law or rule which requires the appellant to serve on the adverse party a copy of the transcript to be filed, it has not been made to appear to us, either by additional certificate of the clerk below or otherwise, that the alleged errors or mistranscriptions exist, (unless it be in the notice of appeal.) Doubtless the respondent is entitled to have filed here, at the expense primarily of the appellant, a correct transcript of the record below. But it is not our province now to indicate how it can be obtained, proved, and substituted for the transcript actually filed, if the latter is incorrect. As against the certificate of the clerk, the mere statement of counsel that errors exist does not establish the fact. From an examination of the transcript it would seem that some of the papers printed in it are in no manner identified as having been used on the motion. But if the consequence of such omission shall be that the court here will refuse to look at such papers when the appeal is heard on the merits, the want of identification of some of the papers will not justify a dismissal of the appeal. Moreover, the absence of such identification is not urged by counsel for respondent as a reason for dismissing the appeal.

Respondent further contends: First, that no appeal has been taken; second, that no notice of appeal was filed or served. In the certificate attached to the transcript on file, the clerk certifies that an undertaking on appeal, in due form of law, was properly filed. In the additional certificate, on which the motion to dismiss is based, he certifies that the undertaking filed was indorsed "Julia Herrlich v. H. M. McDonald." The undertaking, if in due form of law, (and no other objection has been made to it,) was not rendered ineffective by a mistaken indorsement. The copy of the notice of appeal, as printed in the transcript, is headed "Title of Court and Cause." The certificate of the clerk, presented on hearing of the motion to dismiss, shows that the notice of appeal filed below was entitled Julia Herrlich v. H. M. McDonald. But the notice was signed by the "attorney for the defendant;" the subscriber being the attorney for the defendant in the action Julia Herrlich v. Maggie McDonald. It was filed in the court in which that action had been pending, and was served on the attorney for the plaintiff therein, who acknowledged service, "reserving all objections." The notice refers to an order made February 18, 1887, refusing to recall an execution, etc. The transcript contains a copy of an order entered on the day last named in the action Julia Herrlich v. Maggie McDonald, denying the motion of defendant, counsel for plaintiff herein being present, to vacate and set aside an execution. The reckless inexactitude displayed in the preparation of the papers connected with this appeal is not to be commended. We cannot say, however, but that the notice described the order in such manner as clearly to identify it, and so to inform the respondent of the particular order appealed from.

Motion to dismiss the appeal denied, without prejudice.

HEGARD v. INSURANCE CO. (No. 11,073.)

APPEAL.—REHEARING.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 45, providing that "every judgment of the court in bank shall be final, except in cases in which no previous judgment has been rendered in one of the departments," a rehearing will not be granted in a case decided in department, and afterwards in bank.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county.

Action on a policy of fire insurance. On second petition for rehearing. For the decision in department, see 11 Pac. Rep. 594, and for that in bank, 14 Pac. Rep. 180.

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. W. W. Kellogg and R. H. F. Variel, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. This cause was heard and decided in department, after which a rehearing in bank was ordered, where the cause was again heard and decided. Appellant now files a second petition for a rehearing. The petition is denied for the reasons—First, that an examination of the record shows no sufficient cause therefor; and second, that the constitution does not provide for a rehearing of causes decided in bank, and the statute (Code Civil Proc. § 45) expressly provides that "every judgment of the court in bank shall be final, except in cases in which no previous judgment has been rendered in one of the departments," etc. Whatever may be the inherent right of the court, independent of statutory provision, to amend, alter, modify, or set aside its judgments,—a question upon which we express no opinion,—we think it clear that the right to petition for a rehearing should not be recognized in cases decided in department and afterwards in bank.

PEOPLE v. ECKMAN. (No. 20,298.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—EVIDENCE.

At a trial for burglary, a witness, in answer to certain preliminary questions as to whether the defendant made certain statements with reference to the burglary voluntarily, stated that defendant, speaking to him, "said he would plead guilty." Held, that a refusal to strike out the words quoted is not ground for setting aside a conviction.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER.

A certificate of the discharge of the defendant from the United States army for disability, which certifies his character to be good, is not admissible in evidence, at a trial for burglary, to show the good character of the defendant.

3. SAME—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTION.

At a trial for burglary, an instruction which, after directing the jury that circumstantial evidence must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis than that of guilt, states that, "to convict upon circumstantial evidence, it should be such as to produce nearly the same degree of certainty as that which arises from direct testimony," is not erroneous; following People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 201.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county
Indictment for burglary.

V. A. Gregg, for appellant. G. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and appeals from an order denying him a new trial, and from the judgment rendered in the case.

1. Appellant contends for a new trial for error in refusing to strike out certain testimony of the witness for the prosecution, McLeod, who was the sheriff of the county. The witness was asked if he had heard the defendant make any statements in reference to the burglary, and, if so, were these statements made voluntarily. He answered that he had, and that they were made voluntarily. Thereupon defendant's attorney "requested the privilege of asking the witness preliminary questions, to see if the statement made by the defendant to the witness was voluntary; and the court granted the request." The preliminary question having been asked, the witness replied: "I told him probably, if he was guilty, and pleaded guilty, he would probably get a shorter sentence. Then he told me he wanted to see the district attorney. I went down and brought him up into the office. Mr. Eckman came into the office, and made the statement that he would plead guilty voluntarily." Defendant's attorney then said: "I ask that that be stricken out,—that he said he would plead guilty." The court said, "I deny the motion;" and the attorney for defendant said, "We except." This is all the record shows upon the subject.

Technically, the testimony was not before the jury at all. It was addressed to the court upon the preliminary examination. In the next place, a party moving to strike out the answer of a witness must specify his objection to it in like manner as he is required to specify the grounds of his objections to a question. People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 519; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 341. And no grounds of objection were stated here at all; not even the hackneyed one of "irrelevant and incompetent." But if such objections to the point here sought to be made ought to be disregarded in a criminal case, the court did not abuse its discretion or commit a fatal error in denying the motion to strike out. The sheriff had not charged defendant with being guilty; had not claimed to have evidence against him; had not threatened him in any way. He did not tell him, as was told the defendants in People v. Johnson, 41 Cal. 452, "there was no use in fooling about it; they may as well confess, as there was evidence enough to convict them." Moreover, the statement testified to was not a confession. Under the circumstances we think that it would be going too far to reverse the case for the denial of the motion, even if defendant's counsel had stated the grounds upon which he made it.

2. The second ground of error assigned by appellant is the refusal of the court to allow in evidence, as proof tending to show the good character of the defendant, a certificate of the discharge of the defendant from the United States army for disability, which also certified his character to be good. It does not appear what particular traits of character were certified to in the document excluded; but we do not know of any rule which, upon the general issue of character, allows the introduction of written declarations, official or otherwise, made by third parties out of court. We think, therefore, that this point is not tenable.

3. The appellant makes several objections to parts of the instructions given by the court to the jury. The most serious is the objection to part of instruction No. 3. This instruction is on the subject of circumstantial evidence; and, while stating that the circumstances must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis than that of guilt, it includes this language: "To convict upon circumstantial evidence, it should be such as to produce nearly the same degree of certainty as that which arises from direct testimony." This instruction was given at the request of the district attorney; and it may be remarked that many prosecuting officers seem to be moved by some sort of fascination to travel along the very edge of the precipice of error, when they could go just as effectively, and much more safely, along the center of the beaten road. This hazardous language, probably, had no effect whatever on the jury, and yet its propriety is extremely doubtful. It happens, however, that a good many years ago this court decided that a similar instruction was not erroneous; holding that "it was but another mode of telling the jury that although, as a general rule, circumstantial evidence, in the nature of things, may not be so entirely satisfactory proof of a fact as the positive testimony of credible eye-witnesses, yet they must convict if they were satisfied of the guilt of the defendant to the exclusion of rational probabilities." People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 201. We would not be warranted in overruling that case on the point under discussion, and therefore hold that a new trial should not be granted in the case at bar on account of said instruction.

There are some other exceptions to the instructions, but they are not, in our opinion, well taken. The law of the case was, we think, properly and fairly given to the jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

TUBBS v. WILHOUT and others. (No. 11,735.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—SWAMP LANDS—VESTING OF TITLE.

The act of congress of September 28, 1850, known as the "Swamp-Land Act," is a grant in presenti of the lands determined to be of that character at that date.

2. SAME.

The fourth section of the act of congress of July 23, 1866, entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," provides that where township surveys have been made under authority of the United States, and the plats thereof approved, it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the general land-office to certify to the state of California as swamp and overflowed all land represented on such approved plats within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from the return or approval of such plats. Held, that the title to such lands vested upon the approval of the plats, and not from the date of the commissioner's certificate.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

J. B. Hall, for appellants. J. H. Budd, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an action of ejectment. The plaintiff's title is founded on a patent of the United States issued on homestead entry commuted to a cash entry, which entry was made on the eighth of May, 1873. On this last-named day whatever right the plaintiff had, attached. The defendants' title rests on a patent of the state of California, issued to one Joseph Kile on the fifth day of August, 1865, for the land in controversy, purchased by said Kile from the state on an application to purchase made to the proper state authorities in the month of August, 1864. The plaintiff claims that the land is and was dry land on the twenty-eighth of September, 1850, the date of the passage of the swamp-land act, while defendants (who are the executors of Kile) claim that it was swamp and overflowed land at the date just above mentioned, and that it was conclusively determined to be such before any right of plaintiff attached.

It appears from the findings that in April, 1864, a plat of the survey of the township in which the land in controversy is situated was approved by the United States surveyor general for California. On this approved township plat the land in suit was represented to be swamp and overflowed. On the twenty-third of July, 1866, an act of congress entitled "An act to quiet land titles in California," was passed. The fourth section of that act provides, among other things, as follows: "That in all cases where township surveys have been or shall hereafter be made under the authority of the United States, and the plats thereof approved, it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the general land-office to certify over to the state of California as swamp and overflowed all the lands represented as such upon such approved plats within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from the return and approval of such township plats."

It must be considered as settled law that the first section of the swamp-land act is a grant in presenti to each state of the swamp and overflowed lands within its limits. "The words of the first section of the act," say the supreme court of the United States in Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985, by FIELD, J., "'shall be and are hereby granted,' import an immediate transfer of interest, not a promise of transfer in the future." The provision made for a patent in the second section is for the purpose of furnishing to the grantee documentary evidence that the land was swamp and overflowed, and a further assurance of title. See Owens v. Jackson, 9 Cal. 322; Summers v. Dickinson, Id. 554; Kernan v. Griffith, 27 Cal. 87; Sacramento Val. Rec. Co. v. Cook, 61 Cal. 342; Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. Rep. 674; French v. Fyan, 93 U. S. 169; Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985, and cases cited.

To make the grant perfect, the lands must be identified as of the character granted. When the land was clearly swamp and overflowed, it could be clearly identified as such by parol evidence. In most cases such identification from the character of the lands could be made without difficulty. In some instances it might not be so easily done, and congress provided in the act of 1850 for a mode of identification by the secretary of the interior. This action by the secretary of the interior, in identifying the land as swamp and overflowed, is conclusive against collateral attack, as the judgment of a special tribunal to which the determination of the matter is submitted; and, when the secretary has neglected or failed to make the identification, it is competent for the state or its grantees, to prevent their rights from being defeated, to identify the lands in any other appropriate mode which will effect that object, as by a resort to parol evidence. Wright v. Roseberry, 121 U. S. 488, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985, and cases cited. But congress has furnished other modes of identification, and one of those is set forth in the portion of the fourth section of the act of 1866 above quoted. Wright v. Roseberry, supra.

That the township plat was approved in this case long before any right of the plaintiff attached clearly appears from the findings. A copy of the plat approved by the United States surveyor general for California was filed in the United States district land-office at Stockton, in which district the land in suit was included, on the first of July, 1864. This copy was afterwards, on or about July 15, 1865, withdrawn from the office by the surveyor general, above mentioned, by order of the commissioner of the general land-office, and was never returned to that office, but an exact copy of it was subsequently filed in the United States land-office for the district then embracing, with other lands, the land in controversy. We think it clear from the above that the plat must be considered as approved at least as soon as when first filed in the land-office in Stockton.

From the day of filing an approved township plat in the proper land-office the time for making applications to enter and purchase commences to run. From such date rights may attach in favor of those applying to enter and purchase under the laws of the United States, and certainly such rights would not be allowed to attach unless upon a township plat approved by the proper authority. Under these circumstances the township plat may be considered as approved at latest as of July 1, 1864.

Under such a state of facts, what effect on the title to this land has the above-quoted portion of the act of July 23, 1866? We are of opinion that the plat of the survey of the township, including the lot in controversy approved by the United States surveyor general for California, was conclusive between the state and the United States, and vested the title in the state of California as of the twenty-eighth of September, 1850, the date of the passage of the swamp-land act.

This conclusion is, in our opinion, sustained by the recent decision of the supreme court of the United States in Wright v. Roseberry, above cited. This case went to the court above mentioned by writ of error to this court. The action was ejectment. The plaintiff contended that by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of the act of July 23, 1866, there having been an approved plat of survey, the title to the land in suit, claimed by plaintiff to be swamp and overflowed land, vested in the state, though the commissioner of the general land-office had never certified the land over to the state, as required by the act above mentioned. The defendants, who claimed as pre-emptors under the laws of the United States, and to whom patents had been issued by the United States upon declaratory statements made in 1864, combatted this view, and the state court sustained the contention of defendants, holding that until the commissioner had made the certificate required by the act the title did not vest in the state. The supreme court of the United States held that this was erroneous, and for this error reversed and remanded the cause. Its ruling is that the township plat having been returned to the general land-office after the patents to the defendants were issued, was not conclusive against the United States that the land was swamp and overflowed; but, if the township plat had been approved before the patents were issued, it would have been conclusive that the lands sued for were of that character, and that the certificate of the commissioner is only an official recognition that the lands are of the character designated, and of the completeness of the segregation. We understand this ruling of the highest court of the United States to be that, when the plat of the township representing lands upon it to be swamp and overflowed is approved, the title to such land vests in the state, though the commissioner has not made the certificate required by the act.

Though, in the case of Wright v. Roseberry, the plat of the township survey was required, under another section of the act of 1866, to be approved both by the United States surveyor general for California and by the commissioner of the general land-office, still, when it was approved, the same effect resulted; that is to say, when the plat of survey with the representation on it required by the act had been approved, the title to the land designated on it as swamp and overflowed vested in the state. In the case before us the approval was only required to be made by the United States surveyor general, and when this was done the result followed as above pointed out. In this view we think the ruling of the supreme court in Wright v. Roseberry sustains the conclusion here reached. In this cause nothing had occurred by which the plaintiff could have acquired a semblance of right until long after the plat of the township survey had been approved, and the title had vested in the state. Therefore, in accordance with the ruling of the United States supreme court, when the patent herein was issued, the United States had nothing which it could grant to the plaintiff. The patent to the plaintiff was, then, issued without authority of law, and, as against the defendants and their testator, was of no validity whatever.

In the conclusion here reached we have followed the decision of the supreme court in Wright v. Roseberry, overruling the decision of this court in the same case. As the question involved is a federal one, depending on the construction of an act of congress, we are bound to follow the decision of the federal court on the points in controversy, and to disregard the decision of this court on the same points.

There is nothing said in Heath v. Wallace, 11 Pac. Rep. 842, which is not in accord with what is said herein. In that case the land was not represented on the approved township plat as swamp and overflowed, but "subject to periodical overflow." We held that this was not representing the land as swamp and overflowed. There are in this state, and it may be presumed in every other state, lands which are subject to periodical overflow, but which are eminently fit for cultivation, and on which valuable crops of cereals are grown. Such lands are not swamp and overflowed, as has been held by this court. See People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 336; Keeran v. Griffith, 31 Cal. 461; Keeran v. Allen, 33 Cal. 542.

We add here that it appears from the findings herein that a hearing was in 1874 ordered by the commissioner of the general land-office as to whether the land involved in this case was or not swamp and overflowed, and that such hearing was subsequently had, on which it was determined that it was not swamp and overflowed. But the order for a hearing was made after the title had vested in the state, and therefore the decision of the federal land department, that the land was not swamp and overflowed, was of no validity whatever. Had any right been claimed by a pre-emptor prior to the approval of the township map, such hearing might have been ordered and had by the commissioner, but certainly this cannot be so when all right had passed from the United States to its grantee. The title to the land, under such circumstances, had passed entirely beyond the control of the United States land department, and beyond the power of the federal government, unless the title had been procured by fraud, to redress which resort must be had, not to the land department, but to the judicial courts.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment for the land in suit, and the rents and profits, in favor of the defendants. So ordered.

CULBERTSON v. KINEVAN. (No. 12,046.)

1. TURNPIKES—EXCESSIVE TOLL—PENALTY.

It is only when a toll-gatherer demands and receives more than he is authorized to collect that he incurs the penalty prescribed by the California act of May 12, 1853, providing (section 31) that every toll-gatherer who demands and receives from any person more than he is authorized to collect shall forfeit to the person aggrieved $10 for each offense.

2. SAME.

The California act of April 28, 1857, amending the act of May 12, 1853, which authorizes the formation of corporations for the construction of plank and turnpike roads, provides that the supervisors of the counties through which such roads pass shall fix the rate of tolls from year to year; and that any company which takes toll, "except as may be fixed and prescribed by such * * * supervisors," shall forfeit its corporate rights. Held, in a case where the county had not fixed any rates since 1869, that the failure of the supervisors to fix rates for 1883 did not subject a toll-gatherer who then took toll at the rates prescribed in 1869 to the penalty denounced by the act of 1853.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; JOHN HUNT, Judge pro tem.

W. C. Stratton, for plaintiff. Fernald, Cope & Boyce, for Kinevan, respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This action is brought under section 31 of "An act to authorize the formation of corporations for the construction of plank and turnpike roads," passed May 12, 1853, which provides that every toll-gath-ever who demands and receives from any person more than he is authorized to collect, for each offense forfeits the sum of $10 to the person aggrieved.

The case was tried by the court, which found that in 1868 a corporation called the Santa Barbara and Santa Ynez Turnpike Road Company, to continue for 20 years, was formed under the act of the legislature of May 12, 1853, and that said corporation, in 1869, constructed and opened its road to the public for travel, and it has been kept up and used for that purpose ever since; that for more than 15 years the defendant has been and still is the authorized toll-gatherer on said road; that on the thirtieth day of November, 1883, the plaintiff passed over said road with two horses and a wagon, and at the "San Marcos Pass," or "Pat's Station," so called, at the toll-gate on Santa Ynez mountains, on said road and in the county of Santa Barbara, paid to the defendant, as toll-gatherer of said road, $1.50 for toll for passing over said road, without any objection whatever; that plaintiff knew then, and had long known, the toll-road, and had frequently passed over it before, and had paid the accustomed rate of toll according to the rate of toll which he saw posted up at the gate; that defendant then appeared at the toll-gate, and received said toll as toll-gatherer for said corporation, as he had been accustomed to do in all other cases, and in the belief that he had good right to collect and receive the same; that said sum so paid by plaintiff for toll was the exact amount which plaintiff and others had theretofore paid defendant for toll for the same team, to-wit, two horses and a wagon, and the same amount which defendant had collected for such teams during all the time he had been such toll-gatherer on said road, and the exact amount prescribed and fixed by the board of supervisors of Santa Barbara county for toll on said road, by its order made on the fourth day of August, 1869, and entered on the minutes of said board on that day; that no other order relating to any of the matters mentioned in said order, or to the tolls to be charged by said turnpike company, was passed by said board of supervisors before the commencement of this action, to-wit, on the twenty-eighth day of September, 1884. And, as a conclusion of law from the foregoing facts, this court finds, separately, that no action has accrued for a forfeiture, and that plaintiff is not entitled to recover any penalty from defendant in this action, and this cause ought to be dismissed, and that defendant recover his costs and disbursements in this behalf laid out and expended; and it is hereby so ordered and adjudged, and that judgment be entered in this court accordingly. Judgment was so entered, and this appeal is from the judgment.

The appellant insists that the judgment is not justified by the findings, and cites an act to amend the act of 1853 above referred to, approved April 28, 1857, which provides "that such companies as have already organized, or that may hereafter organize, under the provisions of this act, and the act of which this is amendatory, shall only be allowed to put up and keep such toll-gates, demand, collect, and receive such tolls, as may be fixed and prescribed by the board of supervisors of the county or counties through which such road or roads may pass; such gates and tolls to be fixed and prescribed by such board of supervisors as aforesaid from year to year. And if any company or companies shall violate the provisions of this act, by putting up any toll-gate or gates, or by collecting any toll or tolls, except as may be fixed and prescribed by such board of supervisors, as aforesaid, such company or companies shall forfeit all their corporate rights in such road or roads, turnpike or turnpikes, bridge or bridges, ferry or ferries, to the counties in which the same may be situated. Such company or companies may be prosecuted for such violation as aforesaid before any justice of the peace in any township through which said road passes." St. 1857, p. 280. It is claimed that the failure to find that this law in all respects had been complied with, and the finding that, in some respects, it had not been, is fatal to the judgment.

It is apparent at a glance that the penalty prescribed by that act is not the one sued for in this action. The statute does not make the toll-gatherer liable for acts or omissions of the board of supervisors, or of the corporation which employed him. It is when he demands and receives more than he is authorized by law to collect that he becomes liable to the party aggrieved. In this case it is claimed that the corporation was not entitled to demand and receive anything, and, therefore, that any sum whatever was more than the toll-gatherer was authorized to collect. We think section 31 of the act of 1853 does not apply to such a case, but to a case where the law authorizes the collection of some amount of toll, and the toll-gatherer demands and receives more than that amount. If the defendant in this case was authorized to collect anything, he collected no more than he was authorized to collect. If he was not authorized to collect anything, and did collect something, it would not be construing the word "more" according to the context and the approved usage of the language to say that he collected more than he was authorized to collect. It is only when a toll-gatherer demands and receives more than he is authorized to collect that he incurs the penalty prescribed. In this case it is not found that anything was demanded by the defendant. The finding is that plaintiff paid, and the defendant received, the amount of the toll, and that the plaintiff paid that amount "without any objection whatever," as he had frequently done before. The court does not distinctly find that the defendant made no demand, but the facts found negative the idea that any was made; and, if none was made, no penalty was incurred, for there must be a demand, as well as a receipt, of toll to constitute the offense. Judgment affirmed.

LUCO v. BROWN and others. (No. 11,839.)

JUDGMENT—VALIDITY—DEFECTIVE SUMMONS.

In California an injunction will not issue to restrain a levy of execution on a justice's judgment docketed in the superior court, when the relief sought is based on the ground that the judgment is void because the summons was fatally defective. Under the law of that state the judgment debtor has ample remedy at law, by motion in the justice's court, to arrest the execution.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Thos. J. Arnold, for Lucio, appellant. Edward J. Linforth, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced in the superior court of San Diego county to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants "from levying upon or attaching plaintiff's property, or any part thereof," under an execution issued upon a judgment rendered against plaintiff in a justice's court in Tuolumne county.

The facts set up in the complaint may be briefly stated as follows: On the fourteenth day of August, 1885, the defendant Brown filed a complaint in a justice's court in the county of Tuolumne against the plaintiff here and two other persons, in which he alleged that the defendants were indebted to him in a certain sum of money for labor and services done and performed by plaintiff for defendants at their special instance and request. On the twenty-sixth of September following, Brown caused a summons to be issued by the justice upon his complaint, which was served upon plaintiff in the city and county of San Francisco, where he then, and has ever since, resided, and was never served upon him in the county of Tuolumne. The summons so served was defective and void, because there was not attached to it a certificate under seal by the county clerk of the county of Tuolumne, to the effect that the person issuing the same was an acting justice of the peace at the date of the summons, as required by section 849 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the —— day of November, 1885, Brown caused the default of plaintiff for not answering to be entered in the cause, and thereupon judgment was made and entered against him for the sum of $252.74. Thereafter Brown caused an abstract of the judgment to be filed in the office of the county clerk of the county, and an execution thereon, under the seal of the superior court, to be issued to the sheriff of San Diego county. The defendant Bushyhead is the sheriff of San Diego county, and the execution so issued has been placed in his hands, and under it he is about to levy upon, advertise, and sell the plaintiff's property, situate in his county. It is then alleged that all the allegations in the complaint filed in the justice's court, so far as the plaintiff here is concerned, are untrue; that Brown never at any time performed any work or labor for plaintiff, at his instance or request or otherwise, and that plaintiff is not and was not, either individually, or in connection with his co-defendants, indebted to Brown in the sum named in his complaint, or in any sum of money whatever, and that he never agreed to pay him the sum alleged in his complaint, or any other sum whatever; that plaintiff never had any notice or knowledge of the commencement of the action in the justice's court, (except from the service of said void summons upon him;) or of the default taken, or of the judgment rendered therein, or of the issuance of the execution, until demand was made upon him by defendant Bushyhead, for payment and satisfaction of the same; and that the levy upon and sale of the plaintiff's property, under the execution, will cloud his title and do him irreparable injury. This action was commenced on the ninth day of February, 1886, and on the same day a temporary injunction was granted. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and, on coming on to be heard, their demurrer was sustained and the injunction dissolved. The plaintiff excepted to the rulings of the court, and now prosecutes this appeal therefrom.

Assuming, as claimed by the appellant, that the judgment rendered against him in the justice's court was void, for the reason that the court never acquired any jurisdiction of his person, still it does not follow that he can maintain this action. The same question was involved in Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 77, in which the court, by FIELD, C. J., said: "The plaintiff seeks to enjoin the sale of certain personal property under an execution issued upon a judgment recovered against him in a justice's court, and bases his claim for relief upon the ground that the court never acquired any jurisdiction of his person. He avers that the summons issued in the action, in which the judgment was entered, was never served upon him. If this averment be true, he has an effectual remedy by motion to the court to set the execution aside. The justice possesses the power at all times to arrest process issued upon judgments entered in his docket which are void." And in that case the judgment in favor of the defendants was affirmed.

The same question was again presented in Gates v. Lane, 49 Cal. 266. There the plaintiffs sought to enjoin the enforcement of an execution issued on a judgment rendered against them in a justice's court, upon the ground that the summons had never been properly served upon them. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and this court said: "The demurrer was properly sustained. If the judgment obtained against the plaintiffs was void on the face of the proceedings in the justice's court for want of jurisdiction, as the complaint avers it to have been, these plaintiffs had an adequate remedy by motion in that court, to arrest the execution and stay further process on the judgment; citing cases. Nor did the fact that the execution was issued by the county clerk, on a transcript of the justice's docket filed in his office, obstruct the remedy by motion in the justice's court. Though issued by the clerk, the execution was subject to be recalled by the justice who rendered the judgment."

In Ede v. Hazen, 61 Cal. 360, it is said: "As appears upon the face of their complaint, the plaintiffs discovered within forty days after the entry of the judgment, and within six months after the entry of their default, all the facts upon which they now base their right to have it set aside; and if it be conceded that, upon those facts, they are entitled to the relief they now claim, it is clear that they had a speedy, complete, adequate, summary remedy in the same proceeding, and that the complaint shows no circumstances which entitle them to maintain a separate and distinct equitable action."

Upon the authority of the foregoing cases we think the demurrer was properly sustained, and that the order dissolving the injunction should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

ROSENTHAL and others v. LEVY, Assignee. (No. 12,016.)

APPEAL—FINAL ORDER—INSOLVENCY.

An order directing an accounting by the assignee of an insolvent debtor, who has qualified, but who has failed to render an account within the three months prescribed by section 29 of the California insolvent act, is not a final order, and is not appealable.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Complaint by Rosenthal, Feder & Co. and B. Blumenthal & Co., respondents, to compel Marcus Levy, assignee of L. Hyman, to file his account. There was a decree for the complainants, ordering the account to be filed, and Levy appealed.

Thornton & Merzbach and A. Burrows, for appellant. John Caldwell and A. D. Mason, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. The order appealed from in this case is in no sense a final order, and is not appealable. Furthermore, it is one the court should have made of its own motion, upon mere suggestion. The assignee was apparently in default, as he had not complied with section 29 of the insolvent act, which required him to render an account at the expiration of three months. The assignee cannot at any time be heard to object to an order requiring him to render an account. The court may require it as often as occasion seems to require. Appeal dismissed.

ROSE'S ESTATE. (No. 12,160.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1704, provides that in probate cases "all orders and decrees of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute-book of the court;" and section 1715, that "the appeal must be taken within 60 days after the order * * * is entered." Held, that an appeal from an order settling the account of an administrator, taken before the order had been so entered, was premature, and should be dismissed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Wal. J. Tuska, for appellant. Stetson & Houghton, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that it was prematurely taken. It appears from the affidavits on file that on the twelfth of March, 1887, findings of fact and an order or decree were signed and filed with the clerk, settling the account of H. Hirshfield, the administrator of the estate of Rose, deceased. Afterwards, and on the twenty-seventh day of April, 1887, the administrator perfected an appeal to this court from such order or decree. At the time of taking such appeal the decree appealed from had not been entered in the minute-book of the superior court of Tulare county, where the proceedings were had where the cause was pending. In probate cases it is provided by section 1704 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "all orders and decrees of the court or judge must be entered at length in the minute-book of the court." If an appeal is taken in such a case, it "must be taken within sixty days after the order, decree, or judgment is entered." The appeal in this case was premature. People v. Center, 66 Cal. 570, 5 Pac. Rep. 263, and 6 Pac. Rep. 481; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519; Thomas v. Anderson, 55 Cal. 43.

The motion is granted, and the appeal dismissed.

LOUGHBOROUGH, Adm'r, etc., v. McNEVIN and others. (No. 9,520.)

1. PLEDGE—LIEN—EXTINGUISHMENT—TENDER.

The lien of a pledgee is extinguished when a tender of the amount due on the debt is made according to law, and is refused by the pledgee.

2. SAME—REFUSAL TO DELIVER—CONVERSION.

A refusal by a pledgee to deliver up the pledge to an assignee of the pledge, upon a sufficient tender being made by the assignee of the amount due him, is conversion, and the fact that the property pledged had been attached by a third person, with whom the assignee had no privity, is no justification.

3. SAME.

In an action of trover to enforce the redemption of a pledge, the pledgee will be held responsible for any depreciation in the value of the pledge, after the tender of the amount due, and refusal by the pledgee.

4. SAME—INTERVENING CLAIMANT.

One to whom a pledge has been assigned pending litigation concerning it, may file a complaint in intervention, under section 386, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides for order of substitution.

5. TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

Where one who held certain shares of stock as security for money loaned, demanded payment of the debtor, which was refused, and afterwards an assignee of the stock tendered to the pledgee the whole amount due him, with interest, held a sufficient tender, under section 1492, Civil Code Cal., which provides that where delay in the performance of an obligation is capable of exact and entire compensation, and time has not been declared to be of the essence of the contract, an offer of performance, accompanied by an offer of such compensation, may be made at any time after the obligation is due.

6. SAME.

A tender to a pledgee of the amount secured by the pledge is not vitiated by a condition that the pledge be delivered to the one tendering payment.

7. SAME.

A tender of the amount due a pledgee by an assignee of the pledge is sufficient, without bringing the money into court.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Wilson & Wilson, for appellant. D. L. Smoot, Ogden Hiles, M. N. Stone, and B. B. Newman, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. The plaintiff's intestate, some time prior to October, 1876, lent defendant Henry P. McNevin a sum of money for which he received as security some shares of stock. On the nineteenth of July, 1877, McNevin assigned to defendant L. P. Drexler his interest in the stock above mentioned, in consideration that Drexler would assume the payment of his debts due to Casserly on said stock. This assignment Drexler accepted, and on the twenty-first of the same month informed Casserly of such assignment. On receiving this notice, Casserly, on same day, declared his willingness to deliver the stock to Drexler upon receiving the money secured by it. On the twenty-second of September, 1877, Drexler made a legal tender to Casserly of the amount due to him on the stock, and demanded a delivery of it. Casserly made no objection to the tender, admitted that it was correct and sufficient, but refused to accept the money and deliver the stock, on the ground that process of garnishment in the matter of an order for money against Henry P. McNevin in favor of defendant Teresa E. McNevin had been served on him on September 1, 1877. On the twenty-eighth of September, 1877, six days after the tender was made and refused, this action was commenced by Casserly. Henry P. McNevin, Teresa E. McNevin, and Drexler were made defendants to the action. The object of the action was to have an account taken of the amount due by McNevin to him; that the money found due him be adjudged to be paid him by Teresa E. McNevin or Drexler, as either shall be found entitled thereto; and in default of payment that the defendants be foreclosed of all right of redemption, etc., for a sale, etc. H. P. McNevin answered, stating that he had, on the nineteenth of July, 1877, sold and assigned the stock to Drexler in good faith, for the consideration of $11,000 paid him by his vendee. T. E. McNevin answered, denying that Drexler ever purchased the stock of Henry P. McNevin; denied that there was due to Casserly from H. P. McNevin any sum greater than $9,837.27, secured as above mentioned; and stated that she claimed a lien upon the stock under executions issued in the action brought by her against Henry P. McNevin, by means of which the stock was attached. The executions mentioned were issued on orders made in the action just above mentioned. In the same action an order was made, which was served on Casserly on the sixteenth day of September, 1877, directing him not to pay over or transfer any property held by him belonging to H. P. McNevin. Drexler in his answer set up the assignment to him; the notification to Casserly of this assignment; the tender to Casserly, and its refusal by him, as they are set forth herein; and averred his willingness and readiness to pay, and then offered to pay, into court the amount due Casserly, as the court should direct, upon Casserly's delivering to him the stock held by him as security.

J. F. Eagan, on the eighteenth of February, 1879, filed a complaint in intervention, in which he averred an assignment to him by Drexler of the stock held by Casserly as security, and also of all claim for damages by Drexler for the conversion of the stock thereafter mentioned. He then goes on to aver the facts showing a conversion by Casserly, which are the facts above set forth by Drexler in his answer, and the further fact that Casserly refused, upon the tender made him in September, 1877, to accept the said amount tendered, and deliver the stock to Drexler. Casserly demurred to the complaint of Eagan, which was overruled. He then answered the complaint last mentioned, denying the conversion averred. The cause was tried and judgment rendered against Casserly in favor of Eagan for the sum of $15,225 and costs. Casserly moved for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and order above mentioned.

Casserly held the stock as a pledge. He so states in his complaint, and under section 2924, Civil Code, having it in his possession, as it was personal property, it was a pledge whether the title passed to him or not. The lien of a pledgee is extinguished when a tender of the amount due on the debt is made according to law, and its refusal by the pledgee. McCalla v. Clark, 55 Ga. 53; Ratcliff v. Vance, 2 Const. (S. C.) 239. Upon such tender being made and refused, the pledgeor is entitled to the property pledged, and certainly, when on or after such tender a demand is made for the pledge, which is refused, a conversion takes place. See cases just above cited. The refusal to deliver the pledged property on demand is an exercise of dominion over the property of another in defiance of the other's right, which is a conversion. Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 420, 421. Such conversion is wrongful, and extinguishes the lien under section 2910, Civil Code. See Rodgers v. Grothe, 53 Pa. St. 414; Davis v. Bigler, 62 Pa. St. 242; Lawrence v. Maxwell, 53 N. Y. 19.

Was the tender in this case made in accordance with law? It was of the whole amount, principal and interest, due to Casserly. The demand made at the same time that the stock pledged be delivered to him, conceding it to be a condition, was one which he had a right to impose, as it was concurrent with the payment of the money in accordance with Casserly's promise in his letter of July 21, 1877, to Latham & King, the agents of Drexler, that on payment of the money he would transfer the stock, which latter was communicated by Latham & King to Drexler. The announcing of such condition did not vitiate his tender. It is so declared in section 1498, Civil Code. See Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 481.

The tender was made in time. The Code (section 1490, Civil Code) provides that, where an obligation fixes the time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, within reasonable hours, and not before nor afterwards. But, where an obligation does not fix the time of performance, an offer of performance may be made at any time before the debtor, upon a reasonable demand, has refused to perform. Section 1491, Civil Code. The obligation of McNevin was to repay the advances after a reasonable time, whenever he should be thereunto requested by the plaintiff. This was averred in the complaint, and not denied in the answer. The time of performance was not then fixed by the obligation. A request to pay, which is tantamount to a demand, was made by Casserly of McNevin on or about the twenty-sixth of June, 1877, and refused. The tender could not have then been made after this demand, except for section 1492, Civil Code, which provides as follows: "Where delay in performance is capable of exact and entire compensation, and time has not been expressly declared to be of the essence of the obligation, an offer of performance, accompanied with an offer of such compensation, may be made at any time after it is due, but without prejudice to any rights acquired by the creditors, or by any other person in the meantime."

We are of opinion that the tender is good under this last section, as the interest offered was compensation for the delay. It is said that the plea of tender by Drexler is insufficient, for the reason that he did not bring the money into court. We think the plea is sufficient without bringing the money into court. This is so held in Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 343, 354, 366. The authorities referred to in the cases just cited in the opinions of DAVIES, J., and COM-

STOCK, C. J., sustain this rule. The plea here is in accordance with section 1495, Civil Code, and it is expressly provided by section 1504, Civil Code, that an offer of payment, duly made, though the title to the thing offered be not transferred to the creditor, stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance thereof. One of these incidents is the discharge or extinction of the lien. The rule laid down in Kortright v. Cady is the same. 21 N. Y. 353, 366.

The tender was not objected to by Casserly when made. The lien having been extinguished, Drexler was entitled to the possession of the stock. Casserly then had no right to withhold it from Drexler. We cannot see how an attachment by Teresa McNevin, a third person, with whom Drexler had no connection or privity, could justify the plaintiff's intestate in his detention of the stock. The stock was the property of Drexler when it was attached, subject to the lien for the debt due to Casserly, and the attachment of it, as the property of H. P. McNevin, gave him no right to detain it from Drexler, when a proper tender had been made and refused.

The answer of Drexler was, in effect, an action to redeem. In such action, whether the right is enforced by an action of trover or by a bill pure and simple to redeem, the pledgee will be responsible to the pledgeor for depreciation in the value of the pledged property, after a tender of the amount due and the refusal by the pledgee. Griswold v. Jackson, 2 Edw. Ch. 461, 4 Hill, 522; Hathaway v. Fall River Nat. Bank, 131 Mass. 14; Hancock v. Franklin Ins. Co., 114 Mass. 155. Eagan's complaint in intervention set forth the right to redeem, as well as did the answer of Drexler, and in fact more fully, by stating a case of conversion. The action of trover is a very usual mode of enforcing a redemption of a pledge. See Jones, Pledges, § 561.

We are of opinion that the complaint in intervention by Eagan was regular, and within the statute. Code Civil Proc. § 386.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BITANCOURT. (No. 20,324.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—SERVICE OF NOTICE.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1174, which provides that if the trial court, in settling a bill of exceptions, refuses to allow an exception in accordance with the facts, application by petition may be made to the supreme court for leave to prove exceptions, notice of such application must be served on the court below and on the adverse party.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Geo. H. Perry, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

MCKINSTRY, J. A petition on behalf of defendant was presented to this court on the seventh day of June, 1887, for leave to prove exceptions, which the petitioner alleged the learned judge of the court below had refused to allow. Pen. Code, 1174. Notice of the application to prove the exceptions was not served on the judge below, nor was it served on the district attorney. The provision in section 1174 of the Penal Code is like that in section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In Re Estate of Hawes, 68 Cal. 413, 9 Pac. Rep. 456, this court was of opinion that notice of the application should be given the judge, and that the petition should set forth the exceptions taken, and the evidence in support thereof. We understand this only requires a general statement of the tendency of the evidence, so that the materiality of the ruling alleged to have been excepted to may appear. The attorney for the adverse party to the action should also be notified of the intended proceeding.

On the presentation of the petition of the seventh of June this court appointed the Hon. W. T. WALLACE, superior judge, to take proofs, and settle a bill of exceptions in accordance with the facts. June 13, 1887, a bill of exceptions, duly certified by the judge who tried the cause, was filed in this court. On the fifteenth of June, 1887, a supplemental petition was filed by counsel for defendant herein, setting forth the filing of a settled bill on the thirteenth of June as aforesaid, averring that the bill, as settled, "does not conform to the truth," and praying that the Hon. W. T. WALLACE be directed to proceed to the taking of proofs and settlement of a bill of exceptions. The last petition is clearly insufficient.

The order of the seventh June, 1887, is set aside and annulled, and the application based on the petition filed in this court on the fifteenth June, 1887, is denied without prejudice.

PEOPLE v. MONTEITH. (No. 20,271.)

1. LARCENY—INDICTMENT.

An indictment, in California, first charged clearly and specifically that one A. M., the defendant, committed the crime of grand larceny in stealing a horse of the value of $200, together with a saddle, bridle, and blanket of the value of $25. That all of said personal property was the property of Gardner F. Williams, and was stolen, taken, and carried away, as aforesaid, by the said Gardner F. Williams, etc. Held, that such indictment clearly charged the offense against defendant, and the insertion of the name of Gardner F. Williams in the last clause was evidently a mere clerical error, and at most only a defect of form which could not be taken advantage of after verdict.

2. SAME—VARIANCE.

An indictment charged the stealing of a horse. Held, evidence of the stealing of a gelding is not a variance.

3. EVIDENCE—EXPERTS.

A witness need not be an expert to testify as to a person's intoxication.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People. A. P. Hall and Wells, Whitman & Havens, for appellant.

HAYNE, C. The appellant, Albert Monteith, was convicted of the crime of grand larceny and sentenced to four years in the state prison. Several points are made on the appeal.

1. It is contended that the information is not sufficient to support the judgment. The information first charges, clearly, specifically, and in formal phrase, that Albert Monteith committed the crime of grand larceny in stealing a horse of the value of $200, together with a saddle, bridle, and blanket of the value of $25. It then proceeds as follows: "All of said personal property was then and there the personal property of Gardner F. Williams, and was of the aggregate value of $225, and was stolen, taken, and carried away as aforesaid by the said Gardner F. Williams, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc.

The argument is that this charges an offense against Gardner F. Williams, and not against the prisoner. But it is apparent that the insertion of the name of Williams was a mere clerical error. The information first distinctly states that the prisoner stole the property, and that it was the property of Williams; and it cannot be that Williams stole his own property. Moreover, the statement in question is that the property was "stolen, taken, and carried away, as aforesaid, by the said Gardner F. Williams," which clearly refers to the first part of the information, and shows that the name of Williams was not intended to follow. The words last quoted may be stricken out altogether, without in any degree impairing the sufficiency of the information. We think that, taking the whole information together, it sufficiently charges the prisoner of the crime of which he was convicted. Very probably there was a defect of form. But defects of form must be taken advantage of by demurrer. A defendant cannot be allowed to take his chances of a favorable verdict, and hold in reserve the power to have an unfavorable one set aside for a defect of form which could easily have been rectified if attention had been called to it at the proper time.

2. Part of the defense was that the prisoner was intoxicated when he took the horse. With reference to this a witness for the prosecution, who saw the prisoner a short time before he took the horse, was asked what appeared to be his condition as to sobriety. It is urged that, since the witness was not an expert, she was not competent to testify on this point. But drunkenness is unfortunately of such common occurrence that it does not require an expert to pronounce upon it. We think the case falls within the principle of People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 32, 33.

3. The fact that the information charged the stealing of a horse, whereas the evidence showed the stealing of a "gelding," does not constitute a variance. People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 52.

The other points made do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

SCOTT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF YOLO CO. (No. 12,138.)

APPEAL—COMPROMISE.

An entry in the docket of a justice of the peace, after judgment rendered, that plaintiff and defendant came into court and settled on a certain basis, is not conclusive; and the payment of the amount of the judgment into court by defendant cannot deprive plaintiff of his right to appeal to the superior court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

J. Lambert, for petitioner. G. P. Harding and R. Clark, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. One Hayes sued H. H. Scott before a justice of the peace in Yolo county, to recover a sum of money. Defendant answered, offering to permit judgment to be entered against him for a specified sum. The plaintiff declining to accept the offer, a trial was had, in which the plaintiff recovered less than had been offered. Judgment was entered for plaintiff for the amount, and also for defendant for costs. Defendant paid the amount of the judgment into court. Afterwards plaintiff also paid to the justice all of the costs which accrued at the trial. The justice's docket states, after showing the entry of payment and filing defendant's cost-bill: "January 17th. Plaintiff and defendants came into court and settled on the above basis. Plaintiff paid witness fees for himself, $14.60." It does not appear that satisfaction of the judgment was entered by the justice. The plaintiff appealed to the superior court, where a motion was made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the judgment appealed from had been satisfied. Upon the hearing of this motion, affidavits of various parties were read, tending to show whether the judgment had been satisfied or plaintiff had received the money paid into the justice's court.

There is here no question of jurisdiction. The entry of the justice that the parties appeared and settled upon the basis is not one which he was required to make officially; and, if required to be made, was not conclusive. If it is to be considered a jurisdictional question, however, it was one to be determined by an inquiry into facts dehors the record. That investigation was one which the superior court had jurisdiction to make, and its conclusion upon that matter is conclusive in this proceeding. If the plaintiff received the money, ordinarily the superior court should dismiss the appeal; but this fact, if it existed, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction. The mere payment of the money into court by the defendant, under such circumstances, could not deprive the plaintiff of his right to appeal if he was dissatisfied with the judgment. Writ denied.

DOE v. TYLEY and others. (No. 11,990.)

MINES—LOCATION.

Where, in making a location of a mining claim in the night-time, by mistake all but one or two of the monuments erected to mark its boundaries are placed over upon adjoining claims, such location, if otherwise sufficient, will be held valid to the extent to which the claim was subject to location.

Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action to settle title to mining claim. Findings and judgment were for defendants. Plaintiff appeals.

H. C. Rolfe and J. C. Perkins, for appellant. Harris & Allen and Paris & Goodcell, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. The contest in this case is about a piece of mining ground in San Bernardino county. The plaintiff claims the ground under a mining location made by W. C. Stoughton on the twenty-fourth day of June, 1885, and the defendants claim it under a location made by the defendant Foster, on the eighteenth day of July, 1885. The ground in question appears to have been a piece of vacant ground lying between other claims, having a width at its northerly end of about 14 feet, and at its southerly end of about 235 feet, and a length of about 700 feet. It was bounded on the easterly side by a claim known as the "Thunderer," on the westerly side by a claim known as the "Veto," on the northerly end by two claims known as "Occidental No. 1" and "No. 2," and on its southerly end by a claim known as the "Invincible." The principal question in the case relates to the validity of Stoughton's location. The court below held the location invalid, because all but one or two of the monuments erected to mark its boundaries were placed over upon the adjoining claims.

Stoughton made his location in the night-time. He was told by one Tucker that the ground was vacant, and advised to locate it. He went out with Tucker and marked off a claim, extending in length from the Invincible to the Occidental, and having a width of about 200 feet at its north end, and of a little more than that at its south end. He erected a monument at each of its four corners, and at about the center of each of its end lines. He also placed a notice of location at the monument at the center of the south line. The north-east corner monument was over on the Thunderer claim, the north-west one was on the Veto claim, the center one at that end was on one of the Occidental claims, and the south-east and south-west ones may have been slightly over on the Thunderer and the Veto.

It seems to be admitted that the location would have been a good one if all the ground covered by it had been vacant, as then it would have been so marked out that its boundaries could be readily traced. But it is insisted that when Stoughton placed his monuments upon adjoining claims, which were held under valid locations, he was a trespasser, and could acquire no rights by such trespassing; that his acts were void, and he could claim nothing by reason of the monuments so placed; that the parcel of land in controversy was not so marked on the ground that its boundaries could be readily traced, and therefore his attempted location was wholly invalid. If this be so, then it must follow that if the locator of a mining claim should happen, through mistake or otherwise, to place some of the monuments, necessary to mark out his boundaries, upon another's claim, though they might be over the line only a yard or a rod, still his location must wholly fail.

We do not think this is or ought to be the law. It is familiar history in mining districts that claims have often been found to overlap one another to a greater or less extent. In such cases the question as to the ground covered by two locations has been, which location was prior in time and superior in right? And it has never been held, so far as we know, that either of them must wholly fail because of the conflict. On the contrary, in so far as the ground taken was vacant, each location, if properly made in other respects, has been considered to be valid and sufficient.

We know of no case where the exact point presented here has been decided. In Richmond Min. Co. v. Rose, 114 U. S. 576, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1055, it appeared that 140 feet of the east end of the plaintiffs' location was lost to them by the superior right of the Tip Top claim, and yet, so far as the record shows, it was not even suggested that the balance of the location was affected thereby. If the point made here is good, it would seem that it might have been, and would have been, made there. In that case the principal objection to the right of the plaintiffs to hold the ground in controversy was that the claim covered 800 lineal feet of the lode when there were only three locators; and, under the act of congress and the local laws of that mining district, only 200 feet could be appropriated to each locator. It was claimed, therefore, that the excess of 200 feet over the 600 which the three could locate rendered the whole claim void. But the court said: "We hardly think it needs discussion to decide that the inclusion of a larger number of lineal feet than two hundred, renders a location, otherwise valid, totally void. This may occur, and often must occur, by accident of the surveyor, or other innocent mistake, when there exists no intention to claim more than the two hundred feet. Must the whole claim be made void by this mistake which may injure no one, and was without design to violate the law? We can see no reason, in justice or in the nature of the transaction, why the excess may not be rejected, and the claim be held good for the remainder, unless it interferes with rights previously acquired."

So, in Jupiter Min. Co. v. Bodie Con. Min. Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 666, it was ruled that where a location, otherwise valid, exceeds the width allowed by law, it is void as to the excess, but valid as to the balance. Why should not the law, thus declared, apply here? We think it does, as "we can see no reason, in justice or in the nature of the transaction," why a different rule should be adopted.

In support of their views, counsel for respondent cite several cases, but in none of them was the question presented here involved. They are chiefly cases where one of the parties was claiming the ground in controversy under a relocation, and insisted upon his right to do so because the first locator had failed to do the necessary work upon his claim, and had thereby forfeited his right to hold it. Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, is the principal case cited, and in that the court, using the language quoted by counsel, said: "Mining claims are not open to relocation until the rights of a former locator have come to an end. A relocator seeks to avail himself of mineral in the public lands which another has discovered. This he cannot do until the discoverer has in law abandoned his claim, and left the property open for another to take up. The right of location upon the mineral lands of the United States is a privilege granted by congress, but it can only be exercised within the limits prescribed by the grant. A location can only be made where the law allows it to be done. Any attempt to go beyond that will be of no avail. Hence a relocation on lands actually covered at the time by another valid and subsisting location is void; and this, not only against the prior locator, but all the world, because the law allows no such thing to be done." While this is undoubtedly sound law, it evidently has nothing to do with the matter in hand.

The other points do not require special notice.

In our opinion, the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PICO v. WARNER and others. (No. 11,961.)

TRUSTS—EXTINGUISHMENT.

The owner of one of two conflicting land grants gave to the owner of the other, one Warner, a power of attorney to dispose of the land granted to him. This grant was rejected by the board of land commissioners. Warner's was confirmed. Held, that Warner, upon the rejection of said grant, ceased to be a trustee for its owner, and was free to take, under his grant, the land covered by both grants.

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Leach & Parker and Byron Waters, for appellant. Bicknell & White, Levi Chase, and T. V. O'Brien, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to quiet the plaintiff's title to a tract of land in San Diego county, containing 26,688 acres. The plaintiff claims title to the land under a Mexican grant made to Jose Antonio Pico in 1840, and the defendants claim under a like grant, made to the defendant Warner in 1844. In the court below the findings and judgment were in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, and the case comes here on the judgment roll.

The findings are in substance as follows: On the eighth day of June, 1840, the governor of California granted to Jose Antonio Pico the tract of land known as "Agua Caliente," to the extent of four square leagues, the same being a part of the Valle de San Jose, which contained about ten square leagues, and is now situated in San Diego county. On the twenty-eighth day of November, 1844, the governor of California granted to the defendant J. J. Warner the tract of land known as the "Valle de San Jose," to the extent of six square leagues.

In January, 1852, Pico executed to Warner an instrument in writing, which reads as follows: "Know all men by these presents that I, Jose A. Pico, resident of the city and county of San Diego and state of California, do hereby make and nominate my trusty friend, Hon. J. J. Warner, my attorney in fact, for me and in my name to sell and dispose of a tract of land situated in San Diego county, being part of said Warner's ranch; and I hereby do give, grant, and convey the same unto him, so that he can convey the same in as ample a form as I can. The same is situated, as aforesaid, at Agua Caliente as per title granted me by Juan B. Alvarado, governor of California, dated eighth day of June, 1840, and registered on the second leaf of the archives of the Book of Records of Unoccupied Lands, dated at Monterey, hereby ratifying all that he may lawfully do in the premises. Given under my hand and seal," etc.

In May, 1852, Warner duly presented to the board of land commissioners, appointed under the act of March 3, 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in the state of California, both of the grants before named for confirmation. Thereafter the Pico grant was rejected, and the Warner grant was confirmed, by the board, and on appeal to the United States district court for California the action and decision of the board in regard to each of the grants was duly affirmed. In pursuance of the confirmation of the Warner grant, the United States, on the twentieth day of February, 1880, issued to Warner its patent for the premises described in the complaint, including the Agua Caliente tract and other lands not embraced in the Pico grant. Prior to the commencement of this action, Jose Antonio Pico conveyed to plaintiff, by deed duly executed, all his right, title, and interest in and to the lands embraced in the patent to Warner.

Upon these facts counsel for appellant insist that the judgment was wrong, and should be reversed. Their contention seems to be based upon the theory that the instrument executed by Pico to Warner in January, 1852, was a power of attorney, and that under it Warner became the agent and trustee of Pico; that having, as such agent and trustee, presented the Pico grant for confirmation, and having prosecuted the claim until the grant was found to be invalid and was rejected, Warner could not afterwards take the land covered by it under his own grant, and, having done so, must be deemed to hold the title to the land in trust for Pico, and the plaintiff, as his grantee.

We do not see how this theory can be supported. It is not alleged or claimed that Warner was an unfaithful agent, or that the grant was rejected because of any want of diligence on his part in seeking its confirmation, and the contrary must therefore be assumed. Conceding, then, that he was the trustee of Pico, still when the grant was rejected, without his fault, the object of the trust became impossible, and his duties under it were completed. The trust was therefore extinguished, and he was discharged from all its obligations. Sections 2279, 2282, Civil Code. Whether the grant to Warner was properly located or not on land previously covered by the grant to Pico is a matter which does not concern the plaintiff. When that grant was confirmed it became the duty of the government to locate it, and it must be presumed to have performed that duty properly. The plaintiff had no interest in the grant, or in the land selected under it, and he cannot, therefore, be heard to question the government's action.

In our opinion, the judgment should be affirmed.

STEPHENS v. DOE. (No. 11,533.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—FELLOW-SERVANT.

The case of a mining employe, who is injured by rock falling upon him while he was engaged in investigating the result of a recent blast, at the direction of the foreman, is within Civil Code Cal. § 1970, which declares that an employer is not liable for the injury of an employe caused by the negligence of a co-employe engaged in the same general business with him, unless the employer neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the foreman.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court. San Bernardino county.

Rowell & Rowell, for appellant. H. C. Rolf and J. C. Perkins, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This was an action for the recovery of damages caused, as is alleged, by injuries received by the plaintiff while employed as a miner by the defendant. The court below, after the evidence for the plaintiff had been introduced before the jury, granted a nonsuit, and from the judgment rendered in the premises this appeal was taken.

From the record it appears that the plaintiff sought employment from the defendant as a miner, and was engaged and put to work as such; that under the orders of defendant's foreman the plaintiff set off a blast in a stope or sort of chamber dug into the earth and rock, and proceeded to inspect the result of the blast in order to discover if any ore had been thrown down thereby, and that, while in the act of doing this, rocks which had been loosened at the top of the chamber just alluded to fell upon him, crushing the bones of one of his legs, and otherwise injuring him.

The plaintiff contends that the judgment should be reversed, for the reason, as he alleges, that the carelessness of the defendant was the proximate cause of the injury, and that he (the plaintiff) was not guilty of contributory negligence in obeying the order of the foreman, and approaching the spot where the blast had been set off before sufficient time had elapsed to permit all loose earth and rocks to fall from the place blasted, and its vicinity, because, as he claims, he was an inexperienced miner, and did not know and appreciate the danger into which he ran in acting as he did. But the facts as disclosed in the record go conclusively to show that the injury to the plaintiff happened by reason of the blast being set off, and there is no evidence of any carelessness on the part of the defendant prior to that time which contributed to the plaintiff's injuries. If there was any carelessness, it was by the foreman who ordered him to inspect the place where the blast had occurred, and the plaintiff who incautiously approached it. But under our statute, (section 1970, Civil Code,) as interpreted by this court, the defendant would not be responsible for the careless acts of a person such as the foreman, who was employed in the same general business with the plaintiff, unless the defendant is shown to have neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the foreman. McLean v. Blue Point Gravel M. Co., 51 Cal. 257.

There is nothing in the record which tends to show that the defendant was guilty of any such negligence, and therefore he is not responsible for the injuries which the plaintiff received, even if, not appreciating the danger, the latter nevertheless obeyed the foreman's instructions. For these reasons we are of opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

ALHAMBRA ADDITION WATER CO. v. RICHARDSON and others.
(No. 11,502.)

1. WATERS AND WATER-COURSES—RIGHT TO DIVERT WATER—PRESCRIPTION.

In an action to maintain a riparian right to water, where the defense was a prescriptive right of diversion, the effect of the findings, taken together, was that defendants' user was actual, open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and uninterrupted, under a claim of title as defendants' own, in hostility to plaintiff's title, and with plaintiff's knowledge and acquiescence. Held, that the findings sufficiently set out the elements of a prescriptive title.¹

2. SAME.

Findings of a jury which set out that, "for five years before action, and during all seasons, excepting when the soil was moistened by rain, defendants had used for irrigation and domestic purposes 2½ inches of water," and that defendants were owners of a quantity of said water equal to a constant flow of the waters of said canon of 2½ inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure," sufficiently set forth a prescriptive right in defendants to a definite portion of the water.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING.

A right to property founded upon the statute of limitations is a prescriptive right, and under section 458, Code Civil Proc. Cal., is sufficiently pleaded as a defense by reference to those sections of the Code which bar the cause of action, without setting out any of the facts relied on.

4. TRIAL—SPECIAL FINDINGS.

Facts found by the jury need not be set out in the precise language of the pleading, if the ultimate facts sustaining the verdict necessarily result from those stated in the findings.

5. SAME.

Where there is no necessary conflict between the several findings of a jury, the court will not strain the language of a finding to make out a case of conflict.

6. APPEAL—OBJECTION NOT RAISED BELOW.

The rule that an appellate court will not entertain an objection to the sufficiency of a pleading, when such objection has not been raised before the court below, applies whether the defense is by way of denial, or is an affirmative defense.

7. SAME—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

The findings of a jury will not be set aside on the ground that they are unsupported by evidence, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Chapman & Hendrick and Glassell, Smith & Patton, for appellant. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee and Bicknell & White, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action to maintain a riparian right to water; defense, a prescriptive right of diversion. The first point made on behalf of the appellant is that the answer does not sufficiently set forth the prescriptive right relied on. We think the point cannot prevail for two reasons.

In the first place, if it be conceded that the answer is defective, it is a case of mere defects, and not of total absence of averment; and the pleading was treated as sufficient at the trial. Nearly all the defendants' evidence bore more or less directly upon the question of prescriptive right. It was the main question litigated, and in all the voluminous record before us there is not a single objection raising the question of the insufficiency of the pleading. The case was evidently tried on the theory that it was sufficient, and the plaintiff cannot be permitted to raise the question for the first time in the appellate court. White v. San Rafael & S. Q. Co., 50 Cal. 419. It is argued that this decision relates to denials only; but the rule extends to affirmative defenses as well. King v. Davis, 34 Cal. 106; Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 153; Pacific Bridge Co. v. Kirkham, 54 Cal. 561.

But we think the answer is sufficient on another ground. It set up the statute of limitations by reference to sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, in accordance with the provision of section 458 of that Code. This was a sufficient pleading of the prescriptive right claimed. The Code expressly provides that the statute of limitations may be pleaded in that manner, and a right to property founded upon the statute of limitations is a prescriptive right. According to some writers, the term "prescription" covers both senses in which the word "limitation" has been used; that is to say, as conferring a right and as taking away a remedy merely. See Ang. Lim. c. 1. In the case of Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 4, Chief Justice MURRAY, delivering the opinion, said: "Statutes of limitation are designed to affect the remedy, and not the right or contract. * * * Prescription is defined by civilians to be a right by which a mere possessor acquires the property of a thing which he possesses, by the continuance of his possession during the time fixed by law. * * * So that the difference between statutes of limitation, as they are known to the courts of common law, and the law of prescription, consists in this: that the one confers a right and the other takes away a remedy." But, while this doctrine as to the effect of statutes of limitation still obtains with respect to rights resting in contract, (McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 184; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 300,) it has been the settled rule ever since the case of Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365, that the possession of property of the requisite character and time confers a title to the property. Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 540; San Francisco v. Fulde, 37 Cal. 352; Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 73; Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 289; Johnson v. Brown, 63 Cal. 393. So far, therefore, as the title to property is concerned, or, at all events, so far as the title to real property is concerned, prescription and limitation are convertible terms; and a plea of the proper statute of limitations is a good plea of a prescriptive right. The language of decisions with reference to water-rights has been in accordance with this view. See Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 144; Campbell v. West, 44 Cal. 646; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135.

But it is contended that there is no finding upon this plea of the statute. There is no finding in the words of the plea. But it is not necessary that the facts should be stated in the finding in the language of the pleading. Clary v. Hazlitt, 67 Cal. 286, 7 Pac. Rep. 701. Where "probative facts are found, and the court can declare that the ultimate facts necessarily result from the facts which are found," the finding is sufficient. Coveny v. Hale, 49 Cal. 555; People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 189; Osborne v. Clark, 60 Cal. 623.

Then, do the findings sufficiently set forth the elements of the prescriptive right relied on? The jury returned answers to various questions put to them in relation to the defendants' use of the water, among which are the following, which, for convenience of reference, we will number as follows, viz.:

"(1) Have the defendants uninterruptedly used any waters from the Kewen canon for any period of time? If so, for how long a time, and from what time to what time? Answer. Yes, during the time of the occupancy of the defendants.

"(2) Have the defendants used any of the waters of the Kewen canon under a claim of right? If so, for how long a time, and from what time to what time? A. Yes; from 1867 to the present time.

"(3) Have the defendants peaceably used any of the waters of the Kewen canon under a claim of right? A. Yes.

"(4) Did the plaintiff, or its grantor, the Lake Vineyard Land & Water Association, know that the defendants were using any of said waters under a claim of right or adversely? A. Yes.

"(5) Have the defendants exclusively, continuously, and uninterruptedly used any portion of the waters of the Kewen canon? If so, from what time to what time? A. Yes; from 1867 to the present time.

"(6) Has the plaintiff and its grantor, the Lake Vineyard Land & Water Association, knowing that the defendants claimed to use any of the waters of the Kewen canon adversely, acquiesced therein. A. Yes.

"(7) Did said Wilson [one of plaintiff's predecessors] at all times during his life-time, acquiesce in defendants' use of said water on their said lands? A. Yes.

"(8) Has not the plaintiff and its predecessors known for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action that defendants claimed the water-rights, easements, and privileges asserted and claimed in the answer? A. Yes.

"(9) Have or have not defendants and their predecessors, for more than twenty years, made such claim, and asserted and maintained it? A. Yes, they have.

"(10) Has or has not such use, during said time, been made by defendants openly, notoriously, and under a claim of right, and adversely to all the whole world? A. Yes; it has.

"(11) Have or have not defendants, for more than five years prior to the commencement of this action, continuously, notoriously, under claim of right, and adversely to the whole world, used and appropriated upon their said land the water in controversy herein? A. Yes; they have.

"(12) Did defendants, or either of them, ever admit to B. D. Wilson, or to his successors, that their rights to the use of the water of the Kewen, or Mill canon, was dependent upon the wishes of Wilson, or his successors, or was otherwise than absolute? A. No."

Do these findings sufficiently set forth the elements of a prescriptive right to any portion of the water of Kewen canon? The appellant cites the case of Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595, as correctly laying down the requirements of an adverse possession. Accepting the statement in the opinion in that case as correct, and applying it to the above findings, we think they are sufficient. (a) The user was actual, open, and notorious. See findings 11, 10, 5, 2, and 1. Being open and notorious, it could not have been secret and clandestine. Moreover, it is expressly found that the plaintiff and its predecessors knew of the adverse use, (see findings 8, 6, and 4,) and acquiesced in it. See findings 7 and 6. (b) It was in hostility to the plaintiff's title. The word "hostility" is not used. But it is found that the use was "adversely to the whole world," (see findings 11 and 10,) and "under a claim of right." See findings 11, 10, 9, 4, 3, and 2. (c) It was under a claim of title as defendants' own. See finding 11, 10, 9, 4, 3, and 2. (d) It was exclusive of any other right. This seems to us to follow from the fact that it was under a claim of right, and adversely to the whole world, as shown above. But in addition to this the word "exclusively" is used. See finding 5. (e) It was continuous and uninterrupted. See findings 11, 5, and 1.

The fallacy of the argument of the ingenious counsel for the appellant is in assuming that each finding must be considered separately, and that one cannot be "helped out" by the others. The counsel treats the findings as if they were dug up from the ruins of ancient cities at different epochs. But we think they must be read together. That is the rule with reference to the findings of a judge. "The findings of a court cannot be altogether detached from each other, and considered piece-meal. If a particular finding be doubtful or obscure, reference may be had to the context for the purpose of ascertaining the true meaning." Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 140, 141; Kimball v. Lohmas, 31 Cal. 156; Polack v. McGrath, 38 Cal. 669. And we see no reason why the same rule should not be applied to a special verdict.

Reading these findings together, we think they sufficiently show an adverse user of some portion of the water of Kewen canon. What portion? This question is answered by other findings, which we will designate as follows: "(a) Did the defendants since the year 1870 use the water in question for the purpose of irrigation, domestic use, and stock purposes, at all times when the same was necessary for such purposes, under a claim of right? Answer. Yes. (b) What quantity of water is required to irrigate defendants' premises, and for their domestic purposes, in the same manner as has been used by them for the five years immediately before the commencement of this action? A. Two and one-third inches. (c) During what seasons of the year is water required upon defendants' lands for irrigating purposes, and what quantity of water is required for irrigating purposes only? A. During all seasons, excepting when the soil is moistened by the rains. Two and one-fourth inches. (d) What quantity of water is necessary for the domestic use of the defendants? A. One-twelfth of an inch." And in its supplementary findings the court found that the defendants are the owners of a quantity of said water "equal to a constant flow of the waters of said canon of two and one-third inches, measured under a four-inch pressure."

Reading all these findings together, we think they sufficiently set forth a prescriptive right in defendants to a definite portion of the water.

But it is earnestly contended that the findings are contradictory. It is said that the findings as to an adverse user by the defendants are in contradiction of the following findings, viz.: "Did J. H. Carpenter, during the time he occupied the place known as the Richardson place, assert any ownership in any portion of the waters of Keweenaw canon? Answer. Yes. Did said Carpenter use any of said waters by the permission of and under license from B. D. Wilson? A. Yes."

The argument is that if Carpenter's use was by the permission of Wilson, it could not have been adverse to him. But who is Carpenter, and when did he occupy the place "known as the Richardson place?" There is nothing in the findings, or in any other part of the judgment roll, which enlightens us as to these points. It does not help the appellant that the evidence shows who Carpenter is, and when he occupied the place; for the point relates to the findings, and, for anything they show to the contrary, Carpenter is an entirely irrelevant personage.

It is next urged that the findings as to the adverse user by the defendants, and the acquiescence of the plaintiff and its predecessors, are in contradiction of the following finding: "Have the employes of the plaintiff and its grantors, since the pipe was laid through the Richardson place, claimed and exercised the right to turn the water out of the pipe conveying the same by shutting it off at the head of the pipe? Answer. Yes."

When was the pipe "laid through the Richardson place?" The findings are silent upon this point; and, unless we can know the time, we cannot say the shutting off of the water had anything to do with the defendants' case. But on looking into the answer we see that the pipe was laid in 1875. But, nevertheless, we do not think a contradiction in the findings is made out. It would be straining the finding to say that it means that the employes of the plaintiff and its grantors claimed and exercised the right of shutting off the water ever since the pipe was laid. The finding would be true if they claimed and exercised the right for a single day. Now, since 1875, when, according to the answer, the pipe was laid, a period of more than eight years elapsed before the filing of the complaint; and therefore there was ample time for whatever the above finding means to have happened before the defendants' adverse user need commence. There is therefore no necessary conflict between the findings. And we do not think the court should strain the language of a finding to make out a case of conflict. The findings should be reconciled, if it can be reasonably done and be so construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat.

The findings, therefore, dispose of the issues, and sufficiently set forth the elements of an adverse user, and are not contradictory. It is contended, however, that they are not supported by the evidence. But the conflict in the evidence was extremely substantial, and therefore the findings cannot be set aside on this ground, although it be conceded that the user did not commence to be adverse until the Wilson deed, in 1873. Many of the arguments on behalf of the appellant are merely reasons why the verdict should have been the other way, and were eminently proper to have been addressed to the jury, but, in view of the conflict in the evidence, cannot be entertained on appeal. Thus, when it is said that a party cannot acquire a right by the use of surplus water which is not needed by the owner, the answer is that the jury did not believe it was a case of the use of surplus water, and it cannot be said, upon the record, that they were not justified in so finding. So, when it is said that there was no use of a definite quantity of water, the answer is that the jury and the judge evidently thought that there was, and it cannot be said that there was no evidence upon the point. There was much testimony to the effect that they used what was necessary, and some testimony as to how much was necessary. Part of this was in relation to measurement by inches and pressure.

It must be remembered that the case does not admit of the nicest accuracy of measurement, and the question must be looked at from a practical point of view. Pushed to its logical conclusion, the argument of appellant would prevent the acquirement of a water-right by adverse user, except when the party diverted the whole stream, or measured what he used by a meter,—cases which very rarely occur in those parts of the state where irrigation has been practiced, at least until very recently. So with reference to the argument that where a permissive use is once established some point at which it became adverse must be shown. The occupation of Carpenter was before 1867. The defendant Hutchinson bought out his possessory claim to the land, and, assuming that Carpenter's use of the water was permissive, there was ample testimony from which the jury were authorized to infer that the use of the subsequent occupants was adverse. With reference to the shutting off of the water subsequent to the laying of the pipe, the defendants' evidence shows that it was done on but a single occasion, and on that occasion Mrs. Richardson went out to the man who did it, and "asked him what in thunder he was meddling with that hydrant for," and the water was then turned on, and does not appear to have been subsequently interfered with. This does not seem to us to have interrupted the defendants' user.

We do not attach much importance to the change in the mode of conducting the water across the defendants' land. At first it was brought through a ditch. Then the parties agreed to substitute an iron pipe, which naturally changed the route to some extent. The change was beneficial to all parties, and the arrangement has taken place between persons whose title to water was absolute and undisputed, without in any degree interfering with the status of either. The material thing was the flow of water, and whether it flowed through a ditch or a pipe, or by a direct or circuitous route, does not matter. The evidence as to a license being established on that occasion is negatived by the verdict.

The appellant contends, however, that the court committed an error in law in excluding the declarations of B. D. Wilson, who formerly owned the land of defendants, with reference to the water, and the nature of the defendants' use of it. If the controversy had been concerning the land which Wilson had conveyed, the declarations of the grantor would probably have been admissible. But the controversy is not concerning that land. It is concerning water. The defendants cannot claim the water by virtue of the conveyance of Wilson. Their right to it arises from their use of it, which was a right acquired adversely to Wilson, and not through him. Where a right rests upon the statute of limitations, "the disseizor acquires a new title, founded on the disseizin. He does not acquire or succeed to the title and estate of the disseizee, but is vested with a new title and estate, founded on and springing from the disseizin." Williams v. Sutton, 43 Cal. 73. This being the case, the declarations sought to be proven were mere declarations of a party in his own favor, and were properly excluded.

We do not think the appellant's criticisms upon the form of the judgment are well founded.

The foregoing disposes of the main points made. In the 240 pages of argument filed on behalf of appellant many points are made which do not require special notice. Many of them are arguments as to the weight of evidence; some are objections to the form of the verdict, which should have been taken before it was received and recorded, (Algier v. Steamer Maria, 14 Cal. 170,) and some have no support in the record.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion judgment and order affirmed.

MURDOCK v. CLARKE. (No. 11,866.)

APPEAL—SERVICE OF NOTICE.

An appeal was taken to the California supreme court in a case tried in Oroville, Butte county, and notice of appeal was served by depositing it in the mail, at Oroville, directed to respondent's counsel in Sacramento, where he resided. Appellant's counsel resided, one at Quincy, Plumas county, the other at Alturas. There was regular communication by mail between Oroville and Sacramento, and between both Quincy and Alturas and Sacramento. Held, that the notice of appeal was not served as required by law, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, county of Butte.

J. D. Goodwin and D. W. Jenks, for appellant. A. L. Hart and D. Solon Holl, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. Motion is made to dismiss this appeal on the ground, among others, that the notice of appeal was not served as required by law. Appellant's attorneys resided, one at Quincy, Plumas county, the other at Alturas. Respondent's counsel resided at Sacramento. The case was pending in Butte county, and was tried at Oroville, in that county. There was regular communication by mail between Oroville and Sacramento; also between both Quincy and Alturas and Sacramento. The notice of appeal was served by mail from Oroville. The objection seems to be sustained by the case of Reed v. Allison, 61 Cal. 461; also by Moore v. Besse, 35 Cal. 184; and Cunningham v. Warnekey, 61 Cal. 507.

If we were to adopt the view of appellant, that it would be a sufficient answer to the objection to show that the notice of appeal was actually received by respondents' counsel in due time, that fact is not made to appear here. Manifestly, under such view, this should appear by express and positive evidence. It could not be shown by a presumption as to the regularity of the mails. The alleged stipulation to extend the time for filing transcript is denied, and is not produced. If it were admitted, however, it would be difficult to see how it could constitute a waiver of the notice of appeal.

The motion must be granted. Appeal dismissed.

CADWALADER v. NASH. (No. 11,600.)

1. DEED—DESCRIPTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title, held, that where the land in controversy described in a sheriff's deed was incapable of identification without reference to some map, and there were two maps which answered the description equally well, neither of which was ever filed with the county recorder, testimony of the sheriff as to which map he referred to in the deed was inadmissible.

v. 14P.no.7—25

2. JUDICIAL SALE—DEED—DESCRIPTION.

An insufficient description in a notice of sale and in a sheriff's deed, of property sold at execution sale, is not waived by the failure of the judgment debtor to apply to the court to have the sale set aside.¹

3. TAXATION—ASSESSMENT—VALIDITY.

Under section 3650, Pol. Code Cal., which provides that the assessor must list, in separate columns, under the appropriate head, city and town lots, naming the city or town, and the number of the lot and block, according to the system of numbering in such city or town, an assessment of taxes on one half of a pueblo lot, which is subdivided into a large number of smaller lots, as one undivided parcel, is void, no return having been made by the owner, and nothing appearing in the record to show that he refused to make a return.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

M. A. Luce, Works & Titus, and Philip A. Galpin, for appellant. Levi Chase, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Action to quiet title. Plaintiff is the executrix of the last will and estate of George Cadwalader, deceased. On July 25, 1877, and thereafter, to December 20, 1877, defendant, Nash, was the owner of the property in controversy, except a few lots that he had conveyed to Phillips. In July, 1877, Frank Johnson commenced an action against Nash, and on July 25, 1877, caused an attachment to be levied on the property mentioned in the complaint. Thereafter Johnson recovered judgment therein, execution was issued, and certain property sold thereunder, which plaintiff claims included the property in controversy. Some of the lots numbered in the complaint are described as being in the "right of way through Middletown, all according to a map filed on the partition of said Middletown property, in the case of Baldwin et al. v. Couts et al. Decree recorded October 24, 1874, in Book 4 of Miscellaneous Records of said county." And in the findings they are described substantially in the same way.

The return of the sheriff on the execution, and also the sheriff's deed, admitted in evidence against the objections of appellant, describe the premises sold as follows: "Lots number [giving the numbers] and blocks number, [giving the numbers,] all described according to the commissioner's map of Middletown, on file in the office of the recorder of San Diego county," etc. The respondent, in order to identify the property described in the sheriff's deed, introduced in evidence a map marked "Exhibit A," and commonly called the "Referee's Map," or "Jackson Map." This map is designated as "Referee's Map," and not a "Commissioner's Map," and was filed in the county clerk's office, and not in the recorder's office, and was indorsed, "Filed by the clerk of the district court." At that date, and for a long time thereafter, the office of clerk and recorder was held by the same person, to-wit, A. S. Grant. He was clerk and ex officio recorder of the county. The business of the two offices was done in the same room in the court-house, and the maps were kept together in the same drawer in that office. There was also in evidence another map of Middletown, known as the "Pascoe Map," and indorsed "John B. Mhoon, Referee." This map is also marked as an exhibit in Baldwin v. Couts, and filed by the clerk, August 3, 1869. It was found in the recorder's office, with his tag attached to it, and was with the rest of the maps in that office. This exhibit shows the described lots and blocks to be situated in different parts of Middletown from those shown by the Jackson map.

The court being in doubt as to which map was described in the deed from the words of the deed, and consequently being uncertain what lots the deed described, permitted parol proof to be introduced. The sheriff was called to ¹An erroneous or uncertain description in the notice of a judicial sale, or in the deed given pursuant thereto, will avoid the sale. Herrick v. Merritt, (Minn.) 33 N. W. Rep. —; *Helmer v. testify as to the map, and under objection said: "We took a traced copy of the map before starting out with the surveyor. This is the map I referred to in the deed as the commissioner's map. This is the map we used," referring to Exhibit A. It is claimed by appellant that by parol proof the court undertook to find out where the premises were which ought to have been, but were not, described in the conveyance. This is simply to pass the title to land by parol, for without this proof the land could not be identified. The deed alone did not describe it, and for this error a new trial should be granted.

1. Where a deed refers in general terms to the official map of a town, parol evidence is admissible to identify the map which has been officially declared to be the town map, and the fact that a particular reference in the deed to the survey and to the surveyor who made the map does not literally accord with the indorsement on the map is immaterial. Penry v. Richards, 52 Cal. 496. In all cases where the deed refers to a map or instrument in writing, the latter is regarded as incorporated in the deed as a part thereof. Vance v. Fore, 24 Cal. 436. The deed and the map or instrument, however, when taken together, must be as certain in respect to the description as a description contained in the deed itself, and the identity of the map referred to must be clearly established. When the deed itself contains a sufficient description of the land, so that it can be identified without resorting to the map to ascertain its locality, it is not necessary for the party introducing the deed in support of his title to produce the map in connection with it; but when, as in the case at bar, the land is incapable of identification without reference to some map, the map referred to in the deed is as essential as the deed itself. Accordingly it has been held that a deed which described the land conveyed as "lot No. 1 in the subdivision of the tract of land lying on the new county road, and known as 'Foley's Tract,' the map of which is duly recorded in the recorder's office, does not, when taken alone, contain a description sufficient to attach itself to any particular tract of land without the aid of further evidence." Caldwell v. Center, 30 Cal. 540. In that case the court held that a map pasted between the leaves of the recorder's book was not admissible in evidence with the deed to identify the land, because not recorded. In Brandon v. Leddy, 67 Cal. 43, 7 Pac. Rep. 33, the deed did not show whether the lot described was north or south of the base line established by the official map; and, although it was shown that the grantor never owned any lot south of the base line, the court held that the deed itself should show the situation of the lot; and, as the ambiguity was patent, resort could not be had to parol.

In the case at bar it was not shown whether there was a base line with blocks and lots of corresponding numbers on each side of the line, but the two maps in evidence represent blocks and lots of corresponding numbers as being situated in different parts of Middletown. Thus, for instance, Exhibit A represents block 96 as situated six blocks north of California avenue, while Exhibit B shows that it is only two blocks north of the avenue; and block 150 is represented on Map A as being six blocks north of California avenue, while on Map B it is situated one block south of the avenue. Which map is correct? Both are referee's maps, in different cases it is true, but of the same title, between the same parties, and for the same purpose,—partition of lands. If it be conceded that "commissioner's map of Middletown" is equivalent to "referee's map," the fact remains that Exhibit B answers the description as well as Exhibit A. Both maps were used in suits between the same parties for the same purpose, and neither of them was ever filed with the county recorder. They were both marked as exhibits in civil cases pending in the district court, were filed therein by the clerk thereof, and the clerk did not and could not lawfully make them a record of any other office. If the fact that the clerk and ex officio recorder kept the records of both offices in the same room be material at all, it would tend to show that the map upon which he put a tag showing it to be among the records of the recorder (Exhibit B) was the map referred to by the sheriff in his deed as "commissioner's map of Middletown on file in the office of the recorder of said county of San Diego."

The fact that Map B contains a plat of only a portion of the blocks and lots numbered in the deed of the sheriff, and that Map A contains what appears to be a full plat of Middletown, might, under some circumstances, be pertinent and forceful, but in view of the other facts here shown cannot avail the respondent. The deed introduced in evidence to support the title of the estate to these particular lots in controversy described the premises as above quoted, while the complaint, findings, and decree herein, in describing them, read "all according to the map filed in the partition of said Middletown property in the case of Baldwin et al. v. Coutts et al. Decree recorded October 24, 1874, in Book 4 of Miscellaneous Records of said county." The record shows that the description of the land intended to be conveyed is not complete and certain without reference to a map. No one could find it without the map. The sheriff himself, in making the levy, found the property only by using the map and making a survey. Against the objection of the defendant, he was allowed to testify: "We took a traced copy of the map before starting out with the surveyor. This is the map [Exhibit A] I referred to in the deed as the commissioner's map. This is the map we used." Without this testimony the court could not have found that the property conveyed, or intended to be conveyed, by the sheriff, was shown by "the map filed in the partition of the said Middletown property in the case of Baldwin v. Coutts, et al." That this testimony was inadmissible we think there can be no doubt. Mason v. White, 11 Barb. 175.

The contention of the respondent that, as Nash was a party to the proceedings in which the execution was issued, he is presumed to have known all that was done by the sheriff, and if there was any irregularity detrimental to his interests he should have applied to the court to set aside the sale, and, having failed to do so, the purchaser took all the title Nash held, cannot be maintained. Of course, in judicial sales, where the court acts directly upon the property sold, the deed can be made to conform to the true description of the thing sold, and the rules applicable to sales between man and man to a great extent apply; but not so in case of execution sales. Freeman on Executions, in section 281, says: "The object of the advertisement is to give notoriety to the proposed sale, so that all persons may understand what it is that is to be sold. No one will bid unless he can know what he is bidding for. The rights of the defendant must necessarily be sacrificed unless the thing to be sold is made certain. People may refuse to bid, or, after successful bidding, may claim more than the officer intended to sell. So the deed ought to be free from ambiguity." Id. § 330. "Hence a description from which the land intended to be transferred can be located, is indispensable to the validity of the deed."

Our conclusions upon this branch of the case therefore are—First, that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the sheriff; and, second, that without this testimony the evidence does not support the allegations of the complaint, or the findings of the court relating to the Middletown lots.

It is admitted that there is no uncertainty in the sheriff's deed as to the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of pueblo lots 1,126 and 1,127, and the only question in relation to those lots is as to the validity of the tax deeds under which defendant claims title thereto. In June, 1873, Nash for a valuable consideration conveyed to Phillips certain lots and blocks of land, the same being a portion of the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of pueblo lot No. 1,126, and Phillips reconveyed the same to Nash by deed dated December 13, 1883. As there was no uncertainty in the sheriff's deed so far as these two pueblo lots were concerned, the defendant's interest in every portion thereof not previously conveyed to Phillips passed to Cadwalader by virtue of the sheriff's levy, sale, and deed under execution, and defendant's title thereto, if he has any, is derived from the tax deed.

It appears from the findings of the court that these pueblo lots are large lots containing several acres, and that they are subdivided into a large number of smaller lots designated upon the map by numbers. The decree adjudges Nash to be the owner of over 150 subdivisions, being a portion of the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of one pueblo lot alone, giving the number of each block and lot. The map showing these subdivisions was made by the city engineer in 1870.

The assessor did not assess the lots nor even the block separately, but assessed the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of lot 1,126 as one undivided parcel. This, we think, could not under the law be done. "The assessor must prepare an assessment book, * * * in which must be listed all property within the county, and in which must be specified in separate columns, under the appropriate head, * * * third, city and town lots, naming the city or town, and the number of the lot and block according to the system of numbering in such city or town, and improvements thereon; fourth, all personal property showing the number, kind, amount, quality; but a failure to enumerate in detail such personal property does not invalidate the assessment." Section 3650, Pol. Code. Under the revenue act of 1861 it was held that, where one man owned and returned a whole block or half block, the assessor might list and value it as a whole. People v. Morse, 43 Cal. 541; People v. Culverwell, 44 Cal. 620. Since the decisions in these cases the duty of the assessor has been made more specific and imperative, as will be seen by a comparison of section 20 of the revenue act of 1861 with the provisions of section 3650 of the Political Code. Of course, where the owner himself returns the property as a whole, he cannot be heard to complain that it has been improperly listed in that manner; but where, as in this case, no return was made by the owner, and there is nothing to show that the owners of the property refused to make a return to the assessor, we are bound to say that the assessment is void, or to hold that the imperative language of section 3650 is simply directory, unimportant, and that the assessor may regard it or disregard it at will. We think that the rule prescribed is based upon reason, and should be followed. Several parties may own different portions of a pueblo lot divided into city blocks containing several hundred well-known lots. An owner of one lot who is a non-resident would be required, if his lot be assessed, as this lot was, to pay the tax on the whole property to save his own from tax sale; and this, without any fault of his own. There is no way of ascertaining what proportion of the whole tax any particular lot-owner should pay, and of course the tax collector will accept nothing less than the full amount of the tax.

That the assessor is bound to assess in subdivisions is apparent also from provisions of the Code which relate to assessment and sale. Thus he is required to exact from each person under oath a statement showing separately—"Fifth, an exact description of all lands in parcels and subdivisions." "When the assessor has not received from the owner of the tract of land the statement required by section 3629, or when such statement does not sufficiently describe a tract of land to enable the assessor to assess the same as required by law, * * * he shall cite such owners to appear," etc. Section 3634. The form of the assessment book is prescribed, in which one column is for "Real Estate other than City and Town Lots," and half columns for: "Range E. or W.;" "Township N. or S.;" "Section;" "Subdivision of Section." Also a column for "City or Town Lots," with half columns beneath for "Block," "Lot," and "Fraction." Section 3651. "The supervisors must provide for the assessor: * * * maps of cities and villages." Sections 3658, 3659. The tax collector must commence the sale at the head of the list, and continue alphabetically, or in the numerical order of lots and blocks, until completed, (section 3771;) and the owner has the right to designate what particular parcel he wishes sold, if less than the whole, (section 3773.)

We think, therefore, that the court below was right in its conclusion that the assessment, sale, and deed affecting the pueblo was void.

Appellant requests that the court below be directed to enter judgment in his favor for the Middletown lots, but this request cannot be granted. The evidence on another trial may show a state of facts entirely different from those shown in this record. Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

SMITH v. LING. (No. 11,722.)

PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—DISMISSAL BY CONSENT.

Where the complaint is, by consent of both parties, after answer denying all the allegations therein, stricken out, the court should dismiss the action.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

N. Smith, appellant, pro se. R. A. Ling, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The record on this appeal consists of a copy of a complaint, and of an answer denying all the allegations of the complaint, and of a judgment in these words:

"WEDNESDAY, June 10, 1885.

"This cause came regularly on for trial, all parties in court with their respective attorneys. Upon motion of the plaintiff, and by consent of defendant, ordered that the amended complaint be stricken out. Defendant moved the court for judgment upon the pleadings. Motion argued, and ordered that the action be dismissed.

A. BRUNSON, Judge."

The form is unique, but we gather from it that the complaint was stricken out by consent of both parties, and that the court then dismissed the action. We see no error in that. After the complaint was stricken out, there was no case to try, and it was proper to dismiss the proceeding. An action can only be commenced by filing a complaint, and when the complaint is stricken out the action is terminated.

Judgment affirmed.

WOOSTER and others v. NEVILLS and others. (No. 11,973.)

FRAUD—REMEDIES—DEMAND AND TENDER.

Defendant induced plaintiffs to transfer to him their stock in a mining company, in order that he might sell the mine, and, instead of acting in good faith, proceeded in fraud of their rights to sell the mine for a very large sum of money, for which he did not account to them, except to give them $8,000, and to have them cancel a debt due from him to them of $3,000; retaining the stock, which was worth much more than he represented it to be, in his own name, and drawing dividends thereon. Held, that plaintiffs could maintain an action against defendant as their agent for an accounting, and to compel him to return the stock, without previously making a demand for the return of the stock, and tender of the money that they had received.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Sidney V. Smith, for appellants. A. C. Adams, Curtis H. Lindley, and Lindley & Spagnoli, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This action was for an accounting, and to compel the defendant William A. Nevills to return to plaintiffs certain mining stock a transfer of which he had fraudulently obtained from them. The complaint was demurred to, the demurrer sustained, and, the plaintiffs declining to amend their pleading, judgment was rendered for the defendant. In support of that judgment their counsel contend that the complaint was to compel the rescission of a contract, and that, in order to obtain that right, it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to have alleged in their pleading that they had made a demand for the return of their stock, and tender of the money they had received from Nevills prior to the institution of this suit.

But as it appears to us, from the statement of facts set out in the complaint, Nevills was not a purchaser of the stock from the plaintiffs in the proper and legal sense of that term. He never was, at any time during the transaction, so far as they were concerned, anything more than an agent or trustee, bound to act for them in the whole matter in the utmost good faith. He deceived them into the belief that he, for them, could sell the mine in which they were stockholders for a certain sum of money, if they would make him the apparent, but not the real, owner of the stock. For the purpose, not of vesting title to the stock in him, but to enable him the better as their agent to sell the mine upon which the issue of the stock was based, they transferred the stock to him as requested. Instead of acting in good faith towards the plaintiffs, Nevills proceeded in fraud of their rights to sell the mine for a very large sum of money, for which he did not account to the plaintiffs, except to give them $8,000, and to have them cancel a debt due from him to them of $3,000. He still retains their stock in his own name, in a mine which is worth many thousand dollars more than he falsely assured the plaintiffs was its value, and has drawn their dividends upon the stock.

We see no good reason why, under such a state of facts, Mr. Nevills should not be made to retransfer this stock to its true owners, towards whom he assumed the relation of an agent or trustee, nor why a full accounting, as between the parties, should not be had. The facts asserted as true in the complaint do not show any sale of the stock to Nevills on the part of the plaintiffs. He was to make a sale of the mine for their account. He deceived them as to the price he could obtain for the mine, and deceived them into the belief that a sale could more easily be effected if the stock stood in his name rather than in theirs. Thus, as we have before said, he was nothing more than their agent, in whose apparent ownership the stock stood. The transaction was not one of sale. It was the giving to an agent power, clothed with apparent ownership, to make a sale to third parties. In such a case, where an agent has abused his trust, and holds his principal's property in fraud, the principal can compel a return of his property, and any increase of it by way of dividends while in the agent's possession.

It was unnecessary to have made a tender of money to Nevills before this suit was instituted, for there is no contract of sale, or actual sale, alleged by the complaint to have been made to him by the plaintiffs of the stock in dispute. The plaintiffs, as one of the incidents necessary to a proper accounting between Nevills and themselves, seek to recover from him, as their trustee, property of which he has, through turpitude, gotten from them the apparent ownership, to which property he never had, nor was intended under their agreement to have had, any title. As no sale of the stock was made to him, no rescission of a sale was asked for in the complaint; and no rescission being required, no tender of any money prior to the bringing of the action was needed.

As a part of the accounting asked for from Nevills by the plaintiffs, they demand from him a return of their stock, which he obtained from them by fraudulent statements, and to which he had no shadow of claim, either in his own or their estimation, beyond its possession and apparent ownership, as their trustee. It is evident, therefore, upon the facts stated in the complaint, if they are to be taken as true, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an accounting as asked for, and the other relief prayed for therein.

The judgment and order dissolving the injunction should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and give leave to the defendants to answer the pleading within a reasonable time, upon which the cause can be tried upon its merits.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to defendants to answer within a reasonable time.

BY THE COURT. The plaintiff brought this action against the appellants and one Thomas M. Agers, to recover the possession of a tract of land in San Bernardino county, containing 1,280 acres, with $500 damages for the withholding thereof, and $100 per annum from and after January 1, 1879, for rent and profits. The defendants denied the plaintiff's ownership or right to the possession of the land, and denied that he had been or would be damaged in the sums of money alleged, or in any sums, by reason of their withholding its possession, or on account of a loss of its rents and profits. They then set up that they were in possession of and holding separate parcels of the land, and that as to each one of them the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff, but without damages, on which judgment was entered. The appellants moved for a new trial, and now prosecute this appeal from the judgment, and an order denying their motion.

Two points only are made in support of the appeal: (1) That the verdict was not justified by the evidence; and (2) that the judgment was erroneously entered against each of the defendants for the possession of the entire tract, when it should only have been against each one for the parcel separately claimed by him.

1. We think there was ample evidence to support the verdict. The plaintiff showed clearly that he had title to the demanded premises, and there was ¹Respecting the character of occupancy necessary to constitute adverse possession, see Cooper v. Morris, (N. J.) 7 Atl. Rep. note, 427; Merrill v. Tobin, 30 Fed. Rep. 733, *Roots v. at least a substantial conflict as to whether the defendants had occupied and claimed and paid taxes on their respective parcels for such time and in such manner as would enable them to assert title under the statute of limitations.

2. Conceding that the court erred in rendering a joint judgment against the defendants for the whole tract, still the error cannot be considered on this appeal. Although the defendants answered severally, claiming that they were not jointly withholding the entire tract from the plaintiff, and that they were severally in possession of specific portions thereof only, the plaintiff was not precluded from proving his allegation that they were jointly in possession of the entire tract. It was so found by the jury, and there is no specification, in the statement on motion for new trial, of insufficiency of the evidence in this respect.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed. So ordered.

WHITE v. WHITE. (No. 12,144.)

DIVORCE—ALIMONY—APPEAL.

An order in a divorce suit for a payment, an account of alimony, counsel's fees, and costs, will not be interfered with unless it appears affirmatively and clearly that there has been a gross abuse of discretion by the court below in making the order.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county.

E. D. Wheeler and Barclay Henley, for appellant. H. E. Highton, H. C. McPike, and J. A. Cooper, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action of divorce brought by the husband against the wife. By her answer the wife denies the averments of the complaint, which state facts constituting a cause for divorce; and by a cross-complaint she avers causes of divorce against the husband. The action is still pending in the court below; but during its progress the court made an order directing the payment by said plaintiff to said defendant of certain sums, aggregating $3,850, as and for costs and expenses, alimony and counsel fees, and from this order the plaintiff appeals. The only point made by appellant is that the allowance was excessive, and an abuse of discretion. The evidence upon which the order was made was conflicting as to appellant's financial ability, and as to other matters which it was the duty of the court below to consider. Of course we could not be expected, under any circumstances, to interfere with the judgment of a nisi prius judge in such a matter, unless it appeared affirmatively and clearly that there had been a gross abuse of discretion. No such abuse appears here, and therefore we will not stop to determine whether or not our estimates of counsel fees, costs, expenses, etc., would correspond with those of the learned judge of the court below. This view disposes of the appeal, and therefore it is not necessary to consider the other point made by counsel for respondent, viz., that an appeal does not lie from an order of this kind in a divorce case, where the marriage and the relation of the husband and wife are not denied. Order affirmed.

DIVORCE—ALIMONY—CONTEMPT.

Upon the hearing of a petition for habeas corpus, where it appears that the petitioner was committed for contempt in not paying alimony, the fact that he has since filed his petition in insolvency, and obtained a preliminary order thereon, does not alone entitle him to his release, where the superior court, in making the order, found as a fact that petitioner was able to comply with it; and the correctness of that finding will not be inquired into upon habeas corpus.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Habeas corpus.

J. H. Meredith and H. Miller, for petitioner. Wells Whitmore and Fredk. E. Whitney, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The petition merely avers that petitioner was committed to the custody of the sheriff of Alameda county by an order of the superior court of said county made in a certain action therein pending, in which Jesse Wilson was plaintiff, and petitioner was defendant, and that said court did not have jurisdiction to make said order. The return of the sheriff shows that the order committed petitioner for contempt in not paying certain money ordered to be paid as alimony in a divorce case; and it is apparent that the court had jurisdiction to make the order.

The petitioner filed an answer to the sheriff's return, in which he shows that since his imprisonment commenced he filed his petition in insolvency in another department of said superior court, and obtained the usual preliminary order declaring him an insolvent, directing the sheriff to take possession of his property, etc.; and he contends that this last order entitles him to be released by this court. But we do not see how it can have that effect. The thing which petitioner seeks to have determined by this court in this proceeding is that he is unable financially to pay the alimony. But the superior court, when it made the contempt order, found as a fact that he was able to comply with the order for alimony, and we would not upon habeas corpus inquire into the correctness of that finding. It raises no jurisdictional question. Now, the subsequent initiation of insolvency proceedings which might turn out to be fraudulent, and which might be discontinued at any time before the appointment of an assignee, is merely additional evidence touching the question of petitioner's financial ability. If presented to the superior court on another application for the release of petitioner from custody, it might or might not be deemed by that court sufficient to warrant his discharge, but it cannot be considered here on this proceeding.

Let the petitioner be remanded.

WILLIAMS, Ex'r, v. WILLIAMS, Jr., and others. (No. 12,135.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1887.)

1. WILL—VESTED INTEREST.

A devise to a person "absolutely," to be "distributed" to him at the expiration of three years, is a vested interest in fee, postponed merely in enjoyment.¹

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION—JURISDICTION.

A court of chancery in California has jurisdiction to construe a will, even though the doubt arising is a speculative one.

In bank. Appeal from superior court of Sacramento.

The action was brought to procure a judicial construction of certain provisions of testator's will. The main question sufficiently appears in the opinion. At the hearing, before Judge VAN FLEET, his honor is reported to have said that his impression was "that, in order to give a court of chancery jurisdiction to construe a will, there must be some question of doubt, either act- ually existing, or certain to arise in the future, in order that the decree may have something to operate upon. Here the only question proposed by plaintiff * * * is as to the result of the defendant Percy dying before distribution,—a contingency not even highly probable, and at least not certain to arise. Quare, does not the bill then present for the determination of the court a question purely 'speculative?' " This point had not been taken by any of the parties to the suit.

C. H. Oatman, guardian ad litem, for appellant. G. W. Gordon, guardian ad litem, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action in the nature of a bill of interpleader by plaintiff, as the executor of the last will of Thomas H. Williams, deceased, to procure a judicial determination of the construction to be given to certain provisions of said last will.

The specific questions submitted by the bill relate to a devise or bequest of $50,000, made to defendant Percy Williams, and arise under the following clause of the will:

"Item 4. When the term of three years after my death shall have elapsed, unless the executor herein named shall, for good cause, extend it for two years, or in case there be another executor, three of my children or representatives shall, by writing, extend it for two years, distribution of my estate shall be made as herein directed.

"Clause 2 of Item 4. Second. There shall be vested absolutely in Percy, property or money, fifty thousand ($50,000) dollars."

"Item 6. The first fifty thousand ($50,000) dollars given to Percy is intended to vest in him absolutely, but the remainder of the estate is only intended for the use and benefit of the children during their respective lives, with the remainder in fee to those herein named, except the fifty thousand ($50,000) dollars absolutely given Percy, which may be given in money or property as desired."

"Item 13. This will is lengthy, but I hope it clearly expresses my purposes, thus: That, with the exception of fifty thousand ($50,000) dollars, the property of my estate is to be 'set aside' in and for the benefit of my children,"—naming them, and providing that each of said children so named is to have the net income of the estate so set aside for them respectively; that the legal title is to be and remain in the executor, etc.

The complaint contains a copy of the will, and alleges, in general terms, that doubts have arisen and are entertained by the executor and those interested in the estate of the testator, as to the true intent and meaning of the will, and as to the duty of plaintiff in the proper execution of the various trusts thereby created.

The particular questions raised, however, and which the court is asked to determine, are with reference to the bequest of $50,000 made to defendant Percy Williams, and are very clearly stated by the court below in the following language: "First, whether or not, said legacy or devise of $50,000 to defendant Percy Williams is an absolute and vested estate in him, and of which the time of enjoyment only is postponed until distribution, so that on his death, before distribution, intestate, it would pass to his legal heirs, or could now be transmitted by his will or conveyed by deed, as he might desire; or, second, whether the scheme and design of the will was that it was so far conditional as to depend on his survival to the time of distribution, and, if not surviving, whether said $50,000 legacy or devise does not go to and vest in those designated by the will as devisees in remainder, together with the balance of the interest devised to said Percy."

The court below answered the first of these two propositions in the affirmative, which, as may be seen, disposed of the whole matter. We think the conclusion reached by the learned judge who tried the cause was correct, and that his reasoning in the premises clearly illustrates the questions involved.

The language used is as follows, and we adopt it as the opinion of the court:

"It will be seen by reference to the language of the will that by clause 2 of item 4, and the first clause of item 6, $50,000 is given to defendant Percy 'absolutely,' to be 'distributed' to him at the expiration of three years (or, in a certain contingency, five years) from the date of testator's death. By the other clauses of those items, the bulk of the residue of the estate is devised and bequeathed to the children in certain proportions, for their lives, with remainders over to their descendants in a named order. The gift to Percy, it is declared, 'is intended to vest in him absolutely,' and in that respect item 6 draws a distinction between that devise and the others made to the children. Now, so far as these provisions of the will are concerned, there can be no doubt that the interest of Percy in this devise is a vested interest in fee, postponed merely in enjoyment. No other legal conclusion can flow from the language used. Johnson v. Baker, 9 Amer. Dec. 605; Tazewell v. Smith, 10 Amer. Dec. 533; Reed v. Buckley, 40 Amer. Dec. 531; Bentley v. Long, 47 Amer. Dec. 523; Furness v. Fox, 48 Amer. Dec. 593; Civil Code, § 694.

"The law favors the vesting of interests, and every interest will be presumed to be vested unless a contrary intention is clearly manifest. Civil Code, § 1341. But these provisions are free from ambiguity. The devise is made in express terms, and declared to be absolute and vested. No provision is made for any remainder over in case of the death of the beneficiary before distribution, or in any other contingency, while ample provision in that regard is made as to the various other devises. In fact, if it could be held that this devise could, in any event, fail to vest, it would result that the testator died intestate as to this portion of his estate, for there is no residuary clause in the will; the only devises or bequests being made out of the remainder of the estate after deducting this $50,000. It would seem to follow, then, as a matter not admitting of doubt, that, under the provisions referred to, the interest of Percy in this share is a vested future interest in fee, which will pass by grant, devise, or succession, and which he may alienate at his pleasure. If he should die before distribution, without such alienation, it will vest in his heirs, devisees, or legatees. See cases cited above, and section 669, Civil Code.

"It is claimed, however, by counsel for the defendant Frank Hansford Johnson that these provisions will not bear this construction, when viewed in conjunction with items 9 and 7. But, in my judgment, the conclusions I have expressed are in no respect affected by the language of items 9 and 7, or either of them. As to item 9, it will be seen that the precedent estate thereby vested in the executor ceases immediately when the future estates vest in possession, whenever that occurs. That this is the clear intention of the testator is shown by the fact that the legacies named in item 3 also fall within the language of item 9. The position is equally untenable as to item 7. That item contains an indefinite restraint upon alienation by the children. This clause is valid as to the life-estates, because, as to them, the power of alienation is only restrained during the continuance of lives in being, but, as to this devise of $50,000, such a restraint would be void, as the interest created therein is one in fee, and the restraint would be perpetual. Civil Code, §§ 715, 716.

"It is clear that this clause was not intended to refer to this share. It is confined, by its terms, to 'any estate left for his or her benefit,' and does not extend to anything left absolutely to a child. The expression used plainly refers to the estate vested in the executor in trust for 'the benefit' of the children. In fact, taking the whole will together, I think that, as to the other shares or devises, all that is left to the children is the income, to be paid over by the executor as it accrues, and item 7 is intended to carry out that intention. It will be seen that the last clause of item 10 also bears out my first conclusions, and I find nothing in the will to alter them, or in any measure repugnant to the interpretation I have given. Civil Code, § 1322; 1 Redf. Wills, c. 9, § 6, art. 32; Damrell v. Hartt, 137 Mass. 218; Ordway v. Dow, 55 N. H. 15; Quackenbos v. Kingsland, 102 N. Y. 130, 6 N. E. Rep. 121; Bushnell v. Carpenter, 92 N. Y. 273; Stuart v. Wrey, 30 Ch. Div. 507.

"W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge."

Upon the question of the jurisdiction of the court, a question not raised by the parties in the court below, but suggested by the learned judge who heard and decided the case, we are of opinion that whatever doubts may exist as to the jurisdiction, founded upon the decisions of courts in other states of the Union, so far as the power of courts to hear and determine in proper cases questions relating to the rights and duties of executors and beneficiaries under wills which have been admitted to probate is concerned, this court has settled the proposition in the affirmative. Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 387; Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 291; Deck v. Gerke, 12 Cal. 433.

The jurisdiction of the court below established, it follows that the decree in the case becomes binding upon all parties in interest, and, in the absence of all formal objection in the lower court, we do not feel called upon to scrutinize closely the case as made, for the purpose of determining the policy of hearing or refusing to entertain the action on account of the facts as stated not being as conclusive as they might have been, and perhaps would have been put, had objection appeared. In other words, we deem the case made, within the rule enunciated by this court in the cases cited, and, in the absence of a special demurrer, as sufficient to sustain the decree.

Judgment affirmed.

W. H. Beatty and S. C. Denson, for appellant. A. P. Catlin and Grove L. Johnson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Action for a divorce on the ground of cruelty, which consisted in a course of treatment on the part of defendant causing grievous bodily suffering and grievous mental anguish.

On the trial, Dr. Simmons was called as a witness for plaintiff. He stated that he had attended both plaintiff and defendant professionally. He was asked as to the condition of plaintiff's health. Witness declined to answer unless he was assured by the court he would not be cross-examined, averring that he might be required to state on such cross-examination matters which had been confided to him professionally. Plaintiff was personally present in court, and her counsel then released the witness from any obligation to secrecy. Counsel then stated: "We expect to ask his professional opinion as to whether, in the condition of health in which she was, it would have been seriously detrimental to her health to be subject to annoyance, excitements, threats, and the anxiety caused by such threats. We do not propose to ask what was the cause of her ill health, but whether, in the condition in which he found her, her health was likely to be seriously injured by being subjected to the said harassing trouble that we think she was about that time subjected to." Evidence had been introduced tending to show conduct on the part of defendant of the character charged in the complaint, and that its effect on the plaintiff had been to produce nervous excitement and exhaustion.

A hypothetical question was then propounded which had reference entirely to the effect which would probably result to plaintiff, in her then condition, from the acts (which were specially recited) which plaintiff claimed to have proven. The question did not involve the statement of any matter which the witness had learned from the defendant. The witness did not in fact claim that it did. On the contrary, he would willingly consent to answer if the court would protect him from cross-examination, which might, as he thought, make it necessary for him to reveal professional secrets confided to him by defendant. The court was asked to compel the witness to answer, but declined, and plaintiff excepted. In this we think the court erred. The matter was material and relevant. The form of the final question was objectionable, but no objection was interposed. Had there been, the objection could easily have been avoided by a new question. As the matter was material and relevant, the witness should have answered, and the court erred in not compelling it.

If the defendant had insisted on cross-examination for a disclosure of matters confided by himself to his physician, that would have absolved the physician from the obligation. But in any event it would have been time enough for the witness to object when he was asked to make such disclosures. It may be true that the witness would be protected, not only from the necessity of telling what was said by his patient, but also from stating facts which would in effect amount to a betrayal of confidence. But here confessedly the answer sought was not of that character.

We think there was also error in refusing to allow the evidence offered for the purpose of impeaching the witness Moore. The attention of witness had been called to the time, the place, and the circumstances of the alleged statement. After the impeaching witness had stated that she remembered the occasion, objection was made to the testimony, and sustained before any further question was asked. It could not have been assumed in advance that the question to be asked would be improper.

Whether it was correct, as a matter of practice, to allow a supplemental complaint to be filed, is not involved on this appeal. We see no reason, however, why it may not be allowed on proper terms. It was done in this case, and the action as to the new ground of complaint set up must be considered as being commenced when the supplemental complaint was filed. Whether the false and malicious charge made after the actual separation of the parties, would be less apt to inflict grievous mental anguish for that reason, was for the trial court to determine in view of all the facts.

Order and judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

1. HABEAS CORPUS—WHEN GRANTED—DEFECTIVE INDICTMENT.

2. LIBEL—CAUSING PUBLICATION.

Section 9, art. 1, Const. Cal., providing that in all criminal prosecutions for libels, "indictments found or informations laid for publications in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause," applies to a person who causes a libel to be published equally with the one who publishes it.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Habeas corpus.

Davis Louderback, W. H. L. Barnes, David McClure, and Henry J. Kowalsky, in pro. per., for petitioner. David S. Terry, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The petitioner was indicted by the grand jury of the county of San Joaquin for an alleged libel of David S. Terry, a resident of said county. A warrant of arrest was issued under said indictment, by virtue of which petitioner was taken into custody by the sheriff, and he now sues out a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner claims that he is entitled to his discharge upon the ground that the indictment does not state facts constituting a crime, or showing the superior court of San Joaquin county to have jurisdiction of the alleged offense.

The gravamen of the charge, as contained in the indictment, is that on or about the thirty-first day of July, 1885, at the county of San Joaquin, state of California, the defendant did willfully and maliciously, and with intent to injure David S. Terry, a resident, etc., "cause to be printed and published, and expressed by printing, in a certain newspaper called the 'Evening Post,' printed in the city and county of San Francisco, and * * * published and circulated in said county of San Joaquin, the following defamatory and libelous words of and concerning said Terry, to-wit, that 'he [said Terry meaning] had attempted to assassinate Hopkins,' contrary to the force and effect of the statute," etc.

"A libel is a malicious defamation expressed either by writing, printing, or by signs or pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation * * * of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule." Pen. Code, § 248.

1. The inquiry upon habeas corpus may extend to the question whether the indictment charges any offense known to the law; for this goes to the jurisdiction, which is always a proper subject of inquiry in a proceeding of this character. Ex parte Corryell, 22 Cal. 179; Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 212.

2. Where an indictment has been found, which although defective, and subject to attack and overthrow upon a demurrer, yet if enough appears in such defective indictment to show that an offense has been committed, of which the court has jurisdiction, the party charged cannot be discharged upon a writ of habeas corpus, but will be remitted to the court in which the indictment is pending for such proceedings as the law may warrant by way of defense. Ex parte Whitaker, 43 Ala. 323.

The writ of habeas corpus is not intended to review the regularity of the proceedings in any case, but rather to restore to his liberty the citizen who is imprisoned without color of law. Ex parte Prime, 1 Barb. 340.

We are of opinion the indictment contains such substantial statement of the facts constituting the alleged offense that it cannot be said of it that, if they are all taken as true, no violation of the law has been committed by defendant. The defects in the indictment, if any, are of such a character that they can only be reached in the court where the indictment is pending, or by appeal therefrom.

It is further contended, however, that neither the grand jury of San Joaquin county, nor the superior court of such county, had nor has any jurisdiction of the person of defendant, or of the crime charged in said indictment. Section 9 of article 1 of the constitution of the state provides that, in all criminal prosecutions for libels, "indictments found or information laid for publications in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause." The contention of petitioner is that this section of the constitution applies to the publishers of libels, who alone can be tried elsewhere than in the county where the publication office of the newspaper is located; that petitioner is not charged with publishing a libel, but with having caused such libel to be printed and published.

The constitution is not limited to cases of newspaper publishers and proprietors alone, but applies to "indictments found or informations laid for publications in newspapers." The term used is broad enough to include a person who causes a libel to be published in a newspaper equally with one who publishes it. The constitution is aimed at a class of libels, viz., those published in newspapers, and any and all persons guilty of such libels are liable to be tried at the places specified in the constitution, without reference to the fact whether they are or are not editors or proprietors of the paper containing the libel.

Again, conceding the point well taken, according to the indictment, the Evening Post, in which the alleged libel was published, while it is shown to be printed in the city and county of San Francisco, is and was published in the county of San Joaquin, and, so far as appears in the indictment, was not published elsewhere. If, as we may suppose, the Evening Post has a publication office and is in fact published in San Francisco, the fact must be established by way of defense before petitioner can avail himself of it in bar to a prosecution in San Joaquin county.

Townsend on Slander and Libel says, at section 115: "As respects a publication by writing, a libel, not only the publisher, but all who in anywise aid or are concerned in the publication of the writing are liable as publishers; the publication of the writing is the act of all concerned in the production of the writing. Thus, if one composes and dictates, a second writes, and a third publishes, all are liable as publishers, and each is liable as a publisher."

There is still another reason why the contention of petitioner cannot avail him. Section 9 of article 1 of our constitution is a limitation upon the right to indict and punish for libel in any county of the state where the same may be published. Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. 304; Bish. Crim. Proc. § 69; 1 Archb. Crim. Pr. p. 241, and note 1.

It follows, therefore, that, if the constitution only applies to the editor and proprietor of a newspaper, those not coming within that category are still liable to punishment as at common law wherever the paper containing the libel may be circulated. We do not subscribe to this doctrine, but refer to it as a necessary consequence of assuming the position of petitioner to be correct.

The petition is denied, and petitioner remanded to the custody of the proper officer.

A location of "placer" mineral land is valid without previous discovery of valuable mineral therein.

4. SAME—LOCATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action where both parties claim to have made locations of mineral land in themselves valid, and the question is which of the two has made the prior location, the prior actual or constructive possession, evidenced by posting the notice, and by marking the boundaries in the manner required by statute, must prevail.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Plaintiffs are grantees and successors in interest of Johnson and others, who, on December 14, 1882, located the Lucretia mining claim upon gold-bearing mineral land of the United States, in Butte county, California. Defendant, on December 22, 1882, filed his application for a patent to the Howard mining claim, which included a portion of the Lucretia location. Plaintiffs brought this action, under sections 2325 and 2326, Rev. St. U. S., to have the question of right of possession of the claim determined. The Magalia Mining Company, by leave of the court, intervened, claiming an interest in the location through defendant. The court found that neither plaintiffs, defendant, nor intervenor had any title. Plaintiffs appealed. Other facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

A. L. Hart, Wm. Singer, Jr., and H. V. Reardon, for appellants. Hundley & Gale, W. C. Belcher, and W. H. H. Hart, for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. 1. It is contended by the defendant and the intervenor (respondents) that the mineral, if any, found in the land claimed by the plaintiffs herein, constitutes a lode within the meaning of the acts of congress; that ledges or lodes can be located only in a manner entirely different from the mode adopted by plaintiffs' predecessors; and therefore, however regular their surface location might have been as a location of a placer claim, it is invalid because no placer exists within its limits.

Finding No. 51 of the court below is as follows: "That in the year 1856, John Barrett, and others associated with him, discovered on the westerly bank of Little Butte creek, on the south-east quarter of said section 13, a thin seam of gravel cropping out between an underlying bed of slate rock and an overlying bed of lava rock; and, finding that the said seam of gravel was gold-bearing, located the same as and for a mining claim under the name and designation of the 'Burch and Barrett Claim,' and thereupon commenced to work and develop their said claim by excavating a tunnel into the hill, following the course of the channel, and the said channel became thicker and better developed and more valuable as they pursued and explored the same into the hill, and showed that the said deposit was a well-developed channel, varying from a few inches to eight and ten feet in thickness, and from eight or ten to forty feet in breadth, with a well-defined bed and side walls of slate rock, and capped by a thin stratum of clay, with an overlying body of lava rock for hanging wall. Prior to the year 1879 the said John Barrett, by mesne conveyances from his associates in said location, became sole owner of the said Burch and Barrett location, and in that year sold and conveyed the same to the intervenor, the Magalia Gold Mining Company, a corporation duly formed and organized under the laws of the state of California, and the said intervenor thereupon entered into and took, and thence hitherto has kept and held, and still holds, the possession, and has ever since continued the work of exploring and pursuing and working and mining the said gravel deposit in and along the said channel or bed, and had, in the spring of the year 1882, pursued and opened and worked the said gravel channel or bed in said south-east quarter of said section 13, and in the direction of the said south-west quarter of said section, and had discovered that the said gold-bearing channel extended towards and probably into the said south-west quarter, and that the said south-east quarter of section 13 contained deposits of gold-bearing gravel in quantity sufficient, not only to pay for working and mining the same, but sufficient to render the said quarter section of great value for mining purposes. That, after the commencement of this action, the said Magalia Gold Mining Company projected and extended its tunnel, mentioned in these findings, into said south-west quarter of said section 13, following the said gold-bearing deposit or channel. That said channel in its course into the hill descends or drops at an angle on an average of about eight degrees. That the bed-rock of said channel, during its entire length so far as worked, is composed of a slate formation, and upon that slate formation said gravel rests, and over said gravel is a formation of clay gouge, overlapping said mineral deposit, and that above said clay seam is the lava which extends to the surface; and that the overlying lava rock, at the point where the said channel crosses the easterly line of the said south-west quarter aforesaid, is about six hundred feet in thickness. That said gravel is of a hard nature, and in mining and extracting the same has to be detached from its position by the use of picks and gads, and, when extracted, is taken out to the surface, and there washed, and in so washing gold is extracted therefrom. That neither gold nor any other mineral was discovered within the boundaries of said south-west quarter of said section 13 until the said tunnel of said Magalia Company penetrated therein, as aforesaid. That said pay-streak of gravel and deposit does not crop out at any other place or places than the place where the same was discovered, as aforesaid; and that the same cannot be seen or reached without entering the works of the said Magalia Gold Mining Company, and following the trend and meanderings of said channel to the present face of the mineral deposit, except by sinking a shaft or running expensive tunnels other than those run, occupied, and used by the intervenor therein."

In support of their view, counsel cite the Eureka Case, 4 Sawy. 302, and other decisions following and referring to that. In the Eureka Case, Mr. Justice FIELD of the supreme court of the United States said: "We are of opinion that the term [lode] as used in the acts of congress, is applicable to any zone or belt of mineralized rock lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock." It includes, to use the language cited by counsel, "all deposits of mineral matter found through a mineralized zone or belt, coming from the same source, impressed with the same forms, and appearing to have been created by the same processes." This definition would not include a bed of gravel from which particles of gold may be washed. The words "mineralized rock" were evidently intended to qualify the last as well as the first sentence. That which in the Eureka Case was declared to be a "lode" was a zone of limestone lying between a wall of quartz and a seam of clay or shale, the one having a dip of 45 deg., and the other of 80 deg.

Section 2320 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (1873-74) treats of "mining claims upon veins or lodes of quartz or other rock in place bearing gold;" section 2322, of veins, lodes, and ledges "the top or apex of which" lies inside of surface lines extended vertically downward.

In Seane's Neuman and Barretti (by Valazquez) a "placer" is said to be "a place near the bank of a river where gold dust is found." In the last edition of Webster, which gives the meaning of the term as approved by usage in Mexico and California, it is defined: "A gravelly place where gold is found, especially by the side of a river, or in the bed of a mountain torrent." Whatever the origin of the subterranean channels containing gravel beds, they have long been known to exist in California, and they have been generally supposed to be, and generally spoken of as, the beds of ancient rivers in which the gravel was deposited by fluvial action, and which were either from their beginning subterranean, or upon which the superincumbent earth or rock has been hurled by means of convulsion, caused by volcanic or other natural force. That the bed of gravel mentioned in the findings, to the limited extent it has been prospected by the intervenor's tunnel, "descends or drops on an average of about eight degrees," does not of itself make the gravel deposit a lode with "a top or apex," nor contradict the theory that the channel was the channel of a mountain stream or torrent.

The terms employed in the acts of congress are used in the sense in which they are received by miners. The Eureka Case, supra. Moreover, by express enactment, "claims usually called placers" are declared to include all forms of deposit, "excepting veins of quartz or other rock in place." Rev. St. U. S. § 3229. Referring to the common use of the word by miners, to the dictionaries, and to the adjudications of courts, the gravel bed with gold therein, as described in the finding, is a placer.

Other findings of the court below strengthen this conviction. The court found that for a long time the land which is the subject of this action was generally reputed and understood throughout the mining district in which it is to be valuable placer mining ground, through which ancient channels, containing gravel-bearing gold in paying quantities, extended. No. 13. While it does not appear, except inferentially, that ground like that in controversy was generally located as placer, neither does it appear that there were district laws with respect to locations of veins, lodes, or ledges; and, on the other hand, the district laws with reference to the location of flat and placer claims are set out in the findings at length. It further appears that the intervenor attempted to locate the ground as and for a placer claim, and its application for a patent was based on that location.

2. If the ground located by those under whom plaintiffs deraign was not previously located as a placer claim, and the plaintiffs or their predecessors fully complied with the acts of congress, and the local rules and regulations, the plaintiffs would seem to have the right of possession. There is no finding of any local law which provides for the location of placers, or beds of gravels containing precious metals below the surface, as tunnel claims, or of facts showing that the grantors of the intervenor, who constructed the tunnel, pursued the mode laid down by local laws in locating it. As to any claim to the possession based on occupancy by the tunnel of a portion of plaintiffs' location, such occupancy, if it would be considered at all under the statutes, would extend only to the space within the walls of the tunnel, and could not be extended beyond them by any rule of constructive possession. We are not required, therefore, to interpret the section of the act of 1872 (Rev. St. U. S. 2344) which reads: "Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to impair, in any way, rights or interests in mining property acquired under existing laws," if, indeed, that provision refers to any rights other than those acquired under the act of 1866 and under the act of 1870, "granting to A. Sutro the right of way," etc.

The claim and location of plaintiffs "was distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries could be readily traced." Rev. St. 2324. The mining laws of the district provided: "A notice shall be posted in a conspicuous place on each claim, or body of claims, describing the same with convenient certainty, and shall be recorded by the district recorder in his office, or in the office of the county recorder of Butte county." "All records of mining claims shall contain the name or names of the locators, and such a description of the claim or claims located, by reference to some natural object or permanent monument as will identify them." The last requirement is substantially a transcript from the United States statute, Rev. St. 2324. The location by plaintiffs' predecessors in interest conformed strictly to the law with respect to the posting and registration of notices and their contents.

It is insisted by counsel for respondents that no location of mineral land is valid unless valuable mineral had been actually discovered in the land before the location was made. As to placer claims, we find no such condition in the acts of congress, in the local laws, or in the practice of miners; but, if the laws contemplated discovery before location, it would seem from finding 51, above quoted, that here the discovery preceded the location. Of course, a patent for mineral lands can only issue under the acts of congress relating to the disposition of mineral lands, on proof that they are such.

3. It is contended that the intervenor had already located the same ground as a placer. The intervenor's notice of location was recorded December 5, 1882. The plaintiffs' claim was marked on the ground. The marking was commenced on the thirteenth and completed on the fourteenth of December, 1882. Plaintiffs' notice was posted in a conspicuous place on their claim on the said fourteenth of December, and was recorded by the district recorder on the sixteenth and by the county recorder on the twentieth of the same month.

On the said December 14th, and after the boundaries of plaintiffs' claim were fully marked on the ground, the intervenor's notice of location (which described its claim by boundaries coterminous with plaintiffs' claim, and which had been so as aforesaid recorded on the fifth day of December) was posted on the claim. And on the said December 14th the intervenor proceeded to mark its claim on the ground in such manner as that its boundaries could be readily traced by blazing trees and driving painted stakes, along the same lines already marked by the plaintiffs.

If the rights of the parties hereto are to be determined by reference simply to what was done by them or their grantors on the surface and in the recording office, and without regard to work, if any, done in intervenor's tunnel within the limits of the claim, the plaintiffs would seem to have the better right. The facts that the intervenor recorded a notice containing a description of the claim by reference to government subdivisions, and posted a copy thereof outside of the limits of the claim as described in the notice, were not of themselves such acts as that the subsequent marking of the boundaries related to the record or posting of the notice, so as to cut out any rights of plaintiffs acquired by compliance with the statute and district laws. The local laws seem very clearly to provide that the designation of the boundaries on the ground and posting of the notice shall precede its record. In the land office, where the question between the applicant for a patent and the United States is the right of the applicant to purchase, the order in which are done the several acts which give the right to purchase may be immaterial. And so in an action in the state court, where only one of the parties claims to have complied with the laws, the order of the acts done by him may be immaterial. But in an action where both parties claim to have made locations, in themselves valid, and the question is which of the two has made the prior location, the prior actual or constructive possession, evidenced by posting the notice and by marking the boundaries in the manner required by statute, must prevail,—at least unless there has been unreasonable delay in recording the notice, even if it be conceded that a failure to record the notice will invalidate a location otherwise regular. It cannot be said here that the plaintiffs unreasonably delayed the record.

The act of congress does not in express terms require the posting or registration of a notice, but recognizes the power of the miners to require the registration by providing that all records of mining claims shall contain a certain description, etc. The miners are warned that a tract of land is claimed, by the posted notice and the evidence of its boundaries made necessary by the statute. They are not required to search the records in the first instance. A recorded notice gives no information of a claim not actually located. Nor does even a notice posted on the ground, unless it appears that the party posting it is proceeding to indicate with reasonable diligence, or is about to indicate, the boundaries by marking them.

It may be asked: Suppose work is being actually prosecuted on or in the ground, and a struggle ensues between the person doing the work and another party, each striving to secure a precedence in marking out the boundaries of a claim to include the place where the work is being done, can the mere fact that he who has done nothing towards extracting ore, or developing the ground, first completes or first commences the marking of the boundaries, give to him the right of possession? In such case, would the performance of the only work done in the mine, the record of a notice defining the limits of a claim including the work, and the posting of the notice near the claim, as described in the record, go for naught? Although merely working at a particular place or places gives no right to patent under the statutes of the United States, and would not, under the local law, proved herein, extend by construction the actual possession, yet, as to a third person who has not complied with the statutes and local laws, the person doing work, or who has done work not abandoned, has an actual possession to the extent of the work done.

We have said that, as between two persons, neither of whom had done any work before his attempted location, and both of whom claim to have made valid locations, the issue must be determined by reference to priority in the statutory designation, on the surface, of the limits of the claim. Of course, we are not to be understood as saying that a claim can be held, prior to the patent, without work subsequent to the formal location within it, in case no work was done before. That is not a question involved in this case. But, in determining the question of priority in the particular referred to, it may be possible that the person doing work in the ground, and who has indicated by his acts his intention to perfect a location under the mining laws and statutes, should be held, by proper application of the doctrine of relation, to have first marked the boundaries of the claim, in legal effect, as against one who, for the purpose of depriving him of the benefit of his work, or of his discovery of mineral of value, shall intervene and mark the boundaries before the first occupant shall have completed or even commenced their alignment. But no such question is distinctly presented by the findings herein; and, as we think the interests of justice demand a new trial of the action, we decline to express any opinion upon a suppositive case.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

In re SIC. (No. 20,308.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCE—CRIMES.

Section 3 of ordinance No. 192 of the city of Stockton, California, makes it unlawful for two or more persons to assemble, be, or remain in any room or place for the purpose of smoking opium, or inhaling the fumes thereof. Section 307 of the State Penal Code declares that every person who visits or resorts to any place where opium, or any of its preparations, is sold or given away to be smoked at such place, for the purpose of smoking opium, or its said preparations, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine or imprisonment. Held, that the ordinance, in so far as it made criminal precisely the same acts that were declared a crime by the state law, was in conflict therewith; and, under Const. art. 11, § 11, limiting the power of municipal corporations to the passage of ordinances not in conflict with general laws, was void, and that persons accused of assembling in a room for the purpose of smoking opium therein could not be prosecuted thereunder.

In bank. Application from San Joaquin county for habeas corpus.
Lyman J. Mowry, for petitioner. F. H. Smith, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. A complaint was filed in the police court of the city of Stockton, charging Sam Lee and petitioner Sic with the crime of assembling for the purpose of smoking, as follows, to-wit, "the said Sam Lee and Sic [at a time and place specified] were willfully and unlawfully in that certain room, in that certain building, on the south-east corner of El Dorado and Washington streets, in said city, for the purpose of smoking opium, contrary to the provisions of a certain ordinance," etc. The ordinance was entitled "Ordinance No. 192. To prohibit and prevent the smoking of opium, and the inhaling of fumes of opium." The first section declared the smoking of opium, or the inhaling of the fumes of opium, injurious to public health, contrary to public morals, and against the peace and good order of the city, and prohibits the keeping of places where persons assemble for the purpose of smoking or inhaling the fumes of opium. Section 2 makes it unlawful for persons keeping certain places of resort to allow persons to smoke or inhale the fumes of opium therein.

Section 3 is the one under which this complaint is lodged, and is as follows:

"Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful for two or more persons to assemble, be, or remain in any room or place for the purpose of smoking opium, or inhaling the fumes thereof."

Section 4 makes it unlawful for any one to knowingly remain in the room or place where the offense is committed.

Section 5 is aimed at the person owning or controlling any building who permits the offense therein.

Section 6 punishes those who aid or abet the offense.

Section 7 punishes one who may stand before, upon, or in the vicinity of the building, room, or place where the offense is committed, to give warning of the approach of any person.

It is claimed that this ordinance is void because it conflicts with section 307 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "Every person who opens or maintains, to be resorted to by other persons, any place where opium, or any of its preparations, is sold or given away, to be smoked at such place, and any person who at such place sells or gives away any opium, or its said preparations, to be there smoked or otherwise used, and every person who visits or resorts to any such place for the purpose of smoking opium, or its said preparations, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Section 3 of the ordinance is broad enough in terms to prohibit opium smoking under all circumstances, except when the person "keeps moving." Persons may not assemble at any place for the purpose of smoking, or be at a place for the purpose, or remain at a place to smoke. The other sections of the ordinance are equally marked in this respect. They are all aimed at rooms or places where opium is smoked or inhaled. In short, the ordinance is evidently intended to prohibit opium dens or places of resort for the purpose of smoking opium. The ordinance, notwithstanding the comprehensive language used, would hardly be given a more extensive effect than that. To prohibit vice is not ordinarily considered within the police power of the state. A crime is a trespass upon some right, public or private. The object of the police power is to protect rights from the assaults of others, not to banish sin from the world, or to make men moral. It is true no one becomes vicious or degraded without indirectly injuring others, but these consequences are not direct or immediate. In jure non remota sed proxima spectatur.

Thus it is said it is no crime to be idle, but one may be punished for begging, for that interferes directly with the comfort of others; that it should not be made a legal wrong for one to become intoxicated in the privacy of his room, if he does not offend others by displaying his drunkenness; yet the consequence of each of these vices may be to inflict great injuries upon others. Possibly this resulting injury to others, and to society, may justify the legislature in declaring these vices to be crimes. We are not required to pass upon that question, and we do not. It is enough to say that such legislation is very rare in this country. There seems to be an instructive and universal feeling that this is a dangerous province to enter upon, and that through such laws individual liberty might be very much abridged. Hence laws to suppress intemperance, prohibit the sale of liquor, suppress places of resort where it is drank, and punish offensive exhibitions of drunken people, but do not punish the immoderate use of spirits.

Since this whole ordinance, therefore, is evidently aimed at places of resort where opium is smoked or inhaled, we feel justified in limiting section 3 to that evil, although the natural and usual import of such words might, in the absence of a strong presumption against it, extend its effect much further. Perhaps it would be enough to say that the offense charged in the complaint, of which respondent was convicted, may be, for aught that appears, the same as that prohibited in the Code. The section plainly covers the same ground as the Penal Code. It was probably intended to cover some supposed defects in the Penal Code; still it denounces as criminal precisely the same acts which are attempted to be prohibited by the Code. It is admitted that no ordinance is valid which conflicts with the general laws of this state. Does section 3 of the ordinance conflict with section 307 of the Penal Code? Upon this subject there is a very great conflict of authority.

Judge Cooley says that, although the decisions are not uniform, the clear weight of authority is that the same act may constitute an offense both against the state and the municipal corporation, and both may punish it without violation of any constitutional principle. Const. Lim. 199.

In Bishop on Statutory Crimes it is said (section 24) that the true rule is: "If the statute so authorizes, it is not apparent why a city corporation may not impose a special penalty for an act done against it, while the state imposes also a penalty for the same act done against the state." This implies that to enable the city to pass such an ordinance—that is, one imposing a penalty for an act already prohibited by the general law—special authority must be found in the charter.

In Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 68, after noticing the great conflict in the authorities, the following rules are laid down, it is said, with some distrust as to their correctness: "(1) A general grant of power, such as mere authority to make by-laws for the good government of the place and the like, should not be held to confer authority upon the corporation to make an ordinance punishing an act—for example, as assault and battery—which is made punishable as a criminal offense by the laws of the state. * * * (2) Where the act is in its nature one which constitutes two offenses, one against the state and one against the municipal government, the latter may be constitutionally authorized to punish it, though it be also an offense under the state law; but the legislative intention that this may be done should be manifest and unmistakable, or the power in the corporation should be held not to exist. (3) Where the act or matter covered by the charter or ordinance and by the state law is not essentially criminal in its nature, and is one which is generally confided to the supervision and control of the local government of cities and towns, but is also of a nature to require general legislation, the intention that the municipal government should have power to make new, further, and more definite regulations, and enforce them by appropriate penalties, will be inferred from language, which would not be sufficient were the matter one not specially relating to corporate duties, and fully provided for in general laws."

The decisions on this question are so very conflicting that they present no obstacle to our considering it as a new one, and these rules, perhaps, express the law, as we understand it, as well as any.

Section 11, art. 11, of the constitution, authorizes cities and towns "to pass and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary, and other regulations as do not conflict with general laws." The last clause of this section must be held to be a limitation upon the power of municipalities, whether that power is derived under this provision of the constitution, or from the charter. If, as is held both by Bishop and Dillon to be the effect of authorities, a municipality can only pass ordinances punishing the same acts which are punishable under general laws when expressly authorized to do so, and that no authority to pass such laws will be presumed from grants of power general in their character, it must be because such ordinances may supersede the general law upon the subject. Here there is not only no such authority, but, if such ordinances are conflicting, there cannot be such authority.

It would seem that an ordinance must be conflicting with the general law which may operate to prevent a prosecution of the offense under the general law. The constitution provides that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. If tried and convicted or acquitted under the ordinance, he could not be again tried for the same offense under the general law. The contrary doctrine has been held in some states, but this conclusion seems more in consonance with reason and justice. Some of these decisions apply to acts which are said to be of a dual nature, and offend at once against the general law and police regulations, which are not directed specifically at the offense denounced in the general law. If there be such acts, no question of this kind can arise with reference to them. But there are decisions, no doubt, which hold squarely the doctrine that both may punish for the same offense. In Alabama it was said (Mayor v. Allaire, 14 Ala. 400) that assault and battery could be punished under the ordinance and under the state law also,—the one to maintain the peace of the state and the other the peace of the city. It is difficult to see how the peace of the state is disturbed except through the disturbance in the city. The case has been said to be like that where the state punishes for an offense against its laws, and the same act is punishable under the laws of the United States. It was said by Mr. Justice GRIER that the citizen may be said to owe allegiance to two sovereigns, and the same act may be an offense against each. The United States, however, has no general criminal jurisdiction. In these cases, where the same act may be punished as criminal under such jurisdiction, it will be found that the act, besides offending the general law of the state, is an assault upon the United States in some of its functions as a government. Thus, counterfeiting is an injury to the people, for they are likely to be cheated and swindled through it. But the United States finds it necessary to punish the same act, not because of the injury to the people, but to protect itself in its function of coining money and regulating the currency. State laws and city ordinances all rest upon the same ultimate authority,—the people of the state,—and they aim at the same evil. But it is said that, even in cases where a person is punishable under both state and federal laws, the actual practice is to punish but once.

Holding these views, we think the respondent must be discharged. It will be observed that we only hold that there is a conflict where the ordinance and the general law punish precisely the same acts. We do not wish to be understood as holding that the sections of the ordinance which make criminal other acts not punishable under the general law are void because the legislature has seen fit to legislate upon the same subject.

The petitioner is hereby discharged.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment. I cannot agree with Mr. Justice TEMPLE, however, in his construction of the ordinance. It is not only intended to cover cases not provided for by section 307 of the Penal Code, but it accomplishes that end. Thus section 6 provides: "It shall be unlawful for any person to aid or abet or assist another person in the smoking of opium, or inhaling the fumes of opium." This provision has no reference to the place where the smoking is done. And section 3, under which the petitioners were convicted, is aimed more at the act of smoking than at the place where it is indulged in. I think, therefore, that the question must be met and answered in this case whether the city council has unlimited power to prohibit the smoking of opium under all circumstances. The provisions of section 3 of the ordinance upon which the complaint was made are general, universal in their operation, and present the issue squarely. Will they support a conviction? I feel bound to answer this question in the negative. However much we might prefer a different conclusion in this particular case, there are certain great principles which cannot be invaded in special cases without trespassing upon that province which Mr. Justice TEMPLE speaks of as being dangerous to enter by legislation. Every man has the right to eat, drink, and smoke what he pleases in his own house, without police interference, (unless he is trying to kill himself;) and, before the state or municipal authorities should ask the conviction of a person for smoking, eating, or drinking any particular thing, facts ought to be alleged and shown—even in cases of opium smoking—that at least it was not done in the privacy of his own house, or that he was using his house as a resort for others, or that he was in some way aiding, encouraging, or abetting others in the use of the drug,—injuring or jeopardizing the rights of others; or, in a word, that he was offending against the welfare of society in some way, beyond merely the injurious effect of the act upon himself alone.

That some of the sections of the ordinance are valid, and that section 3 of the ordinance can be so amended as to provide lawfully for conviction in the cases which it was intended to cover, I have no doubt. It is unnecessary to say, in this case, how far the local authorities may go in their legislation against gambling-houses or saloons. The legislature has recognized the opium habit as a great evil. It has, by general legislation, attempted to suppress it. Section 307 was passed and approved for that purpose. By an act entitled "An act to regulate the sale of certain poisonous substances," approved April 16, 1880, it was made a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding $500, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, for any person other than a physician authorized to practice medicine under the laws of this state to retail opium without distinctly labeling the box or package, and the wrapper or cover thereof, together with the word "poison," and the name and place of business of the seller; and the act further provided: "Nor shall it be lawful for any person to retail any of the substances enumerated in either of said schedules to any person, unless upon due inquiry it is found that the person receiving the same is aware of its poisonous character, and that it is to be used for a legitimate purpose." Section 2 of the act requires the seller to keep a book in which shall be entered the date of sale, name of the purchaser, quantity sold, purpose for which the purchaser stated it was required, etc., and that the book should be always open to inspection by the proper authorities. But all this legislation has failed to meet the exigency of affairs, and unless we close our eyes to what is taking place daily in the larger cities of the state, and becoming a part of our most deplorable police history, we must recognize the fact that those who are engaged in this nefarious traffic—especially that class who seek among the youth of both sexes for victims of the drug—are the most insidious enemies of society. For the purpose of shielding themselves and their enslaved and unhappy customers from arrest and punishment for violation of the law, they secrete themselves and their "outfits" in deserted buildings, under bridges, and in out of the way places; thus planning in advance of arrest that which will be a defense under section 307, viz., that they were not caught in a place which was opened to be resorted to by others, and where opium is sold or given away.

They sell the opium at one place, lease their smoking outfits to be used at another place, and keep constantly moving about, with transitory "joints," thus eluding the police, and evading the operation of the statute. These are matters of common notoriety. A resort being "a place of frequent assembly, a haunt," (Webst. Dict.,) before a conviction can be secured, under section 307, it must be shown that the place where the smoking was done was opened or maintained to enable opium smokers to frequent the same for the purpose of smoking. But it is not for us to say what municipal legislation should or may be provided. 72 Cal. 549

Estate of SULLENBERGER. (No. 11,670.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—EXECUTOR.

Transactions between the maker of a promissory note and the executor of the payee, showing that the dealings were not carried on by the executor as such, but in his personal character, and a simple permission given by the maker to the executor that he might apply any balance of accounts there might be in his favor to the payment of the note belonging to the estate, will not take such a note out of the statute of limitations.

2. SAME—NOVATION.

A loose statement by the maker of a note, after the running of the statute of limitations, to the effect that he would settle the whole indebtedness on his return, and pay the balance, if any was found due, does not amount to such "a substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation," as is required to constitute a novation.

3. PROBATE PRACTICE—ALTERATION OF CLAIM.

No substantial change in a claim on file in probate court can be made, either by amendment or otherwise, after the expiration of the time for the presentation of claims.

4. SAME—SETTING ASIDE JUDGMENT.

A probate court has power to set aside its own judgments obtained ex parte.

5. SAME—NOTICE OF MOTION.

If an order is made out of court, and without notice, allowing a claim against an estate, no notice of motion to set it aside is necessary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Benj. Bullard, Add. C. Hinkson, and Armstrong & Hinkson, for appellant. Reese Clark, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from an order setting aside the allowance by the judge of a claim against the estate. The ground of the order was that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. We think the claim was barred. It was upon a promissory note dated December 2, 1878, and payable eight months after date. Sullenberger died December 5, 1883, at which time the statute had run against the note, unless the case is taken out of its operation by the following circumstances: After the death of L. C. Drummond, (the payee,) Sullenberger (the maker) sold some wheat to M. Drummond, who was the son of the payee and the executor of his will, and delivered some hogs to him to be sold; and M. Drummond advanced some money to Sullenberger, and paid some of his debts, and testifies that on one occasion, when about to go on a short journey, "he said that when he should return, which would be in a short time, he would settle the whole indebtedness; and, if the proceeds of the wheat and hogs were not sufficient to settle the note and money advanced and paid to his creditors, he would pay the balance." M. Drummond sold the hogs, and after applying the proceeds of the hogs and wheat to the various demands against Sullenberger there remained due on the note a balance of $828, for which sum the claim was presented. Two grounds are urged to show that the foregoing circumstances take the case out of the statute.

1. It is said that the transactions mentioned constitute a mutual open and current account. But if we assume that this is so, the account was not between the parties to the note. There is no evidence that M. Drummond had any authority from the probate court that the estate of which he was executor should advance money to Sullenberger, or pay his debts, or buy his wheat, or act as his broker in selling hogs. And it does not appear that the estate did so. So far as the evidence showed, M. Drummond advanced his own money for the purposes mentioned, and acted individually in his purchase of the wheat and sale of the hogs. His testimony is as follows: "He was going away from Davisville temporarily, and was owing some to me and Liggett and to other persons. He delivered to me some hogs to sell for him and Liggett, and I had bought from him his wheat. I was to let him have some money then, which I did, and paid some debts for him." There is not a word to show any dealing between Sullenberger and the estate of Drummond. The passage first above quoted amounts to nothing more than a permission from Sullenberger to M. Drummond to apply whatever balance should remain in his hands to the payment of the note due to the estate. We attach no importance to the statement of M. Drummond that the note was "considered a part" of the business transactions which he had with Sullenberger, or that it "was understood to form a part of the indebtedness."

2. It is argued that there was a novation, and that the provision requiring a writing to take a case out of the statute does not apply, because there was a new consideration. Without considering the latter branch of this argument, it is sufficient to say that the loose statements of Sullenberger to the effect that "he would settle the whole indebtedness" on his return, and would "pay the balance" if a balance should remain after application of proceeds of sales, do not amount to "the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation," and hence there was no novation. Civil Code, § 1531. If, however, we overlook this, and disregard the fact that the new consideration did not move from the estate, then it would follow that the claim should not have been on the note, but upon the "new obligation," which must have existed if there was any novation. The claim, however, which was allowed, and the allowance of which was set aside, was a simple claim upon the note. The "amended claim," which was allowed to be filed "in opposition to the motion" to vacate the allowance of the first claim, is not an element of the question. No substantial change can be made in a claim on file, either by way of amendment or otherwise, after the expiration of the time for the presentation of claims. Furthermore, the permission was merely to file the "amended claim" on the hearing of the motion. When the court came to consider the matter, it rejected the claim.

But it is urged that the allowance of the first claim was a judgment, and that the court could not set aside its action for mere error. But, if it was a judgment in this sense, it was a judgment obtained ex parte, and the rule with reference to the power of a court to revise its own action suffers an exception in the case of ex parte proceedings. This must necessarily be so; for, if an appeal should be taken directly from the "judgment" allowing the claim, it must be heard upon the case made upon the application to the court below; and the opposing party is not heard upon such application, and consequently has had no opportunity to present his side of the question. The only way he has to make a showing is by moving to set aside the "judgment."

Exception is taken to the notice of motion to set aside. But the order allowing the claim having been made out of court and without notice, no notice of motion to set it aside was necessary. Code Civil Proc. § 937. Moreover, we think the notice was, under the circumstances, sufficient. We therefore advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

MONROE v. FOHL. (No. 12,748.)

1. PAYMENTS—APPLICATION OF—UNEARNED INTEREST.

Payment of a given sum of money on a note four months after date, the interest on the note being payable annually, and the payment exceeding the annual interest on the note, operates, in the absence of special agreement, as a payment of the principal indebtedness so far as the sum paid exceeds the interest then due, and is not a payment of unearned interest.¹

2. MORTGAGE—DEFAULT IN INTEREST PAYMENT—CLAIMING PRINCIPAL DUE—NOTICE.

A note secured by mortgage provided that the mortgagee, upon a failure of the mortgagor to pay the interest annually, might elect to have the whole principal become due. Upon the mortgagor's failure to pay the annual interest, the mortgagee left notices at the residence and place of business of the mortgagor with persons of discretion in charge thereof; the mortgagor being absent, and the mortgagee being unable to find him after diligent search. Held, that the notice was sufficient to indicate the mortgagee's election.

3. PLEADING—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

The execution and delivery of a note payable to the order of plaintiff being admitted, a denial that plaintiff is the "holder" of it and an allegation that a third party is such "holder," without stating any facts showing such to be the case, held to be conclusions merely, and not to raise an issue.

4. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Under the California statute of March 27, 1874, entitled "An act to abolish attorney's fees and other charges in foreclosure," when a mortgage provides a certain amount as attorney's fees, it is error for the court to allow more than is specified.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Aug. Muentner and W. B. Nutter, for appellant. Carter, Smith & Keniston, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage, the plaintiff claiming that he was entitled to elect, and did elect, to have the principal become due for non-payment of interest. The plaintiff had judgment on demurrer to the answer and the defendant appeals. We think the answer presented no defense.

1. The note was dated June 25, 1885, and the interest was payable annually. On October 10, 1885, the defendant paid $800 on account of the note, without anything being said on either side as to whether the payment was to be applied to the interest or to the principal. Conceding, in favor of the defendant, that the payment was to be applied first to the interest, it will be so only as to interest up to the date of the payment. The balance of the payment must be applied to the principal. The law will not apply it to future or unearned interest. After making the application as above stated, there remained something over eight months' interest to fall due on June 25, 1886. That balance of interest fell due on that day; for the meaning of the contract is that the interest was to be paid annually from its date; and not annually from any date at which a payment might happen to be made; and the fact that the defendant chose to make the payment above mentioned does not affect the interest on the unpaid principal. The non-payment of this eight months' interest entitled the plaintiff to elect to consider the principal as due.

2. The plaintiff did elect to have the principal become due. The complaint alleges that on July 14, 1886, the plaintiff notified the defendant of his election by leaving a notice at the defendant's residence with a person of discretion in charge of such residence, and by leaving a notice at the defendant's place of business with a person of discretion in charge of such place of business; the defendant being then absent from his residence and place of business, and the plaintiff having been unable, after diligent search and inquiry, to ascertain his whereabouts. The only construction we can give to the answer is that the defendant was not personally notified or "informed" of the election. We think the notice given was sufficient.

3. The execution and delivery of the note payable to the order of plaintiff being admitted, the denial that plaintiff was the "holder" of the note, and the assertion that the bank was the holder, without averring any facts showing such to be the case, were of conclusions merely, and raised no issue. Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 119; Wedderspoon v. Rogers, 32 Cal. 571; Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 302.

4. But we think the court erred in allowing a greater sum as counsel fee than the one stipulated in the mortgage. In the absence of a provision in the mortgage, the plaintiff is not entitled to a counsel fee (Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493; Mascarel v. Raffour, 51 Cal. 242,) unless there is a statute which allows one. The statute of March 27, 1874, provides that, "in all cases of foreclosure of mortgage, the attorney's fee shall be fixed by the court in which the proceedings of foreclosure are had, any stipulation in said mortgage to the contrary notwithstanding." Read literally, this language might mean that "in all cases of foreclosure" a counsel fee shall be fixed by the court, whether the mortgage provides for one or not. But we do not think that such is its meaning. The title of the act is "An act to abolish attorney's fees and other charges in foreclosure." And there is no provision in terms that any fee shall be allowed. The thing to be "fixed" is "the attorney's fee." We think this means "the attorney's fee provided for by the mortgage," and that it has no application where none is so provided. But even if this is not the true construction, and the court can allow a counsel fee where the mortgage is silent upon the subject, if, as here, a counsel fee is agreed upon between the parties, it must be held to be an exclusion of any greater fee.

The court therefore erred in allowing a greater fee than the one provided in the mortgage. But this does not make the ruling on the demurrer to the answer erroneous. The counsel fee stipulated to be paid was not an element of the cause of action, but was, like the costs, a mere incident to it, and was to be fixed by the judge in his discretion, not exceeding the stipulated amount. Carriere v. Minturn, 5 Cal. 435.

The other points do not require special mention.

We think the cause should be remanded, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment in accordance with the views above expressed, the appellant to recover his costs of appeal.

LINDSAY v. STEWART. (No. 11,962.)

(Supreme Court of California. 1887.)

1. ACTION—ENTIRE DEMAND—SEPARATE ACTIONS—COUNTER-CLAIM.

An action was brought to recover the sum of $1,146.91. Defendant answered and pleaded a counter-claim arising from "a mutual open and current account" for $1,660.13. Previous to the commencement of this action, defendant had commenced an action in justice's court against plaintiff for items amounting to $118.18, which items were included in the counter-claim above stated. The action in justice's court was still pending when the answer and counter-claim were filed. Held, that while defendant could not bring another action (after the action in justice court) to recover the balance due on the account above the $118.18 claimed, and while he could not on his counter-claim obtain an affirmative judgment, yet he could avail himself of the claim as a defense to plaintiff's action.

2. SAME—ELECTION.

Defendant was not bound to dismiss the action in the justice's court in order to avail himself of his counter-claim, nor was he bound to elect between that action and his defense, judgment not having been entered in the justice's court.

Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

S. A. Sheppard, J. Marion Brooks, and Frederick Hall, for appellant.
Blackstock & Shepherd, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This action was commenced in February, 1886, to recover from the defendant—First, the sum of $750 with interest, alleged to be due on a promissory note executed and delivered by defendant to M. H. Lindsay, who assigned to plaintiff; second, the sum of $396.91, for work, money advanced, and merchandise furnished by plaintiff at request of defendant between February 11, 1884, and February 10, 1886. The defendant answered denying generally and specifically every allegation of the complaint, and setting up a further defense and counter-claim, alleging that plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $1,660.13 for the balance due on a mutual open and current account for goods sold and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, also for work done, money lent and paid out, lands sold, rent of land, board and lodging, and for pasturage,—all between January 1, 1884, and December 14, 1885.

The court found—First, that the note for $750 was executed and delivered and thereafter duly assigned as alleged in the complaint, that only part thereof was paid, and there was still due and unpaid $292.50. Second, that of the items claimed by plaintiff in his "second cause of action" the sum of $188.25 was still unpaid. Third, that defendant, on February 8, 1886, commenced an action in the justice's court against plaintiff for the sum of $118.18, for money lent, labor performed, and merchandise furnished, all of which items were included in and were a part of the counter-claim set forth in the answer of defendant herein; that the defendant therein (plaintiff herein) appeared and answered, denying each and every allegation of the complaint; and that said cause in justice's court was at the commencement of this suit and is "still pending and undecided, and has not been dismissed nor discontinued." Fourth, as conclusions of law the court finds that plaintiff is entitled to judgment; that plaintiff's plea in abatement be sustained, and defendant's counter-claim be abated and dismissed, and that plaintiff is entitled to judgment against defendant for $480.75, and costs. The judgment was that "plaintiff do have and recover of and from T. H. Stewart, defendant, $480.75, and costs, amounting to $128.15."

There was no plea in abatement to the counter-claim of defendant, and there could be no such plea under the circumstances. To sustain the defense of a former action pending, it must appear that in that action the plaintiff is the same as in the action in which the plea is offered, and the cause of action in both must be founded upon one entire contract, or upon one single or continuous tortious act. The law abhors a multiplicity of actions, and will not permit a party to prosecute two actions for the same cause, because it annoys and harasses the defendant without cause; but there can be no reason for the application of this rule in cases where the defendant in the former action is the aggressor, and the other party relies upon the matters contained in that action for his defense. Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 630; Herriter v. Porter, 23 Cal. 385.

In Naylor v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Smith, 135, the court, speaking upon this subject, said: "There is in this holding a misapprehension of the defendants' position. They are not prosecuting two actions, one of which abates the other. In an endeavor to recover their damages they find themselves prosecuted by their adversary. They may defend by setting up any matter which the law recognizes as a defense, whether it be a cause of action, or whether it be a judgment actually recovered thereon; the only difference being that after judgment it must be used as a judgment and by way of set-off."

The defendant herein was not bound to dismiss his action in the justice's court, nor was he required to elect between that action and his defense in this suit, the former not having gone to judgment. Fuller v. Read, 15 How. Pr. 238; Willis v. Northam, 3 Bosw. 168.

We think, however, that defendant can make use of the matters contained in his counter-claim only in defense of the plaintiff's claim, and as an offset thereto, and will not be entitled to judgment in his favor for any balance due on the account. In his counter-claim, defendant alleges "that the plaintiff is indebted to the defendant in the sum of $1,660.13, the balance due defendant on the ninth day of February, 1886, upon a mutual open and current account in which there were reciprocal demands between the plaintiff and defendant," and that the items were "charged in account between the first day of January, 1884, and the fourteenth day of December, 1885, the date of the last item of said account, all of which will more fully appear from the copy of account hereto annexed and made a part of this amended answer and counter-claim, marked 'A'; that the aggregate amount of said above alleged items of account and demands is the sum of $1,797.80, no part of which has been paid, except the sum of $137.75, leaving a balance of $1,660.13 of said demand unpaid; that the plaintiff refused to pay the same."

As before stated, this account contained all of the items sued for in the justice's court, and all were due at the time that suit was commenced. The defendant could not have maintained another action against plaintiff for the balance of the account.

The allegations of the counter-claim clearly show that the balance of the mutual open and current account in favor of the defendant constitutes an entire demand, against which it was intended the statute should not begin to run earlier than the date of the last item, to-wit, December 14, 1885. Such an account cannot be severed, and different suits be brought upon it piecemeal, (Corey v. Miller, 12 R. I. 338; Borngegger v. Harrison, 12 Wis. 544;) and, if action be brought in such case for a part only of the items, he cannot afterwards sue for the rest. For the purpose of defending against the claim of his adversary, however, he may set out any and all items of the account, whether included in the former action pending or not.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

GLASCOCK v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,581.)

NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RAILROAD CROSSING—SIGNALS.

In an action against a railroad company for the negligent killing of plaintiff's husband at a railroad crossing, it appeared that the railroad track at the place of the occurrence was unobstructed and in plain view of the highway along which deceased was approaching the crossing; that deceased was a man in the full possession of all his faculties, active, sober, cautious, and fully acquainted with the usual time that trains passed over the road; that the train that killed him was going south, was a special train, and unexpected at the station just north of the crossing. No evidence showed that the train made any signal of warning before passing the crossing. It made a loud noise in its course, and the track along which it passed was near and in sight of the highway along which deceased was driving for some distance before they crossed. There was no evidence whatever of the manner of the collision, nor of the circumstances before or connected with it. The wind was from the north; there was no smoke, dust, or other obstruction to a fair view of the track. The engineers had been in the habit of passing this crossing without the usual signals, and defendant was aware of the habit. Held, that deceased, by failing to use the faculties and opportunities of observation which the plaintiff's own case showed that he had, was guilty of contributory negligence, and the plaintiff was properly nonsuited.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

F. E. Baker, J. C. Ball, and Jackson Hatch, for appellant. P. C. Denson, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff is the widow of George Glascock, who was killed by defendant's cars at a railroad crossing near Black's Station on the morning of November 1, 1884. The cause came on for trial before a jury, and after the plaintiff had rested her case a motion for a nonsuit was made and granted. Counsel for appellant in the following epitome give a very fair statement of the facts:

"Black's Station is a village about ten miles north-west from Woodland, in Yolo county. A public road about sixty feet wide leads from Black's in a southerly direction for about a quarter of a mile; thence easterly about one mile, crossing defendant's railroad track about a quarter of a mile east from the point where the road turns east. After leading east for about a mile, as above stated, the road turns south, and goes due south, and past the residence of deceased. The crossing where the collision occurred was on this road about fifteen hundred feet north of the house. A person passing down the highway in question to the crossing would have a clear view of the railroad track to his right nearly all the time. There are no obstructions that would prevent him seeing the track or an approaching train. There are two whistling posts north of the crossing on the railroad track; one 1,370 feet distant, and beyond a crossing on another road, the other 588 feet distant. A wind was blowing at the time from the north.

"The train that collided with the wagon of deceased that day was a special freight train from the north, going south; no notice of its coming having been received by the company's agent at Black's. It passed the station about 10 o'clock A. M. Just before the collision it was running at the rate of probably ten miles an hour. The regular freight train going north on that day was due at Black's about 11:30 o'clock A. M., and the regular passenger train going north that day was due at Black's at 1:03 P. M. In fact a train did pass the crossing going north about one-half hour after the collision. It is fair to conclude that the collision actually occurred between 10 and 11 A. M. that day.

"Deceased was a thrifty, prudent, cautious, strictly temperate, and unusually active man; a man of strong individuality, self-reliant, and had lived on a farm owned by him, through which defendant's railroad track passed, since 1853, and was familiar with the crossing where the collision occurred. He was a good horseman also. He had been especially cautious in approaching and passing over this crossing. Before the colliding train reached the crossing, no signal of its approach was given by the sounding of a whistle, or the ringing of a bell. No witness saw deceased after he had started homeward from Black's, nor was he seen by any one at the time of the collision. There is no evidence whatever of the manner in which the collision occurred; nor of the manner in which the deceased approached the railroad track; nor of any of the circumstances immediately preceding, or concurrent, in point of time, with the collision. It is shown by the pleadings that deceased, at the time of the collision or immediately prior thereto, was driving two horses harnessed to a wagon along and upon the public highway referred to, and was in the act of crossing defendant's railroad track at the crossing."

None of the witnesses could say whether the train began to "slow down" before it reached the crossing. Several of the witnesses testified that they were on the road in view of the crossing, but further from the crossing than the deceased, and that they heard the whistle when the train was at Black's, and again at a crossing south of Black's; that the country was level, and the track graded slightly above the general surface of the ground; that the train made a great noise, which was carried southward by the wind. The angle made by the railroad and the highway is one of about 35 deg. The evidence showed that the engineers had been in the habit of passing the crossing where the accident occurred without giving the signals required by the statute, and that the deceased was aware of the fact.

We think there can be but one reasonable conclusion drawn from the facts. Mr. Glascock either saw the train before he reached the track, or he did not look towards the track as he approached it. According to the testimony of his son he was in full possession of his mental and physical powers; "and when at the crossing, and a little ways from it," as his brother testified, "could see up and down the track at least a couple of hundred yards from the crossing; it was always an open, plain view." Having good eyes, it was his duty to use them, at least to some extent, for his own protection; and his failure to do so would be contributory negligence, and prevent a recovery, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant in failing to ring the locomotive bell or blow the whistle. It is an irresistible inference from the facts developed from the testimony of the plaintiff that, if Mr. Glascock had at any time looked up the track after the train reached the point where the engineer ought to have rung the bell, he could and would have seen the train coming in time to stop and let it pass. There was no dust,—nothing to obstruct the view. The case is not one, therefore, where we are called upon to say how much investigation, listening, or looking by the deceased would overcome the charge of contributory negligence, as where a curve in the road, tunnel, embankment, trees, buildings, or dust obscures the view; but it is a case where the deceased could have seen and heard if he had exercised his faculties therefor to any extent whatever. If he looked, he saw; and, having age and faculties to understand the dangers, is charged with a knowledge of them, and was bound to act upon that knowledge as a prudent and cautious man would under the circumstances. His failure to so act was negligence which, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant, the law regards as such a contributory cause on his part as will make the injury his own misfortune, and relieve the other party from liability therefor. Flemming v. Western Pacific R. Co., 49 Cal. 257; McQuilken v. Central Pac. R. Co., 64 Cal. 466, 2 Pac. Rep. 46; Clark v. Missouri R. R. Co., 11 Pac. Rep. 138; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Adams, 6 Pac. Rep. 529; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 114 U. S. 615, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125.

While the question of negligence is nearly always a matter for the jury, and the burden of proving contributory negligence rests upon the defendant, yet, when it appears from the undisputed facts—shown by the plaintiff's own evidence—that the deceased has not exercised such care as men of prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger, the question is one of law for the court. Fernandes v. Sacramento R. Co., 52 Cal. 50; Flemming v. Western Pac. R. Co., supra. In the case at bar we think the facts shown by the plaintiff would not support a verdict in her favor, and that the court below properly granted the motion for nonsuit.

There was no error in sustaining the objections to the questions propounded to the witness Glascock. The questions called for the conclusion or opinion of the witness. If admissible at all, the inquiry should have been confined to matters of fact,—to a relation of the circumstances. In passing upon the motion for nonsuit, the court below was bound to presume that the defendant was ordinarily a cautious and prudent man. But neither this presumption, nor the fact, if shown, that he had on every other occasion been careful in crossing the railroad, could avail the plaintiff in view of the other facts in the case. Sanderson v. Frazier, 5 Pac. Rep. 632.

1. TROVER—VERDICT—JUDGMENT—EXECUTION—MANDAMUS.

In an action of trover before a justice of the peace, where the value of the property claimed is set out in the complaint, but the jury render a verdict as follows: "We, the jury in the case of ———, find for the plaintiff, less damages claimed," without stating the value of the property, — a judgment rendered by the justice upon such verdict adjudging that the plaintiff recover the possession of the property, or the value thereof as given in the complaint, though erroneous, as being founded upon a defective verdict, is not void, and execution will issue thereon, and, if refused by the justice, a mandamus will be granted to compel the issuance of an execution upon it.

2. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

A judgment which adjudges that the plaintiff do recover the possession of "the property in the complaint herein described and filed," where the complaint sufficiently describes the property sought to be recovered, is not void for want of certainty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

W. D. Grady, for appellant. Wharton & Shaw, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. According to the stipulation of the parties, the following appear to be the facts in this case: "(1) That heretofore, to-wit, on the first day of March, 1886, one J. N. Fanning commenced an action in the justice's court of the Fourth township, county of Fresno, state of California, against one Andrew Farley, for the recovery of the possession of a certain mare and colt, or for the sum of $275, the value thereof, in case a delivery could not be had; and for $50 damages for the detention thereof, with cost of suit. Said action was in the usual form of actions for claim and delivery of personal property. That on the sixteenth day of September, 1886, said cause was duly tried before the defendant, S. L. Hogue, a justice of the peace, with a jury; and after the evidence was introduced in said cause, the said jury returned the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the case of Fanning v. Farley, find for plaintiff, less damages claimed. 'SELMA, September 16, 1886.

C. S. STANTON, Foreman.'

"That thereupon the said justice made and entered the following judgment in said cause:

"In accordance with the foregoing verdict, and the premises having been by the court considered, it is ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff, J. N. Fanning, do have and recover from the defendant, Andrew Farley, the possession of the personal property in the complaint herein described and filed, or for the sum of $275, in case a delivery cannot be had, together with said plaintiff's costs of suit herein paid out and expended.

"Done in open court this sixteenth day of September, 1886.

"That thereafter, on the tenth day of November, 1886, it having been stipulated that defendant's counsel have time to file the same, defendant's counsel filed a motion to set aside the verdict, and vacate the judgment filed; and on the twenty-sixth day of said month the said court denied said motion; and on the tenth day of January, 1887, plaintiff's counsel asked for an execution in said case to issue, whereupon the said justice of the peace refused to issue said execution in the said case, unless ordered to do so by the honorable superior judge of Fresno county, for the following reasons, among others:

"That before the entering of the judgment in his docket, one J. R. Webb, attorney for plaintiff, wrote said justice that the verdict was not good, and that said justice had concluded and consented that said judgment was void. He refused to act unless so ordered by the superior court. That thereafter the plaintiff, J. N. Fanning, on the eleventh day of January, 1887, applied to the superior court of Fresno county for an order directing the said S. L. Hogue to show cause on the twenty-second day of January, 1887, why a writ of mandamus should not issue, compelling the said justice to issue an execution in said case. That on the twenty-second day of January, 1887, the said justice having made his return, from which it appears that he refused to issue said execution for the reasons hereinbefore set out, the said superior court, after hearing argument in said matter, and being fully advised, made and entered its judgment, granting peremptory writ of mandamus, directing the said defendant, S. L. Hogue, as justice of the peace, to issue execution in said case for the enforcement of said judgment; and from which judgment granting said writ the said defendant appealed to this court.'"

It is contended by the appellant that the peremptory writ of mandate issued to the justice who tried the case and rendered the judgment was improper because, as is alleged—First, the judgment was void from the fact that it was based upon a verdict of the jury which failed to find the value of the property, for the recovery of which, or its alternative value, the action was instituted; second, because, as is claimed, the judgment does not contain a sufficient description of the property sued for, and is void on its face.

We cannot concur in the view of the law thus entertained by the appellant. The verdict of the jury was erroneous in that it did not find the value of the property; but the court, when it came to render the judgment, in the exercise of its judicial functions, evidently concluded that the jury intended to find for the plaintiff upon all the issues made by the pleadings, except with reference to his demand for $50 damages for the detention of the property, which was found against him. The value of the detained property was set out in the complaint as $275, the amount for which the court gave judgment, and, from an inspection of the verdict of the jury, it is plain that their intention was to find the plaintiff entitled to recover this sum of money from the defendant in case the specific personal property sued for should not be returned to him.

In rendering the judgment the court committed an error; but the judgment being regular in form, and jurisdiction being had by that tribunal, both of the person of the defendant and the subject-matter of the action, the judgment was not void on that account, but might have been reversed on appeal. We have been able to find no case which is precisely in point, but the reasoning of this court in Hunter v. Hoole, 17 Cal. 420, seems conclusive of the view we entertain.

The second point made by the appellant is not tenable, for, upon inspecting the complaint to which the judgment refers for a description of the property sued for, it will be found that it is full and ample, and therefore, under the rule of law, certum est quod certum reddi potest, the judgment is not void for want of certainty.

The defendant did not appeal from the judgment, and it being merely erroneous, and not void, it was the duty of the justice to have issued execution as requested. Failing in this duty, it was the plaintiff's right to invoke the writ of mandate issuing from the superior court. Section 1085, Code Civil Proc. The judgment should be affirmed.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the forgoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

CUMMINGS v. CUMMINGS and others. (No. 11,881.)

(Supreme Court of California. 1887.)

1. DIVORCE—JOINDER OF PARTIES AND CAUSES OF ACTION—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

With a suit for divorce, plaintiff also joined an action for the division of community property, uniting Ketchum, Simpson, and the Bank of Watsonville as defendants. The complaint alleged that, during the coverture of plaintiff and defendant Cummings, the latter acquired, by the joint efforts of himself and wife, a quantity of real estate, which was community property, and part of which, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, he attempted to convey to defendant Ketchum; that this was done with the purpose and intent on the part of both parties to the conveyance to defraud plaintiff of her rights in the property; that the conveyance was without consideration; that the Bank of Watsonville claims some interest in the property by reason of a mortgage thereon, given by Ketchum, but that the mortgage was taken with knowledge of the fraud of the above-named defendants, and for the purpose of assisting in carrying it out; that said Simpson claims an interest in the land, but that his interest or claim is subordinate to plaintiff's interest therein. Defendants Ketchum and the Bank of Watsonville demurred, on the grounds (1) that several causes of action were improperly united; (2) that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant. Held, that the demurrers should have been sustained.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE—ACTION BETWEEN—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

An action to set aside the conveyance of community property made by a husband, on the ground of fraud, cannot be maintained by the wife while the marriage bond exists.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

A. S. Kittredge, for appellant. Thomas H. Laine, Goldsby & Jetter, and Z. N. Goldsby, for plaintiff.

THORNTON, J. This action is brought by the plaintiff, Mary R. Cummings, against her husband, William N. Cummings, defendant, for a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, and for a division of the community property, etc. Morgan L. Ketchum, James L. Simpson, and the Bank of Watsonville were also made defendants.

It is averred in the complaint that, during the coverture of plaintiff and defendant Cummings, the latter acquired, by the joint efforts of plaintiff and defendant just above named, a large amount of real property in the city of Santa Cruz, of the value of $16,000 or thereabouts, which was community property, and that a portion of the property was a lot situate in the city of Santa Cruz, which is particularly described in the complaint. It is further averred that defendant Cummings, by an instrument in writing by him signed, acknowledged, and delivered on the eighteenth of May, 1876, in form a deed of conveyance, without the knowledge, approbation, or consent of plaintiff, purported to convey to defendant Ketchum the lot of land above mentioned, in which instrument $8,000 is stated as the consideration thereof; that Cummings and Ketchum, in the execution and delivery of the pretended conveyance, combined and confederated willfully for the purpose and with the intent to defraud plaintiff of her rights and interest in and to said property, and to fraudulently cover up and conceal the legal title for the sole use and benefit of defendants Cummings and Ketchum; that said conveyance was without consideration, and that no part of it was ever paid or ever agreed to be paid by Ketchum to Cummings; that the whole scheme is a contrivance to defraud plaintiff of her rights and interest in the property aforesaid.

As to the Bank of Watsonville, it is alleged that it has or claims to have some interest in the lot above mentioned; that its claim is based on a mortgage executed by Ketchum to it, dated on or about the sixteenth day of August, 1881; that said mortgage was taken with knowledge of the fraud of Ketchum and Cummings above set forth, and with the intent to enable Ketchum and Cummings to carry out the fraud aforesaid; that defendant Simpson has or claims to have some interest in the lot in controversy, but said interest is subordinate and subject to the interest of plaintiff in said lot. A like averment as that just preceding is made as to the interest of the Bank of Watsonville.

Ketchum and the bank demurred to the complaint on the following among other grounds: (1) That several causes of action have been improperly united, to-wit, an action for a divorce, and an action based on a fraud alleged to have been committed upon plaintiff's marital community rights, said fraud being wholly without relation to, connection with, or anticipation of, a divorce, or any proceedings therefor. (2) That there is a misjoinder of parties defendant,—William N. Cummings, defendant in an action for divorce, and these defendants as parties to an alleged fraud upon plaintiff's marital community rights,—said fraud being wholly without relation to, connection with, or anticipation of, a divorce, or any proceedings therefor. The demurrer was overruled, and the cause proceeded to trial. A nonsuit was granted as to the bank, and a judgment was rendered adverse to Ketchum.

It is contended that the demurrer on the grounds above mentioned should have been sustained, and we concur in this contention. The joinder of causes of action is governed by section 427, Code Civil Proc. That section is as follows:

"The plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint, where they all arise out of (1) contracts, express or implied; (2) claims to recover specific real property, with or without damages for the withholding thereof, or for waste committed thereon, and the rents and profits of the same; (3) claims to recover specific personal property, with or without damages, for the withholding thereof; (4) claims against a trustee by virtue of a contract, or by operation of law; (5) injuries to character; (6) injuries to person; (7) injuries to property. The causes of action so united must all belong to one only of these classes, and must affect all the parties to the action, and not require different places of trial, and must be separately stated; but an action for malicious arrest and prosecution, or either of them, may be united with an action for either an injury to character or to the person."

We do not find the causes of action here united, viz., an action for a divorce and an action to set aside a conveyance on the ground of fraud, to belong to any of the classes of action allowed to be united by the above section. Nor can Ketchum or the bank be made defendants in such a cause as this. They have no concern in the action for a divorce between plaintiff and her husband.

Furthermore, we are of opinion that the action to set aside a conveyance of the community property made by the husband, on the ground of fraud, cannot be maintained by the wife while the marriage bond exists. The reasons for this conclusion are given in Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 119, 121, where the point is decided. We think the ruling in that case is correct, and should be adhered to. The action which the wife can probably maintain during coverture is set forth in Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 121. When a decree of divorce has been obtained, the plaintiff can bring an action to redress any such wrong as she alleges she has sustained by the conduct of Ketchum. The court erred in not sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

The appointment of the receiver is without any ground to sustain it. Ketchum was a mortgagor in possession, with the right to collect the rents and profits. It is found that he had committed no fraud. He had a right to retain the whole property as security for the payment of the amount due him, and there was no ground to deprive him of the possession of any portion of the lot involved herein.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to discharge the receiver on his properly accounting, and to sustain the demurrer as to Ketchum. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

LEVY v. BURKLE and others. (No. 11,967.)

1. FRAUD—AS DEFENSE TO TRUST DEED.

In an action to foreclose a trust deed, where the answer set up that the property conveyed was the separate property of the wife; that her husband had been arrested on a criminal charge, and obtained bail; that he became financially embarrassed; and that the wife signed the trust deed upon the representation made to her by her husband and the plaintiff, who was a creditor of the husband and one of his bondsmen, that unless she signed the deed the bondsmen would withdraw, and her husband would have to go to jail, and would probably be convicted, and go to the penitentiary, and that by signing the deed she would not lose anything, and that the deed would not divest her of her homestead: held, that a demurrer to such answer was properly sustained.

2. TRUST DEED—ORDER OF SALE—RIGHT OF REDEMPTION.

A court has no authority to order a sale of property without the right of redemption given by statute; and it makes no difference whether the security under which the sale is ordered is a mortgage or a trust deed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

This was an action to obtain an order to sell certain property under a trust deed. The complaint alleges that, on the twenty-third of May, F. Burkle, one of the defendants, was indebted to sundry persons in about the sum of $3,000; that on that day he entered into an agreement with his creditors to pay to the plaintiff, Levy, as trustee, the amounts of his debts, in 12 monthly installments; that, to secure the payment of said sums, Burkle and his wife, Elizabeth Virginia Burkle, executed a trust deed to Levy; that in October, 1885, the Burkles commenced an action against Levy to have the trust deed vacated and set aside on the ground of fraud; that a judgment was rendered against them in this action, and subsequently they commenced another suit against Levy to have the deed vacated on the ground that the land conveyed was the homestead of defendants, and the separate property of the wife, and that the wife had been induced to sign the deed by fraud and undue influence; that the Burkles had declared that they intended to harass perpetually said Levy by litigation; that the threats, the bringing of the second suit, and the possession of the property by the Burkles, tend to cloud plaintiff's title, as such trustee, and he prays that the title of the trustee be declared good, and the trust property be sold without the right of redemption.

The defendants demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled, and they answered, denying the alleged threats to harass plaintiff, and setting up as new matter, by way of separate defense, that at the time of the execution of the trust deed the property conveyed was the separate property of the wife, and the homestead of herself and husband; that the wife executed the trust deed through fraud and undue influence on the part of the plaintiff. The fraud relied on was that on the second of May, 1884, her husband, who was a merchant in San Pedro, Los Angeles county, assaulted one Jones, and was arrested and taken to Los Angeles; that upon securing bail he was again arrested on a second complaint by Jones, and again compelled to give bail; that, from that time until the date of the execution of the trust deed, he was engaged in preparing to defend these proceedings; that his attorney and friends had told him that he would probably be convicted, and go to the penitentiary; that he became financially embarrassed, and his creditors began to harass him; that Levy, the plaintiff, who was one of the creditors, and a trusted adviser, suggested that he and his wife join in a deed of all her property to him (Levy) in trust, to conciliate the other creditors; that he was given to understand that his bondsmen, (Levy and one Jacoby,) both creditors, would withdraw from the bond, and he would have to go to jail, unless the deed was given; that prior to the date of the execution of said trust deed he confided to his wife all his troubles, as they were known to himself and Levy; that in consequence she became greatly agitated and unfitted for business, and while in this condition she was asked by Levy, he at the time knowing her condition, to attend a meeting of her husband's creditors, and was then asked to sign the trust deed; that she refused to do so until told by her husband and Levy that by so doing she could relieve her husband from his embarrassments, and that she would not lose anything thereby, and that the deed would not divest her of her homestead; that it was only upon the faith of these assurances that she signed the deed; that all the representations so made by her husband and Levy were intentionally and deliberately false on the part of said Levy. To this answer the plaintiff demurred, which demurrer was sustained, and defendants appealed.

For a former action between these parties, involving the same facts, see 11 Pac. Rep. 643.

P. W. Dooner, for appellants. Chapman & Hendrick and Graves & O'Melveny, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The demurrer to the answer of defendant Elizabeth Burkle was properly sustained. We are of opinion that there is error in the judgment in the direction for the sale of the property without the right of redemption. The right to redeem is given by statute, and the defendant cannot be deprived of it by the court. It makes no difference that the security here involved is a deed of trust. It was held at an early day in Kent v. Laffan, 2 Cal. 595, and ever since, that the statutory redemption applied to a sale on foreclosure of a mortgage. If it applies to a mortgage, it as well applies to a deed of trust. Both are securities only. The difference is only in form. In one case the mortgagee is the trustee; in the other a third person.

The judgment is ordered to be modified in the court below by striking out the direction for the sale without the right of redemption, and when so modified will stand affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

PEOPLE v. KERNAGHAN. (No. 20,209.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

In the charge to the jury in a trial for murder the language, "Your minds should be able to rest reasonably satisfied of the guilt of the defendant before a verdict of that character is given;" and, "On the other hand, however, mere probabilities of innocence or doubts, however reasonable, which beset some minds on all occasions, should not prevent such a verdict,"—does not injure the defendant, and is no ground for setting aside a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, when the court in other parts of its charge has fully and correctly stated the law on the subject of reasonable doubt.¹ TEMPLE, J., dissenting.

2. HOMICIDE—MANSLAUGHTER.

In a charge to the jury in a trial for murder, after giving a proper definition of manslaughter, the court added that it was homicide, "not excusable, not justifiable, but yet not intentional." Held that, as the intent in manslaughter, if present, may be disregarded, in accordance with the settled rule in California, the difference between the absence of intention and the presence of an intention which may be disregarded is too slight to be ground for setting aside a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

3. INSANITY—DEFENSE TO CRIME—EMOTIONAL INSANITY.

It is not error to state, in a charge upon the defense of insanity, that "the law rejects the doctrine of what is called 'emotional insanity,' which begins on the eve of the criminal act, and leaves off when it is committed."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county.

Robert Fernal and Clarence Gray, for appellant. Atty. Gen. G. A. Johnson, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. The jury found the appellant guilty of murder in the first degree, and assigned the punishment of death. He now contends for a reversal of the judgment upon the grounds that the court erroneously instructed the jury—First, as to reasonable doubt; second, as to manslaughter; third, as to excusable homicide; and, fourth, as to insanity. The difficulties in this case arise mostly out of the attempt of the learned judge of the court below to employ new and unusual forms of speech to state old principles, the proper expression of which has long since settled into well-considered and well-chosen language. For instance, the definition—or, rather, the description—of "reasonable doubt" given by Chief Justice SHAW in the Webster Case has been adopted by this court, and by nearly all American courts, as a statement of that mental condition sufficiently accurate. Therefore, where a nisi prius court had given the language used by Chief Justice SHAW, and had confined itself to such language, we would be slow to reverse the case, although other instructions upon the subject, not objectionable, had been asked by defendant, and had been refused. But, in the case at bar, the court, in addition to a correct statement of the law concerning reasonable doubt, taken substantially from the Webster Case, used other expressions which are objectionable; and the question to be determined is, does it appear from the whole charge, considered as an entirety, that the defendant was not injured by that part of it which, considered by itself, might be admitted to be erroneous? People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 93. For the solemn verdict of 12 men, rendered upon their oaths, will not be set aside for a mere "slip of the judge" in charging them, when no prejudicial injury was done thereby.

¹Respecting what is a reasonable doubt, see People v. Lee Sare Bo, ante, 310, and note; McCullough v. State, (Tex.) 5 S. W. Rep. 175.

The first objection to the charge on this subject is to the following language, which constitutes the latter clause of a sentence: "Your minds should be able to rest reasonably satisfied of the guilt of the defendant before a verdict of that character is given." "Reasonably satisfied," as here used, is undoubtedly an unfortunate expression. If it had stood alone, it might possibly have been understood by the jury as meaning "satisfied by a preponderance of evidence." But how could that be when the court had repeatedly told them that they must be convinced of defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and when, in a former part of the very sentence in which the objectionable words occur, it had said that "the probability of guilt outweighing the probability of innocence" was not sufficient to warrant a conviction? Keeping the whole charge in view, the jury could not have understood the words "reasonably satisfied" other than as an equivalent of the phrase "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt." We do not think, therefore, that this objection to the charge should work a reversal of the judgment.

The other main objection on this point is directed to the following language, which constitutes the first clause of a sentence: "On the other hand, however, mere probabilities of innocence or doubts, however reasonable, which beset some minds on all occasions, should not prevent such a verdict." To this language, standing by itself, we can attach no definite meaning, and it is not to be presumed that the jury could, or that they did, attach a meaning to it prejudicial to defendant. The latter part of the sentence is as follows: "But if the whole testimony in the case produces in your minds this degree of conviction of the guilt of the defendant,—that is, satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt,—it is your duty to say so by your verdict; if it does not, it is your duty to say, not guilty."

It must be remembered that the court, in other parts of its charge, had fully and correctly stated the law on the subject of reasonable doubt. Among other things, having said that the doubt was not sufficient if merely "chimerical, or based on groundless conjectures," it correctly defined reasonable doubt as "that state of the case which, after an entire consideration and comparison of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge." The practical administration of justice should not be allowed to depend too much upon nice questions in philology. In a case like the one at bar the real question should be, was the correct exposition of the law given in the main body of the charge so qualified by the injudicious expressions complained of as to impair its truthfulness as a whole? We think that this question, put in this case upon the point under discussion, should be answered in the negative; although, of course, we cannot commend all that was said in the instructions.

The charge of the court on the subject of manslaughter is correct, with the exception of the use of the words "not intentional." After giving a proper definition of manslaughter, and saying that "the distinguishing feature between murder and manslaughter is the presence or absence of malice," the court adds as follows: "In other words, gentlemen, manslaughter is a homicide, not excusable, not justifiable, but yet not intentional." The latter part of this language is, in one sense, inconsistent with former decisions of this court. It has been held by some eminent jurists that the sudden, irresistible passion, overcoming the reason, and deadening the conscience to the voice of humanity, which reduces unlawful homicide to manslaughter, is inconsistent with the notion of intention. And while this court has said in People v. Freel, 48 Cal. 436, that the intent to kill may be present in manslaughter, yet, in the same case, it said that "the law, out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, will disregard the actual intent." In People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 96, this court uses the same expression; and in discussing the distinction between murder in the second degree and manslaughter, says: "In the former cases the slayer is presumed to be actuated by an intent which may not exist; in the latter, out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, the slayer is presumed not to be actuated by an intent to kill, although such intent may, in fact, exist." Now, the distinction between no intent at all, and an intent which the law "disregards," and by which the slayer is "presumed not to be actuated," is a very slight basis for the reversal of a judgment. And the distinction becomes less apparent when we consider that one of the definitions of malice given in section 7, Pen. Code, is "an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law;" and that, in section 188, practically the same definition is given, although, in dividing malice into express and implied, the former is described as existing when the "intention" to kill is "manifested" by direct proof, and in the latter as resting on a "presumption of law." Indeed, the primary and generally received legal definition of malice includes the notion of intent. Some of the common definitions are, "the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, without just cause or excuse;" a "conscious violation of law;" "the intent from which flows any unlawful and injurious act, committed without legal justification." 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 33, and cases there cited. It is difficult, therefore, to reconcile the absence of malice with the presence of an intent to kill; and we would hesitate to set aside a verdict on such a delicate distinction, even in a case where it was apparent that the jury may have had doubts which involved the boundary line between manslaughter and murder in the second degree. But, in the case at bar, there were evidently no such doubts. The evidence tending to reduce the crime to manslaughter was of the very slightest character; and the jury, passing over murder in the second degree, not only found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, but imposed the extreme penalty of death, when it was in their discretion to assign the punishment of imprisonment for life. Under these circumstances we are of the opinion that the judgment should not be reversed for the alleged error here under discussion.

With respect to the charge of the court on the subjects of excusable homicide and insanity,¹ we deem it necessary to say, only, that in our opinion it

¹The instruction referred to is as follows: "One of the defenses interposed, as I understand it, is the plea of insanity; or, in other words, under a plea of not guilty, the defendant may interpose several defenses. He may rely upon insanity existing at the time of the alleged offense, and at the same time he may rely upon self-defense, or that the act was excusable or justifiable, and it is for you to determine, from all the evidence in the case, the validity of any defense he may have interposed. All men have not the same mental force or characteristics, nor is the same man at all times in the same condition as to his mental force or physical strength. His faculties may be impaired or diminished by sickness or bodily ailment, or by certain causes calculated to disturb or influence his passions; yet, if he be in possession of his senses, and able to judge of the moral qualities of his acts, and of the particular act for which he is arraigned, and to distinguish between right and wrong in regard to it, he is morally and legally responsible for his conduct, and amenable to the laws of the land. It is claimed, as I understand it, on the part of the defendant, that if he killed this Martha A. Hood, as alleged in the information, that he was mentally unconscious of the act in which he was engaged, and legally irresponsible for it. Insanity is a valid defense, if satisfactorily shown by the evidence. If the defendant was not in the possession of his faculties, was at the time incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in regard to the transaction, or of appreciating the moral qualities of his act, and the evidence satisfies you this is so, then he is not responsible, and should be acquitted. You are to judge of the character and quality of the defendant's acts, his state of mind, as evidenced by his conduct, declarations, acts, temperament, disposition, the influence which produces it, and all other circumstances which have been shown before you, and all was not erroneous. This court has frequently warned the judges of trial courts against the dangers of lengthy and ill-considered instructions to juries in criminal cases. We here repeat the admonition,—with little hope, however, that it will be heeded.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

I concur: PATERSON, J.

We concur in the judgment: SEARLS, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

TEMPLE, J., (dissenting.) I dissent. I think the judgment should be reversed. I think there was harmful error in the instruction in regard to reasonable doubt. It is true, the jury were also fully and correctly instructed upon this subject; that is, the other instructions given would have been correct if they had not been qualified by the erroneous one complained of. I see no possible purpose in the instruction unless it was intended to direct the jury as to the proper understanding of those given at the request of defendant. It must have been understood, and it was probably intended it should be, as are important subjects for you to consider in determining whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time of the commission of the alleged offense, if you find that he did commit it; and it is your duty, gentlemen, to bring your personal knowledge of human nature, the tendency of the human mind, to bear upon all the evidence in the case,—all facts proved or admitted before you, the acts and conduct of the defendant at the time, before, and subsequent to the alleged commission of the offense; and, in order to hold defendant criminally responsible, you must be satisfied that he has sufficient mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, as applied to the act he was about to commit, and was conscious that he was doing wrong. I will here state, gentlemen, that frenzy arising from the passion of anger, hatred, or revenge, no matter how furious, if not the result of a diseased mind, is not legal insanity. You must not confound anger or wrath with actual insanity; because, however absurd or unreasonable that may be, or a man may act when suddenly angered, if his mind is not absolutely deranged, it is not a legal excuse for the violation of the law. The law recognizes partial, as well as general, insanity; that is, that a person may be insane on one or more subjects, and sane as to the others, and that he may be laboring under a mental aberration in regard to some matter regarding a particular person or thing, and generally sane as to all other subjects. The law presumes everybody sane and responsible for his acts until the contrary is shown by the evidence; and, when insanity is set up as a defense to an alleged criminal act, the burden of proving it is upon the defendant to show, by a preponderance of evidence, that he was affected by insanity at the time of his act, to such extent that he did not know what he was doing was wrong. You will therefore understand, gentlemen, that where insanity is relied upon as a defense, that, as I have before stated, the burden of proof is upon the defendant, and the proof must be such in amount that, if the single issue of sanity or insanity should be submitted to a jury in a civil case, they must find that he was insane. A man may be of sound mind. He may be insane in many respects,—indeed, he may be a monomaniac on any given subject,—and yet his mind may be sane in all other respects. Such a man, though quite capable of judging between right and wrong in regard to an act of the nature of that of which he might be accused, cannot be said to be possessed of a sound intellect; yet he would be held responsible for the commission of a criminal act, except in a case where his peculiar unsoundness or monomania was involved. The law, therefore, does not require, as a condition on which criminal responsibility shall follow the commission of a crime, the possession of all the faculties with full vigor, or a mind wholly unimpaired by disease. But, to establish a defense on the ground of insanity on a criminal charge, you must be satisfied, as I have before remarked, by a preponderance of proof, that, at the time of committing the act charged, the accused was laboring under such a defect of reason from a diseased mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act that he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know it,—that he did not know what he was doing was wrong. The law rejects the doctrine of what is called 'emotional insanity,' which begins on the eve of the criminal act, and leaves off and ends when it is committed. Insanity is a manifestation of a disease of the brain; and the doctrine that an individual can be entirely sane the moment before and after the act was committed, and yet insane at the instant the act was committed, is contrary to every principle of law and sense. In this state the law is well settled that a morbid state of passion, though unsettling the moral system, the qualifying the other instructions upon the same subject. For instance, the jury were told that they must be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt; that they must have an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of his guilt, etc., but also that such degree of conviction was consistent with a well-founded doubt, and with a mere probability of innocence, however reasonable, and that, after all, to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt only meant that they should be reasonably satisfied; that is, that the degree of certainty was only that required in civil cases, which merely consists in ascertaining the preponderance of evidence,—was, in fact, something less; was even consistent with a reasonable probability of innocence.

I readily admit that a case should not be reversed because the judge, in some part of his charge, has omitted a needed qualification of some proposition, if it has been elsewhere supplied, and we can see that on the whole the jury has not been misled. Here, however, I am unable to resist the impression that the judge intended to lessen the effect of the forcible, though correct, statement of the doctrine of reasonable doubt in the instruction asked for, and that it probably did have that effect. I presume the judge used the mental faculties remaining meanwhile in a normal, healthy condition, does not excuse a relaxation. Indeed, emotional insanity, consisting of an irresistible impulse, co-existing with mental sanity, is no defense to a criminal charge. If you believe, from the evidence in the case, that the defendant was affected, and had an insane impulse to kill the deceased, but he could have successfully resisted it, he should have done so, and, if he did not do it, he is criminally responsible for the act. Whether he had any such impulse, and whether he could have resisted it, are questions for you, gentlemen, alone to determine. You are not to acquit the defendant on the ground of insanity unless you are satisfied, by a preponderance of evidence, that the killing of the deceased was produced by mental disease. It matters not, however, what the cause of the disease may be, if it is proved that the defendant did the killing in a moment of insanity. In such case he is not responsible or guilty. But if you believe, from all the evidence and circumstances in the case, that the defendant was in possession of a sound mind, and allowed his passion to escape control, he cannot claim from such acts the protection of insanity; for criminal laws are passed and enforced to restrain the evil passion of men, and it is no defense to an action to say that the defendant, though of sound mind, was carried away by rage and ungovernable passion. If his mind was not diseased to such an extent as to deprive him of self-control, he is bound to govern and control his actions, and if he gives way to his passions, and takes human life without cause, he must answer for his acts, and be held to strict accountability.

"Again, the law does not recognize a form of insanity in which the capacity of distinguishing between right and wrong exists, with the power of choosing between them. A criminal cannot be excused upon the ground of an irresistible impulse, when the offender has the ability to discover and exercise and see his legal and moral duty in respect to it. The law assumes and commands that one not insane can and must control his impulses, and holds him responsible if he does not. You will observe, gentlemen, from what I have already said, that in a criminal case, if the defendant relies upon insanity as a defense, the burden of proof is cast upon him; that the allegation of insanity is an affirmative proposition, which must be proved to your satisfaction, to overcome the presumption of sanity. Of course, you will understand that this may be established by a preponderance of proof. By a preponderance of proof I do not mean the greater number of witnesses on one side or the other which do not produce conviction in your mind, as against a less number whose testimony does produce such conviction; but by a preponderance of proof I mean and intend that you should understand the greater weight of evidence which satisfies your minds of the truth of the proposition in support of which it was given.

"And in conclusion, gentlemen, of this branch of our instructions, I will again say that the test of insanity in a case like the one at bar, and which will excuse the commission of a crime, is whether the accused, at the time of the commission thereof, was conscious that he was doing what he ought not to do; or, in other words, was the insanity of the defendant, if any such has been shown, such a diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties as to render him incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the act with which he is charged? If you are satisfied of this by a preponderance of the testimony, then he is not criminally responsible for any act which he may have committed. But, on the contrary, unless you are satisfied of this by a preponderance of testimony, then he is not relieved from any criminal responsibility of any act which he may have committed."

word "probability" of innocence by inadvertence, intending to say a "mere possibility of innocence." The judge's probable intentions, however, do not cure the error.

I do not think there was harmful error in the instruction in regard to manslaughter. The jury were told manslaughter is a homicide, not excusable, not justifiable, but yet not intentional. Other instructions fully and correctly defining manslaughter were also given. Applying the erroneous definition to the true one, as a qualification, they were told voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, but is unintentional. Now, if this definition involves a contradiction in terms, it is still but a harmless one. It simply tells the jury that an unlawful homicide, without malice, in a sudden heat of passion, is not intentional. It creates no confusion, and leaves no doubt as to the nature of the acts constituting voluntary manslaughter.

But whether it can properly be said that no homicide is intentional, when committed without malice, under an irresistible passion caused by a sudden and sufficient provocation, when there has not been time for reason to resume its sway, is merely a question as to the use of words. If there had been sufficient time for the voice of reason and humanity to be heard, the killing will be attributed to malice. Does that not mean that the provocation, the irresistible passion, and the rapidity with which the act follows, preclude the idea of intention; that such intent, if it exist, has not been realized in the judging mind, or recognized by the conscience, and therefore does not, in law or reason, amount to an intent? The definition of malice in the Penal Code would seem to favor this view. Section 7, Pen. Code. One of the definitions of malice there given is, "an intent to do a wrongful act." If the killing be unlawful and intentional, it is difficult to comprehend how it can be otherwise than malicious. There certainly would be an intent to do a wrongful act.

At all events, it seems to me that it is merely a choice between different forms of expression, whether we say that voluntary manslaughter is intentional, but because of the irresistible passion, upon a sufficient provocation, and the lack of time for reflection, out of compassion for the weakness of human nature, the law attributes the act to the passion; or that the sudden heat of passion is followed so quickly by the act as to preclude the idea of intention. The essential elements of the crime are the same. I do not think the case should be reversed for that portion of the charge in regard to emotional insanity.

To my mind, however, it resembles more the testimony of a medical expert than the charge of a court. It is not a statement of the doctrine of the case of People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120. That case merely says irresistible impulse, if it exists, does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense. The court there left the question whether it could exist to be determined as a fact from evidence. Here the court announces as a fact that one cannot be entirely sane a moment before and after the criminal act, and insane at the time. It is also announced that there may be a morbid state of passion which would unsettle the moral system, while the mental faculties remain in a normal and healthy condition. That may all be true, but it is not matter of law.

I think the judgment should be reversed for the reasons given.

THORNTON, J., (dissenting.) I dissent. We have examined the charge of the court upon the question of reasonable doubt, and are of opinion that it contains nothing which calls for a reversal. The direction on this point must be considered in its entirety; and if the whole charge, taken together, without giving a strained meaning to any portion of the language employed, harmonizes, and fairly and correctly presents the law bearing on the point, the judgment should not be disturbed because some of the words of the charge, taken by themselves, do not fully present the rule which is to be gathered from the whole text of the direction. People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 93. In this view, we find nothing contradictory in the direction given as to reasonable doubt.

The charge on the point above referred to is certainly, as to some expressions used in it, obnoxious to criticism. For instance, the learned judge of the trial court told the jury: "It is not every possible doubt, however slight, or however well founded, which should prevent a verdict of guilty; but a doubt, to have that effect, must be a reasonable one, arising from the evidence in the case,—that is, it must be founded in reason, arising out of the evidence, which leaves a rational uncertainty as to his guilt which nothing else in the case removes." Then follows this language: "The degree of conviction, in any mind, of the guilt of the defendant, should be something more than the mere probability of guilt outweighing the probability of innocence. Your minds should be able to rest reasonably satisfied of the guilt of the defendant before a verdict of that character is given." The court further said: "On the other hand, however, mere probabilities of innocence, or doubts, however reasonable, which beset some minds on all occasions, should not prevent such a verdict; but if the whole testimony in the case produces in your minds this degree of conviction of the guilt of the defendant,—that is, satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt,—it is your duty to say so by your verdict; if it does not, it is your duty to say, not guilty."

What is meant by a well-founded doubt, which should prevent a verdict of guilty, taken by itself, would present a singular question of law. But it is clearly explained by the clause which immediately follows. So also the words "doubts however reasonable" are clearly explained by the words which follow. The words "reasonably satisfied," conceding that they, by themselves, define only a preponderance of evidence, and that the jury were told that they could rest a verdict of guilty on such preponderance, such a gloss is removed by the language which follows, and the clear direction that reasonable doubt "is that state of the case which, after an entire consideration and comparison of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge."

It seems to us that the learned judge of the trial court used the expressions "doubts * * * well founded" and "doubts, however reasonable," with reference to doubts which might arise on a consideration of the evidence less than the whole,—on a consideration which might be called partial, and not embracing the testimony in the case in its entirety.

While we will not reverse for the expressions in the charge above given, and hold that the charge, as a whole, is not erroneous on the point of reasonable doubt, we feel bound to say that we cannot commend it. And we think it proper to admonish the judges of the trial courts to follow the beaten paths of the law, to instruct the jury in the formula of words well settled in this court, and refrain from the use of expressions in their directions which present questions on which appeals will be generally taken, and may sometimes demand a reversal of a judgment. It is safe to travel along the beaten paths,—ire super antiquas vias. It is dangerous to attempt to hew out a new one, when the old way lies patent before one. We are not convinced as yet that the directions as to reasonable doubt sanctioned by this and other courts can be improved; and we feel an abiding conviction, beyond a reasonable doubt, that this attempt to improve on the approved directions in this case was not a success.

It is contended that the court erred in giving the direction which follows: "Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. It is of two kinds: First, voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; second, involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act, which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection. The distinguishing feature between murder and manslaughter is the presence or absence of malice. If malice enters into the unlawful act by which death is caused, it is murder; but if malice is wanting, it is manslaughter. In other words, gentlemen, manslaughter is a homicide, not excusable, not justifiable, but yet not intentional." The court, having thus given the definition of manslaughter in its phases as voluntary and involuntary, concludes on this point by telling the jury that "manslaughter is a homicide, not excusable, not justifiable, but yet not intentional."

How the learned judge of the court below could say to the jury that manslaughter, a species of homicide, could be voluntary, and, if intentional, was not manslaughter, is a question defying solution. This latter direction, predicated of manslaughter, that to constitute it the homicide must be unintentional, is in direct contradiction of the former portion of the direction that it could be voluntary, and contrary to the definition of it given by the Code, which is quoted in the first part of the direction, (Pen. Code, § 192.) which is as follows: "Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice," and one kind of it may be "voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion." To say that manslaughter must be "not intentional" is in effect to say that it cannot be voluntary. It cannot be unintentional if it is voluntary. A voluntary homicide, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, is manslaughter. It must be with a will or volition to kill. When there is volition there is intention. To predicate of volition that it is unintentional is to say that volition must be involuntary, i. e., without volition, which is, in terms, a plain contradiction and a solecism. This court has so held in People v. Freel, 48 Cal. 436, cited approvingly in People v. Crowley, 56 Cal. 42, 43.

In Freel's Case, the question arose on a direction to the jury in these words: "You will also observe that the difference between murder and manslaughter is that in manslaughter there is no intention whatever either to kill or do bodily harm. The killing is the unintentional result of a sudden heat of passion, or of an unlawful act committed without due caution or circumspection." Of this direction the court said: "This is clearly erroneous. Whether the homicide amounts to murder, or manslaughter merely, does not depend upon the presence or absence of the intent to kill. In either case there may be a present intention to kill at the moment of the commission of the act. But when the mortal blow is struck in the heat of passion, excited by a quarrel, sudden, and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation, the law, out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, will disregard the actual intent and will reduce the offense to manslaughter. In such case, although the intent to kill exists, it is not that deliberate and malicious intent which is an essential element in the crime of murder." 48 Cal. 437.

But it is said that, conceding the instruction to be erroneous, the defendant was not injured by it, as the jury found him guilty of murder. Injury is always presumed from error, and it must be held that injury was done defendant, unless the record shows that it was not. That is not the case here. Though there is evidence of threats and of deliberation, still there is testimony which, in our judgment, calls for a proper definition of manslaughter. The testimony shows that defendant ordered the person slain out of his house, and that she refused to go; that he took hold of her to put her out, when she seized a hammer which he had in his pocket, and struck him on the head with it. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the defendant had a right to have the offense of manslaughter correctly defined to the jury, which was not done here.

This is no merely technical point. It is one of substantial importance. Indeed, it may have caused the conviction of the defendant, for the instruction given was equivalent to a direction to the jury that, if the killing was in-tionally done, it was murder. And as the evidence showed without a doubt the blows were intentionally given from which death resulted, the jury, if they obeyed the instruction, could have found no other verdict than that which affirmed that defendant was guilty of murder.

The court did not err in using this language to the jury in the connection in which it was used: "But the killing is not excusable, if it was apparent to the party killing at the time the act was committed, or would have been apparent to a reasonable man in his place and situation and stead, the crime resisted could have been prevented or arrested by other means." The words just quoted were employed to qualify the following, which preceded them: "The law authorizes the killing of one who is in the act of committing a forcible felony, and even one who appears to be in the act of doing so, for the purpose of prevention and not punishment, but the killing is not punishment." It is manifest here that the direction intended was in relation to the killing of a person to prevent his committing a crime, and in that view the language objected to was not objectionable.

A point is raised in regard to some of the language used in the charge in regard to the defense of insanity. The law as affirmed in it was correctly laid down and explained, in accordance with the ruling of this court in People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120. The rule of the case cited will be adhered to by this court, and should be by all courts. There was nothing objectionable in the language used by the court in regard to "what is called 'emotional insanity,' which begins on the eve of the criminal act, and leaves off and ends when it is consummated." The court said, and said properly, the law rejects the doctrine of emotional insanity, using the words quoted above. This is correct. The law does reject it, and casts it out of the temple of justice as one which should not be allowed to enter its precincts. It should ever be a stranger there. The law condemns such a defense as founded in fraud and folly, and, when permitted, is always used as a pretext by weak-minded jurors, unmindful of their oaths, to render a verdict of acquittal in cases where guilt has been incurred.

For the error of the court above pointed out the judgment and orders should be reversed, and the cause remanded, and a new trial ordered.

STOKES v. BALAAM. (No. 11,663.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 27, 1887.)

1. CONDITIONAL SALE—CONVERSION—DAMAGES.

Where A. sold B. wood on A.'s land, to be cut by B., the wood to remain the property of A. until one dollar per cord was paid on it, and, before such payment was made, the wood was seized and sold upon attachment and execution against B.'s husband, held, in an action brought by A. against the sheriff for conversion, that A. retained, not merely a lien upon the wood for the payment of the one dollar per cord, but the title to it, and should recover the full value of the wood.¹

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

In such an action, such questions as, "How long did that wood remain there?" "How much is that wood worth that remains upon the premises after this wood that had been sold under execution had been taken away?" "How much stumpage is due upon that five or six hundred cords?" "How much stumpage is there due upon the wood that was sold by Mr. Balaam?" "How much of that 195 cords of wood is now on, or was at the time of the sale upon, your land?"—are irrelevant.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action for conversion of wood.

Atwell & Bradley, for appellant. C. A. Webb and O. Sanders, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The evidence in this cause shows plainly that the wood, for the conversion of which this action was brought, was cut under an agreement made with the plaintiff by Mrs. Rachael Bashore, under which the latter was to cut the wood on plaintiff's land, and when cut it was to remain the property of plaintiff until one dollar a cord was paid to plaintiff by Mrs. Bashore. This one dollar per cord was never paid. The wood was seized by the defendant as sheriff of Tulare county, as the property of the defendant, under a writ of attachment issued in an action brought by Ah Sing against John Bashore, who was the husband of Rachael Bashore. The wood was afterwards sold by the defendant under a writ of execution issued on a judgment recovered in the action above stated.

There was no controversy as to the value of the wood at the date of the conversion, which was put at $877.50. The evidence shows that the wood was the property of the plaintiff, and he was entitled to recover damages for the sum above mentioned.

The verdict, which was for $195, is not sustained by the evidence, and the judgment must therefore be reversed. There is no testimony on which to base a verdict on the theory that the plaintiff had only a lien for $195, the amount for which the verdict was rendered, and the directions of the court on such a theory tended to and must have misled the jury.

The following questions, allowed to be put to the witness, (Stokes,) were clearly irrelevant, and should have been ruled out: "How long did that wood remain there?" "How much is that wood worth that remains upon the premises after this wood that had been sold under execution had been taken away?" "How much stumpage is due upon that five or six hundred cords?" "How much stumpage is there due upon the wood that was sold to Mr. Balaam?" "How much of that 195 cords of wood is now on, or was at the time of the sale upon, your land?" All the above questions were entirely irrelevant to any legitimate matter of inquiry in the case.

The instructions in relation to a lien were erroneous, as not being founded on any testimony in the cause, and were misleading. In fact, it is evident from what occurred on the trial that the jury were actually misled by such instructions.

The bill of exceptions shows that the jury, after their deliberation, came into court and a juror said, "We have decided the ownership of the wood, leaving out any claim for damages." To this the court replied, "Yes; but the wood itself is worth something." The juror said further, "We find the plaintiff still owns the wood." The court said, "There is other wood there," etc. The jury again retired, and found a verdict for $195 and interest; whereas, if they had already determined that the plaintiff was the owner of the wood, they should have found the admitted value of the wood, $877.50, as damages in favor of the plaintiff. The verdict could only have been found on the idea that the plaintiff had nothing more than a lien on the wood for $1 a cord, and was therefore only damaged $195.

In accordance with the foregoing, the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with the views herein set forth. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

NOTE.

A CONDITIONAL SALE, by which the title of chattels does not pass, is valid, as well against third persons as against the parties to the transaction. Harkness v. Russell, 7 Sup. Ct. But see Loving Pub. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex.) 4 S. W. Rep. 532.

Where one to whom a conditional sale of personal property has been made, sells it to a third person, without the knowledge or consent of the vendor, such third person acquires no better title, as against the original vendor, than the first purchaser had, and may be held liable to him for conversion. Baals v. Stewart, (Ind.) 9 N. E. Rep. 403. In such case the measure of damages for the unlawful detention of such property would be, ordinarily, the value of the use of the property from the time it was illegally refused to be surrendered to the vendor, till the rendition of the verdict of the jury, excluding any compensation for the use of the property while the vendee held it legally, and abating nothing from the damages because of payments made by the vendee to the vendor for the property, under the contract. *McGinnis v. GOLSON and others v. DUNLAP and others. (No. 11,512.)

1. FRAUD—SALE BY DEVISEE TO EXECUTOR.

In an action by a devisee to set aside a sale made by him to the executor, in which the complaint alleges that the land sold aggregated in value more than four times the amount paid, the court must pass upon the question of adequacy of consideration, and, if no evidence is introduced, should find in accordance with the presumption which in such cases exists against the defendant.

2. SAME—INADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE AND PRESUMPTION.

In an action by a devisee to set aside a sale made to the executor, on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, mere proof of a valuable consideration having passed will not be held to rebut the presumption of an insufficient consideration raised in such cases by Civil Code Cal. § 2235, providing that all transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary, during the continuance of the trust, are presumed to be without sufficient consideration, but, the issue of inadequacy of consideration being raised, the facts must be found.

3. SAME.

In an action by a devisee to set aside a sale made to the executor, it is not necessary, in order to establish the fact of adequacy of consideration, to show more than that a fair, reasonable value, and not necessarily the full value, at the time was paid for the property, and a subsequent advance will not be regarded as affecting the question.

4. JUDGMENT—ESTOPPEL—EXECUTORS.

Where an executor buys land from a devisee, and a deed thereof is made to his wife, and afterwards the executors make a deed of the same property to her, under a power of sale in the will, and thereafter the property is distributed to her under a decree of the probate court, the executor cannot plead such order of distribution by way of estoppel to an action brought against him by the devisees to set aside the sale; the question of setting aside the deed not having been presented and considered upon the application for distribution.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Smith & Hupp and Chapman & Hendrick, for appellants. C. E. Thorn and Bicknell & White, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Action by devisees to set aside a sale to executors. The executors, who were old residents of Los Angeles, where the property is situated, caused their attorneys to write to Texas, where the devisees resided; that, after settling up most of the estate, there remained "certain odds and ends of land" which would have to be sold or divided; that it was for the best interest of the estate that these odds and ends should be sold together; and that they were willing to become the purchasers at a reasonable figure, but that an investigation must first be had by the parties interested, and requesting that an agent be sent out with power to act, and offering to advance the expenses of the trip. The devisees thereupon sent out an agent with power to act. This agent could neither read nor write. He was accompanied, however, by a friend who was a competent business man. It is not entirely clear as to what was the function of this latter. He did not hold the power of attorney, and testifies that he was not the agent of the devisees. He seems to have been some sort of relative of the decedent, and to have come along to advise the agent. After remaining a week in Los Angeles, a bargain was concluded, whereby the interests of the devisees were sold for $10,000. A deed was thereupon made to Susan Dunlap, the wife of one of the executors. After this the executors, acting under a power of sale in the will, made a deed of the same property to Susan Dunlap. A week after this deed, the property was distributed to Susan Dunlap by decree of the probate court, and within a month thereafter she conveyed to the executors. It is admitted that she acted for the executors throughout the transaction.

The two conveyances to Susan Dunlap illustrate an important distinction with reference to attempts of trustees to acquire the trust-estate, which distinction has been frequently pointed out, but not always observed. Where the trustee is charged with the duty of selling the property, and he does not deal directly with the cestui que trust there, whether the trustee holds the legal title or not, and whether he takes a conveyance directly to himself, or acts through the intervention of a third person, the sale, although not, as a general rule, absolutely void, (Blockley v. Fowler, 21 Cal. 329; Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19,) is voidable at the election of the cestui que trust, (Blockley v. Fowler, 21 Cal. 329; Guerrero v. Ballerino, 48 Cal. 118; Tracy v. Colby, 55 Cal. 71,) without reference to the question of the adequacy of the price, (San Diego v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 106; O'Connor v. Flynn, 57 Cal. 293.) These decisions are in accordance with the great preponderance of authority elsewhere. See Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. 393; Hamilton v. Wright, 9 Clark & F. 123; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503; Wormley v. Wormley, 8 Wheat. 441; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 260, 261; Van Epps v. Van Epps, 9 Paige, 241; Jewett v. Miller, 10 N. Y. 405; Brothers v. Brothers, 7 Ired. Eq. 150; Scott v. Freeland, 7 Smedes & M. 418; Romaine v. Hendrickson, 27 N. J. Eq. 164, 165; Thorp v. McCullum, 1 Gilman, 626, 627. Whether an exception obtains where permission to buy is granted by the court, or by the cestui que trust, having full knowledge of the situation, need not be considered; there being no permission of the court in this case, and nothing to show that the devisees had any knowledge of the executor's deed. This deed from the executors to Susan Dunlap may, therefore, be dismissed from consideration.

The distinction between the above class of cases and those in which the trustee purchases directly from his cestui que trust, although not always observed, has been frequently pointed out. See Lewin, Trusts, 463; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 957; Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. 626; Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 100; Brown v. Cowell, 116 Mass. 465. In this latter class of cases inquiry will be made into the fairness of the transaction, and, under proper conditions, it will be sustained. In the language of Lord ELDON: "A trustee may buy from the cestui que trust, provided that there is a distinct and clear contract, ascertained to be such after a jealous and scrupulous examination of all the circumstances, provided the cestui que trust intended the trustee should buy, and there is no fraud, no concealment, and no advantage taken by the trustee of information acquired by him in the character of trustee." Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. *247.

It is obvious that an investigation of questions of this kind is a very delicate and difficult affair, and courts of equity have emphasized the strictness with which such transactions should be viewed. As was said in Whelan v. Whelan, 3 Cow. 576, 577, by WOODWORTH, J., adopting the language of Sir SAMUEL ROMILLY: "If the court sees that any arts or stratagems, or any undue means, have been used; if it sees the least speck of imposition at the bottom; if there be the least scintilla of fraud,—this court will and ought to interpose." Nevertheless, it is well settled that under proper conditions the transactions would be sustained.

Applying this rule, can the sale from the devisees to the executors be allowed to stand? One of the important elements of this inquiry is as to the adequacy of the consideration. Was there inadequacy of consideration? This question is presented by the record in distinct outlines. The complaint alleges that the odds and ends of land aggregated in value the sum of $17,008, of which the share of the devisees was $39,273. The court made no finding upon this issue, but simply stated that there was no evidence "from which the court is able to find the actual value of the residue of the estate at the time of the conveyance." This cannot operate as a finding. Speegle v. Leese, 51 Cal. 415; Campbell v. Buckman, 49 Cal. 367. If no evidence was introduced, the court should have found the fact against the parties upon whom was the burden of proof, or, in other words, in accordance with the presumption, which, in this instance, was against the defendants.

It is contended, in support of the judgment, however, that the issue was immaterial, and that, therefore, no finding upon it was necessary. This proposition is based upon section 2235, Civil Code, which is as follows: "Sec. 2235. All transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary during the continuance of the trust, or while the influence acquired by the trustee remains, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence." The argument is that the words "sufficient consideration," in this section, do not mean an adequate consideration, but a consideration which is sufficient to support a contract between ordinary parties; and that, since it appears that there was a valuable consideration in this case, the court is not to inquire further.

It is to be observed of this proposed construction that it would place all trustees upon a level, and measure their obligations by the same standard. But the analogies of the law of trusts have been extended to so many classes of cases, and the term "trustee" is applied to so many persons whose obligations certainly vary in a considerable degree, that we think it could hardly have been intended to apply a Procrustes rule to them all. A fixed standard might gratify a love of symmetry, and be easy of application, but would not further the ends of justice. In our view, the words "sufficient consideration" mean, not sufficient to support a contract between ordinary parties, but sufficient to support the particular transaction. And, with reference to what consideration is sufficient to support the particular transaction, resort must be had to the rules of courts of equity. These rules were flexible in character, and adapted to the varying circumstances which chance or ingenuity might present. With respect to adequacy of consideration, no unbending rule, applicable to all cases, can be framed, because there are classes of cases which have features which prevent the operation of a fixed rule. The leading text writers speak of adequacy of consideration as essential. See 1 Perry, Trusts, § 195; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 958; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 311. Compare, also, Grosvenor v. Sherratt, 28 Beav. 663; Edwards v. Meyrick, 2 Hare, *70; Boyd v. Hawkins, 2 Dev. Eq. 331; Coffee v. Ruffin, 4 Cold. 515; Rose v. Mynatt, 7 Yerg. 36; Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 440; Rubidoe v. Parks, 48 Cal. 220. But this is too sweeping. For there may be cases in which no valuable consideration is necessary. Thus, while a gift from a cestui que trust to his trustee is exceedingly difficult to sustain, (see Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Ves. *296,) it will in proper cases be upheld. See Hunter v. Atkins, 3 Mylne & K. *113; Harris v. Tremenheere, 15 Ves. 39; Marshall v. Stephens, 47 Amer. Dec. 604. The principle upon which such cases rest is that it was the intention of the cestui que trust to part with his property without consideration; and if a court of equity can clearly see that such intention was induced by laudable motives, and not by want of knowledge of the situation, or by undue influence or deceptive arts on the part of the trustee, it will allow the intention to prevail. So there may be cases where, owing to special circumstances, it is necessary for the cestui que trust to sell without delay, and no one can be found who will buy, and the trustee, acting in entire good faith, gives more for the property than any one else will give. In such case it is for the interest of the cestui que trust to allow the trustee to buy, and it would be hard measure to set aside the sale merely because the sum which the trustee was able or willing to give was less than the value of the property,—the transaction being unexceptionable in other respects. It is too sweeping, therefore, to say that in all cases there must be an adequate consideration, if the word is to be used in any ordinary acceptance.

On the other hand, the element of adequacy of consideration is most important. The great object of the rule is to prevent imposition on the part of trustees; and, in one sense, this may be said to be to prevent trustees from acquiring the property of their cestuis que trust for an inadequate consideration. To disregard the question of inadequacy, therefore, is to attempt to apply a rule while shutting one's eyes to its object and purpose. The writers above referred to are not very far out of the way in speaking of adequacy of consideration as essential. It is safe to say that while mere inadequacy of price is not itself the ground upon which a transaction between trustee and cestui que trust is set aside, yet that any considerable inadequacy, taken by itself, raises a presumption of imposition by the trustee, which is only to be rebutted by clear proof of special circumstances showing the propriety of the transaction. It certainly cannot be ignored, and the transaction sustained without reference to it, as was done in the court below.

Nor can it be said that this is a mere matter of evidence. It rises to the rank of a probative fact, such as has frequently been held by the court to be proper in findings. The ultimate ground upon which transactions between trustees and cestui que trust are set aside is fraud, actual or constructive, as the case may be; and the rules of pleading require that the facts constituting the fraud (of which this is one) shall be set forth. Being properly pleaded, such facts must be found. For, under our system, whatever is properly in issue must be found, unless there are other issues which effectually and finally dispose of the case.

It is proper to say, for the guidance of the court below upon a retrial, that it is not the highest possible price that must be taken as the standard, but the fair, reasonable value of the property. Speaking of transactions with expectant heirs and reversioners, a class to whom, on grounds of public policy, the greatest protection is afforded, (compare 1 Perry, Trusts, § 188,) Judge Story says: "It is not necessary to establish in evidence that the full value of the reversionary interest or other expectancy has been given according to the ordinary tables for calculations of this sort. It will be sufficient to make the purchase unimpeachable if a fair price, or the fair market price, be given therefor at the time of the dealing." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 336.

As remarked in the foregoing extract, the time to be taken is the time of the dealing. A subsequent advance is not to be regarded. In the leading case of Fox v. Mackreth, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 115, Lord THURLOW would not give any weight to the circumstance that the trustee happened to sell at an advanced price, saying: "The money would be due, not in consequence of what Mackreth afterwards sold it for, but what Fox lost by it at the time." So, in Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 246, where the trustee had subsequently sold for a greater sum, Lord ELDON said: "Inadequacy of price does not depend upon a person giving a pretium affectionis from any peculiar motive, beyond what any other man would give,—the reasonable price. * * * Accidental subsequent advantage made of a bargain is nothing." The fair value at the time, under all the circumstances, must be the criterion.

Finally, it is contended that the decree of distribution to Susan Dunlap operates as an estoppel against the plaintiffs. But if we assume, in favor of the respondents, that this question of setting aside the deed for fraud could have been presented and considered upon the application for distribution, it nevertheless was not so presented or considered. And the rule is that a party having an equitable defense may let judgment go at law, and proceed in equity. Lorraine v. Long, 6 Cal. 452; Hough v. Waters, 30 Cal. 310.

It is unnecessary in the view we take to consider the other points made.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

BELCHER, C. C., concurs.

CONNEAU v. GEIS. (No. 11,617.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 1, 1887.)

1. JURY TRIAL—JURORS' FEES.

Where in a civil action the defendant demands a trial by jury, but fails to deposit the jury fees required by the rules of the court to be paid in advance, the case may be tried without a jury.

2. ESCROW—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS.

Where a deed made in consideration of a prior indebtedness is deposited with a third party in escrow, to be delivered to the grantee in case the grantors do not sell and pay off the indebtedness within an agreed time, and they make a sale, but do not make the payment within the time, a purchaser with notice of the escrow obtains no right under a second deed made the grantors.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

S. W. Geis, in pro. per., and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Wright & Hazen, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The defendant demanded a trial by jury, but failed to deposit the sum of $24, which, according to its rules, the court required to be deposited with the clerk, as jury fees, before the commencement of the trial. The case was thereupon tried without a jury, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. The first question is whether the court could rightfully require the advance of this sum. We think that the advance of the fees was a reasonable regulation of the mode of the enjoyment of the right of a jury trial, and that the making of such a regulation cannot be said to be a denial or impairment of the right.

The expense of a jury demanded by a party is expense incurred on his behalf, and at his instance. It is reasonable and just that he should bear this expense; and it always has been the law and the practice to collect it from one or the other of the litigants. The point is not and could not be that the court had no right to make the parties pay it, but that it could not be collected in advance. But if the court has the right to make the parties pay, it does not seem that the time of its collection is of such importance as to change the character of the requirement. A rule requiring the fee to be paid in advance is a reasonable precaution to prevent the jurors from being defrauded by unscrupulous parties, and to prevent the demand of a jury being used as a pretext to obtain continuances and thus trifle with justice. The right to bring suit, and the right to appeal to a higher court, are as fully secured by the constitution as the right to a trial by jury; yet it has always been the practice to collect the fees therefor before the suit is commenced or the record on appeal is filed. And we do not see how such a proceeding impairs the right in the one case any more than in the other. If the court has a right to require the payment of a jury fee in advance, the refusal to pay it is the refusal to have a jury trial, and, since this is the party's own act, he cannot be said to be deprived of anything. Upon analogous principles it was held, even in a criminal case, that where, after a demurrer, a defendant refused to plead, such refusal was a refusal of a jury trial or any trial, and that judgment should be entered against him without further ceremony; the court, per SANDERSON, C. J., saying: "The intent of the constitution is to secure every person charged with crime a fair and impartial trial by jury, but not to place it in his power to evade a trial altogether." People v. King, 28 Cal. 266.

The authorities in other states bear out the proposition that the making of a reasonable regulation of the mode of enjoyment of the right of trial by jury is not a denial or impairment of the right. Thus in Biddle v. Com., 13 Serg. & R. 410, the provision was for a trial in the first instance before a magistrate without a jury, but, upon complying with the requisite conditions, the party could appeal to a higher court, where the case was to be tried by a jury. The condition of the appeal was that the party should make affidavit that "he verily believed injustice had been done him, and that the appeal was not made for the purpose of delay." The court held that there was no impairment of the right of trial by jury, and TILGHMAN, C. J., delivering the opinion, said: "Laws such as these promote justice, and leave the substance of the trial by jury unimpaired, and that is all that is required by these expressions in the constitution." A similar ruling was made in Keddie v. Moore, 2 Murph. 45, in which case the condition was that the party should give a bond, the court, per LOCKE, J., saying: "The party wishing to appeal may be subjected to some inconvenience in getting security, but this inconvenience does not in this, nor in any other case where security is required, amount to a denial of the right." A similar ruling was made in Beers v. Beers, 4 Conn. 539, the court, per HOSMER, C. J., saying: "A law containing arbitrary and unreasonable provisions, made with the intention of annihilating or impairing the trial by jury, would be subject to the same considerations as if the object had been openly and directly pursued. But, on the other hand, every reasonable regulation made by those who value this palladium of our rights, and directed to the attainment of the public good, must not be deemed inhibited, because it increases the burden or expense of the litigating parties. Such a degree of morbid sensibility may be excited on this subject as to generate an opinion that the legal requisition of a bond, the increase of jurors' fees, and other trivial changes, although imperiously demanded to promote justice and the general convenience, if they only operate to subject the trial by jury to a burden not unreasonable, are a violation of the constitution. * * * As the interests of a state, however, do not essentially depend on the existence of one right only, but on many, it is proper to preserve them generally, and not to sacrifice one important consideration to another equally important." And similar decisions have been made in other cases. See Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 341; Flint River Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 195; Morford v. Barnes, 8 Yerg. 446.

The foregoing cases seem to us to proceed upon the principle above stated, viz., that a reasonable regulation of the mode of enjoyment is not a denial or impairment of the right, although, in the cases referred to, the regulation was not the prepayment of the jury fees. But in Adams v. Corrington, 7 Minn. 456, (Gil. 365,) the precise point was decided. The court below refused a jury trial, because the defendant declined to advance a jury fee of three dollars, and tried the case without a jury. On appeal, this was held to be proper, the court, per EMMETT, C. J., saying: "The objection to the jury fee we do not think is well taken. It is altogether too broad. It is not that the fee is so unreasonably high as to impede the due administration of justice, but because a fee is charged at all. We can see no valid objection to a reasonable fee of this kind. The constitution does not guaranty to the citizen the right to litigate without expense, but simply protects him from the imposition of such terms as unreasonably and injuriously interfere with his right to a remedy in the law, or impede the due administration of justice. And that a party who demands a trial by jury should be required to advance a small jury fee, whether it is considered as a tax on litigation or as a part of the expense which is necessarily incurred in his behalf, seems no more liable to a constitutional objection than is the requirement that the fees of the clerk, sheriff, and other officers shall be paid in advance when demanded. If the clause in the constitution means that we shall be permitted to litigate literally 'without price,' there is an end to all fees, from the issuing of summons to the entry of satisfaction of the judgment." And see, also, People v. Hoffman, 3 Mich. 248; Randall v. Kehlor, 60 Me. 44, 45; Venine v. Archibald, 3 Colo. 165.

If it be objected that a regulation might be made which would amount to a denial of the right, the answer is that, when such shall be the case, the court will doubtless afford the appropriate remedy.

Upon the merits, the case turned upon the delivery of a deed to the plaintiff. The deed, which was in consideration of a prior indebtedness, (Schluter v. Harvey, 65 Cal. 159, 3 Pac. Rep. 659,) was left with one Perley in escrow. There is a conflict in evidence as to what the condition was. One of the grantors testified, on behalf of the defendant, as follows: "The contract was that, if in thirty days I made a sale of the property, the deed was to be given to me, and, if I did not, it was to be delivered to Conneau." On the other hand, Perley testified as follows: "It was left with me by consent of all parties, to be delivered to Conneau in case Manning & Steffin failed to sell the land in thirty days and pay the money. * * * The transaction was a complete and fair understanding. The deed was delivered to me to remain in my possession for thirty days, and, in case they then failed to pay Conneau his mortgage within that time, it was to be delivered to him." In view of this conflict, it must be taken, from the findings in favor of the plaintiff, that the payment of plaintiff's indebtedness was part of the condition upon which the deed was to be ineffectual. And since the money was not paid, Manning & Steffin had no right to make a second deed to the defendant, who took with notice of the escrow.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment and order are affirmed.

WARD v. MATTHEWS. (No. 11,590.)(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1887.)

1. RESULTING TRUST—PURCHASE OF LAND—FRAUD.

In an action in the nature of ejectment the court found as matter of fact that defendant, in June, 1881, made an agreement with a railroad company to purchase the land in question, the first payment of $225.28 to be made July 8, 1881, when a written contract should be entered into allowing defendant five years from the latter date for the payment of the balance of the purchase money; that on July 5, 1881, the plaintiff paid to the company the $225.28 for the use and benefit of defendant; that it was verbally agreed between the parties that the contract should be taken in the name of plaintiff as security for the sum advanced, and it was further agreed that the $225.28, with interest, should be repaid to plaintiff in one year; that plaintiff, within the year, extended the time of payment six months; that, before the six months expired, plaintiff paid the balance, $703, to the company, and took a deed to himself of the land; that this payment was voluntary on the part of plaintiff, and was unknown to defendant; that plaintiff had never demanded payment of any of the money advanced; that defendant had been ready to pay the amount due, but plaintiff had refused to make any statement or accept payment; that defendant, with the knowledge and approval of plaintiff, had resided on and improved the land since May, 1880; that plaintiff did not purchase from defendant his rights under the contract of sale with the railroad company. Held, that the evidence established a resulting trust in favor of the defendant which the court would enforce.¹

2. TRIAL—ISSUES—FINDINGS—RESULTING TRUST—REFORMATION OF CONTRACT.

In an action in the nature of ejectment in which the defendant pleaded that he was the equitable owner of the lands; that he had contracted to purchase them from a railroad company, and applied to the plaintiff to advance the first installment of the price, agreeing to allow him to retain the land contract as security; and that the plaintiff did advance such installment, but falsely and fraudulently, and without defendant's knowledge or consent, induced the company to make the contract in his own name,—a finding of the court that it was verbally agreed that the contract of sale should be taken in the name of the plaintiff is within the issues, and does not amount to a reformation of the contract, which was not prayed for.

3. STATUTE OF FRAUDS—CONTRACT NOT TO BE PERFORMED WITHIN A YEAR—RESULTING TRUST.

In such action it appeared that the defendant, not having the money to pay for certain lands which he had purchased, obtained an advance of the necessary amount from the plaintiff. The title to the lands was taken in plaintiff's name for his security, and it was agreed that the amount advanced should be repaid within a year. The arrangement was verbal, and, although (as both parties concurred in stating) it was agreed that the contract should be reduced to writing, this was never done. Before the expiration of the year the plaintiff agreed to extend the time of payment for a further period of six months. Held, that the fact that the contract had never been reduced to writing did not render it void, since it was originally intended to be performed within one year, and the extension had taken place before the expiration of that period, and that, therefore, the defendant was entitled to enforce the resulting trust in his favor.²

4. CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—TIME AS OF THE ESSENCE.

Where B. agrees to advance A. the first installment of the purchase price of certain lands, which should be repaid within one year, the contract being taken in B.'s name for his security, and B., during an extension of such period of repayment, without A.'s consent or knowledge, pays the balance of the price, and obtains a title to the land in his own name by such payment of the balance, and B.'s refusal to afford A. any opportunity to pay the money he owed, either by a demand for payment, or by furnishing a statement when asked for by A., time ceases to be of the essence of the contract.

5. EQUITY—DECREE—DEPOSIT.

In an action in the nature of ejectment, the court found that the plaintiff had advanced the purchase price on behalf of the defendant, and that he held the legal title in trust for him, and ordered that, upon tender of the amount due, the plaintiff execute deed of the premises to defendant; and further directed that, should plaintiff refuse or neglect to execute such deed, the clerk of court was appointed commissioner with full power to make, execute, and deliver the same. Held, that the plaintiff could not object to the decree that, in the event of his refusal to make the deed, it deprived him of his security without his receiving the amount found due, as it was incumbent on the defendant to tender to and deposit the money with the commissioner before he was entitled to obtain a deed which would divest the plaintiff's title to the land.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action to recover possession of certain real property, with damages for its detention. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff held the lands in trust for him; that he arranged to purchase the land from the Central Pacific Railroad Company; "that in June, 1881, or thereabouts, being required by said company to make the said first payment on said land, he made application to the plaintiff herein for money sufficient for that purpose, and said plaintiff thereupon agreed to advance for said defendant to said company the amount required to make said payment, in consideration of the defendant's promise to repay the same within one year, with interest at one and one-fourth per cent. per month. And it was further agreed by and between said plaintiff and defendant that, as security to said plaintiff for the repayment to him of the sum of money advanced, he was to receive and hold the contract thereafter to be made by said railroad company to this defendant; that said plaintiff did advance for the benefit of this defendant, and did pay to said company, the sum of $225.28 on or about the eighth day of July, 1881; that by means of false and fraudulent representations, and without the knowledge or consent of this defendant, said plaintiff induced said company to make said contract in the name of the plaintiff, and said company did so make and execute said contract; that thereafter, and before the expiration of the year within which said sum of money was to be repaid to said plaintiff, said plaintiff, upon the request of defendant, extended the time of payment six months; that before the expiration of said time, and within the five years in which full payment could be made to the railroad company, the said plaintiff made to said railroad company full payment for said land without the knowledge or consent of this defendant, and received from said company a conveyance of said land."

"Wherefore defendant prays that the amount due the plaintiff from defendant by reason of the facts aforesaid be ascertained; that it be adjudged and declared that the plaintiff holds the title to the premises described in the complaint in trust for this defendant; and that he execute and deliver to the defendant a good and sufficient conveyance thereof upon the payment by this defendant, within such time as to this court may seem proper and reasonable, of the sum of money found due to the plaintiff as aforesaid, and for his costs of suit herein."

On trial in the superior court, judgment was rendered in the defendant's favor. The findings of the court are set out at length in the opinion. By the decree it was adjudged that there was due to the plaintiff the sum of \$225.28, with interest thereon at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per month, and also the sum of \$703, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum,—said several sums amounting to the sum of \$1,192.93; that the defendant pay or tender to the plaintiff the said sum of \$1,192.93 within 20 days from the date of the decree; that if payment or tender of payment should not be made within the time herein specified, then the decree should be null and of no effect, and judgment shall be entered for plaintiff as prayed for in his complaint; that, upon the payment or tender of payment by the defendant to the plaintiff within the time herein provided, the plaintiff should execute and deliver to the defendant a deed of the premises; that if the plaintiff should refuse and neglect to execute and deliver such deed for the space of one day after such payment, or tender of payment, then the clerk of the superior court was appointed commissioner, with full power to make, execute, deliver, and have recorded such deed.

The plaintiff moved for new trial, but his motion was overruled.

Among the other errors specified was the following, viz.: That "finding four is contrary to the whole evidence, which shows that the verbal agreement there stated was to be reduced to writing, and signed by the parties thereto, and therefore such verbal agreement was invalid. Said finding four states the contract of sale should be taken in the name of plaintiff, to be held by him as security for the repayment to him, etc., which is in conflict with the allegation of defendant's answer declaring the verbal agreement to be otherwise; namely, that it was to be taken in defendant's name. Such allegation is the preponderating fact, concluding the court as to such condition in said defendant's agreement while such allegation stands. The evidence is also insufficient to justify said finding, or to show that on or about July 5, 1881, said plaintiff paid said railroad company the sum of \$225.28 for the use and benefit of defendant, etc.; but, on the contrary, the evidence clearly shows that plaintiff refused to advance any money for Matthews, or, as he says in his letter, 'to make any debt with him,' and that Matthews, finding that he could not raise the money, voluntarily surrendered all his rights under said limited preference, upon an inchoate agreement, never completed, that Ward would buy the land, taking the contract of purchase in his own name, and that if defendant paid him the \$225.28, with interest at $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per month within a year, that Ward would assign the contract of purchase to Matthews. The evidence further shows that on July 9, 1881, after Matthews' time to make a contract with the C. P. R. R. Co. expired, that said company made a contract with plaintiff in his own right."

Thereafter the plaintiff moved the court to determine that the defendant had made default in complying with the conditions of the judgment, and that the court cause judgment to be entered for the plaintiff. The defendant opposed this motion, on the ground that on the last day named in the decree he had offered the sum of $1,192.94 to the plaintiff at his house, and tendered him a deed for his signature, and plaintiff had refused to accept the money, or to sign the deed. The motion was overruled.

From the orders denying the motion for a new trial, and overruling the motion after judgment, the plaintiff appealed.

L. C. Granger and J. W. Turner, for appellant.

If any material part of the verbal agreement was to have been reduced to writing, until so done and signed said agreement was inchoate and incomplete. Ewald v. Lyons, 29 Cal. 550; Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169; Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99.

H. V. Reardon, for respondent.

It was not necessary that the agreement should have been in writing, although the parties agreed to do so and failed. Such might be the case where the agreement, if verbal, would be void under the statute of frauds; but, the verbal agreement here being valid, the failure to reduce it to writing does not invalidate it. Ewald v. Lyons, 29 Cal. 550, and Farmer v. Grose, 42 Cal. 169, are not in point.

FOOTE, C. This appeal is from an order denying plaintiff a new trial, and from an order made after final judgment, denying his motion for judgment as prayed for in his complaint. The action was brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of the possession of a certain tract of land, and damages for its detention. The defendant answered, denying all the allegations of the complaint, and setting up facts which went to show him entitled in equity to the title and possession of the land in controversy, which title he claimed the plaintiff held merely in trust for him.

The findings of fact were as follows: "(1) That in May, 1880, the land described in the pleadings herein was the property of the Central Pacific Railroad, and that at said time the defendant made application to said company to be permitted to purchase the same; (2) that in June, 1881, the said company recognized the right of the defendant to purchase said land, and at that time agreed with said defendant that, upon the payment, by said defendant, to it of the sum of \$225.28 on or before the eighth day of July, 1881, it (the said company) would execute to said defendant a contract of sale of said land; (3) that, by the terms of said contract, the said defendant would have five years from and after the eighth day of July, 1881, in which to make payment of the balance of the purchase price of said land, upon the payment, annually in advance, of the interest on the deferred payment; (4) that on or about the fifth day of July, 1881, the said plaintiff paid said railroad company, for the use and benefit of said defendant, the said sum of \$225.28, and at that time it was verbally agreed by and between said plaintiff and defendant that the contract of sale should be taken in the name of said plaintiff, to be held by him as security for the repayment to him by said defendant of the said sum of \$225.28, with interest thereon at the rate of $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per month, and it was also agreed between said parties that said sum, with the accrued interest, should be repaid in one year; (5) that the contract of sale of said land was made to said plaintiff by said railroad company; (6) that before the expiration of the year in which payment of the said sum of \$225.28, with accrued interest, was to be made, the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, extended said time of payment six months; (7) that before the expiration of the six months, and in the month of July, 1882, and before the expiration of the five years specified in the contract of sale, the said plaintiff advanced and paid to the said railroad company the sum of \$703, being the balance of the purchase price of said land, and received from said railroad company a deed for said land on the eighth day of August, 1882; (8) that the payment by said plaintiff of said sum of \$703 was made without the knowledge of the defendant, and was a voluntary payment on the part of said plaintiff; (9) that said plaintiff never demanded payment of either the sum of \$225.28 or \$703, or both, from the defendant; (10) that the plaintiff never presented to defendant a statement of the amount due from him on the advance as made by plaintiff; (11) that defendant has at all times been ready and willing to repay to said plaintiff the amount due, when ascertained, but said plaintiff has declined and refused to make any statement or accept payment; (12) that in May, 1880, said defendant entered upon said land, and made improvements thereon, and has ever since resided upon said land, and has continued to improve the same, and said improvements were made with the knowledge, consent, and encouragement of said plaintiff; (13) that plaintiff did not purchase from said defendant his rights under the contract of sale with the railroad company."

We think that they were within the issues as made by the pleadings; that they are sustained by the evidence in the record, and are sufficient to uphold the judgment. A similar trust to this was enforced by this court in the case of Walton v. Karnes, 67 Cal. 255, 7 Pac. Rep. 676.

The trial court did not attempt to reform any contract made between the parties. It simply undertook and did determine, from all the evidence given upon both sides, what the contract actually was, as both parties to the record had diverse views as to that matter. Although an agreement existed to reduce the contract to writing for the protection of the defendant, yet the fact that it was never done did not have the effect of rendering the contract void, since in the first instance it was to have been performed within one year; and, secondly, since its extension for six months longer took place prior to the expiration of that year first agreed upon, and after that time was not of the essence of the contract between the parties, as the plaintiff, before the time fixed for its performance, advanced the largest portion of the purchase money for the lands without the knowledge of the defendant, and never afforded him an opportunity to pay the money he owed either by a demand for its payment or any statement as to its amount when it was asked for by the defendant, and refused to accept payment when the defendant was willing to make it.

According to the judgment rendered, if the plaintiff had received the money which was tendered him by the defendant, he would have been reimbursed, principal and interest, for all that he had paid out for the land in dispute for and on account of the defendant. He refused to accept the money thus tendered him, and which was all to which he was equitably entitled, and sought upon motion after judgment to have judgment rendered in his favor as prayed for in his complaint. This the court denied upon the ground that he had refused to accept the money tendered him on the day and in the exact amount ordered by the judgment or decree. And the plaintiff cannot complain; for, if his appeal here shall not be successful, it will still be incumbent on the defendant to tender to and deposit the money with the commissioner named in the decree, before he can obtain a deed to the land which will divest the plaintiff's title thereto.

We do not perceive anything in the affidavits presented on the motion for a new trial affecting the result of this controversy which due diligence might not have enabled the plaintiff to have presented on the trial, nor do we think such evidence would have changed the result.

There is no prejudicial error shown by the record, and the judgment and orders should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment and orders affirmed.

1. In some states, when a conveyance is made to one person, the consideration for which moves from another, a trust results in favor of the latter. Bigley v. Jones, (Pa.) 7 Atl. Rep. 54; *Donlin v. Where it is expressly agreed that a contract is to be performed within one year, extensions from time to time, by parol, for periods less than one year, will not be affected by the statute of frauds, *Donovan v. BOYLE ICE-MACHINE CO. v. GOULD and others. (No. 11,776.)

MORTGAGE—OF MACHINERY AND LEASE—RECORDING—PRIORITY.

To secure the price of machinery bought, the purchaser gave his note, secured by mortgage upon the machinery and upon some land which he had leased for 10 years, and upon which he placed the machinery, which mortgage was recorded in the records of mortgages of real estate. Held, that a judgment creditor of the mortgagor who purchased the machinery and lease on judgment sale after the recording of the mortgage was in no better position than the mortgagor, and his interest was subject and subordinate to the mortgage.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

The defendants Gould and Sweeney, in March, 1884, purchased an ice-machine from the plaintiff, and about the same time they leased some land and buildings in Los Angeles for 10 years, for the purpose of carrying on the ice business. The machine purchased from the plaintiff was placed upon these leased premises. Gould then executed two promissory notes to the plaintiff corporation, and both Gould and Sweeney executed a realty mortgage, without acknowledgment, on the leasehold and machinery, as though they owned the land in fee-simple, to secure the payment of the two notes. This mortgage was recorded on the third of May, 1884, in the records of mortgages of real estate in Los Angeles. On the nineteenth day of June, 1884, C. H. Shillaber recovered judgment against the defendant Gould in the superior court of San Francisco, for $16,000, and costs; that amount having been loaned to Gould to conduct the ice business, and Gould having failed to pay it back at the time agreed. Execution was regularly issued upon said judgment, and sent to the sheriff of Los Angeles, and on the twenty-ninth day of July, 1884, the machinery was sold as personal property upon execution sale to C. H. Shillaber for $5,000, she being the highest bidder, and the judgment was marked satisfied to that amount; and at the same time the lease was regularly assigned to her for a valuable consideration. At this time, C. H. Shillaber had no knowledge of the mortgage. She took possession of the premises and machinery, and leased them; and upon her death, on the eighteenth day of February, 1885, the appellant herein, the defendant Cook, as special administrator of her estate, assumed possession and control of the property. On the twenty-seventh day of October, 1884, the plaintiff corporation brought suit to foreclose its mortgage, and made C. H. Shillaber a defendant, and upon her death the appellant Cook, as special administrator, was substituted as a party defendant in her place. Defaults were obtained against the defendants Gould and Sweeney, but the defendant Cook, as special administrator, answered, setting up as separate defenses the purchase for value, without knowledge of any incumbrance, of the lease by assignment, and of the machinery by purchase on execution sale. A demurrer was interposed by plaintiff to these separate defenses on the ground that the facts stated constituted no defense. This demurrer was sustained, and judgment and decree of foreclosure made, entered, and recorded, and this appeal is taken to this court from that judgment.

Wm. Hoff Cook, for defendant Cook, appellant. Bicknell & White, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We find no error in the record. The demurrer to the answer of Cook, special administrator, was properly sustained. The defendant occupied no position superior to that of the mortgagor, Gould, and whatever interest he acquired by his purchase was subject and subordinate to the mortgage of plaintiff. Judgment affirmed.

GREEN and another v. STATE. (No. 11,169.)

1. STATES—SUITS AGAINST—WAIVER OF IMMUNITY.

When the state permits itself to be sued, the case is simply referred to the court to determine whether the claim constitutes a lawful demand against the state, and the only questions for determination are, what has been done, and what are the legal principles by which the responsibility of the state is to be measured, and whether upon these principles the state should be held liable.¹

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—LIABILITY.

By California act approved March 12, 1885, plaintiffs were authorized to sue the state for damages alleged to have been suffered by them by reason of certain canal improvements made by the state, and to have judgment therefor "if it appears upon the trial * * * that damage has been done [to the plaintiffs] by any act for which the state is legally liable." Held, that the language of the act excludes the idea that any liability was admitted, or any defense waived, except that of immunity from suit. The state may still interpose the defense that it was engaged as a state in a public work for a common good.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EMINENT DOMAIN—"TAKING" FOR PUBLIC USE.

Under the language of the California constitution as it existed prior to 1879, where the state, for public purposes, turns or straightens the channel of a river where it empties into another river, so that the land on the opposite side is, five years afterwards, injured or destroyed by the increased velocity of the current, such damage is not a taking of land for public use, and does not entitle the owner to compensation. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from an order of the superior court, Sacramento county, sustaining demurrer to complaint in an action brought by appellants, Green and Trainer, against the state in pursuance of an act of the legislature, approved March 12, 1885, entitled "An act to enable John Hoagland, James Reid, Mrs. Rebecca C. Hoagland, George Cooper, William B. Todhunter, Mrs.

¹Respecting the immunity of states from suit, see Lowry v. Commissioners Sinking Fund, (S. C.) 1 S. E. Rep. 141, and note.

Mary W. G. Van Arsdall, Henry Lienberger, Christopher Green, and Charles Trainer to sue the state of California" to recover damages alleged to have resulted to them in consequence of the straightening of the channel of the American river at its mouth or point of confluence with the Sacramento river, by the city levee commissioners of the city of Sacramento, done by them in the year 1862, in pursuance of an act of the legislature entitled "An act concerning the construction and repair of levees in the county of Sacramento, and the mode of raising revenue therefor," approved April 9, 1862. St. 1862, p. 151. The straightening of the American river is alleged to have been done in the year 1862. The damages resulting to the lands, etc., of appellant therefrom, are alleged to have occurred December 25, 1867. That the appellant owned lands on the west bank of Sacramento river, in Yolo county, and opposite the mouth of the new-made channel of the American river, through which the waters of said river were conveyed into the Sacramento with such force and volume as to press the waters of the Sacramento against its west bank, cause them to break over and through the natural and artificial barriers there, and overflow, undermine, and wash away the lands of appellant, etc.

The grounds of demurrer assigned were: (1) That the court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or the subject of the action; (2) that the complaint herein does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (3) that plaintiffs have no authority to sue the state, and the act of the legislature approved March 12, 1885, authorizing them to sue, is unconstitutional; (4) that whatever cause of action is stated in the complaint is barred by the provisions of sections 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, and 343, Code Civil Proc.

A. L. Hart and C. T. Jones, for appellants. E. C. Marshall, Atty. Gen., and John T. Carey, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal has already been twice decided,—once in department, (11 Pac. Rep. 602,) and once by the court in bank, (12 Pac. Rep. 683.) In each decision the judgment was affirmed on the authority of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536. The court held that, inasmuch as the question was there determined by the highest judicial tribunal existing under the former constitution, and as the former constitutional provision involved has been changed, they would not reconsider the conclusion there reached.

The last rehearing was granted because the court was impressed by the positive and confident assertion of counsel that the court had entirely misconceived or misunderstood the point upon which appellants mainly relied. Counsel asserted: "It is not and has not been contended that the act authorizing the commencement of the action against the state operated to create any new liability on the part of the state, or any which had not previously existed, nor is it contended that the act of March 12, 1885, amounted to a concession of the state's liability." It is said: "The real point upon which appellants rely is that when the state authorizes itself to be sued, and there is no statutory or constitutional provision fixing a different liability, its measure of responsibility is to be determined by the same rule as that which determines the liability of one of its own citizens."

Properly understood, we accept this rule as correct. A state cannot be sued, because it is sovereign. It is supposed that one has but to make his grievance known; and, if he has a lawful demand against the state, it will at once be satisfied. But, when the state permits itself to be sued, the matter is simply referred to the courts to determine whether the claim does or does not constitute a lawful demand against the state, and in such a case the only questions for the determination of the courts are, what has been done, and what are the legal principles by which the responsibility of the state is to be measured, and whether, applying these principles, the state should be held responsible. It consents to go before its courts, and permit the claim against it to be determined upon those settled rules of law upon which the responsibilities of ordinary parties litigant are determined; that is, as already stated, whether it has committed the act complained of, and, if so, whether, according to established rules of law, it is responsible in damages.

Appellants contend that the liability of the defendant should be that of a citizen who straightened a stream on his own farm, diverting it from its natural channel in such manner as directly to produce the injury. But why? Such is not the fact. It was legally possible that the state should have been a proprietor, and that as such it should have straightened the stream. In such a case, no doubt, those considerations would determine the liability. But what is there in the act to force the state to trial upon an assumed case which is not true? If it had been a proprietor merely, it might have defended as such, and perhaps have claimed some right with reference to the property of defendant; but having in fact no other claim than that it is a state, and was engaged in a public work for the common good, if it cannot set that up because it waived its sovereignty so that it could be sued, then it must admit that it is without defense, and the act must be considered a concession of the state's liability, which appellants say they do not claim.

Some force must be given to the language of the act which expressly refers the matter to the courts to ascertain if it is legally liable. The language is: "If it appears upon the trial of any said actions that damage has been done to the plaintiff by any act for which the state is legally liable," etc. This language industriously excludes the idea that the liability was admitted, or that any legal defense was waived except that of immunity from suit. If, as is practically claimed, it waived not only its sovereignty, so that it could be sued, but also its only possible defense, that as a state it was engaged in a public work for the common good, it is difficult to see how any question of liability was involved to be referred to the courts.

It now remains to consider whether, under the settled rules and maxims of law, damage, such as the plaintiffs allege they have sustained, can be recovered. We are not, however, to approach this question admitting that the state is a wrong-doer. It is not to be assumed that the liability is that of one who, without claim of right, has changed the course of a stream and washed away the land of another. The complaint avers that the canal was a public work, constructed by the state for public uses. Is damage like this, occasioned by such work, actionable?

The canal was on the opposite side of the river to plaintiffs' land, about 150 yards above. The width of the river is not given, but we know the Sacramento to be a large, navigable stream. The work did not approach the land of plaintiff within 200 or 300 yards. There was no appropriation, occupation, or use of the land. The damage did not occur until five years after the work was completed. It could not have been known that any such injury would follow. The state could not then have condemned the land, and, admitting that it could, the damage could not have been determined. It is held that, to take land, compensation must be made, or at least provided in advance. Furthermore, a law which provides for a taking of private property for a public use without making provision for such compensation is void. Here, then, the state could not take, by any lawful method, what it is now contended, for the purpose of holding it liable for damages, it did in fact take at the time the work was constructed.

It is evident that those cases (if there be such) which hold that mere consequential damages is a taking within the limitation upon the power of eminent domain, use the word in an unusual and extended sense, and the reason for such extended sense is not hard to find. Of course, primarily the word was used in reference to the necessities of the government to use the property sought. But it has been held that the clause in the constitution, "property shall not be taken without compensation," is not a grant of power, but a limitation. Therefore the state is liable only to pay for property taken for public use. Hence the meaning of the word was extended to cover cases which, though not within the letter of the limitation, were within its spirit and meaning.

Most of the cases, however, in which it has been held that property so damaged is taken to that extent, are cases of corporations engaged in the public service in the sense that they can be authorized to use the power of eminent domain to condemn land, but yet which are engaged in business for the gain and profit of their stockholders. It is merely held here that the delegation of the power of eminent domain does not relieve the corporation from ordinary liability for damages caused by carrying on its business. It was granted the power to take, because of its public utility, but that did not confer the right to damage. Though performing a public service, it is yet not the state, which only acts for the public good, and which is only responsible as provided in the constitution.

If there can be found a case in the books which holds that under such facts as are alleged in this case the state is liable, our attention has not been called to it. The damage is plainly not the natural consequence of the work which could and ought to have been anticipated and expected as the result. It was remote and consequential,—a purely incidental and unexpected effect. There was not enforced occupation of the property or interference with it. The owner was left in full possession, and there was done to the land or left upon it nothing to obstruct its use.

The case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, is most relied upon, and it is a case by which the right of the parties here may well be tested; for the opinion in that case seems to admit that the doctrine there announced, if not opposed to the current of authority upon the subject, at least modifies the rule as to the particular circumstances of that case. It is admittedly an extreme case in that direction. The court there says, speaking of this very point: "We are not unaware of the numerous cases in the state courts in which the doctrine has been successfully invoked that for a consequential injury to property of the individual, arising from the prosecution of improvement of roads, streets, rivers, and other highways, for the public good, there is no redress; and we do not deny that the principle is a sound one in its proper application to many injuries to property so originating. And when, in the exercise of our duties here, we shall be called upon to construe other state constitutions, we shall not be unmindful of the weight due to the decisions of the courts of those states. But we are of the opinion that the decisions referred to have gone to the uttermost limit of judicial construction in favor of this principle, and in some cases beyond it, and that it remains true that where real estate is actually invaded by superinduced additions of water, earth, sand, and other material, or by having an artificial structure placed upon it, so as to effectually destroy or impair its usefulness, it is a taking."

It is evident there is nothing in this case in conflict with the doctrine of Green v. Swift. In the case from 13 Wall., a dam was built, which caused the water to continuously and permanently cover the land of plaintiff. If it was physically and permanently occupied by a foreign body, placed there by the defendant when the dam was built, it was easy to ascertain how much would be thus occupied. It was the natural, certain, and immediate consequence of the act. The land was really used by the defendant. There was no such state of affairs here. But that court has itself declared the case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co. to be an extreme case, and explained, if it has not modified, its meaning. The case of Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, was an action on the case for damages sustained by reason of the construction of a tunnel by the city, under the authority of an act of the legislature. After saying that no action would lie at common law, the court says: "The decisions to which we have been referred were made in view of magna charta, and the restriction to be found in the constitution of every state, that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation being made. But acts done in the proper exercise of governmental powers, and not directly encroaching upon private property, though their consequences may impair their use, are universally held not to be a taking within the meaning of the provision. They do not entitle the owner of such property to compensation from the state or its agents, or give him a right of action. This is supported by an immense weight of authority. Those who are anxious to see the decisions will find them collected in Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, page 542, and notes. The extremest qualification of the doctrine is to be found perhaps in Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, and in Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. R., 51 N. H. 504. In those cases it was held that permanent flooding of private property may be regarded as a taking. In those cases there was a physical invasion of the real estate of the owner, and a practical ouster of his possession. But in this case there was no such invasion. No entry was made upon the plaintiff's lots. All that was done was to render for a time its use more inconvenient. The present constitution of Illinois took effect on the eighth of August, 1870, after the work of constructing the tunnel had been substantially completed. It ordains that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. This is an extension of the common provision for the protection of property."

The case of Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. R., commented upon in the above extract is a very elaborately considered case, and strong ground was taken in favor of the proposition that, when property is damaged in any way, it is taken within the meaning of the constitutional limitation. There the injury was more like that complained of here than in the other cases. After a very full discussion and citation of authorities, the learned judge says: "The defendants do not stand in the position of public bodies constituted for the sole purpose of executing a public trust or duty, in the performance of which they have no other interest than that which every citizen has. True, the public benefit may be so promoted by works authorized to be made by such corporation that the property of individuals taken by them by virtue of their charters may be deemed to be taken for public use within the constitutional provision on that subject. Still they exercise their corporate privileges under a grant of the legislature conferring upon them specific powers for their own direct and private advantage." "They are trustees of public interests for their own benefit." "The defendants voluntarily accepted their charter with a view to their private emolument, and do not occupy the position of a municipality, invested, without their consent, with powers to be exercised solely for the public benefit." That is to say it is carrying on business for private gain, and should be held responsible for injuries resulting from its mode of doing business, like any one else.

Now, these are the extreme cases upon this subject. In each case it is expressly said that the weight of authority is apparently the other way. Neither case is inconsistent with the conclusion arrived at in Green v. Swift. Our constitution has now been amended so as to require compensation for property taken or damaged. This is itself an admission that property simply damaged is not taken. The question as here presented is no longer a vital one as to constitutional construction. We still adhere to our former opinion.

Coming to the conclusion we have, it has not been deemed necessary to discuss the objections to the act under which the action is brought, on the ground of unconstitutionality. Had we determined that it was intended to allow the plaintiffs to recover damages for which the state was not legally liable, it would have been necessary to inquire whether the act did not give cause of action where none existed before, and whether this were not a gift prohibited by section 31, art. 4, Const.

We have assumed merely that the act intended to refer to the courts the inquiry whether the state was liable according to the rules and principles of law applicable to the subject. That is practically, in this case, whether the damage is a taking within the constitutional limitation. This involves the assumption that the non-liability of the state does not depend upon its immunity from suit, but upon the nature of the injury as remote and consequential. There are careless expressions in some of the opinions which seem to indicate that the non-liability did depend upon the fact that the sovereign cannot be sued. But this is plainly contrary to the tenor and rationale of all the opinions, including those in which the expressions are used, which all make the solution turn upon the inquiry as to whether the damage was a taking of private property for public use, and therefore one for which the state must pay under the limitation. If we suppose a valid contract with the state under which materials have been furnished to the state for which no appropriation has been made, no one would hesitate to say that the state was legally liable; and, if it declines to pay, all would agree that it took advantage of its immunity from suit to avoid a legal obligation. See Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 500.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

MCKINSTRY, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment. I concur in Mr. Justice TEMPLE's construction of the act of March 12, 1885, and in his conclusion that the act did not deprive the state of its right to rely upon any defense to this action which it had as the state, other than the right to claim that the state could not be sued, and that the act does not purport to do so. I decline to express any opinion as to whether the plaintiffs' property was "damaged." Section 14, art. 1, Const. 1879. The property of the plaintiffs, if "taken" at all, was taken prior to the adoption of the present constitution. I adhere to the views expressed herein in department 1, 11 Pac. Rep. 602.

The question whether the damages caused by the work done under the direction of the commissioners, appointed by the act of 1862, was a taking of private property, within the meaning of the provision of the former constitution prohibiting a taking of private property without compensation, was fully decided, adversely to such contention, by the highest judicial tribunal under that constitution. The questions involved in the judgment in Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536, must be considered as closed upon the doctrine of stare decisis.

THORNTON, J., (dissenting.) I dissent from the foregoing opinions. I think there was a taking of the property of plaintiffs here for which the state was legally responsible. See cases cited in notes to section 243, Gould, Waters.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

The California act of April 1, 1872, in relation to street improvements in the city and county of San Francisco, providing a general plan of street work by contract, such contract to be entered into and the work performed before the collection of the money, was repealed by section 19, art. 11, Const. Cal. 1879, providing that "no public work or improvement of any description whatsoever shall be done or made in any city, * * * the cost and expense of which is made chargeable, or may be assessed, upon private property by special assessment, unless an estimate of such cost and expense shall be made, and an assessment in proportion to benefits on the property to be affected or benefited shall be levied, collected, and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be commenced, or any contract for letting or doing the same authorized or performed."

2. SAME.

The California act of March 18, 1885, providing for work upon streets, sewers, etc., within municipalities, is constitutional, although it does not provide for the assessment and collection of the cost before the performance of the work.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SPECIAL LAWS.

That act is not a special law within the meaning of section 6, art. 11, Const. Cal., enacting that "corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws, but the legislature by general laws shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns," but is a general law, and therefore constitutional and in full force within the city and county of San Francisco.

4. SAME—AMENDMENT.

The amendment of section 19, art. 11, Const. Cal., proposed by the legislature of 1883, and adopted by vote of the people in 1884, removing the restriction as to performing street work before the collection of the money, and leaving it to the legislature to pass such laws in that regard as it might deem expedient, subject only to such prohibitions as might exist regarding the application of such laws to existing charters, was constitutionally adopted, notwithstanding that such amendment was entered at large on the journal of the house, (Const. Cal. art. 18, § 1,) only by an identifying reference.

McKINSTRY and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

J. C. Bates, John F. Swift, and J. M. Wood, for appellant. George Flournoy, Jr., and T. V. O'Brien, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Application for writ of mandate to the defendant, as superintendent of streets, commanding him to enter into and sign a contract under the street law for the city and county of San Francisco, passed April 1, 1872. The contract, the execution of which is sought to be compelled herein, is one to be entered into in advance of the assessment and collection of the money to be paid for the work done under it, under the provisions of the act of 1872, and in this regard this act may be held to be done away with by the provisions of the constitution. This we consider as settled in this court by the cases of McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 245, and Donahue v. Graham, 61 Cal. 277.

Since the adoption of the constitution, and on the sixth of March, 1883, the legislature enacted an act entitled "An act to provide for the improvement of streets, lanes, alleys, courts, places, and sidewalks, and the construction of sewers within municipalities." St. 1883, p. 32. This act was passed in conformity with the portion of section 19 of article 11 of the constitution relating to works on and improvement of streets, which is quoted in the opinion of the court in McDonald v. Patterson, supra, and repealed all acts or parts of acts in conflict with any of its provisions. See section 36 of the act above cited, (St. 1883, p. 47.) Thus such parts of the act of 1872 which remained in force after the adoption of the constitution as are in conflict with the act of 1883 were repealed by it.

Subsequently, and on the eighteenth day of March, 1885, a statute was passed and approved, with a title substantially the same as that of the act of 1883. St. 1885, p. 147. By the thirty-sixth section of this act, the act of 1883 was repealed, except as to work commenced under it prior to the passage of the repealing act. St. 1885, p. 165. The last-named act, like the act of 1872, did not provide for the assessment and collection of the money to pay for the street work done under it, until after the work was completed; and in this respect it was violative of section 19 of article 11 of the constitution as that section was originally passed. But according to the ruling of this court in Oakland Paving Co. v. Tompkins, 12 Pac. Rep. 801, the section of the constitution above mentioned had been amended before the act of 1885 was passed, by which the objection of unconstitutionality to the latter act, on the ground that it was violative of the section referred to, was removed. We consider the decision in the case just above cited as settling finally the question as to the constitutionality of the amendment of section 19 above referred to.

But there is another objection urged to the constitutionality of the acts of 1883 and 1885. It is argued that, under section 6 of article 11 of the constitution, neither of the acts above mentioned could become laws, for the reason that they are special laws, and therefore beyond the power of the legislature to enact; and, further, that the legislature did not have the power to pass a general law affecting the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, without the consent of such city and county.

The sixth section of article 11 of the constitution is as follows: "Sec. 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

The entire legislative power is by the constitution vested in the senate and assembly, designated as the legislature. Any restriction of this power must be found in the constitution of the state, or in the constitution of the United States, and laws passed in pursuance thereof. Our attention has been called to no restriction in the constitution of the United States or the acts of congress in regard to the question to be herein considered. The restrictions in the sixth section of article 11 are as follows: (1) Corporations for municipal purposes can only be created by general laws. Prior to the adoption of the present constitution, the legislature could create a corporation for municipal purposes by a special law. This cannot be done since the present constitution became operative. (2) Prior to the adoption of the present constitution the legislature was not only competent to create a corporation for municipal purposes by a special law, but could compel a community of persons to accept a charter so created. As the constitution now stands, and since its adoption, a corporation can determine by a vote of its electors whether to accept a new charter or not, and such new charter or organization is accepted only when voted for by a majority of its electors voting at a general election. (3) A charter cannot be amended by a special law. But, while these restrictions exist, the legislature has the power to control the charters of all corporations by general laws. The restrictions above pointed out do not at all affect the power to control or regulate the charters of all municipal corporations by laws general in their character. This power is expressly recognized by the last clause of section 6 above cited, where it is declared that "cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

On reading the constitution it will be observed that its framers were particularly careful to restrict the legislature from passing local or special laws. See article 4, § 25; article 11, §§ 4, 5, 11, 12, 14; article 12, §§ 1, 5, 11; and article 10, § 11. Where legislative powers are conferred on counties, cities, towns, or townships by the constitution, such powers are still made subject to and liable to be controlled by general laws.

So it will be observed that the meaning attributed to the last clause of section 6 of article 11 is in accordance with the general plan on which the constitution is framed; that is, the inhibition of special or local legislation, and the allowance of general legislation. Evils constantly arise from special legislation,—and such evils it was the intention of the constitution makers to prevent. The evils of general legislation are such as spring from the imperfection of all things human and the abuse of power; but the abuse, or liability to abuse, affords no argument against the existence of such power. To prevent such abuses reliance must be had on the intelligence and fidelity of the representatives of the people, their accountability to their constituents, and the power to repeal statutes when found to be hurtful.

The acts of 1883 and 1885 include all municipal corporations in the state. This plainly appears from the first section of each act. Is it not, then, a general law? As the foregoing statutes each apply to all municipal corporations in the state, if they are not general laws it would be impossible to frame one which is general. The above view as to a general law accords with Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 376; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. St. 348; Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. St. 401; Knickerbocker v. People, 102 Ill. 218; Hymes v. Aydelott, 26 Ind. 431; Chicago R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155; McAunich v. Railroad Co., 20 Iowa, 343. In Knickerbocker v. People, supra, it is said: "A law applicable to all counties of a class, as made or authorized by the constitution, is neither a local nor special law. If it applies to all the counties of a class authorized by the constitution to be made, it is a general law, and whether there may be few or many counties to which its provisions will apply, is a matter of no consequence." It is said in Wheeler v. Philadelphia, above cited: "A statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law."

It is argued that, according to the views herein expressed a city may have its charter totally changed without its consent. This is a proper deduction from the ruling herein, but this cannot be done by a special or local law applicable alone to a particular charter. The result can only be reached by a general law affecting all municipal corporations, or may be all of a class, and we can see no probability that a city can be injured by general legislation. When such legislation is allowed, corporations are put on the same footing with individuals as to protection against special or local legislation, and liability to be affected by general legislation. Whatever the danger may be from such legislation, the constitution is so written as to allow it, and thus we must interpret it.

It follows from the above—First, that the act of 1872 was entirely done away with by the constitution; second, that the act of 1883 was constitutional when passed, and repealed all portions of the act of 1872 in conflict with it; third, that the act of 1885 is a constitutional act under the constitution as amended; that the act of 1885 repealed the act of 1883, and has been and is now in force since its passage, on the eighteenth day of March, 1885.

The judgment must be affirmed. So ordered.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

MCKINSTRY, J. 1. I dissent. Section 19 of article 11 of the constitution of 1879-80, as the same stood prior to its amendment, reads: "No public work * * * shall be done or made, in any city, in, upon, or about the streets thereof, * * * the cost and expense of which is made chargeable or may be assessed upon private property by special assessment, unless an estimate of such cost and expense shall be made, and an assessment, in proportion to the benefits on the property to be affected or benefited, shall be levied, collected, and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be commenced, or any contract for letting or doing the same authorized."

I have heard or read no argument which ought to induce a modification of my views with respect to the non-effect of the provision of the constitution above quoted upon the street law of 1872; the same being part of the consolidation laws of San Francisco. I adhere to the views expressed in the dissenting opinion in Donahue v. Graham, 61 Cal. 276, and still believe the provision of the constitution prohibits the legislature, created by the constitution, in any general law for the future organization of municipal corporations, passed in pursuance of the mandate in the first sentence of section 6, art. 11, from enacting that public improvements may be made or street work done until after the cost shall have been estimated and assessments therefor levied and collected. The prohibition also extends to provisions for street work, without previous assessment, in any charter framed for San Francisco in the manner laid down in section 8, art. 11.

Nor is this court estopped from reconsidering the question passed on in Donahue v. Graham. The conditions which would seem to prevent a review of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536, were more formidable than any obstacles herein apparent to a reconsideration of Donahue v. Graham. A change in the constitution had extended and enlarged the provision prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Green v. Swift did not purport to construe the meaning of a constitutional clause ("private property shall not be damaged without due compensation," etc.) which did not then exist. The decision applied only to events which occurred prior to the enactment of that clause, and it was made by the supreme court which expired with the constitution that gave it life, and whose provisions it interpreted. Except as to the parties in interest, no consequence of the judgment in Green v. Swift flowed this side of the adoption of the present constitution. Yet in Green v. State, ante, 610, (No. 11,169, filed June 30, 1887,) this court again inquired into the meaning of a section of the defunct constitution which, in Green v. Swift, had been construed by the appellate tribunal created by that constitution.

No property rights could have grown up under the judgment in Donahue v. Graham. Surely, there is no judicially recognized application of the doctrine of stare decisis which precludes us from returning to the true interpretation of a provision of the constitution, (set aside and annulled by the people, and the people's representatives, since the decision in Donahue v. Graham, and perhaps because of that decision,) and by the misinterpretation of which by this same court we have been led into the grave dilemma that we are called on to hold, either that there is no law for the reparation of streets in the great city of San Francisco, or that the legislature may change the entire chartered government without the consent of the people of the city and county.

Moreover, section 19 did not in terms purport to repeal any part of the charter of a city previously existing, nor did it supply a method of estimating the cost of street work within a city, or of assessing private property therefor. The constitution, even if self-operating, only prohibited in the future the letting of a contract for or the commencement of a public work or improvement, unless, etc. It might be argued, plausibly at least, that the prohibition was pointed at future action under a charter, and did not repeal the portion of the charter which originally authorized such action. No portion of the charter having been repealed when the constitutional prohibition ceased, street work could be proceeded with in the manner prescribed in the charter. Boord Com'rs Funded Debt, etc., v. Board Trustees, 12 Pac. Rep. 224.

2. Sections 6 and 8, art. 11, of the constitution, read as follows:

"Sec. 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

"Sec. 8. Any city containing a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the constitution and laws of this state, by causing a board of fifteen freeholders, * * * to be elected, * * * whose duty it shall be * * * to prepare and propose a charter for such city. * * * Such proposed charter * * * shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election; and, if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall thereafter be submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment; and, if approved by a majority vote of the members elected to each house, it shall become the charter of such city, or, if such city be consolidated with a county, then of such city and county. * * * The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof, * * * and ratified by at least three-fifths of the qualified electors voting, and approved by the legislature as herein provided for the approval of the charter."

The mandate that general laws shall be passed under which corporations may be formed is of modern date. The provision in state constitutions requiring such laws, and prohibiting special charters, was manifestly inserted to prevent abuses which experience had proved clung about the legislative practice of creating corporations and granting franchises by special act. Bouvier says of legislative charters of corporations that a charter is an act of the legislature creating a corporation. Strictly speaking, a general law under which they may be formed does not create the corporations. It provides the mode by which they may subsequently be brought into being. After a corporation is formed, the general law may not improperly be said to be the charter defining its powers, but the legislature does not confer the franchise directly upon individuals, or on the community. It is derived indirectly through the subordinate agency of the incorporators themselves. The distinction is immaterial except as it may aid to explain the last clause of section 6, art. 11, Const. It might seem at first glance that "charters framed by authority of this constitution" are spoken of as things different from "cities and towns hereafter organized." But the only section of the constitution which speaks in those terms of framing charters is section 8, art. 11, which provides for the election of 15 freeholders to frame a charter for San Francisco, the city in the state containing more than 100,000 inhabitants. It would appear the clause as to "all charters framed," etc., was inserted ex abundanti cautela, lest it might possibly be supposed that by framing a charter, and securing its approval by the legislature, the people of San Francisco could remove themselves beyond the control of the general laws of the state. Moreover, all cities and towns organized prior to the adoption of the present constitution, and, in a certain sense, all organized afterwards, were or will be created by charter. The terms "cities and towns organized" and "city or town charters" may be used interchangeably, and are used in the last clause of section 6, art. 11, as designating the same thing. That clause may be read: "And cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized shall be subject to and controlled by general laws;" the words: "and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution" being omitted as not actually modifying the sense.

3. I do not understand it to be seriously disputed that the street law of 1872 constituted a very material portion of the charter of San Francisco as the same existed when the present constitution was adopted. An independent act creating commissioners to fill up sloughs within the limits of a city, and an act creating park commissioners, have been held to be corporations for municipal purposes. St. Louis v. Shields, 62 Mo. 247; People v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37. Municipal improvements, including work done "upon, in, or about" the streets, are matters particularly within the province of the city government, and have been so treated and considered. Provisions for street work, to be based on municipal ordinances, and done under the supervision of a street superintendent elected by the qualified voters of the city and county, were inserted in the "Act to repeal the several charters of the city of San Francisco, to establish the boundaries of the city and county of San Francisco, and to consolidate the government thereof," approved April 19, 1856, and in amendments thereof enacted prior to the act of April 1, 1872, the last act being itself amendatory of the consolidation act, and its previous amendments.

Nor do I understand it to be at all disputed that the street law, so called, of 1885 (supposing that law to be a substitute for the street law of 1883, and the charter provisions as to street work in San Francisco to have been in force after the adoption of the constitution of 1879, or after the repeal of the first sentence of section 19, art. 11, Const.) does annul the material portion of the charter of San Francisco relating to work upon streets.

On the thirteenth of March, 1883, (seven days after the approval of the act "to provide for the improvements of streets," etc., "within municipalities,") an act was approved entitled "An act to provide for the organization, incorporation, and government of municipal corporations." The last act is a general statute providing for the incorporation, organization, classification, and government of cities and towns, and was unquestionably intended to be a compliance with the mandate of the first clause of section 6, art. 11, Const. It provides for the election of a superintendent of streets, and prescribes his duties, which are such as the title of his office would imply. Among the powers of the municipal council is enumerated the power of opening, altering, constructing, repairing, etc., streets, highways, etc., and in subsequent sections is supplied an entire scheme for street work. If both these statutes were valid, the provisions of the act of March 13th were substituted for those of the act of March 6, 1883,—at least so far as street work done in cities and towns organized under the act of March 13th is concerned. This would leave the act of March 6, 1883, operative, if operative at all, only within municipalities organized prior to the present constitution; that is, a law claimed to be "general," because operative upon and within all cities and towns, is operative only upon and within some cities and towns. Will it be contended that the act of March 6, 1883, was intended to apply only to San Francisco, and other cities or towns organized prior to the taking effect of the present constitution? Or that, after it was repealed as to corporations subsequently organized, it continued in force as to those organized previously?

At all events, the passage of the act of March 13, 1883, was clearly a legislative recognition that the matter of the construction and repair of streets, alleys, etc., constituted a proper part of the organized government of cities and towns.

4. But the act of eighteen hundred and eighty-five was an amendment of the act of March 13, 1883, or an entire revision and consequent repeal of those provisions of that act relating to "work upon streets, alleys," etc., within municipalities formed under the general law. If a general law at all, it was a general law because a law amending a general law for the incorporation, organization, and classification of cities and towns, passed in conformity with section 6, art. 11, Const. It was a substitution of one system of street work for another system. If operative at all, it made an end of the provisions of the general law of 1883, relating to street work. Even if there can be no repeal by implication under the present constitution,—and it has not been so decided,—yet a statute which, to be of force, must be held to have done away with a former statute, cannot be sustained as operative, while at the same it is held not to amend, revise, or repeal the former statute because not passed in the manner or with the forms required by section 24, art. 4, Const. If the failure to comply with the forms of that section has any effect, its effect is to render the last statute invalid.

Considering the act of 1885 as an amendment or revision and repeal of the act of March 13, 1883, so far as relates to street work, it would be a strange result if, while the general law of March 13, 1883, could not be made operative within the city of San Francisco without the consent of the citizens, expressed in the manner provided in the section 6, art. 11, Const., the law amending and revising the general law became at once binding upon the city and citizens.

5. As we have seen, when, if ever, the city of San Francisco shall organize in pursuance of a charter framed and adopted in the manner prescribed in section 8, art. 11, Const., it will be a city organized after the adoption of the constitution, and will be “subject to and controlled by general laws.” Art. 11, § 6. Now, the words “general laws” in the last clause of section 6, whether applied to cities organized before the constitution was adopted or organized afterwards, must mean precisely the same thing. Observe how carefully the constitution has guarded against legislative interference with any charter which shall be adopted in the manner provided in section 8. Such a charter (which by section 6 will undoubtedly “be subject to and controlled by general laws,” whatever the phrase may mean) can only be amended “at intervals of not less than two years.” Each amendment must be submitted to the local electors, and must be ratified “by at least three-fifths of the qualified voters.” To become operative it must then be approved by a majority of all the members of the legislature “elected to each house.”

Verily, if a new charter, which may be adopted for San Francisco by San Francisco can be amended out of existence by statutes passed in the legislature by a majority composed in no part of members representing San Francisco,—as it may be, if the present charter can be so amended,—the laborious efforts of the constitution makers to prohibit amendments except with the consent of three-fifths of the qualified electors of the city have been of very little avail. With all respect, such a result seems to me reductio ad absurdum.

6. The act of 1885, “to provide for work upon streets,” etc., “in municipalities,” if a general law in any sense, is a general law changing in essential particulars the governmental organization of the municipal corporation known as the city and county of San Francisco. “Cities and towns heretofore organized may become organized under such general laws [those commanded in the same section] whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith.” Const. art. 11, § 6. If anything is due to the strongest implication, the general laws under which municipal corporations may be formed cannot be made applicable to San Francisco without the consent of the citizens. They cannot be enforced anywhere except upon communities which shall first voluntarily subject themselves to them.

In Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 242, this court held that the charters of cities and towns created before the present constitution took effect remain in force in each case until a majority of the electors shall determine to become organized under general laws, or, in the case of San Francisco, to frame a charter for their own government.

7. But, it is asked, is the legislature deprived of all power to amend the corporate organization of a city? Must the people of a city created before the constitution of 1879 suffer under a bad or unfortunate provision in their charter until they organize under the general law, which itself may be inapplicable to their peculiar wants? The constitution provides for a classification of cities and towns in proportion to population, and it is not to be supposed that the people of any one city or town containing the same population as others of its class are surrounded by such peculiar conditions as to require a different local government. The same question might be asked and the same difficulty urged as a reason for annulling the constitutional prohibition of special statutes creating municipal corporations. It was because it had appeared in the past that special acts amending a particular law creating a municipal corporation were very often not sought or desired by the tax-payers and others comprising a majority of the voters that the framers of the constitution prohibited amendments of charters formed before the adoption of that instrument. The constitution declares the public policy, "corporations for municipal purposes ought not to be created by special laws, but ought to be organized under general laws." To prevent confusion, however, and to consult so far the wishes of the people within the limits of corporations already formed, it continues such corporations until the citizens thereof shall choose to come in under the general laws, or, in the case of San Francisco, until a new charter shall be framed in the manner provided in section 8 of article 11. Ever since, if not before, the decision in People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, attention has been drawn to the evils of special legislation affecting the government or people of a particular municipality, and it would certainly seem that the framers of the constitution of 1879, and the people who ratified it, intended to prevent all special legislative interference with existing charters, except with the consent of the citizens. This was sought to be accomplished by commanding general laws for the incorporation of cities and towns, just as the former constitution provided for general laws under which private corporations could be formed, and had prohibited special acts creating such. It was not intended that a special charter could be created for a particular municipality under the specious pretense of amending the charter previously created. It was undoubtedly supposed that wise and just legislators could perfect a general and uniform system which would secure an efficient local government to every municipality. If it be true that an amendment of a particular charter may render it satisfactory to the people of an existing city, this is no reason why the people of all other existing cities should be subject to a "general law" changing their charters in a manner which may not be satisfactory to them. The argument goes the whole length of demanding that special laws should be passed amending particular charters. It needs but a glance at the special acts for city and town charters passed before the adoption of the present constitution, and the widely different methods for street work—adapted in each case to population and supposed peculiar conditions—to see how violent is the presumption that the citizens of all demand a still different system of street work which disregards any "classification in proportion to population."

8. Whatever may be the meaning of the words "general laws," as used in the latter portion of section 6, art. 11, Const., I think it perfectly clear they do not mean laws which affect, alter, or amend the corporate organization of any city or town created before or after the constitution took effect. As to corporations organized under the general laws for municipal purposes, commanded in the first clause of the section, the expression, as applied to such, if meaning the same thing, would be a mere repetition; for the section has already provided that such general laws "may be altered, amended, or repealed." As to a corporate organization for San Francisco brought into existence in the manner laid down in section 8 of article 11, we have seen how prudently that section guards against alterations without the consent of the people. As to the corporations in existence when the constitution was adopted, the "general laws" applicable to them are the same kind of general laws to which corporations formed under general laws for municipal purposes, and any corporation organized in pursuance of section 8, are subject, etc., and by which they are controlled. And section 6 itself provides that corporations existing prior to the constitution shall be subject to the general laws mentioned in the first part of that section (and, of course, to general laws amending such general laws) only with the consent of the people residing within the territorial limits of such corporations.

What are the general laws mentioned in the last clause of section 6? Cities are composed of citizens, and it seems to me hypercriticism to say that "general laws" which control cities, or to which they are subject, cannot include general laws of the state directly controlling, or to which are directly subject, the people living in a city; the more especially as it appears from the context and other portions of the constitution that the term was not intended to apply to laws which changed the powers or obligations of incorporated municipalities.

State laws have sometimes been said to be general when they apply to all of a class of individuals as distinguished from special laws applicable to an individual. I find it difficult to apprehend that a statute is general, in the sense mentioned, which is not a general statute under which cities may be organized, the alteration of which is reserved to the legislature by the constitution, but which changes the government of two or more cities organized under separate charters. However this may be, the word "general" is not alone employed to distinguish statutes binding on a class of persons from those binding on a single person. Statutes are not merely public or private, and a statute affecting the government of a single city is public. Statutes are general or local, having operation throughout the state, or in a particular place or places. The very autonomy of the cities would seem to emphasize the statement that laws operative in the cities alone are local laws as distinguished from laws operative everywhere within the territorial limits of the state, whether such local laws are enacted by the state legislature, or by the legislative body of the city within the powers conferred by its charter.

In view of the very extended powers conferred on the municipalities, and in harmony with the policy apparent throughout the instrument, the constitution leaves, as far as possible, the management of matters of local concern with local governments, but declares that the residents of cities must not be deemed to be beyond the control of general laws affecting them in common with all the people of the state. The people of San Francisco owe allegiance to the state, as well as obedience to ordinances within the legislative power granted the city, and they are subject to all general laws of the state. Such are laws relating to the organization of the superior courts, laws defining crimes and civil rights, regulating the mode of contracting,—perhaps all laws which confer rights or impose duties upon all the people, or, it may be, a portion of the people, of the state, but which are not local in that they apply only to the people within particular places less than the whole state.

It may be added that in a certain sense a municipal corporation—not the abstract entity, but the officers thereof—is subject to and controlled by general laws of the character referred to. The local legislature has no power to pass ordinances which conflict with the general statutes of the state, nor any power to pass an ordinance in conflict with the general unwritten law of the state, as an unreasonable ordinance, unless, at least, expressly authorized by its charter.

It may be that the foregoing enumeration of "general laws" operative everywhere within the boundaries of the state, as distinguished from laws local in their character because of force only within the cities, is imperfect or even inaccurate. I am only required, however, to say that the act of 1885 is not such a general law.

The question "What are not general laws?" (within the meaning of the last clause of section 6, art. 11, Const.) was fully answered by Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN in Staudé v. Election Com'rs, 61 Cal. 325, where that learned judge said: "It is clear to my mind that, when the constitution declares that cities organized before its adoption shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, it means laws as to matters not specifically provided for in charters which existed at the date of the adoption of the constitution. Otherwise they would be subject to and controlled by general laws passed for the incorporation of cities and towns, without having first voted to organize under such laws; and that was the contention of plaintiff's attorney in Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 242."

SHARPSTEIN, J. I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice MCKINSTRY.

LAMB v. RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 108. (No. 11,057.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 13, 1887.)

1. RIPARIAN RIGHTS—LEVEES—OVERFLOWS.

A municipal corporation organized and existing for the purpose of reclaiming swamp lands granted to the state of California has the right to erect a levee on the bank of the Sacramento river to protect such lands from overflow at times of high water, and is not liable in damages to an owner of land on the other side of the stream for an overflow caused by said levee.¹

2. SAME.

Whether the damming, caused by a levee, of a slough through which water flowed from the Sacramento river at times of high water, violates the law that one land-owner on "a water-course" cannot dam it so as to flood the land of his neighbor above, cannot be questioned in an action brought by the owner of land on the river two miles below said slough.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN—"PUBLIC USE"—OVERFLOW CAUSED BY LEVEE.

An overflow of lands on the Sacramento river, caused by a levee built on the other side of the stream, two miles above the lands flooded, when the overflow comes seven years after the erection of said levee, is not a taking for public use so as to entitle the owner to compensation therefor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Colusa county.

J. C. Ball and A. L. Hart, for appellant. A. C. Adams, Jackson Hatch, and W. B. Treadwell, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. This is an action to abate and remove as a public nuisance a levee erected by defendant along the west bank of the Sacramento river, and across a place on said bank called "Wilkins' Slough," and to recover damages for the overflowing of plaintiff's land on the other side of the river, about two miles below, alleged to have been caused by said levee. The case was submitted on certain parts of the pleadings taken as true. The court below gave judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The Sacramento river is a large navigable stream, having its sources near the boundary line between the states of Oregon and California, and running for several hundred miles through the northern and central parts of the latter state to the bay of San Francisco. In times of high water it frequently overflows its banks. A great deal of the adjoining land is lower than the banks of the stream; and at times of overflow the surplus water runs down to and over such land, where it remains until it evaporates, or later in the season, when the river is at a lower stage, runs back into the stream. The water at some places pours over the entire bank in continuous sheets for considerable distances; but more commonly finds its way out through the lower parts or depressions of the banks, which, of course, have gradually been worn down deeper and wider by the action of the water. These short depressions by which the water gets through the banks into the lower lands beyond are called "sloughs," and Wilkins' slough, mentioned in the complaint, is quite a large depression of that character, and affords means of escape, during overflows, for a considerable quantity of water. The lands thus overflowed, and for the protection of which respondent claims the right to maintain said levee, are a part of that large body of swamp and overflowed land acquired by California from the United States by virtue of the act of congress of September 28, 1850, generally known as the "Arkansas Act."

The respondent, Reclamation District No. 108, is a public corporation organized and existing under the laws of this state relating to swamp and overflowed lands. The district includes over 40,000 acres in the county of Yolo, and about 33,000 acres in the adjoining county of Colusa, all lying west of the Sacramento river. The district having been regularly and legally organized, and engineers employed by its trustees having performed their duties as required by law, the plan of its proposed work, with estimates of cost, expenses, etc., was duly adopted and reported to the boards of supervisors of said two counties on the twenty-eighth day of September, 1870. The plan was, in substance, by a continuous levee, wherever necessary, along and upon the west bank of the river from the Upper Sycamore slough to Knight's Landing, a distance of over 40 miles, and which, of course, included the filling of all depressions or sloughs, to prevent the water of the river from flowing over its banks and flooding the lands of the district. It mentioned by name the place called "Wilkins' Slough." The respondent thereafter commenced to construct its works in accordance with the said plan, and completed the same on the first day of December, 1872; and from that date it has continuously maintained its levee, except that in 1879 that portion of it which was across said Wilkins' slough was partly washed away, but was immediately—that is, in the next month—rebuilt to its original height. It is admitted that this levee, including that part of it constructed across Wilkins' slough, is necessary and indispensable to the protection of the lands of said district from overflow; and that, without such protection, the overflow would render said lands unfit for cultivation, and uninhabitable.

The complaint, taken as true, avers in substance that on December 22, 1879, plaintiff was the owner and in possession of a tract of land fronting on the opposite or east side of said Sacramento river; that on the twenty-third of said month he resided on said land with his family; that it was a safe and suitable dwelling-place, and valuable for agricultural purposes; and that, on or about the twenty-sixth of said month, he had prepared, cultivated, and seeded with wheat about 200 acres of said land, and that the remainder was used for alfalfa and grass. It then describes the said Wilkins' slough as situate about two miles above said land, and on the west side of the river, and avers that, when unobstructed, it divides the water in times of flood, and carries large quantities of it to the south-westward, away from the land of plaintiff, to a natural basin. Further averments are that on or about January 15, 1880, defendant completely obstructed said Wilkins' slough by placing a dam and levee across its head, and thus prevented any water from passing into or through the same, and that by reason of said obstruction, on or about the sixth day of April, 1880, the water did so accumulate in said Sacramento river as to overflow, and did overflow the easterly bank thereof, and did flood and inundate plaintiff's said land on said easterly bank, and did destroy his said growing wheat, grass, fences, etc., to his damage in the sum of $5,000. It is further averred that defendant continues, and intends to maintain, said levee, and that in times of flood it will cause the easterly bank to be overflowed, and plaintiff's land to be damaged as aforesaid.

It does not appear when or from what source plaintiff got title to or possession of his land. It only appears that he was there in December, 1879, and that the alleged damage occurred in April, 1880, which was between seven and eight years after the erection of the levee.

The questions to be determined in the case are: Did respondent have the right to construct the levee which it completed in 1872, notwithstanding the damage which was caused thereby, several years afterwards, to appellant's land, and has it the right to maintain said levee notwithstanding any damage which it may possibly or probably cause to said land hereafter, as apprehended by appellant and described in his complaint? It may be remarked that the conclusion that respondent had or has no such right does not follow from the mere fact of damage to appellant's land. The phrase "damnum absque injuria" is just as well recognized as a statement of a legal condition, as the maxim sic utere, etc., is as the statement of a limitation of rights to property. And the words "damnum absque injuria," include a direct declaration in terms of the proposition that there may be damage without legal injury. Therefore the reiteration of one or the other of these Latin phrases affords but little aid in the solution of any question. This is well expressed in the text of Wood's Law of Nuisances, (page 21,) as follows: "But, when no right has been violated, it cannot, by any process of reasoning, be established that there is a legal injury or damage. The instances of damnum absque injuria are very numerous, and are always injuries that result from a lawful act, for the law never recognizes an injury arising from a lawful act as imputing damages. * * * In giving force to the maxim sic utere, etc., the courts are always met by the right of parties to use their own property in every reasonable way, and neither justice nor public policy would tolerate the idea that a person should be made liable for damages resulting from a reasonable use of his property. Therefore, in determining whether or not an injury has been done amounting to a nuisance, it is necessary to balance the rights of the parties, in view of all the circumstances, and say whether or not the use of the property in the manner complained of is reasonable, and in accordance with the relative rights of the parties."

The real question in such cases is: Had the party sued the right to do the thing complained of? Respondent has, at least, as much right to maintain the levee as a natural person owning lands of a character similar to those of respondent's district would have; and its counsel bases its defense (1) upon the right of a natural person to protect his lands from overflow, upon the principle of self-defense, as held in Rex v. Commissioners, 8 Barn. & C. 355; and (2) upon its right as a public municipal corporation organized under the laws of the state, exercising the police powers of the state, and acting as a public instrumentality of the state in providing for the public welfare, and in complying with the conditions upon which the grant of swamp and overflowed lands was made to the state by the general government.

In Rex v. Commissioners, above noticed, the facts were these: The commissioners of the levels, for the purpose of protecting the property intrusted to their care against the inroads of the sea, erected certain groynes and other works which caused the water to flow with greater force against the lands of one Cosens, and to injure them, and to gradually wash a portion of them away. The lands of Cosens fronted on the sea-shore, and were adjoining and to the eastward of the levels on which the works of the commissioners were erected. The question was whether or not the commissioners could be compelled to pay for the damages done to the lands of Cosens, or to erect other works to prevent further injury to said lands. The court decided that the commissioners were not liable, and that Cosens would have to protect his own lands by works similar to those of the commissioners. Lord TENTERDEN, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said, among other things, as follows: "But the sea is a common enemy to all proprietors on that part of the coast, and I cannot see that the commissioners, acting for the common interest of several land-owners, are, as to this question, in a different situation from any individual proprietor. Now, is there any authority for saying that any proprietor of land exposed to the inroads of the sea may not endeavor to protect himself by erecting a groyne or other reasonable defense, although it may render it necessary for the owner of the adjoining land to do the like? I certainly am not aware of any authority or principle of law which can prevent him from so doing. * * * I am therefore of opinion that the only safe rule to lay down is this: that each land-owner, for himself, or the commissioners acting for several land-owners, may erect such defenses for the land under their care as the necessity of the case requires, leaving the others in like manner to protect themselves against the common enemy." And BAYLEY, J., says: "I am entirely of the same opinion. It seems to me that every land-owner exposed to the inroads of the sea has the right to protect himself, and is justified in making and erecting such works as are necessary for that purpose. * * * If a man sustains damage by the wrongful act of another, he is entitled to a remedy; but to give him that title two things must occur,—damage to himself, and a wrong committed by the other. That he has sustained damage is not of itself sufficient. Now here, Mr. Cosens may have sustained damage, but the commissioners have done no wrong. The dictum of Justice WILMOT was cited to show that when there is a right this court ought to find a remedy. But the right that Mr. Cosens and each land-owner has, is to protect himself,—not to be protected by his neighbors. To that right no injury has been done, nor can any wrongful act be charged against the commissioners."

Logically, this principle would seem to be applicable to the waters of large navigable American rivers subject to extensive overflows. And it has been thus made applicable in a number of adjudicated cases. Hoard v. City of Des Moines, 52 Iowa, 326, 17 N. W. Rep. 527; Shelbyville & Brandywine Turnpike Co. v. Green, 99 Ind. 205; Cairo V. R. Co. v. Stevens, 73 Ind. 283; Dubose v. Levee Com'rs, 11 La. Ann. 165; Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494. But inquiry on this branch of the subject need not here be further prosecuted, because counsel for appellant have argued the case almost entirely upon the theory that respondent is a municipal corporation acting under the authority of the state; and that, therefore, although exercising the power of the state, it is bound, like the state, by the constitutional limitation that private property cannot be taken for public use without compensation. This view of the case rests upon the assumption that building the levee, and thereby subsequently causing the damage complained of, was done under the power of eminent domain; and that, therefore, appellant was entitled to compensation for the "taking" of his land. But, assuming the theory to be correct, the position is clearly untenable. In the first place, when respondent built the levee, it could not possibly have condemned appellant's land under the power of eminent domain. It could not have shown that it had any use for said land, or intended to use it, or even to damage it, or to interfere with it in any way; and then the subsequent damage which happened years afterwards, was not a "taking" within the meaning of the most extreme cases on that subject. It was in the extreme sense, indirect, remote, and consequential. There was no physical directness between the act and the damage. It cannot be claimed that the water which the levee prevented from going over and through the west bank of the river was the very water which afterwards flowed onto appellant's land. It was remote and indirect in point of place and distance; it took place two miles away, and on the opposite side of a large navigable river. It was indirect, remote, and consequential in point of time; it took place more than seven years after the act complained of. And there was nothing in the nature of a permanent use or occupation of the land; it was a mere temporary overflow, which occurred once in seven years, and it is impossible to know when, if ever, it will occur again, or with how small an effort appellant could make its recurrence improbable or impossible. It is therefore one of the plainest cases for the application of the well-established rule that the state is not liable for remote and consequential damages caused by the erection of public works. That rule has been held to go much further than it is necessary to extend it here, in the cases of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536, and Green v. State, ante, 610, (No. 11,169, opinion filed June 30, 1887,) which two cases are, we think, determinative of the case at bar in favor of respondent.

Under these views, it is unnecessary to discuss the distinction made by counsel for respondent between "eminent domain" and the "police powers" of a state. The right and duty of the state, acting for the public benefit and the general welfare, and by means of municipal corporations like respondent, to reclaim the swamps and overflowed land granted to it by the Arkansas act, we do not understand to be disputed. Kimball v. Reclamation Fund Com'rs, 45 Cal. 344; Hagar v. Yolo Co., 47 Cal. 222; People v. Reclamation District 108, 53 Cal. 346; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406. And counsel for respondent argues that this right is exercised under the police powers of the state, and that, therefore, appellant would not have been entitled to compensation even if his property had been "taken." But, as the land of appellant was not taken, we need not follow the point here made by respondent. Under either view, respondent is not liable for the remote and indirect damage.

With respect to the matters involved in this case, it may be remarked that the Sacramento very closely resembles the Mississippi river, the difference being in magnitude, not in character. And it has been held in states bordering on that river that the state may not only control and levee its banks for the purpose of preventing the adjoining country from overflow, but may compel riparian owners to maintain such levees at their own expense. New Orleans Drainage Co.'s Case, 11 La. Ann. 370; Bass v. State, 34 La. Ann. 494; Dubose v. Levee Com'rs, 11 La. Ann. 165. And it is a matter of common knowledge that, since the settlement of California by Americans, it has been the custom of cities, towns, and private riparian owners along the Sacramento river to protect their lands from overflow by building levees on its banks. If the works of respondent can be declared a nuisance, then the levees in front of the cities of Colusa and Sacramento, which preserve millions worth of property, including the capitol buildings and grounds of the state, can be removed at the suit of any owner who will not protect himself, and who can show that the swell of the river is increased in times of flood by levees either above or below him, and the whole system of reclamation can be defeated.

Counsel for appellant contends that Wilkins' slough is within the legal definition of a "water-course," and argues for the application here of the doctrine that one land-owner on a water-course cannot dam it so as to flood the land of his neighbor above. But, in the first place, appellant is not a riparian owner upon Wilkins' slough. His land is two miles away, and divided from it by a large navigable river. He has no interest in whatever rights land-owners on Wilkins' slough, if there were any, might have as between themselves. In the second place, we do not think that Wilkins' slough, as between appellant and respondent at least, is to be treated as a water-course within the legal meaning of that word. It occasionally happens that a river, in its course from its source to its mouth, divides into two main, permanent channels, each carrying continuously a large part, if not a moiety, of its waters in all stages, and either uniting with the other at a lower point, or continuing to the sea, leaving a delta between the two. But there is nothing here resembling that condition. Wilkins' slough is not a channel or fork, continuously carrying a large part, or any part, of the waters of the Sacramento river. It carries no water at all except "in times of flood," and then the amount which it carries, when compared with the volume of water in the river, is insignificant. In fact, it has no original water of its own at all, but is simply a conduit by which occasionally some of the flood-water of the river escapes into the lower lands adjoining. This same office is performed by every other low place along the bank; and every other part of the levee could be removed as a nuisance if that part of it which is at Wilkins' slough can be so removed. Upon this point we cannot distinguish the case at bar from the case of the Shelbyville & Brandywine Turnpike Co. v. Green, 99 Ind. 205, where it was held that plaintiff could protect his land from overflow of the Big Blue river by erecting a levee on its bank at a place where there was "a depression washed out across the lands of plaintiff," and where, "when there was a rise in said river, the water passed out over said lands of plaintiff," although it caused a greater overflow on the premises of defendant, to its damage.

Considering, therefore, all the facts and circumstances of this case, and confining our opinion to the case here made, we think that the works of respondent complained of by appellant do not constitute a nuisance, and that respondent is not legally liable for the incidental damage caused thereby, as above described.

Judgment affirmed.

SEARLS, C. J., concurred.

TEMPLE, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment and in the opinion, but I do not agree to the construction apparently placed upon the case of Green v. Swift, 47 Cal. 536, and upon the case of Green v. State, ante, 610, (recently decided.)

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I concur in the judgment on the ground that the character, size, and operation of the slough which was obstructed cannot be satisfactorily determined from the pleadings upon which the cause was submitted and decided. Before a court of equity would be authorized in declaring the levees and dams of a reclamation district to be nuisances, and ordering them abated as such, something more should be shown than that the slough obstructed does at all times, when unobstructed, "divide the waters of the river in times of flood, and carry and conduct large volumes thereof to the south-westward, away from the lands of plaintiff to a natural basin." It is true, the complaint alleges that said slough was a natural water-course, but other allegations of the complaint and answer (which must be taken as true) leave that matter very doubtful and unsatisfactory.

The state and its grantees are charged with a great trust with respect to swamp and overflowed lands under the laws by which they are granted, and it is by no means clear that that trust can be executed if we apply strictly the common-law rules applicable to nuisances caused by the obstruction of natural water-courses. It may be necessary, under our peculiar conditions as to seasons, water-sheds, river systems, and swamp lands, to find a new definition for the term "natural water-course" if we are to apply old principles to the innumerable sloughs which are found in our overflowed districts, and which have well-defined banks and beds. There are channels in this state, not well defined in bank and bed, without water in them during certain months of the year, yet so important in operation during high water that to dam them would be disastrous to life and property, and there are sloughs running out from the rivers in the lowlands, with well-defined banks and beds, and with water running bank-full every month in the year, yet so unimportant in their operation that to close them would have no appreciable effect upon the river or its tributaries, except to improve the same for navigation, but so numerous in the overflowed districts that to restrain the obstruction of them simply because they are within the accepted definition of a natural water-course would in many instances prevent the reclamation of large and valuable tracts of land which the state and its grantors have undertaken and are in duty bound to reclaim. The dam and levee complained of were constructed in 1872, and have ever since been maintained. This action was commenced January 20, 1883, to procure an abatement of the levee and dam, and recover the sum of $5,000 damages alleged to have been caused by the destruction of plaintiff's growing crops, fences, and other improvements, and it does not appear that any complaint was made prior to the last-named date.

If the slough is one which, considering the end to be accomplished by defendant and with due regard to the property rights of others, could not lawfully be obstructed, it may be fairly inferred that plaintiff would have discovered the fact, and proceeded to have the obstruction abated, long before the commencement of this action. The delay in bringing the suit adds to the uncertainty arising from the complaint and answer concerning the equity of plaintiff's prayer for the abatement of the levee and dam as a nuisance.

HOUGHTON v. ALLEN. (No. 12,047.)^{*}

(Supreme Court of California. August 5, 1887.)

MORTGAGE—VALIDITY—MORTGAGEABLE INTEREST—CONTRACT FOR TITLE.

J. and R. entered into an agreement to sell A. certain lots, the consideration to be paid part in cash, and the balance in installments at one and two years. By the contract it was provided that, if A. failed to pay either installment when due, J. and R. would be released from performance on their part,—time being of the essence of the contract; but in such case it was the duty of J. and R. to sell the lots at auction to the highest bidder, and out of the money received to pay off the amount still due on the contract, and expenses. A. went into possession of the lots, built a house thereon, and occupied them for over a year. Some months before the first installment became due, A. mortgaged the lots to H. The mortgage was duly recorded. About five months after the execution of the mortgage, A. gave possession of the lots to D., and requested J. to make the deed for them to D., which he did. In an action by H. to foreclose his mortgage, held, that A. had a mortgageable interest in the lots, and that D. took them subject to the mortgage; J. and R., by conveying to him on A.'s request, having waived any breach of the contract.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco.

Beatty, Denson & Oatman, for appellant. A. P. Catlin, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. On August 22, 1870, Jackson and Rulofson, being the owners of lots 6, 7, and 8, in block 1, in the town of Davisville, executed and delivered to defendant, Allen, a contract agreeing to sell said lots to him for the sum of $250, and to convey the same on the twenty-second day of August, 1872. The sum of $50 was paid down, and the balance was to be paid in two installments of $100 each,—one August 22, 1871, the other August 22, 1872. It was provided that, if Allen failed to make either of said payments, then the said parties of the first part should be wholly released from performance on their part; time being of the essence of the contract. "But in that case," the contract reads, "it shall be the duty of the parties of the first part to sell the above-described premises at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, and out of the moneys received from such sale to pay and discharge the amount remaining due upon this contract, and the expense of such sale, rendering the overplus, if any, to the said party of the second part, his executors or assigns." In default of payments, Allen was to peacefully surrender possession of the property, but until breach of the contract he was to occupy and enjoy the use of the premises. The agreement was not recorded until July 9, 1872; but immediately after the execution and delivery of the contract Allen went into possession of the property, placed a house thereon, and continued to occupy and enjoy the premises until on or about January 12, 1872. On April 6, 1871, Allen executed and delivered to plaintiff the mortgage referred to in the complaint, and which includes the said lots 6, 7, and 8. This mortgage was recorded April 7, 1871. Allen made no payment of the purchase price except the first one, $50.

On or about the twelfth day of January, 1872, the defendant Allen surrendered the possession of the said lots 6, 7, and 8 to the defendant William Dresbach, and wrote a letter to the said J. P. Jackson, requesting him to convey the said property to William Dresbach instead of to him, (Allen;) and on the twelfth day of January, 1872, the said Jackson made, executed, and delivered to the said Dresbach a deed of said lots, which contained this recital: "The premises now herein conveyed being the same for which a bond for deed was heretofore given to Thomas Allen, and this conveyance is now made to said Dresbach at the instance and request of said Allen." This deed was recorded February 24, 1872. The debt that was secured by the mortgage of April 6, 1871, was never paid, and in due time the mortgagee (plaintiff herein) brought his suit to foreclose his mortgage, making Allen and Dresbach defendants. Allen suffered default, and Dresbach answered, averring that prior to April 6, 1871, the title to the lots in controversy was in John P. Jackson; that Jackson had deeded to him, and that he held a good title to the lots, free from and not subject to plaintiff's mortgage. The court concluded that said lots 6, 7, and 8 were not subject to the lien of the mortgage, and judgment was entered accordingly.

The interest held by Allen at the time he executed the mortgage to plaintiff was the subject of mortgage. Section 2947 of the Civil Code provides that "any interest in real property which is capable of being transferred may be mortgaged." and the interest of one who holds a contract or bond for title is within the rule of law thus declared. Jones v. Lapham, 15 Kan. 540; Loughlin v. Braley, 25 Kan. 147; Crane v. Turner, 67 N. Y. 487; Smith v. Patten, 12 W. Va. 541; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1021.

Under the contract, Allen had been put in possession of the premises by the vendors. He had made one payment, built a house on the land, and at the time he executed the mortgage had at least four months' undisturbed possession before him. When he delivered possession, and requested his vendors to make the deed to Dresbach, he still held the undisturbed possession of the lots. The recitals in the deed from Jackson to Dresbach, and the possession of Allen which was delivered by him to the latter, were sufficient to put Dresbach upon inquiry, and to charge him with notice of the facts, notwithstanding the fact that the contract was not at that time of record. The transaction was, in effect, a sale by Allen and Jackson to Dresbach, with full notice of the contract and of Houghton's lien, and Dresbach thereafter stood in no better position to defeat the lien of plaintiff than Allen would if he had completed the purchase.

It is claimed by respondent that the mortgageable interest held by Allen was subject to be determined in the event of a breach; that this interest ceased upon failure to pay the installment due August 22, 1872; and that Allen's request to Jackson to convey to Dresbach was a waiver of his right to require a sale at auction. But so long as Jackson was satisfied to allow Allen to remain in possession without payment of the first installment, there was no breach of the contract and no determination of the interest held by Allen. So far as the record shows, there was no demand made upon Allen for the installment due August 22, 1871, or refusal on his part to pay. By acting upon Allen's request to convey to Dresbach, Jackson recognized the right of Allen to control the deed, and this, of itself, was a waiver of the forfeiture for non-payment. Under these circumstances, Jackson could not complain and the rights of Dresbach could not be enlarged over those of Jackson in consequence of the deed from the latter to the former. Baker v. Bishop Hill Colony, 45 Ill. 264.

We do not think that Allen could waive any right under the agreement, after the execution and delivery of the mortgage, which would operate to divest the mortgagee of his security. After pledging all the rights he held under the contract to Houghton as security for the payment of his obligation to him, he could not in equity destroy the effect of that security by a voluntary surrender or waiver which had neither consent nor consideration to support it. It may be admitted, as claimed by respondent, that, as between vendor and vendee, the vendor, after refusal by the vendee to complete the purchase, may sell and may recover possession; that the vendee, refusing to go on with his payments, after paying part, forfeits the payments made, and the vendor may bring ejectment or alienate; and also that time was of the essence of this contract. All these contentions may be conceded, yet the facts remain that the vendors here acquiesced in the continued possession of the property by the vendee, and recognized his rights under the contract to control the deed; that while rightfully in possession under contract for title, and before the lapse of time for payment of installments, he had mortgaged the premises to plaintiff, and that Dresbach knew or had notice of all these facts.

In speaking upon the question of the rights of parties similarly situated, but under a parol agreement to purchase, the New Jersey court of chancery said: "They (the purchasers by parol) did not pay the $500, as was stipulated by the agreement, on the first of April. But in May they paid upward of $900, and Allen (vendor) accepted and thereby waived all difficulty as to time. They had a right to a conveyance of the property upon their securing the balance of the purchase money according to the agreement. Can there be a doubt but that they might have assigned their benefit in this agreement to the complainants and placed them in their stead in their relationship to the property, and as to their right of conveyance from Allen? If such an assignment would have been valid, and could have been enforced in equity, I cannot see how the mortgage can be invalid. * * * They had a beneficial agreement, which, beyond all doubt, they had the right to assign. They meant to do this, and to carry out that intention executed the mortgage in question. This court will not permit them to defeat that intention, and defraud other parties upon the technical ground that there was no title or estate vested in them to mortgage. The equities of the complainants under the mortgage were that they had the right, if the Armitages (purchasers) refused to fulfill the agreement with Allen themselves, to assume his position, and redeem the property. Neither Allen nor the Armitages could defeat that right. If Allen had called upon them to carry out the agreement, and they had refused or neglected, he might then have disposed of the property free from their lien. But he could not covertly or without notice to them defeat their mortgage, or, rather, deprive them of their equities." Sinclair v. Armitage, 12 N. J. Eq. 177.

And so in this case, while a mortgage in this state is not an assignment, and while we do not think that the vendor or any one else was bound to notify the plaintiff, or call upon him to carry out the agreement, yet the parties, Jackson, Allen, and Dresbach, could not by an agreement among themselves deprive the plaintiff of his equities, among which was the right to have the property sold at auction to the highest bidder, in case of default in making payments, and, after payment of the balance due upon the contract, have the overplus, if any, applied to the satisfaction of the mortgage. Plaintiff had the right to assume that the contract would be carried out in all respects, and the purchaser, not being in default at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage, could not stipulate away this right, after receiving plaintiff's money ($921.75) upon the faith and security of the contract.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to modify the decree of foreclosure and sale so as to include said lots 6, 7, and 8, and to have the proceeds, or so much as may be necessary, applied to the satisfaction of plaintiff's mortgage.

SAN JOAQUIN VAL. BANK v. BOURS. (No. 11,631.)

HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF TESTIMONY—OTHER PROOF OF FACT.

In an action by a banking corporation against its cashier, seeking to hold him liable for making an improper loan, the exclusion of a question put by defendant to a witness, as to a custom or practice prevailing in another banking-house, held not prejudicial error, when defendant was himself allowed to testify fully as to the custom.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

Action by a banking corporation against its cashier, to recover 9,247.49, and interest, which it was claimed had been loaned by defendant to an irresponsible person, without security, and had not been repaid.

J. H. Budd, for appellant. W. L. Dudley and J. B. Hall, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. A decision in this case was heretofore made by this court, and the opinion then filed is to be found in 65 Cal. 249, 3 Pac. Rep. 864.

A comparison of the record as it then stood, and of the one now under consideration, shows that there is no question now presented for determination which was not then brought to its attention, and passed upon by this court, except those which will hereafter be noticed. It is evident, therefore, that the law of this case, save with reference to the new points now advanced, has been settled. "Defendant was rightly held liable by the court below for the amount of the De Blainville indebtedness." 65 Cal. and 3 Pac. Rep., supra.

The sole ground for the reversal and the awarding of a new trial then was that a part of the judgment against the defendant was for an alleged overdraft, for and on account of his salary as cashier, for which reason the judgment was held to be erroneous. This ground for a reversal does not now appear. The errors of law claimed to have been made by the trial court, which were not alleged to have been committed when the case was here before, are:

First. That an objection on the part of the plaintiff was sustained to this question: "And all the way through, while that house was doing a banking business, there were cash tags, as you call them, from a few hundred dollars to eight or nine thousand dollars?" This question referred to a general custom or practice which had prevailed in the banking-house of Bours & Co., an institution other than the plaintiff. And the defendant was allowed to testify fully as to the custom, so that no damage was done him in any event; in fact, the appellant's brief seems to assume that such a custom was fully proved, both as to Bours & Co. and plaintiff.

Second. It is further contended that one or more of the findings are unwarranted, either because of there being no evidence to support them, or because the count or counts of the complaint upon which such findings were made were abandoned by the plaintiff. All the findings are either sustained by sufficient evidence pertinent to such of the issues made by the pleadings as were not abandoned, or they were based upon a count the allegations of which were not denied by the answer.

There is no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

REYNOLDS v. LINCOLN and others. (No. 11,667.)*(Supreme Court of California. August 16, 1887.)EJECTMENT—INSTRUCTIONS—LIMITATIONS.

In an action of ejectment, where defendants claimed under the statute of limitations, held, that there was no error of which plaintiffs could complain in instructions to the jury telling them, in effect, that plaintiffs were entitled to prevail upon the strength of their paper title, unless the defendants went into possession under a tax deed claiming title, and maintained such possession under claim of title openly, notoriously, and visibly, as against the whole world, for a sufficient length of time prior to the date when the act of 1878, amendatory of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 325 took effect, to render the bar of the statute of limitations effectual; that there was no conflict in the instructions, and, there being a conflict in the evidence on the issues raised, a refusal to grant a new trial, after verdict for defendants, was not error.

Action of ejectment, in which defendants set up, among other defenses, the statutes of limitations.

W. H. Beatty and John Reynolds, for appellant. A. C. Freeman, and J. H. McKune, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment brought to obtain the possession of certain land lying in the county of Sacramento. The defendants had judgment rendered in their favor, and from an order denying the plaintiff a new trial he has appealed. Taking all the instructions emanating from the court, at the instance of the respective counsel and of its own motion, and giving them an unstrained interpretation, we think that they were correct. The jury were, in effect, told, inter alia, that the plaintiff's paper title should enable him to recover in the action, unless they were satisfied from the evidence that the defendants in good faith went into possession of the premises sued for, claiming title thereto under a tax deed, and by their adverse possession, and that said possession, under such claim or right, had been maintained openly, notoriously, and visibly as against the whole world, including the plaintiff's claim of title, for a sufficient length of time, and in such manner, prior to the date when the act of 1878, amendatory of section 325, Code Civil Proc., took effect, as to render the bar of the statute of limitations effectual. Upon a conflict of evidence as to those matters of fact, submitted to them for determination, the jury found a verdict for the defendants, and the court below, upon motion, one of the grounds of which was the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, refused to grant a new trial, and in so doing showed, as we think, no abuse of the discretion in such matters with which it is invested.

We perceive no conflict in the instructions, no disobedience by the jury in applying the facts to the law as given them by the court, nor any other prejudicial error in the record, and the order should be affirmed.

APPEAL—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL—INTENDMENT.

On appeal from an order granting a new trial, made by a judge other than the one who presided at the trial of the cause, on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to support one of the findings of fact, every intendment prevails in favor of the correctness of such order, and such intendment must be overcome by an affirmative showing of error, and an abuse of that sound legal discretion which the lower court was called upon to exercise in relation to the matter, in order to justify a reversal of such order by the appellate court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; D. P. HATCH, Judge. Wells, Van Dyke & Lee, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial, made by a judge other than the one who presided at the trial of the cause. The order was made upon the ground that the record did not show sufficient evidence to support one of the findings of facts. Every intendment prevails in favor of the correctness of such an order, made in the manner above specified, and such intendments must be overcome by an affirmative showing of error. Blum v. Sunol, 63 Cal. 341. It is the well-settled rule of this court that unless the court below is shown to have abused that sound, legal discretion which it is called upon to exercise in relation to such a matter, its order in the premises will not be disturbed. *Savage v. NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT ON MOTION—TIME OF ALLOWANCE.

Where a statement, on motion for a new trial, has not been certified to by the trial judge as settled, the statutory limit of six months provided by Code Civil Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—49

Proc. Cal. § 473, does not apply to it; and where the motion is to incorporate into the statement a specification of particulars, wherein the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to support the verdict, it may properly be allowed within any reasonable time, in the discretion of the judge, provided the proposed statement contains the evidence which it is contended did not support the verdict.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

Frank H. Smith and Joseph H. Budd, for appellant. Louittit, Woods & Levinsky, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order made after final judgment, allowing the plaintiff to amend his statement on motion for a new trial. It will be perceived that, when the motion was made to incorporate in the proposed statement a specification of particulars wherein the evidence was alleged to be insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury, the certificate of the judge who tried the cause, that said statement had been settled, had not been attached thereto, and that said statement had never been settled or certified to at all. Hence the proceeding, which the plaintiff was seeking to have amended, had not been taken or completed in a legal sense, so as to be susceptible of having applied to it the statutory limit of six months, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Hayne, New Trials, § 160, p. 479. The statement, as proposed, contained the evidence which it was contended did not sustain the verdict, therefore the specification of the particulars of its insufficiency for that purpose might properly be made. Id. p. 477. There was no preparation of a new statement. It was an attempt to complete that which would have otherwise been invalid, and before the statutory period of limitation of six months had begun to run; and that was allowable under the section of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, if done within a reasonable time, to be determined by a proper legal discretion, which we think was duly exercised by the trial court, considering all the circumstances surrounding the matter under discussion. The order should therefore be affirmed.

APPEAL—WHEN IT LIES—ORDER APPOINTING SPECIAL ADMINISTRATOR.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 963, subd. 3, providing for an appeal "From a judgment or order, granting, refusing, or revoking letters testamentary or of administration or of guardianship," is intended to refer to orders appointing general administrators, and does not affect Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1413, providing that no appeal will be allowed from an order appointing a special administrator.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

Carter, Smith & Keniston and S. D. Woods, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order appointing a special administrator. We are of opinion that from such an order no appeal lies. Subdivision 3, § 963, Code Civil Proc., referring to certain appealable matters, reads thus: "From a judgment or order granting, refusing, or revoking letters testamentary, or of administration, or of guardianship." Section 1413, Code Civil Proc., is as follows: "In making the appointment of a special administrator, the court or judge must give preference to the person entitled to letters testamentary or of administration, but no appeal must be allowed from the appointment." In order, if possible, to harmonize the two sections of the Code so that both may prove effective, it would seem as if the legislative mind, in passing the first section, was directed towards orders appointing general administrators, and did not have in view such orders as regards special administrators, and that the last section was enacted for the purpose of supplying a rule of action in the appointment of such administrators as those last mentioned. It is presumable that this court, in delivering the opinion in the case of the Estate of Crozier, 65 Cal. 333, 4 Pac. Rep. 109, did not have under consideration the exact question which is here involved, and did not intend thereby to pass upon it, having there no cause to determine the force and effect of the two sections of the Code, supra, taken together.

It follows that the appeal should be dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

APPEAL—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL.

On an appeal from an order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding, where there is a conflict of evidence on material points, the order will not be set aside.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

¹Respecting the appealability of orders in probate proceedings, see Stuttmeister v Superior Court, ante, 35, and note.

Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, (S. D. Woods and A. L. Levinsky, of counsel,) for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action by the assignee of Emma F. Sanders and W. W. Cowell, insolvents, to compel defendant to convey to plaintiffs certain lots of land, upon the averment that they were conveyed to defendant by said Emma F. Sanders without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding creditors, etc. Defendant claimed that he had furnished the purchase money to buy said lots; that the deed was made to said Emma, (who was his daughter,) to hold for him in trust, as she transacted most of his business for him; and that she afterwards conveyed the lots to him at his request, because she was about to be married. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered for the defendant. Afterwards, however, on motion of plaintiff, a new trial was granted and defendant appealed from the order granting the new trial.

One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial was the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and decision. While we cannot see clearly why the learned judge of the court below granted the motion, still as there was a conflict of evidence on material points, we would not be justified in interfering with his discretion.

Order affirmed.

WISE and others v. BURTON and others. (No. 11,780.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 1, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS—SUFFICIENCY.

In an assignment of errors the specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence need not be more specific than the findings of the court.

2. SURVEYS—SEPARATE SURVEYS—COMMON LINE—PRESUMPTION.

Where, in an action of ejectment, the question being the boundary line between two ranches, there having been two surveys, starting from points directly opposite, the distances between the calls, the monuments, and length of the lines run being exactly the same, the presumption will be conclusive that both surveys are of the same line, and that it is the true boundary line.

3. SAME—MONUMENTS—HOUSE.

When in the field-notes of a survey, reference is made to "a house," and the same is marked on the map of the survey, the house becomes a monument of such survey, as much as a witness-tree.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Ejectment. Judgment for plaintiffs. The defendants appeal.

R. B. Canfield, for appellants. W. C. Stratton, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a new trial in an action of ejectment in which the main question is the location of the boundary line between two ranchos, Jesus Maria and La Purissima. The line in controversy is a part of the east line of the former ranch, and the west line of the latter. Both parties claimed under patents from the United States,—that of the Jesus Maria dated seventh of September, 1871; and that of the Purissima, twelfth of October, 1882. The court must have found that the evidence showed the western boundary of the Purissima was on a line further west than that contended for by the defendant, (appellant here.)

The cause was tried by the court, and it is urged that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. The findings of the court were of the most general character, viz.: That the plaintiffs were, at a day anterior to the commencement of the action, owners and seized in fee and possessed of the land in suit, and that defendant had wrongfully, etc., ejected them from such possession. The specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision are also general. But they are aimed at the findings. They assert that the evidence is insufficient to show that the plaintiffs or either of them was the owner, etc., or that defendant ever ejected the plaintiffs, etc., from the land; following the findings. And it is said on behalf of plaintiffs (respondents here) that the specifications are insufficient, inasmuch as they do not state the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient. But as the findings are general, and the specifications follow them, we think they should be held sufficient. This conclusion is sustained by the ruling of this court in Morris v. De Celis, 51 Cal. 60, and Du Brutz v. Jessup, 54 Cal. 118. Though some of the cases subsequently decided are not in accordance with those above cited, still they have not been overruled, and are still authority here. Counsel, however, by following Eddelbuttel v. Durrell, 55 Cal. 277, would obviate all difficulty on this point, and be secured in having their cases considered. See, also, Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 523, and Doherty v. Enterprise M. Co., 50 Cal. 187.

The respondent states in his point that it is admitted that the patent of the Purissima, under which the plaintiffs claim, includes the land in dispute. He does not point out the admission, and after careful examination we are unable to find it in the record. It would be strange if the counsel adversary to plaintiffs had made such an admission, as it involved the very matter in dispute, and on which the defendants' case turned. We find no such admission; but we find from the field-notes and maps of the official surveys of the ranchos named, that, just where the land in dispute is located, the line between the two ranchos is a line common to both; that the entire west line of the Purissima is common with a portion of the east line of the Jesus Maria. That the two ranchos are coterminous from station 24 to station 26 of the Purissima there can be no doubt.

We insert here, side by side, the field-notes of both surveys as to those lines.

No. 25 for corner station 25; thence north twenty-five degrees forty-five minutes east, two hundred and eighty-seven chains, to post on top of chemical hill on south-east side of Santa Lucia valley, from which a live oak post in mound and pits marked W. P. J. M. No. 4 and P. 26 for witness post to corner 26, bearing north twenty-four degrees west, eleven chains and fifty links distant, and from which a live oak tree bears south twenty-one degrees thirty minutes west, sixty-three links distant station."

20 chains 287 chains, set a post No. 5, and raised a mound of rocks, as instructed. Station.

"5. S. 43° W. At 41 chains intersected the west boundary T. 7 north, R. 34 west, 1,816 chains north of the corner to sections 13, 18, 19, and 24, and set a post, and raised a mound, with charcoal deposit trench and pits, as instructed, 90 chains to the right bank of La Purissima in Santa Ynez river, 92 chains, to a point in the middle of the river bed, station. This not being a suitable place to establish a corner, I mark a cottonwood tree for witness corner, which bears N. 43° E., distant 227 links from true corner."

There follow here traced copies of the lines referred to, taken from the maps. The one on the right is the line of the Jesus Maria, the other that of the Purissima.

The field-notes above given as to each ranch commence with the course ending at the point of beginning of the disputed line, and the course preceding that.

The Purissima's west line reaches the Jesus Maria's east line at Station 24. From that point it runs to Station 25,—a distance of nearly half a mile, (71 chains, 10 links.) It will be observed that the survey of the former (Purissima) is made going in a course north-east and south-west; that of the latter (Jesus Maria) in the opposite direction. The angle with the meridian at which those lines are run is the same. North 43° east in Purissima, and south 43° west in the Jesus Maria. The words and figures are reversed for the reason, above given, that the surveyors were doing the work in opposite directions. The same is true of the next line from Station 25 to Station 26 on the Purissima. The angle on line going north on both ranchos is the same. In former (Purissima) is north $25^{\circ} 45'$ east; in latter (Jesus Maria) south $25^{\circ} 45'$ west,—figures denoting angle reversed as above. The length of the line between these stations is 287 links. The north part of this line on the Jesus Maria is 287 links in length; the end of course 24 is Station 25. This course 24, before it reaches Station 25, has been running 71 chains, 10 links on the Jesus Maria as patented. It ends at a post on a rock mound, as above stated, on a side hill for corner No. 5 of Jesus Maria. Can there be any doubt that here is the Station 5 of the Jesus Maria, and that the line from 25 to 26 in the Purissima, and from 5 to 4 in the Jesus Maria, commences at the same point, runs at the same angle, and are of the same length, 287 chains? The conclusion is irresistible that the line between the above points is the same, and that the west line of the Purissima and the east line of the Jesus Maria are the same.

There is one controlling monument in the field-notes of the Jesus Maria survey. This is the Santa Lucia house. The existence of this house is testified to by the witness Harris, called by plaintiffs, and by Jesse, Lewis, and Cooper, called by defendant. The field-notes of the Jesus Maria show that the survey was made in 1859; and Lewis, who assisted in making it, says that it was then occupied by Burton. It is stated in the field-notes of the Jesus Maria that this house is west of the line of that ranch, and distant from it about twenty chains. This house is a monument, as a witness tree is a monument. The map and the objects on it are to be regarded. See Vance v. Foye, 24 Cal. 435; Serrano v. Rawson, 47 Cal. 55; Black v. Sprague, 54 Cal. 266; McIver's Lessee v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 173; Chapman v. Polack, 11 Pac. Rep. 764. It is a witness-house called for in the field-notes, and delineated on the map and field-notes, which are in the patent, constituting a part of it.

Nor is there any testimony which is contradictory to the views above presented. The testimony of the witness Harris is based on a view of the matter in dispute entirely theoretical and arbitrary, and outside of the facts in the case established by documents made contemporaneously with the surveys of both ranchos, and which cannot be gainsaid.

The surveyor (Norway) who make the survey of the Purissima must have run the common line, and found it correct, or he must have adopted it from the survey of the Jesus Maria made by Norris. In either case it is binding on the plaintiffs, who claim under the patent of the Purissima, into which this survey went, as shown by the map; and in either case the correctness of this common line, as disclosed by the maps and field-notes of the Jesus Maria, is acknowledged. The plaintiffs, then, are bound by this common line described in the Jesus Maria field-notes, as running about 20 chains east of the Santa Lucia house. The existence of the house at the time of survey of the Jesus Maria is established, as well as at the time of the trial, is spoken of in the testimony as the ranch-house of the Jesus Maria, and shown to have been occupied for several years. Its location is shown on the map. The survey of the Purissima was, under these circumstances, accepted with this call for the house, and its distance from the common line. We think the word "about," under these circumstances, should not lessen this distance of twenty chains, and that the distance of the house should be fixed at twenty chains, regarding the house as a monument. The fact that the application of a graduated scale to the map shows the distance of this house from the line to be twenty chains confirms the propriety of disregarding the word "about." This application of the scale is allowable and proper, for the reason that the surveys are official, and made accurately on a scale of forty chains to the inch. It should also be borne in mind in this connection that the survey of the Purissima as to this common line, is subsequent to that of the Jesus Maria, and based on it. Then running a line due east from the house a distance of twenty chains, and then a line through the point so reached in the course designated on both maps, will fix the common line correctly. The plaintiffs can recover nothing west of this line.

It may be added here that the application of the graduated scale to both maps, which were made on the same scale, will show the distance of the corner of the sections 31, 32, 5, 6, township 8 N., range 34 W., from the common line, to be on the Jesus Maria map forty chains, and on that of the Purissima forty-four chains,—four chains further east than shown on the first mentioned map.

In the field-notes of the Jesus Maria it is stated that the eastern line of the ranch, so-called, intersects the south boundary of township 8 N., range 34 W., forty-one chains east of corner to sections 5, 6, 31, and 32, where a post was set and a mound of rocks raised. The above are delineated on the Jesus Maria map. The point of intersection is stated to be 74.13 chains from corner No. 4 of the survey. The above calls are all delineated on the map. As to this, Harris says: "I did not find the corner to sections 5, 6, 31, and 32. I found the first half-mile corner to the east of that point; and ran thence west 47 chains 10 links; thence north-easterly on ranch boundary, 76 chains and 48 links, to come to my corner No. 4 up to the post I set. The intersection of the Purissima line, as I ran it, with the township line, occurs 32 chains 90 links east of the corner to sections 5, 6, 31, and 32." While the corner of these sections could not be found by Harris, he did fix it at 32.90 chains west of the Purissima line. When he did fix it, he only ran 32.90 chains east. According to the testimony, he looked for and found the first half-mile corner to the east of the sections' corner, then ran west from that point 47.10 chains; thence ran north-easterly on the ranch boundary 76.48 chains, to come to corner No. 4, to the post he set.

Certainly a line drawn from a point 47.10 chains north of the corner of these sections would not be on the ranch boundary. The boundary lay east of this corner, not west. Still he was 47.10 chains west of the point, and then from that point obtained by westing, by going away from the ranch boundary, he says he ran north-easterly on the ranch boundary to his corner No. 4. The reference here is to corner No. 4 of the Jesus Maria. This was the only corner No. 4 he had referred to. It is not surprising that the real corner No. 4 was not found, and how a line starting from the point he says he did, would run north-easterly along the ranch boundary, passes comprehension.

Harris also speaks of corner No. 4 of the Jesus Maria and No. 23 of the Purissima as the same. In this the maps show that he is in error. According to them, No. 4 of the former corresponds to No. 26 of the latter. Harris' survey was made in disregard of the calls of the Jesus Maria plat and field-notes, which, as the line he was seeking to fix was a line common to both ranchos, he should have regarded. And especially should this have been done, when the survey of the Purissima was subsequent to that of the Jesus Maria, as the line in dispute was based on it.

Thompson's testimony relates to a part of the line of the Jesus Maria not in dispute here. The testimony of the other witnesses are clearly against the findings.

The findings of the court below are not sustained by the evidence as to any land west of the common line as herein laid down, and on that ground the order must be reversed. As to the evidence in relation to general reputations the subject of the boundary of the Jesus Maria, which was ruled out in the view taken herein, it is unnecessary to pass on it, and therefore we notice it no further. As to the other points urged there is no error. But for the reasons above given the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to set aside the judgment, and order a new trial, and that such new trial may be had in accordance with views herein expressed. So ordered.

EJECTMENT—ALLOWANCE FOR IMPROVEMENTS—APPEAL—FINDINGS.

In an action to recover land a judgment for the plaintiff will not be reversed on the ground that the court below has not found upon an issue in relation to improvements on the land claimed as a set-off to damages for withholding the property, where the only evidence as to such improvements on the record is that there was a house upon the land, but there is no evidence as to its value, or to show that it was put there as an improvement in good faith, as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 741, providing that the value of such improvements may be allowed as a set-off to damages when made by a defendant in good faith.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

A. B. Canfield and A. Packard, for appellants. W. C. Stratton, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. This is an appeal from the judgment in the same case, No. 11,780, which last is an appeal from an order denying a new trial.

There is but one point, which is that the court did not find on an issue made by the answer in relation to improvements on the land to be allowed as a set-off to damages for withholding the property for which judgment is rendered. The value of such improvements may be allowed as a set-off to damages when made by a defendant, or those under whom he claims in good faith, holding under color of title adversely to the claim of plaintiff. Code Civil Proc. § 741. It is not averred by defendant that such improvements were made in good faith, and there is no evidence in the record that any such improvements were made. In the record in case No. 11,780, which is an appeal from an order denying a new trial in this cause, there is evidence that there was a house on the land for which the judgment was rendered, but there is no testimony showing that the house was such that it should be regarded as a permanent improvement, or of its value. Confining the consideration of the case to the record presented here on this appeal from the judgment, in which the defense is not well pleaded, and there is no evidence either of improvements or their value, we would not hold that the court erred in not finding on the issue. This court will not reverse for want of a finding on an issue where there is no evidence in relation to such issue.

Granted that we could look into the record in the other case where all the evidence in the case is set forth, but in which there was also a lack of evidence, still we would not reverse because the court had failed to find on the issue mentioned. The court could not judicially know the state and condition of the house, whether it constituted an improvement of the character required by the statute, nor could it judicially know its value. The case would still be one of want of evidence, and in this state of the case the judgment should not, on the contention put forth, be reversed.

As far as regards this appeal, no error appears, and therefore the judgment must stand affirmed. So ordered.

HILTON and others v. YOUNG. (12,110.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 16, 1887.)

VENDOR AND VENDEE—EXECUTORY CONTRACT—RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

A purchaser of land, while part of the price remained unpaid, and before the legal title had been conveyed to him, conveyed a portion of the land to A. After the purchaser's death, all the right, title, and interest of his estate in and to the land was sold, under order of the probate court, to B., who had notice of A.'s claim, but who paid to the original vendor the balance due on the purchase price, and obtained a deed to the whole land to himself. In a suit by B. against A. to quiet title, in which A. filed a cross-bill, held, that B. took title subject to the equitable rights of A. in the part of the land conveyed to him, and that A., although not entitled to a decree declaring B. to have no right, title, or interest in such part, was entitled to a conveyance of such part from B.; but this, only on condition that A. pay to B. a ratable proportion of the sum paid by the latter to get the title to the whole.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Butte county; LEON D. FREER, Judge.
Gray & Sexton, for appellants. Hundley & Gall, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is an action to quiet title. One Vanderhoof had a contract with the Central Pacific Railroad Company for the purchase of certain land. He paid 20 per cent. of the price, and the interest on the balance for one year. While the legal title remained in the company, "for a valuable consideration, he granted and conveyed in fee-simple to the defendant, Mary M. Young, a part of said lands, the same being the premises in dispute in this action." This deed transferred to the defendant the right of Vanderhoof to a conveyance from the company of the tract in controversy, and to that extent operated as an assignment of the contract. Shortly after making this deed Vanderhoof died, and, his estate being insolvent, "all the right, title, and interest of said estate in and to said lands mentioned in said contract," was sold, under the order of the probate court, to the plaintiff Hilton. This sale did not transfer to Hilton any sort of interest in or right to the premises in controversy, for Vanderhoof had previously parted with all his right as to that portion of the land, and the probate sale only purported to be of the right, title, and interest which the estate had. In this condition of affairs, Hilton and his co-plaintiff went to the railroad company, and paying the balance of the purchase money, obtained a deed of all the land covered by the contract, including the defendant's tract. They did this with full knowledge and notice of the rights of the defendant. As a matter of course, so far as the tract in dispute is concerned, they took only the legal title, with a trust in favor of the defendant, and their claim to the beneficial ownership of that tract is as destitute of foundation in law as it is in conscience.

The court below denied the plaintiffs' application for relief, and, upon the cross-complaint of defendant, decreed that they had not "any right, title, or interest in or to said tract of land," and that the title of the defendant be quieted as against the plaintiffs, and those claiming under them. This was going further than the facts found warranted. The legal title was in the plaintiffs. It could not have passed to the defendant as an after-acquired title; for neither the defendant's grantor, nor his estate, ever acquired the title. The legal title being in the plaintiffs, they could not be said not to have "any right, title, or interest." Upon the facts found, all that could properly have been done was to have decreed that the plaintiffs convey to the defendant. As a condition of this relief, the defendant should be required to do equity; and we think it is equity that she should pay a ratable proportion of what the plaintiffs paid to get the title.

The fact that the plaintiffs took the title from the railroad company with notice of the equitable rights of defendant, subjected them to all the duties resting upon the company. In the language of Story, (1 Eq. Jur. § 396,) "If a subsequent purchaser has notice of the contract, he is liable to the same equity, and stands in the same place, and is bound to do the same acts, which the person who contracted, and whom he represents, would be bound to do." But he is not ordinarily bound to do any other or further acts. Now, the company was bound to convey only upon payment of the balance due to it upon the contract. The defendant could not have got a deed from it without paying at least what was due for her portion of the land; and it would seem that, in order to get the deed from the successor in interest of the company, she must make the same payment.

Nor is there anything in the position of the parties before the making of the deed from the company which would change this result. The conveyance of the land from Vanderhoof to the defendant "in fee-simple" doubtless operated as an assignment of a portion of the contract, with an undertaking on his part to pay what remained due to the company. As between them, the obligation to pay the company was on Vanderhoof. But the fact that the plaintiffs had notice of this obligation on the part of Vanderhoof does not make them liable to meet it, any more than it would make them liable to meet his other obligations; for the defendant's portion was separate and distinct from the plaintiffs' portion, and as to the defendant's portion the plaintiffs do not, and could not, claim through Vanderhoof. The case, therefore, stands thus: The defendant got an assignment of a part of a contract to convey land; the plaintiffs got an assignment of the remaining part. But the owner of the land was not compelled to split up his contract by making separate deeds. And, as must be presumed from the findings, the plaintiffs, in order to get a deed to any portion, were compelled to pay the balance due upon defendant's part as well as upon their own. This having been done, we think the defendant cannot have the assistance of a court of equity to obtain the legal title from the plaintiffs, except upon condition of paying to them what they paid on her behalf. See Tompkins v. Sprout, 55 Cal. 31.

We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to enter a decree that the plaintiffs execute and deliver to the defendant a deed of the land in controversy, upon payment by defendant within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, of a ratable proportion (according to the number of acres) of the balance of the purchase money paid by plaintiffs to the railroad company; the plaintiffs to recover their costs of appeal.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter a decree that plaintiffs execute and deliver to the defendant a deed of the land in controversy, upon payment by defendant within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, of a ratable proportion (according to the number of acres) of the balance of the purchase money paid by plaintiffs to the railroad company, the plaintiffs to recover their costs of appeal.

BAKER and others v. FIREMEN'S FUND INS. CO. (No. 12,136.)

1. VENUE—ACTION TO DECLARE A DEED A MORTGAGE.

Const. Cal. § 16, art. 12, provides that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or in the county where its principal place of business is situated. Code Civil Proc. § 392, requires actions for the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form of such estate or interest to be brought in the county where such real estate, or any part thereof, is situated. Held, that an action to declare a deed absolute on its face to be a mortgage, and for the reconveyance of the real estate described therein, was properly brought in the county where the real estate was situated, although the defendant, a corporation, had its principal place of business in another county, and it appeared from the recitals in the deed and agreement that defendant's assignor, the original mortgagee, was a resident of, and the deed had been acknowledged before a notary of, the county where the land was situated.

2. SAME—CHANGE OF VENUE—SETTING ASIDE ORDER.

The court has jurisdiction to set aside an order granting a change of venue, on the ground that it was inadvertently made.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINERTON, Judge.

W. C. Belcher, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The action in this cause was brought in the superior court of the county of San Joaquin to procure a decree declaring a deed absolute on its face to be a mortgage, and for a reconveyance of the real estate described in said deed, which real estate is situate in said county of San Joaquin.

Defendant, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California, and having its principal place of business at San Francisco, demanded a change of the place of trial to the city and county of San Francisco, which demand was not acceded to; whereupon defendant moved, upon affidavit, and upon the papers in the cause, for a change of the place of trial to said last-mentioned city and county. The motion was at first granted, but on the following day the order granting the change, as asked for, was set aside upon the ground that it "was inadvertently made," and an order entered denying such motion. From this order defendant appeals.

The only other facts deemed essential are—First, defendant sets out in its affidavit that San Francisco is its residence; second, it appears from the complaint that defendant was and is conducting and carrying on business in the state of California, and in the county of San Joaquin; third, the deed and agreement, which taken together are claimed to constitute a mortgage, were made and executed by plaintiffs and one H. Barnhart, who, according to the recitals of the agreement, were residents of the county of San Joaquin, and they were acknowledged and certified before a notary of said last-mentioned county. Defendant holds as an assignee of Barnhart.

Beyond the recitals above referred to in the agreement, which is set out in the complaint, there is no affirmative allegation as to the residence of the parties or place at which the contract sued on was made.

Appellant contends—"First, that the proper county for the trial of this action is one in which the principal place of business of the defendant is situated, and that the case does not come within any of the other specifications of section 16 of article 12 of the constitution, or within the proviso to section 5 of article 6; second, that by the order of March 23, 1887, the case was actually transferred to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and was thereafter pending therein, and that, therefore, the superior court of San Joaquin county had no jurisdiction to make the order of March 24, 1887, and the same is void."

Section 16 of article 12 of the constitution is as follows: "A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated; subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." By section 392, Code Civil Proc., actions for the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination, in any form, of such right or interest, must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated. The land is the subject-matter concerning which the contest is waged, and it is situate in San Joaquin county. The right or interest of the plaintiffs in this subject-matter, if any, is the question to be ultimately determined in this action. Such being the case, the action was properly brought in the county of San Joaquin, where the land was situated. Bush v. Treadwell, 11 Abb. N. S. 27. This last case was an action like the present, to have the title to certain real estate declared to be in the plaintiffs, on the ground that the deed conveying title to the defendant was a mortgage, and for a conveyance thereof to the plaintiffs, and the court held that under the Code of that state, (New York,) of which our section 392, Code Civil Proc., is an exact transcript, the action should have been brought in the county where the land was situated. It was there that the liability or obligation (if any) arose, within the meaning of section 16 of article 12 of the constitution. There is nothing in this view in conflict with the case of Le Breton v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 27, 4 Pac. Rep. 777, cited by appellant. That was an action brought against a trustee, in the county in which he resided, to enforce a trust both upon personal and real property, and the court held that, as the suit was brought to reach personal property in the hands of the trustee, that fact gave the court jurisdiction.

In response to the second cause of contention by appellant, it may be said that the same question arose in Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 9 Pac. Rep. 646, and was decided adversely to the position assumed by appellant. See, also, Hall v. Polack, 42 Cal. 218.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MURDER—DEGREE OF—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT VERDICT.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, where the only extenuating circumstances were those sworn to by defendant, and some of those were improbable, evidence of prior ill feeling and threats on the part of defendant towards deceased, held to justify a verdict of murder in the first degree.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; S. A. HOLMES, Judge.

J. C. Campbell, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BY THE COURT. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and the punishment fixed at imprisonment for life, for the killing of one John Mengetti, on the third day of June, 1884, at the county of Fresno. The appeal is from the final judgment in the cause, and from an order denying a new trial.

The only point urged by counsel for appellant at the hearing was that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, or to warrant any verdict above the grade of manslaughter. Defendant and the deceased had, according to the evidence, been acquaintances and friends from boyhood until within, say, one year of the death of the latter, when they had a falling out, subsequent to which there is testimony tending to show threats by defendant against deceased. This prior ill feeling, coupled with all the circumstances detailed at the trial, forces the conclusion that the verdict was warranted by the evidence. There was no person present at the time and place of the shooting of deceased by defendant except these persons. Taking the testimony of defendant as absolutely true in all its parts, and it may well be considered that the killing (which was admitted) did not constitute a higher grade of crime than manslaughter; but the jurors were the judges of the weight to be given to defendant's statement as a whole, and to its various parts, and we can very well see that in the exercise of sound judgment they may have discarded as improbable some of the extenuating facts sworn to.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. SALE—DELIVERY AS AGAINST CREDITORS.

In an action by an assignee of an insolvent firm to recover a lot of horses sold by the firm prior to their insolvency to the defendant, the husband of one of the partners, and a creditor of the firm, it appearing that the horses at the time of the sale were being pastured on one of defendant's ranches, where they remained for five days after the sale, and were then moved by defendant to another ranch, held, that this was an immediate delivery, followed by an actual and continued change of possession, within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. § 3440, which makes transfers of personal property fraudulent and void against creditors unless accompanied by such delivery and possession of the thing transferred.¹

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where the issue is constructive fraud, it is not prejudicial error to admit testimony tending to show that there was no actual fraud.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; SWINERTON, Judge.

J. C. Campbell, for appellant. J. A. Louttit, (S. D. Woods and A. L. Levinsky, of counsel,) for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. W. W. Cowell and Emma F. Sanders were carrying on business as copartners in the city of Stockton, and on August 1, 1884, came into ownership and possession of 40 head of wild, unbroken horses. Immediately thereafter the said horses were driven to a ranch owned by the defendant, Joshua Cowell, on the west side of the San Joaquin river, for pasturage, where they remained until November following. Defendant was authorized to sell any of such horses as he might find sale for, and a few head were so sold after consultation with their owners. On or about the first of November, 1884, the said W. W. Cowell and Emma F. Sanders, who in the mean time had intermarried with the defendant, Joshua Cowell, sold all of said horses remaining unsold to said defendant, for the consideration of certain amounts due for pasturage, and $1,500, and interest due from them to the defendant for money formerly borrowed and used in their business. At the time of this sale the horses were on defendant's said ranch. Within five days thereafter he removed them from said west-side ranch to another ranch owned by him, called the Home ranch, about 15 miles distant. From the time of the sale defendant had full possession and control of the horses. At the time of said sale, said W. W. Cowell and Emma F. Sanders were indebted to two mercantile firms of San Francisco, who, in addition to defendant, were their main creditors; and, before said sale was made to defendant, they offered to give said horses to said two firms in payment or part payment of their debts, but said offer was by said firms refused. The sale to defendant was made in good faith and for a full consideration. Afterwards said W. W. Cowell and Sanders (then defendant's wife) filed their petition in insolvency, and plaintiff, having been appointed assignee, instituted this action to recover said horses. The sole ground of the action was the formal one that there was not an immediate delivery, and an actual and continued change of possession of the horses, within the meaning of section 3440 of the Civil Code.

The court below found that there was such delivery and possession, and we are satisfied with the finding. It seems to us that the delivery and possession were as complete as the nature of the case permitted. It can hardly be contended that the respondent should have driven the horses away from both his ranchos. That would be almost the equivalent of saying that he should have put himself out of the actual possession in order to have kept himself within the legal possession. We do not see that the intermarriage of the respondent with one of his vendors materially alters the case, there being no charge of actual fraud.

Appellant assigns as error the admission of testimony showing that respondent's vendors offered the horses to certain creditors other than the respondent, and the refusal of such creditors to take them. That testimony, however, tended to show only that in the sale to respondent there was no actual fraud or intent to defraud; and, as appellant admitted expressly at the trial that there was no actual fraud, and that he relied solely on the constructive fraud which arose from deficient delivery and possession, we do not see how he could have been injured by such testimony.

Judgment and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

EVIDENCE—STENOGRAPHER'S TRANSCRIPT—TESTIMONY IN FORMER CASE.

The plaintiff was permitted, by virtue of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 273, which provides that "the report of the official reporter, * * * when certified as being a correct transcript of the proceedings in the case, shall be prima facie a correct statement of such proceedings," to introduce the stenographer's transcript of evidence given by the defendant in another suit. Held, that this section did not make the transcript itself admissible in evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; SWINNERTON, Judge.

L. W. Elliott and J. C. Campbell, for appellant. John H. Hall, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. In order to contradict the defendant upon a material point, the plaintiff was permitted, against objection, to introduce the stenographer's transcript of evidence given by the defendant in a different suit. This transcript, which does not appear from the record to have ever been filed, was certified by the stenographer "to be a true and correct transcription from my short-hand notes taken in the trial of said cause." The stenographer was not examined as a witness, but the transcript was admitted on the faith of the certificate. The question is whether the paper was legal evidence of what the defendant said on the former trial.

So far as we have been able to ascertain, this precise question has not been decided in this state. In People v. Woods, 43 Cal. 176, it was sought to use the reporter's notes as a record on appeal. The decision was that they could not be so used, because a record on appeal imported absolute verity, and the notes were only prima facie evidence. In Meyer v. Roth, 51 Cal. 582, the notes were sought to be introduced, not as evidence of an admission, or in contradiction of what had been sworn to, but as original evidence of the fact in dispute; but the witness who had testified, being alive and within the state, this was not permitted; the decision did not touch the point that the notes were not evidence of what the witness had said, but was that what the witness had said was not evidence of the fact in dispute. In People v. Lee Fat, 54 Cal. 529, the witness whose testimony was sought to be introduced could not speak English, and the testimony was given through an interpreter. The decision was that what the reporter had taken down was not what the witness had said, but was what the interpreter had said he had said, and was therefore hearsay. And People v. Ah Yute, 56 Cal. 120, followed the preceding case, and laid down the same rule. In People v. Chung Ah Chue, 57 Cal.

568, the decision turned on the construction of section 686 of the Penal Code, and is not applicable to cases to which that section does not apply. And People v. Qurise, 59 Cal. 344, simply followed the preceding case. In Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 22, the admission of the reporter's notes of what the witness had sworn to was sustained on the ground that "no objection was made to the transcript as evidence of his testimony." In People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 672, 4 Pac. Rep. 1144, and 6 Pac. Rep. 700, 846, only two justices concurred in the opinion, and they placed their opinion on the ground of "the admissions of the defendant's counsel." The decisions of the court, therefore, do not cover the precise question.

By the common law there can be no doubt but that the evidence was inadmissible; for the document amounts to a mere certificate of the reporter that the evidence had been given. It had not the sanction of an oath. The oath of office is not an oath in the cause. As said by TILGHMAN, C. J., in Miles v. O'Hara, 4 Bin. 110, concerning the notes of a judge: "It is refining too much to say that he takes his notes under the obligation; nor is that the oath which the law requires to verify a fact." Moreover, there was no opportunity for cross-examination. These principles have been applied in analogous cases. Thus it has been held that the judge's notes are not admissible. Miles v. O'Hara, above cited; Schafer v. Schafer, 93 Ind. 586. So of the minutes of a referee. Mott v. Ramsay, 92 N. C. 152. So of the notes of a committing magistrate. State v. Collins, 32 Iowa, 36. So of the notes of a coroner. Bass v. State, 29 Ark. 142. And so of the notes of a stenographer. Lipscomb v. Lyon, 19 Neb. 511, 27 N. W. Rep. 731. Compare Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 52, 14 N. W. Rep. 865.

If, therefore, the notes are admissible, it must be by virtue of some statute. The statute which is claimed to cover the case is section 273 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is as follows:

"Sec. 273. The report of the official reporter or official reporter pro tempore of any court, duly appointed and sworn, when written out in long-hand writing, and certified as being a correct transcript of the testimony and proceedings in the case, shall be prima facie a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings."

But this statute does not say that the transcript shall be legal evidence of any fact. It simply says that it is prima facie correct. The two propositions do not seem to be identical. There are many things which are not only presumably but demonstrably correct, but which are, nevertheless, not legal evidence. Moreover, the notes are only prima facie correct. If the reporter had been called and had testified on his examination in chief that the transcript was correct, it would have to be taken at that stage as prima facie correct. But the opposite party would have had the right to cross-examine him, before proceeding further, to show its incorrectness, and possibly would have succeeded in eliciting something which would have shown such incorrectness. And to make the document itself admissible upon the faith of the certificate would deprive the party of this right of cross-examination, which the authorities agree is one of the most important tests of truth. But even if the reporter could have stood the test of cross-examination, and the result of his whole testimony had been that the transcript was correct, we do not think that the transcript would have been admissible except in connection with the testimony of the reporter. The unfiled transcript is certainly not a public record, but must be put upon the footing of a private memorandum; and, having been written up we do not know when, it was not admissible as part of the res gestæ; as to which see Severance v. Lombardo, 17 Cal. 57; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 342. This being the case, the transcript could at most have been used to refresh the memory of the witness. And the general rule with reference to the admissibility of papers used to refresh the memory of a witness is stated by Cowan & Hill in their notes to Phillips on Evidence as follows: "He will not be permitted to read his notes or memoranda to the jury, nor can they be admitted as evidence to the jury in any sense." 1 Phill. Ev. (4th Amer. Ed.) 586, note 170. This general rule seems to be embodied in the Code of Civil Procedure, for, after providing that the adverse party may read the memorandum to the jury, it has the following: "So, also, a witness may testify from such a writing, though he retain no recollection of the particular facts." Code Civil Proc. § 2047.

We think, therefore, that section 273 does not make the transcript itself admissible in evidence. Nor is this to be regretted. For the provision is so unlimited as to open the door to gross frauds if the construction contended for should be given to it. There is no requirement that the notes shall be filed. Either party to the action in which they are taken, or the judge, may require them to be filed. But in practice this option is hardly ever exercised. Consequently there is nothing by which their incorrectness may be shown. Moreover, there is no limit to the time within which the certificate may be given. From the absence of words of limitation in this regard, and from the fact that the official reporter is placed in the same category with the reporter pro tempore, it would seem that he may give his certificate after ceasing to be reporter, even 10 or 20 years after, and the result would be that a party might find himself confronted with a certificate as to what had been said in another cause, perhaps between other parties, a long time previously, and have nothing of record by which he could disprove it, and possibly be unable to find a trace of the person who had given the certificate. Part of the ground upon which public documents, or copies thereof, are admissible, is the publicity of the subject-matter. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 483. And where a certificate is admissible it is a material circumstance that it was not made long after the fact. Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 535.

But what meaning is to be given to the statute? Speaking of the act of 1867-68, which went further than the Code, (because it provided that the notes should be prima facie evidence,) WALLACE, J., delivering the opinion in People v. Woods, above cited, said: "This proceeding evidently refers to the proceedings to be had in the court below upon settlement of statements, allowance of bills of exception, etc." If the framers of the section had any other purpose in view it cannot be gathered from their language.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PEOPLE v. PARVIN and others. (No. 11,929.)
(Supreme Court of California. August 23, 1887.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TITLE OF STATUTE—AMENDING ACT—SUBJECT.

Under Const. Cal. § 24, art. 4, providing that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title," the act of 1880, entitled "An act to amend section 3481 of the Political Code," is constitutional, as a statute to be amended may be the "subject" of an amending act.

2. SWAMP LANDS—RECLAMATION DISTRICT—NEW DISTRICT.

Pol. Code Cal. § 3481, provides that the requisite number of owners of "lands within any reclamation or swamp-land district, and in which the lands have not been reclaimed, may have said body of lands set off from such district," Heid, that this did not repeal the prior laws, or affect the assessment proceedings thereunder, and applied to all future cases, whether the existing district was organized under the Code or not.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; McFARLAND, Judge.

Action by the people, in the nature of a quo warranto, against the defendants, for claiming the so-called reclamation district No. 366 to be a legal district. The defendants, prior to the suit, had procured a district known as district No. 366 to be carved out of and set off from district No. 3, which latter was organized under the act of March 28, 1863. By the judgment of the court below, the defendants were ousted from the franchise of governing as a legal district the lands within its limits; the effect of the decision being to replace those lands under the jurisdiction of district No. 3. The contest in the trial court hinged on section 3481, Pol. Code, and upon its amendment as enacted April 15, 1880; that is, whether the defendants could avail themselves of that section of the Political Code so as to disestablish and dismember a district formed prior to the Code, under a distinctive statute.

McKune & George, for appellants. G. W. Gordon, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. The main question argued in this case, and the one upon which we think the decision must turn, is whether the act of 1880, entitled "An act to amend section 3481 of the Political Code," is in violation of section 24 of article 4 of the constitution, which provides that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title. * * *" It is not contended that the act embraced more than one subject. The objection is that no subject is expressed; and the argument is that a section of the Political Code is not a subject, but is a mere reference to where the subject may be found.

The reason of the requirement that the subject shall be expressed is to prevent legislators being entrapped by false titles. Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 282; Boyd v. State, 53 Ala. 605; Hannibal v. Marion, 69 Mo. 575; Robinson v. Skipworth, 23 Ind. 317; Commissioners of Marion v. Commissioners of Harvey, 26 Kan. 197; Howell v. State, 71 Ga. 227. This reason does not require the title to give the substance of the bill. To give the substance of the bill would be to make the title almost as cumbrous as the bill itself, which would tend to defeat rather than to accomplish the purpose of the requirement. It would be to make the title an index, abstract, or catalogue of the contents of the bill, which has been held to be unnecessary. Montclair v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 155, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; People v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 327, 6 N. E. Rep. 480; Hope v. Gainesville, 72 Ga. 250; Allegheny County Home's Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 80; Lockhart v. Troy, 48 Ala. 584; State v. Barrett, 27 Kan. 218; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 117. Now, if the purpose was not to apprise the legislators of the substance of the bill, it must have been to put them on inquiry as to what was sought to be done. And we think a title which shows that it is intended to change a specific section of a specified statute is sufficient to put the legislators on inquiry. This seems to us to be the reasonable construction. And it is generally agreed that the provision is to receive a liberal, and not a narrow and technical, construction; which latter would only serve to defeat and embarrass legislation. Stone v. Brown, 54 Tex. 342; Breen v. Railroad Co., 44 Tex. 305; State v. Ranson, 73 Mo. 86; In re Public Parks, 86 N. Y. 439, 440; Larned v. Tiernan, 110 Ill. 177; Mills v. Charleton, 29 Wis. 410; McAunich v. Railroad Co., 20 Iowa, 342; Cooley, Const. Lim. 146.

Nor does this construction do violence to the language of the provision. According to Webster, one of the meanings of the word "subject" is "that which is brought under thought or examination; that which is taken up for discussion." Now, is not the statute to be amended or repealed "that which is taken up for discussion?" When, for example, a scholar writes an essay upon some play of Shakespeare, suggesting an emendation of the text, is it not proper, and in accordance with usage, to say that the subject of the essay is the play in question, and not the plot, the scene, the characters, or the incidents of the play? If it be said that the statute to be amended is not the subject, such a rule would in some cases require an effect to be given to the provision beyond that which its language imports; for the provision does not require the title to express the subject of any previous act; it only requires an expression of the subject of the act to be passed. Now, in the case of a repealing act, what is the subject? It has no subject, unless the statute to be repealed is its subject, for it establishes nothing. So that, if the statute to be repealed is not a sufficient expression of its subject, it would be necessary to give the subject of the statute to be repealed, which would be going further than the language of the provision requires. Now, if the statute to be repealed is the subject of a repealing act, it would seem that the statute to be amended may be the subject of an amending act.

We think, therefore, that the construction which is suggested by reason of the provision does not do violence to its language, but accords with it. And this result is in accordance with the preponderance of authority. Thus, in Fleischman v. Walker, 91 Ill. 320, the following title: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act in regard to practice in courts of record,'"—was held to be sufficient. Such a title is not substantially different from "An act to amend section — of the Code of Civil Procedure;" and the case is authority for the sufficiency of the latter title. So in State v. McCracken, 42 Tex. 384, the following title: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to adopt and establish a Penal Code for the State of Texas,' approved August 26, 1871,"—was held to be sufficient, although there was a mistake in giving the date of the passage of the Code. So in Dunbar v. Frazer, 78 Ala. 588, the following title: "An act to amend section 1544 of the Code except as to 'certain counties specified by name,'" was held to be sufficient. So in Dogye v. State, 17 Neb. 143, 22 N. W. Rep. 348, the following title: "An act to amend section 4 of chapter 55 of the Compiled Statutes of Nebraska," was held to be sufficient. Compare also State v. Garrett, 39 La. Ann. 638; Gatling v. Lane, 17 Neb. 84, 22 N. W. Rep. 453; John v. Reaser, 31 Kan. 406, 2 Pac. Rep. 771; Burroughs v. Commissioners of Norton, 29 Kan. 197, 198; Wheeler v. State, 23 Ga. 10.

These cases are authority for the proposition that the statute to be amended or repealed may be the "subject" of an amending act, and that is all that is necessary to the present decision. In some of them the reference to the act to be repealed seems too vague, and in that respect we think they go too far. While in some cases the act might be such that a reference to its title would be sufficient, yet if the statute is multifarious the precise part to be amended should be pointed out. Compare People v. Hills, 35 N. Y. 452. In other words, the reference should be specific.

The other questions raised do not require extended notice. If section 3481 is a valid enactment, we think, if clear, that it applies to all future cases in which the requisite number of owners of "lands within any reclamation or swamp-land district, and in which the lands have not been reclaimed, desire to have said body of lands set off from such district," whether the existing district was organized under the Code or not. This does not repeal the prior laws, or affect the assessment proceedings thereunder. It merely relates to the creation of new districts of a certain character. The words "independent reclamation," in section 3481, seem to have no other meaning than "separate and distinct reclamation." This is apparent from section 3482, which provides for the liability of the new district for former work.

The foregoing being the only questions argued, and the findings setting forth all the facts, we think the case may be finally disposed of. We therefore advise that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the defendants.

GOLD v. SUN INS. CO. (No. 11,901.)

1. FIRE INSURANCE—CONTRACT TO RENEW POLICY—ACTION FOR BREACH—COMPLAINT.

In an action for breach of a contract to renew a policy of insurance, the complaint alleged the execution of the former policy, its date, the amount and property insured, and that on a day named, for a valuable consideration, defendant agreed to renew the policy for the same amount and period, and on the same terms and conditions. Held, that it sufficiently set forth the contract of the parties, and that it need not allege the terms and conditions of the original policy, or the payment or satisfaction of the renewal premium.

2. SAME—PLEADING—CONDITIONS OF ORIGINAL POLICY—PRESUMPTIONS.

In such an action the court cannot presume, in the absence of allegation in the pleadings, that there were any terms or conditions in the original policy, a breach of which would defeat the plaintiff's right to recover.

3. SAME—PROOFS OF LOSS.

Where defendant entered into a contract to renew an insurance policy and repudiated it after a loss, the plaintiff is under no obligation to serve proofs of loss as required by the original policy.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; BRAYNARD, Judge.

Rhodes & Barstow, for appellant. John F. Ellison, for plaintiff and respondent.

FOOTE, C. This was an action to recover from the defendant the sum of $500 for failing to comply with a contract to issue to the plaintiff a fire insurance policy for the sum last mentioned. The complaint was demurred to, the demurrer overruled, and, the defendant having failed to answer over, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff as prayed for, and from that this appeal is prosecuted. The demurrer went to the point that the complaint did not show facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The pleading in question alleges an agreement on the part of the defendant, a fire insurance company, upon a day certain to renew a policy of insurance upon a saloon, bar-room, fixtures, etc., belonging to the plaintiff. It states the date and amount of the original policy, and the property which was by it insured, its value, and that the contract was for a renewal of that policy, upon the same property and for a like amount. That relying on the promise to renew that policy, and the insurance company having received a valuable consideration for such promise from the plaintiff, the latter had not obtained any other insurance upon the property, and that at the time he suffered loss of it from fire, he was under the belief that the defendant had insured it by a renewal of the policy, and that he was not aware of the breach of the contract by the defendant until the loss had occurred. That by reason of that breach, and the loss occasioned by the fire, the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $500, which was the amount of the policy agreed to be renewed, and that no part of that sum has been paid.

The defendant contends that the demurrer should have been sustained: (1) Because the terms and conditions of the policy originally issued, and for the renewal of which the contract was entered into, were not stated in the complaint. (2) That it was not averred that the premium for the renewal was paid, or satisfaction made therefor. (3) That no proof of loss was furnished as was required under the original policy.

In the first place we understand that a parol contract to issue a fire policy, made by an insurance company, authorized by its charter to issue policies of that kind, is valid, and that such a contract can be enforced by compelling a specific performance by the company, or in an action for the breach of the agreement. And the question always is, whether, having agreed upon the terms of the insurance, and to issue a policy therefor, the company is liable for the failure to do so. Ellis v. Fire Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 405-408. The defendant was informed, by the language of the complaint, when the contract to renew a certain policy of insurance was made, what was its subject-matter, for what amount the property was to be insured, and that it was made and entered into for a valuable consideration; thus it seems to us that the terms of the contract as agreed upon were sufficiently stated. A sufficient contract having therefore been thus stated in the complaint, we cannot presume, in the absence of any such allegation in the pleadings, that there were any terms or conditions in the original policy, a breach of which would defeat the plaintiff's right to recover in this action.

There does not seem to have been any need to have stated that a premium was paid, or the amount of it, or that satisfactory arrangements had been made for its payment. That could have been proved under the allegation that a valuable consideration had moved to the defendant from the plaintiff, as the basis of the contract to renew the policy. And had it been denied in an answer that such consideration did so move, the defendant, under the issue thus made, could have introduced evidence to disprove the fact that any such consideration had thus moved.

There was no necessity to make a proof of loss as required by the terms of a policy, which had been agreed to be, but never was, renewed, and which the defendant, repudiating its contract, refused to renew. Taylor v. Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. 390.

The demurrer was therefore properly overruled, and the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C., HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

CROSSMORE v. PAGE and another. (No. 11,798.)

PROMISSORY NOTES—INTERPRETATION—DEFAULT.

A promissory note provided that "if default be made in the payment of the interest as above provided, then this note shall immediately become due at the option of the holder thereof." Held, that the holder was entitled only to a reasonable time after default in which to exercise his option, and that seven months was not a reasonable time.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of a promissory note executed by Page to Rhodes, and by the latter indorsed to the plaintiff. The court, sitting without a jury, rendered judgment as prayed for against both Page and Rhodes, but upon motion duly made granted a new trial as to Rhodes. From that order the plaintiff appeals. The note, to secure the payment of which the mortgage was executed, reads as follows:

"$8,153.50.

STOCKTON, CAL., June 30, 1884.

"On or before three years after date, without grace, I promise to pay to Alonzo Rhodes, or order, the sum of eighty-one hundred and fifty-three and fifty one-hundredths dollars, payable only in gold coin of the government of the United States, for value received, with interest thereon in like gold coin, at the rate of eight (8) per cent. per annum from date until paid, interest payable annually, and if not so paid as it becomes due to be added to the principal and become a part thereof, and bear interest at the same rate; but if default be made in the payment of the interest, as above provided, then this note shall immediately become due, at the option of the holder thereof.

"C. A. PAGE."

The contract was that in case of default in the payment of interest "this note shall immediately become due, at the option of the holder thereof." This is not the same as saying that the note shall become due immediately upon the option of the holder. The meaning is that the note is to become due immediately upon the default, at the option of the holder. And this is a different thing from saying that it shall become due seven months after default at the option of the holder. The holder was entitled to a reasonable time to exercise his option; but this time was nothing like what elapsed before the election was made. To allow him to wait seven months before doing anything, would be to make the contract read that in case of default the holder has the option to make the note become due at an indefinite time after default, whereas, what it says is that it shall become due immediately upon the default, at the option of the holder, which is to be exercised at furthest within a reasonable time. In exercising a right like this, the holder must keep within the terms of his contract. Not having done this he had to wait until the next installment of interest should fall due and remain unpaid, which had not taken place when this action was brought. This being so, it may well be presumed that the court below came to the conclusion, after a re-examination of the evidence given upon this point, that it did not sustain the decision, and therefore granted a new trial; and it is our opinion that the order made in the premises was right, and should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GOSLAW. (No. 20,320.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1887.)

MURDER—EVIDENCE—DEADLY INTENT.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, it was shown that just previous to the assault defendant was enraged at deceased, and was making search for him; that immediately after defendant entered the house where deceased was, heavy blows were heard, and defendant was then pulled away from deceased, who had received on the head eight blows apparently with a heavy, blunt instrument, any one of which was sufficient to cause death. Defendant was young, large, and powerful, while deceased was old and feeble. Deceased made no resistance, and gave defendant no provocation. Held sufficient proof of deadly intent.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; BELDEN, Judge. J. H. Campbell, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and adjudged to suffer the death penalty. The only point made is that there was no evidence which could justify a verdict of murder in the first degree. There can be no question as to the proof of malice. There was not the slightest provocation, either by word or deed, and the killing was most cruel and brutal, showing plainly an abandoned and malignant heart. The only contention open to the defendant is that he intended to inflict upon the deceased a cruel and unprovoked beating, but did not intend to take his life. On this appeal we can only examine the evidence to ascertain whether there was any testimony tending to show that the assault was with deadly intent.

We think there is an abundance of such proof. The deceased, Henry Grant, was a feeble old man, who had once been engaged with the defendant in the business of house-moving at Los Gatos. Grant had procured some tools from a contractor at San Jose, who had demanded their return. Defendant desired to get them from Grant, but was informed that the owner had sent for them. Defendant then went to San Jose and asked the owner to loan them to him, but was refused. At this he returned to Los Gatos, where, late in the evening, he was informed that deceased had sent the tools to the owner at San Jose. He became very angry, and started to hunt the deceased. He made inquiries at different places for him, and, not finding him, started for Grant's house, which was one-half mile distant. He was accompanied by his younger brother. Just as they reached the gate in front of Grant's house, defendant was heard to say: "I won't hurt him. Oh, no! I'll not hurt him." The remark was understood, not as indicating a peaceful intent, but as an ebullition of rage. The defendant, who is a large, powerful man, then went into the house, and immediately heavy blows were heard. Defendant's brother rushed into the house and pulled defendant away from the insensible form of the deceased, who had received eight crushing blows upon the head, apparently made with some heavy, blunt instrument, although no weapon was found. Defendant afterwards admitted, in reference to the assault: "He made no resistance; he had nothing in his hand; it was simply my damned temper that led me into it."

It is not true that there was no evidence of the use of a weapon; on the contrary, the character of the wounds indicated that the injuries were not inflicted with the naked fist. Here a feeble old man, assaulted by a young man, powerful beyond the average of men, was killed by eight cruel blows upon his head, from which he never recovers consciousness. And it appeared that any one of several of these blows would have been sufficient to produce death. The old man had given no provocation in the first place, did not at the time say or do anything to excite the anger of the defendant, and made no resistance. Under such circumstances we cannot say there was no evidence to satisfy the jury that the defendant intended the natural and probable consequences of his acts. The judgment is affirmed.

Ed. M. Martin, for appellants. R. B. Wallace, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment; the plaintiffs had judgment, but upon motion duly made, the court below granted a new trial, and from the order made in the premises this appeal is taken.

The respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied, as the affidavit of the appellant's counsel shows that service of the notice of appeal was properly had on the attorney of the former.

The appellants contend that the notice of motion for a new trial was not filed in the clerk's office until the eleventh day after the notice of the decision had been deposited in the post-office at Sacramento, postage paid, and properly directed to the respondents' attorney of record, at his office in San Francisco. But it is shown that the distance from Sacramento to San Francisco is 70 miles, and section 1013, Code Civil Proc., with reference to the service of such a notice as that of the decision in a case is as follows: "In case of service by mail, the notice or other paper must be deposited in the post-office, addressed to the person on whom it is to be served, at his office or place of residence, and the postage paid. The service is complete at the time of the deposit, but if within a given number of days after such service a right may be exercised, or an act is to be done by the adverse party, the time within which such right may be exercised, or act be done, is extended one day for every twenty-five miles distance between the place of deposit and the place of address, such extension, however, not to exceed ninety days in all."

Here the act to be done by the adverse party, after the service of notice of decision, was the filing and serving of the notice of intention to move for a new trial, and as it appears by the record that the distance between the place of deposit and the place of address, as regards the first notice, was 70 miles, the attorney for the appellants had 12 days from date of the deposit of the first notice in the post-office at Sacramento, within which to file and serve the notice of motion; that is, until the twelfth day of January, 1885, and it was filed and served one day before that time.

The appellants also argue that the statement on motion for a new trial should not have been settled, because of the fact that it was not served as required by law. The certificate of the judge who settled the statement carries with it the presumption that it was regularly and properly done, for "in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the legal intendment would arise, from the fact of the bill being signed by the judge, that the same was done regularly." People v. Martin, 6 Cal. 477; Hayne, New Trials, § 146; Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 396; Young v. Rosenbaum, 39 Cal. 646. The statement contains nothing sufficient to overcome this presumption. It is claimed, however, in opposition to this view, that the trial judge illegally extended the time within which to settle the statement, because a copy of the order made in the premises was not served on the attorney of the opposite parties according to a rule of the court requiring that to be done in the case of the making of all ex parte orders. "Rules of court are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice, 'and it is always in the power of the court to suspend its own rules or to except a particular case from their operation, whenever the purposes of justice require it.'" Pickett v. Wallace, 54 Cal. 148. In this case the trial judge seems to have followed the rule thus laid down. The court below granted the motion for a new trial, and set aside the judgment, but did not state any reason for its action in the premises. One of the grounds, however, specified and relied on by the moving party, was that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings, and the record shows that a conflict did exist in the evidence material to the issues raised by the pleadings, hence we can see no abuse of the discretion vested in that tribunal in making the orders appealed from, and they should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the orders are affirmed.

BELL, Adm'r, etc., v. HUDSON and others, Ex'rs, etc. (No. 12,041.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—ACCOUNTING—DELAY IN BRINGING SUIT.

Where, in a suit for an accounting brought by the administrator of a deceased partner, appointed 25 years after his decease, against the executors of the surviving partner, also deceased, the complaint shows that the surviving partner continued in the individual possession of all the real and personal property of the partnership, and managed and disposed of the same as he saw fit, for 25 years after his partner's decease, and fails to allege that the heirs of plaintiff's decedent had not knowledge of the proceedings of defendant's decedent, or that there was any impediment to their action, a demurrer to the complaint will be sustained on the ground of staleness.

2. SAME.

In such a case an allegation in the complaint that the real estate had at all times stood, and still did stand, in the name of the partners, will not avail to save the action as to the real estate, as the action cannot be regarded either as one for partition, ejectment, or for mesne profits.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Yuba county; KEYSER, Judge.

Hundley & Gale and A. F. Jones, for appellant. W. G. Murphy and W. C. Belcher, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. According to the complaint, the material facts are as follows: In 1849, John A. Bell and William M. Bell became partners "in the business of buying and selling stock and the purchase of real and personal property." The business was carried on until the death of John A. Bell, in 1859, at which time there was on hand belonging to the firm, "a large amount of personal property, consisting of stock cattle, beef cattle, horses and mares, of the estimated value, as plaintiff is informed and believes to be true, of $50,000, real estate situated in the county of Sutter and state of California, and in the county of Westmoreland, state of Pennsylvania, of the estimated value, as plaintiff is informed and believes to be true, of $10,000; which said real estate has at all times since the same was acquired and still does stand in the names of said partners, John A. and Wm. M. Bell, together with notes and other demands of the estimated value of over $10,000, as plaintiff is likewise informed and believes to be true, besides other property to the plaintiff unknown." No administration was had upon the estate of John A. Bell until June 3, 1885, when the plaintiff was appointed administrator. In the mean time "and up to the third day of June, A. D. 1885, the said William M. Bell has continued, and did continue, individually in the possession of the whole of said real and personal property, and to manage and carry on said business, and dispose of said property, and to collect the debts and things in action, and to manage and control all the property in anywise belonging to said partnership, and during the time aforesaid used the said property in any manner he saw fit, and has sold and disposed of said property, and changed it into other property, and realized thereon large sums of money, the amount of which plaintiff does not know and cannot ascertain." It is not alleged that the heirs of John A. Bell were ignorant of these proceedings on the part of William M. Bell, or that there were any impediments to the prosecution of their claims, or that they made any demand upon him, or in any way asserted their claims during his life-time. He died on June 3, 1885, and the defendants were appointed executors of his will. The complaint goes on to allege that "the said plaintiff has requested and demands of the said defendants a statement and account of said copartnership transactions, which the said defendants have neglected and refused to give; and that he demanded of the said defendants that they deliver over all property due and owing, belonging, or coming to him as administrator of the estate of John A. Bell, deceased, and that they pay over to him as such administrator, all sums of money as were due to the estate of John A. Bell, deceased, as his part of said partnership assets and property, which they have likewise failed to do." The prayer is for an accounting and for general relief.

The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and, the plaintiff not amending, final judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. Two grounds are urged in support of the judgment. It is argued, in the first place, that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, and in the second place that the claim is so stale that a court of equity will refuse to enforce it.

1. In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to pass upon the first question. Assuming in favor of the plaintiff what we are inclined to think is true, viz., that the trust is not one of those implied trusts against which the statute runs, we think that so far as the claim for relief is founded upon the partnership transaction it is stale, and that a court of equity will not aid its enforcement. This is a defense peculiar to courts of equity, and applies although no statute of limitations governs the case. Harwood v. Railroad Co., 17 Wall. 81; Sullivan v. Portland, 94 U. S. 811; Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 201; Sheldon v. Rockwell, 9 Wis. 181; Harrison v. Gibson, 23 Grat. 224; Stout v. Seabrook, 30 N. J. Eq. 189, 190; In re Neille, 95 N. Y. 390; Groenendyke v. Coffeen, 109 Ill. 329; 2 Story Eq. Jur. § 1520. It is not the same thing as equitable estoppel, although it has been termed a quasi estoppel, (2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 816, 817,) and hence the rules governing equitable estoppel (see Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279) do not apply. The ground of the doctrine was stated by TANEY, C. J., delivering the opinion of the supreme court of the United States in McKnight v. Taylor, 1 How. 168, as follows: "We do not found our judgment upon the presumption of payment, for it is not merely on presumption of payment, or in analogy to the statute of limitations, that a court of chancery refuses to lend its aid to stale demands. There must be conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence to call into action the powers of the court. In matters of account, where they are not barred by the act of limitations, courts of equity refuse to interfere, after a considerable lapse of time, from considerations of public policy, and from the difficulty of doing entire justice when the original transactions have become obscure by time, and the evidence may be lost."

The principal foundations of the doctrine are acquiescence and lapse of time. But other circumstances will be taken into consideration. Thus it is a material circumstance that the claim was not made until after the death of those who could have explained the transaction. See Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. 368; Barnes v. Taylor, 27 N. J. Eq. 259; German Seminary v. Kiefer, 43 Mich. 111, 4 N. W. Rep. 636; Bolton v. Dickens, 4 Lea, 577; Hutcher v. Hall, 77 Va. 578. So it has been held that a change in the value and character of the property may be material. Bliss v. Prichard, 67 Mo. 187; Allen v. Allen, 47 Mich. 79, 10 N. W. Rep. 113. But as stated by DAVIS, J., in McQuiddy v. Ware, 20 Wall. 19: "There is no artificial rule on such a subject, but each case as it arises must be determined by its own particular circumstances." In other words, the question is addressed to the sound discretion of the chancellor in each case. Brown v. Buena Vista, 95 U. S. 160; Rayner v. Pearsall, 3 Johns. Ch. 586; Landrum v. Union Bank, 63 Mo. 56.

The following decisions are instances of the application of the rule to facts similar to the facts of the case under consideration. In Groenendyke v. Coffeen, 109 Ill. 339, which was a suit by the heirs of the deceased partner for an accounting, it was held that a delay of 16 years rendered the claim stale. In Codman v. Rogers, 10 Pick. 119, which was a suit for an accounting brought by the representatives of the deceased partner against the representatives of the surviving partner, it was held that a delay of 17 years rendered the claim stale. In Harris v. Hillegass, 66 Cal. 79, 4 Pac. Rep. 987, which was a similar case, it was held that a delay of somewhat over 20 years rendered the claim stale. And like decisions were made in Ray v. Bogart, 2 Johns. Cas. 432, and Harlow v. Lake Superior Co., 41 Mich. 584, 2 N. W. Rep. 913. And in McEwen v. Gillespie, 3 Lea, 205, which was a similar case, it was held that a delay of 21 years rendered the claim stale.

Now, in the present case, the complaint does not allege that the heirs of John A. Bell had not knowledge of the proceedings of William M. Bell, or that there was any impediment to their action, and consequently it must be presumed that they had such knowledge, and that there were no such impediments. Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. 184, 185; McQuiddy v. Ware, 20 Wall. 19; Harwood v. Railroad Co., 17 Wall. 81. Such being the case, we think that the fact that they delayed the assertion of their claim until the death of the surviving partner, a period of 25 years, is sufficient to make their claim stale.

It is contended, however, that this question cannot be raised on demurrer. But the preponderance of authority (and we think the better reason) is to the effect that it can. Lansdale v. Smith, 106 U. S. 392, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Bliss v. Prichard, 67 Mo. 189, 190; Shorter v. Smith, 56 Ala. 210. The defense is, in substance, that the bill does not show equity; or, in the language of our statute, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This was one of the grounds of the demurrer; and if it had not been it would not have been waived, but could be taken at any time. Code Civil Proc. § 434. We think, therefore, that so far as the claim for relief is founded on the partnership transactions a court of equity will not enforce it.

2. But the complaint alleges that the real property "has at all times since the same was acquired and still does stand in the names of said partners, John A. and William M. Bell." Does this, in connection with the other allegations, state a cause of action of any kind? We think not. The action cannot be considered as for partition between co-tenants, because the administrator is not a co-tenant, and cannot bring such an action. Freem. Co-Tenancy, § 454. It cannot be treated as an action of ejectment between co-tenants, because what is alleged does not amount to an averment of ouster, (Carpentier v. Webster, 27 Cal. 561; Carpentier v. Mendenhall, 28 Cal. 487;) and it cannot be treated as an action for mesne profits, because (if for no other reason) there is no averment that the use of the land was of any value.

We see no aspect in which the complaint states a cause of action, and we therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

TURNER v. WHITE and another.

1. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP.

The complaint in an action to quiet title alleged that the property in controversy belonged to one of the defendants at a certain date; that execution proceedings were had against him and the property sold and conveyed by the constable; "that by virtue of the deed of conveyance from said constable, plaintiff became seized of and ever since has been seized of and the owner of said premises, and entitled to the possession thereof." Held, that this was not an averment of unqualified ownership in the plaintiff, but a mere conclusion of law, upon which no issue could be based.

2. QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE OF OWNERSHIP—ADMISSIONS IN PLEADINGS.

In an action to quiet title, where the ownership of one of the defendants to the property in controversy at a certain date stood admitted by the pleadings, it was error to permit such defendant to testify that the property had never belonged to him.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; WALLING, Judge.

Thos. Ford, for appellant. Frank Power, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The action was brought to set aside a deed from the defendant James White to the defendant Martha White, as being in fraud of creditors. But at the trial the plaintiff abandoned his charge of fraud; and both court and counsel seem to have come to the conclusion that the property was not really included in it; and the action appears to have proceeded as an action to quiet the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff's theory was that he acquired the title through a sale under execution against the defendant James White. The defendant's theory, as developed by the evidence, was that James White never had any interest in the property. The validity of the execution proceedings not being questioned, it will be seen that the ownership of James White, at the time of the execution sale, was a central point in the case. But this point must be resolved in favor of the plaintiff upon the pleadings. The complaint alleges that at the time of the levy James White was the owner. The only thing approaching to a denial is the following: "Defendants deny that the plaintiff is the owner or in possession of the property in his complaint described, but aver that it is the property of the defendant Martha S. White; deny that the plaintiff ever was the owner of any of said property." With reference to the averment that "it is the property of the defendant Martha S. White," it is sufficient to say that at most it speaks only from the time of the commencement of the action, and is not at all inconsistent with the allegation that at some prior time James White was the owner.

With reference to the remainder of the paragraph quoted, we were at first inclined to treat it as sufficient, upon the ground that the allegation of the plaintiff's ownership was the ultimate fact alleged, and that the averments of how he acquired the title were averments of mere evidence which need not be denied. But after consideration we do not think the allegation in the complaint can be so treated. It is perfectly true that, in general, an allegation that a party is the owner of real property is an allegation of an ultimate fact, and not of a conclusion of law. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 242; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 217; Ferrer v. Insurance Co., 47 Cal. 431. But as held in Levins v. Rovegno, 12 Pac. Rep. 161, the same averment or statement may be of a fact or of a conclusion, according to the context. Now, in the present case the complaint first avers the ownership of James White at a certain date, and then sets out the execution proceedings against him, and then has the following: "That by virtue of the deed of conveyance from said constable, plaintiff became seized of, and ever since has been seized of, and the owner of, said premises, and entitled to the possession thereof." This we think is not the averment of unqualified ownership in the plaintiff, but only of the consequence resulting from the derangement set forth. In other words, it is a mere conclusion, and its denial raises no issue. The allegation of the ownership of James White at the time of the levy, therefore, stands admitted. In this condition of the pleadings, it was error to allow James White to testify, against a proper objection, that the property had never belonged to him; and the findings to that effect is against the admissions of the pleadings.

The deed from James to Martha White does not help the defendants' case in this regard, because they seem to have exerted themselves to show that the property was not included in it. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the defendants to amend their answer.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the defendants to amend their answer.

PRITCHETT v. STANISLAUS Co. (No. 11,710.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ACTION BY MARSHAL FOR SERVICES—PLEADING ORDINANCE FIXING COMPENSATION.

By St. Cal. 1883, p. 24, municipal corporations are divided into classes, and by section 881 of the same act, the board of trustees of cities of the fifth and sixth classes are authorized to fix by ordinance the compensation of city marshals. In an action by the marshal of a city (of the sixth class) to recover for services rendered, the complaint failed to state that the board of trustees of such city had passed any ordinance fixing the compensation of the marshal, or to state to what class of municipal corporations such city belonged. Held, that the complaint was demurrable.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—ACT CAL. 1883 CLASSIFYING MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, VALID. The California act of March 2, 1883, (St. 1883, p. 24,) providing for the classification of municipal corporations, is a general law, and constitutional.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; MINOR, Judge.

Schell & Bond, for appellant. J. R. Kittrell, Dist. Atty., for appellee.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover for services rendered by him as marshal of the city of Modesto, of the county above named. The services for which a recovery is claimed are for the execution of process—such as warrants of arrest and subpoenas issued out of a justice's court of the county aforesaid, in criminal cases,—for a period extending from the fourth of May, 1885, to the ninth of January, 1886. The demurrer was sustained, and we think properly. By the act of March 2, 1883, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of municipal corporations," (St. 1883, p. 24,) it was provided as follows: "All municipal corporations within the state are hereby classified as follows: Those having a population of more than one hundred thousand shall constitute the first class; those having a population of more than thirty thousand, and not exceeding one hundred thousand, shall constitute the second class; those having a population of more than fifteen thousand, and not exceeding thirty thousand, shall constitute the third class; those having a population of more than ten thousand, and not exceeding fifteen thousand, shall constitute the fourth class; those having a population of more than three thousand, and not exceeding ten thousand, shall constitute the fifth class; those having a population of not exceeding three thousand, shall constitute the sixth class." We think this act is constitutional, as it is a general law. Const. art. 11, § 6; Thomason v. Ashworth, (opinion filed July 2, 1887,) ante. 615.

It is said that the city of Modesto is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, and the board of trustees of the city are authorized by law to fix by ordinance the compensation of the marshal, which compensation shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office. Such is the provision made by statute. See St. 1883, § 855, p. 268. It is further provided by section 881 of the same act (St. 1883, p. 278) that the board of trustees shall, by ordinances not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter, prescribe the additional duties of officers and fix their compensation. The compensation fixed by the board of trustees under section 855 is to be for all duties imposed on the marshal by the act. These duties are set forth in section 880 (St. 1883, p. 277) and include the duty to execute and return all process issued and directed to him by any legal authority, and, by the same section, for the service of any process he is to receive the same fees as constables.

It may be that we cannot take judicial notice as to what class the city of Modesto belongs. But to whatever class it belongs, the marshal is not entitled to the compensation claimed from the county of Stanislaus for the services performed and set forth in the complaint in this case. The compensation allowed the marshal in the fifth and sixth classes (and there is no such officer in the other classes, first, second, third, and fourth) is to be fixed as stated above; that is to say, the same provision is as to the compensation of the marshal in municipal corporations of the fifth class as in this of the sixth. St. 1883, p. 251, § 755. It does not appear that the board of trustees of the city of Modesto has passed any ordinance fixing the compensation of the marshal, but we presume it has. If it has passed such ordinance, the marshal is only entitled to the compensation so fixed. If no such ordinance has been passed by it, then the marshal can recover nothing.

It should have been set forth in the complaint, to entitle the plaintiff to recover, to what class of municipal corporations the city of Modesto belongs, and what compensation to the marshal had been fixed by an ordinance passed by the board, and it should further appear that the claim of plaintiff accorded with such ordinance. In this view, the complaint of plaintiff is fatally defective, and the demurrer to it was properly sustained.

The judgment must be affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

PEOPLE v. WHEELER and another. (No. 20,270.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

1. FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

A tract of land was claimed without right by the defendant W., and, while at work on a part not inclosed, cleared, or cultivated by W., complainant was seized, thrown down, bound, and carried away by the defendants. Held, that the defendants were properly convicted of false imprisonment.

2. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—COMMITMENT—FICTITIOUS NAME.

In California, a defendant charged with crime may be held by the examining magistrate to answer, although in the complaint he was given a fictitious name.

3. SAME—COMMITMENT FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT UNDER WARRANT FOR ROBBERY.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 872, providing for commitment to answer, the defendant may be held, after examination before the magistrate, to answer a charge of false imprisonment, the evidence being sufficient, although arrested on a warrant issued upon a complaint for robbery.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Lake county; HUDSON, Judge.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendants were tried upon an information charging them with the crime of false imprisonment, and convicted. They moved for a new trial, and have appealed from the judgment, and order denying their motion. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows: In 1884 the defendant Wheeler made application to purchase from the University of California a tract of land bordering on Clear lake, in Lake county, and made a preliminary payment therefor. The land sought to be purchased was at that time unsurveyed public land of the United States. Afterwards, in February, 1885, the township embracing the land was surveyed, and on the nineteenth of April, 1886, the map of the survey was filed in the local land-office. From the time of this attempted purchase Wheeler claimed the land, and soon after the map was filed made application to have it listed over to the state. There were two cabins on the tract,—one near what is called "Chappall Bay," and the other about a mile and a half away, and situate near the lake shore. In October, 1885, Wheeler employed the complainant, John Standley, to work on this tract, chopping brush; and he continued to so work until the thirteenth of March, 1886, when he was discharged. During the time he was so employed he lived in the cabin near Chappall Bay, and cleared off one and three-fifths acres, for which he was paid by the acre. Wheeler lived in the other cabin, having in it a bed, books, cooking utensils, etc., and was there most of the time. Early in March he went away, leaving in the cabin a young man named Hall, who was also employed by him. On the nineteenth day of April, 1886, Standley went to the United States land-office, and filed there his declaratory statement to pre-empt a quarter section of the tract, and received the usual certificate and receipt from the register and receiver. The cabin then occupied by Hall was on this quarter section. On the twenty-first of April, Standley saw Hall, and told him he had a bill of sale of the cabin, and he would like to have him move Wheeler's things out as soon as possible. In compliance with this request, Hall moved Wheeler's things out of the cabin, and surrendered possession of it to Standley, who went to living in it, and commenced at once to build a new cabin for himself, some 200 yards away, and was engaged working upon it on the fourth of May following. On the twenty-third of April, Hall wrote to Wheeler, telling him of Standley's attempted location and entry upon the land. On the fourth of May, Wheeler returned, with the avowed purpose of removing Standley from the premises, forcibly if necessary. He was accompanied by four other persons, one of whom was the defendant Mooney. Wheeler and Mooney came to a point near where Standley was at work on his cabin, in a boat. They went up to him, and after some conversation Wheeler said: "You have no legal right here, and I desire you to get away." After some further conversation Mooney laid his hand on Standley's shoulder and said: "There is your boat, and I advise you to get into it." The parties then clinched, and Standley was thrown down. The other three persons then came up and assisted in holding him. Wheeler ran to the boat and got a rope, and with that Standley's hands and feet were tied. He was then placed in the boat and taken round to Chappall Bay. There he was taken from the boat and made to get into a wagon, in which he was driven away. At Chappall Bay he asked the names of the four persons who had assisted Wheeler in removing him to that point, and each one of them gave him a false name.

Before pleading to the information, the defendants moved the court to set it aside, upon the ground that they had not been legally committed by a magistrate. In support of their motion it was shown that Standley, on the fourth of May, 1886, made a complaint before a justice of the peace of Lake county, charging A. A. Wheeler, John Doe, Richard Roe, John Brown, and Richard Williams with the crime of robbery, committed in the forcibly and feloniously taking from his person a certain key. On this complaint a warrant was issued, and the proper officer made return thereon that he had arrested "the within-named defendants." An examination was had before the magistrate, and an order of commitment was indorsed by him upon the complaint as follows: "It appearing to me that the offense of robbery has not been committed, but that the crime of false imprisonment has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe that the within-named A. A. Wheeler, Cornelius Mooney, J. B. Lewis, C. Stanton, and C. Harkort are guilty thereof, I order that they and each of them be held to answer the same," etc. Upon this showing, we think the court properly denied the motion. The committing magistrate was authorized to hold the defendants to answer for any offense which the evidence showed them to have committed, (section 872, Pen. Code,) and his power was not limited to such offenses as were embraced within the crime charged in the complaint. Nor was it material that all the defendants except Wheeler were given fictitious names in the complaint. The regularity of the proceeding by information did not depend in any manner upon the affidavit on which the warrant of arrest was issued, and had no connection with it. People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 458.

At the trial the defendants sought to justify their action upon the ground that Wheeler had had the actual possession of the disputed premises for more than a year, and was entitled to retain that possession; that Standley induced Hall to surrender to him the possession of the cabin by fraudulent misrepresentations, and became a naked trespasser upon the land, and that under the law, as declared in Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 519, and McBrown v. Morris, 59 Cal. 65, he could acquire no rights to the land by his attempted pre-emption; and that Wheeler was therefore authorized to remove him, and to use so much force as was necessary to accomplish that end. The court below did not adopt defendants' theory, and therefore nearly all of its rulings were excepted to, and are now assigned as errors.

We do not think it necessary to consider separately all of the points presented. For the purpose of the case it may be conceded that Standley obtained no rightful possession of the Wheeler cabin, and that his pre-emption filing was wholly invalid. Still the question remains, were the defendants justified in removing him from the land in the manner they did remove him? In considering this question it must be observed that the land was unclosed public land. Wheeler acquired no title to it, or right to its possession, by his application to purchase it from the university. He had a cabin upon it, and had cleared a small area, and planted some vegetables upon it. But all this evidently gave him no possession of the portions not actually occupied by him. Standley had commenced building a cabin for himself, some 200 yards distant from Wheeler's cabin. This new cabin was upon ground which had not been inclosed, cleared, or cultivated by Wheeler. While at work upon his cabin he was seized, thrown down, tied, and carried away by defendants. Upon these facts it seems to us that no plausible pretense of justification can be put forth. False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another, (section 236, Pen. Code,) and every element of the offense seems to have been fully and clearly shown.

It is enough to say of the errors alleged to have been committed by that court in the admission and exclusion of evidence, and in the refusal to give the jury certain instructions asked by defendants, that we have carefully examined the record, and are of the opinion that the rulings are proper. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

FRAZER v. OAKDALE LUMBER & WATER CO. (No. 11,799.)

1. PLEADING—MISTAKE IN COPY SERVED—HARMLESS ERROR.

After setting out several causes of action and their assignment to the plaintiff, the complaint proceeded: “* * * That said defendant is now indebted to the plaintiff thereon in the sums hereinbefore set forth.” The copy of the complaint as served, with a copy of the summons, contained the word “hereinafter” where the word “hereinbefore” occurred in the original. Held, that the mistake was harmless and immaterial, and did not “mislead” the defendant, or “affect his substantial rights,” within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 475.

2. SAME—JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION—CONTRACT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 427, provides that a plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint, where they all arise out of contracts, express or implied. Held, that a claim for work done by the plaintiff for the defendant might be united with a claim of third persons for work done by them for the defendant, and by them assigned to the plaintiff.

3. SAME—MISJOINDER—DEMURRER.

Under the California practice, it is not a ground of demurrer that two or more causes of action are improperly united in one count.

4. ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIMS—ACTION BY ASSIGNEE—WHEN MAINTAINABLE.

An assignee of claims for labor performed by the assignors “within two years last past” may maintain his action thereon against the debtor on the very day of the assignment.

Commissioners’ decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

On demurrer to complaint.

W. E. Turner, for the company, appellant. F. D. & G. W. Nicol, for Frazer, respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. In the complaint filed in this case there are set forth several distinct causes of action. The first is an account for work and labor alleged to have been performed by plaintiff for defendant at its special instance and request. The others are on account for work and labor alleged to have been performed by other parties for the defendant at its special instance and request, and by such parties sold and transferred to the plaintiff. After setting out these several causes of action and their assignment to the plaintiff, the complaint then proceeds: "Plaintiff, further complaining, alleges that he is now the owner and holder of all said accounts; that said defendant is now indebted to him thereon in the sums hereinbefore set forth; that defendant has refused and neglected, and still does refuse and neglect, to pay said amounts, or any part or portion thereof, although the same is due, and payment thereof has been frequently demanded." Then follows the prayer that plaintiff have judgment against the defendant "in the sum of $912.67 upon his account for work and labor; in the sum of $165.84 upon the said assigned claim of John Borteilho; in the sum of $315.40 upon the assigned claim of John Conlin," etc.,—"said sums aggregating the sum of $3,758.93, together with costs of suit."

Service of the summons was made upon the president of the defendant corporation. In making the service the sheriff handed to the president a copy of the summons, with a copy of the complaint, in which the word "hereinbefore," as it appears in the clause before quoted, was written "hereinafter." The defendant appeared specially, and moved the court to set aside the service of summons, on the ground that no copy of the complaint, as required by law, had ever been served upon the defendant; "that the paper purporting to be a copy of the complaint, and which was handed to defendant, was not and is not a copy of the complaint as filed in said cause." The court denied the motion, and the defendant reserved an exception. Thereupon the defendant demurred to the complaint upon the grounds—First, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that several causes of action were improperly united.

When the demurrer came on to be heard, counsel for defendant asked that it be considered only with reference to the copy of the complaint as served. This request was refused, and an exception reserved. The demurrer was then argued, submitted, and overruled. The defendant was given time to answer, but neglected to do so, and thereupon, on motion, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff.

1. We see nothing in the point that the court erred in not setting aside the service of summons. The mistake in writing the word "hereinafter" for "hereinbefore" in the copy of the complaint was harmless and immaterial. It could in no way have misled the defendant, or have affected its substantial rights. Section 475, Code Civil Proc. If in the complaint filed the word had been entirely omitted, or had been written as in the copy, the sufficiency of the complaint could not for that reason have been questioned. We agree, therefore, with the court below, that the copy was in all material respects a true and correct copy.

2. Nor do we see any error in the order overruling the demurrer. The complaint stated several causes of action, but they were such causes of action as may properly be united. Section 427, Code Civil Proc. They were separately stated, too, and not, as claimed, "all jumbled together" in one count. Besides, it is not made a ground of demurrer that two or more causes of action are improperly united in one count. Bernero v. Insurance Co., 65 Cal. 386, 4 Pac. Rep. 382.

3. Some of the claims were assigned to the plaintiff on the day the complaint was filed, and the point is made that the defendant had all that day to pay them, and the action was therefore prematurely commenced. There is nothing in this point. The claims were for labor performed for the defendant by the assignors "within two years last past." The claims appeared to be due, and each claimant had a present right to commence an action. By the assignments the plaintiff acquired all the rights of his assignors.

The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

BALL and others v. NICHOLS. (No. 11,934.)

(Supreme Court of California, August 16, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—BY DEFENDANT—ERRORS AFFECTING CO-DEFENDANT.

On an appeal by one of several defendants, the appellant will not be heard to urge error either in the pleadings or the decree which affect his co-defendants only.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION—PLEADING—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Title by adverse possession may be pleaded without alleging that the taxes have been paid, as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 325, as amended in 1878; the payment of such taxes is a matter of proof, and not of pleading.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Suit to reform a deed and quiet title, by C. R. Ball, respondent, against John H. Nichols, appellant, William George, and Charles Genasci, guardian.

A. Burrows, for appellant. Chas. W. Kitts, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to reform a deed for misdescription of land conveyed by it, and to quiet title. It was tried upon the issues raised by an amended complaint of the plaintiff, the answer of the defendants, and a cross-complaint by one J. H. Nichols, and the answer of the plaintiff thereto; the amendments to which latter pleading having been omitted from the transcript, but supplied upon suggestion of a diminution of the record. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and from it Nichols alone of the defendants appeals. A point made by his counsel is that the complaint is insufficient, and shows no cause of action, and for such alleged defect that the judgment should be reversed. The appellant cannot be heard to complain as to any defect in the complaint so far as affects his co-defendants, as they do not appeal. The title to the land in question and the right to have the deed reformed were properly brought in issue by the complaint of plaintiff, the cross-complaint of Nichols, the answer of the plaintiff, and the amendments thereto, and there are findings on all the issues raised by those pleadings. The wards of Genasci are not bound by the decree in the case, as they are not mentioned in it, yet that omission affects them only, and the appellant cannot be heard in their behalf. He and the plaintiff obtained their title from a common source, and if, at the time when he obtained his subsequent deed to the land, he had full notice of its prior sale to the plaintiff, and of the fact that the latter's deed was intended to have the land in dispute included in it, but that it was omitted by a mistake of the parties as to its proper description, then he has nothing to do with the question as to whether the Genasci mortgage covered the plaintiff's land. All the concern he can have in the matter is that it affects that land which he has an interest in; and, even if there was no finding upon the allegation of the existence of the mortgage, it was immaterial so far as Nichols was concerned, but there is a finding which shows that the mortgage was invalid as to the plaintiff's land, as the mortgagee was charged with notice of the plaintiff's claim to the premises in dispute, and therefore when he took it knew that his mortgage could not legally give him any claim thereon.

It is urged that the statement in the complaint of the plaintiff's claim of title by adverse possession is not sufficient, because it is not alleged that the taxes have been paid, as required by section 325, Code Civil Proc., as amended in 1878. But the fact that such taxes had been paid, if essential to the plaintiff's claim through adverse possession, was only a matter of evidence, and was not a necessary thing to have been pleaded. The language used in the case of Webb v. Clark, 65 Cal. 56, 2 Pac. Rep. 747, cited to us by the appellant's counsel in support of his view of this matter, does not conflict with what we have just said. Neither do we think that any of the findings are outside of the issues raised by the pleadings.

Upon the whole record we perceive no prejudicial error, and the judgment should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

BOSTWICK v. MAHONEY. (No. 11,969.)

1. APPEAL—WHAT REVIEWABLE—OBJECTION TO JURY—RECORD.

An objection to the jury that tried the case, upon the ground that the superior court of the county and the board of supervisors had not ordered and drawn jurors for the year, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 204 et seq., and that the jury was not part of the regular jurors, under section 210 of said Code, will not be considered on appeal, where there is nothing in the record to show that the jury was not what the appellant claims it ought to have been.

2. UNLAWFUL DETAINER—TITLE OF TENANT—PAROL EVIDENCE.

In an action of unlawful detainer, for holding over, the defendant, when a witness for himself, was asked if he "held the legal title" to the premises in question on a certain day. Held, that an objection to the question, on the ground that the tenant could not prove title in himself by parol, was properly sustained.

3. EVIDENCE—OFFER TO PROVE—INCOMPETENCY.

Where an "offer to prove," by a certain witness, contains testimony which is clearly incompetent, it is not error to reject it, although part of the evidence embraced in the offer is competent.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; WM. O. MINOR, Judge.

Stonestifer & Minor, for Mahoney, appellant. Carter, Smith & Keniston and W. L. Dudley, for Bostwick, respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action of unlawful detainer. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from an order denying a motion for a new trial, an appeal from the judgment having been dismissed. Plaintiff proved a written lease of the premises; the expiration of the term; due notice and demand; and all other facts necessary to a recovery. Defendant's defense seemed to rest upon the theory that he could defeat the action by showing that the lease was intended to be a mortgage; but the only exceptions which appear in the very meager record go to certain specific rulings made by the court during the progress of the trial.

Appellant objected to the jury upon the ground that the superior court of the county and the board of supervisors had not ordered and drawn jurors for the year as provided in section 204 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the jury in attendance was not part of the regular jurors under section 210 of said Code. But as there is nothing whatever in the record to show that the jury was not what appellant claims it ought to have been, we are relieved from any further consideration of that point.

The second exception is to the ruling of the court in sustaining an objection to the following question asked of defendant when a witness for himself: "Will you state whether on the ninth day of August, last year, you held the legal title to that property?" This would be a convenient, and exceedingly expeditious way to prove legal title; but the methods by which courts arrive at such proof, though slower, are more satisfactory.

The third exception is to a ruling sustaining an objection to a long question to the same witness, or rather to an "offer to prove by this witness," which covers about two pages of the transcript, and commences in this way: "Then, to get ourselves on the record, we will offer to prove, by this witness, that he (defendant) was seized in fee, possessed of and entitled to the possession of the land in dispute here," etc. Many other things are offered to be proved "by this witness" which rest on record or documentary evidence; and the ruling of the court was obviously correct, although the offer may have contained some other things not objectionable. And it may be remarked that "an offer to prove" is a very loose and unsatisfactory method of proposing evidence. Unless the parties agree about it, it is much the better way to ask the proposed question of the witness, or to offer the document sought to be introduced.

There is a general exception to the charge of the court; but no error is pointed out, and the charge, which is short, seems to be entirely correct. Order affirmed.

HEPPE v. JOHNSON and another. (No. 11,785.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

1. COUNTY TREASURER—EMBEZZLEMENT—SURPLUS AFTER MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

The surplus remaining after a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, was paid into court, and, by the clerk of the court, turned over to the county treasurer, as required by St. Cal. 1863-64, p. 468. The county treasurer turned the money over to his successor in office, by whom it was embezzled. In an action by the party entitled to the surplus, against the sureties upon the official bond of the embezzling treasurer, held, that no advantage could be taken by the sureties, of any irregularities there may have been in making the deposit by the clerk with the county treasurer.

2. SAME—BOND—ACTION AGAINST SURETIES—PARTIES.

In an action against the sureties upon the official bonds of a county treasurer, each bond being, in form, joint and several, the plaintiff can join as defendants one or more or all the persons severally liable upon the bonds, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 383, which provides that "persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument may all or any of them be included in the same action, at the option of the plaintiff."

3. SAME—EMBEZZLEMENT—WHEN MADE—LAST TERM.

Where money is embezzled by a county treasurer, in the absence of proof as to when it was misappropriated, the presumption is that the misappropriation took place at the end of his last term, and that the liability of sureties arises under the last bond.

4. SAME—JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETIES—FORM.

In an action against the sureties upon the official bond of a county treasurer, for money embezzled by him, the judgment rendered should not be in the ordinary form for the recovery of money, but should be a separate judgment against each of the sureties for the full amount for which he made himself liable in the bond, and costs, with a proviso that each judgment should be satisfied by the collection or payment of the amount of the defalcation and costs; following People v. Roonev, 29 Cal. 643, and People v. Love, 25 Cal. 520.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; T. B. McFARLAND, Judge. Freeman, Johnson & Bates, for appellant. Taylor & Holl, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. On the twenty-first day of February, 1873, a decree of foreclosure was entered in the district court in and for Sacramento county, in favor of Nicholas Schadt against William Nicholas Heppe, administrator of the estate of Jacob Heppe, deceased, and others. This decree, among other things, provided: "That if there be any surplus after the payment of the moneys due plaintiff, with interest, attorney's fees, costs, and accruing costs, that such surplus be paid into court, to be disposed of under the order of the court to the persons entitled thereto." In pursuance of the decree the sheriff sold the mortgaged property, and, after paying the plaintiff, and all costs, as required, had left in his hands a surplus of $1,178.85, which he paid to Lauren Upson, clerk of the court, on the twenty-first day of March, 1873. Immediately on receiving the money, Upson deposited the same with John Bellmer, then the county treasurer, and took from him a receipt which, after reciting the title of the court and cause, reads as follows: "Received, Sacramento, March 21, A. D. 1873, of Lauren Upson, clerk of the court aforesaid, the sum of $1,178.85 in gold coin, paid into court in the above-entitled action, to be kept by me as a special deposit, subject to the order of court. JOHN BELLMER, County Treasurer."

On the eighteenth of June of the same year an order of court was made which, among other things, declared the plaintiff here entitled to $589.42, one-half of the money paid into court by the sheriff, and directed that such sum be paid by the clerk of the court to the lawful guardian of plaintiff. The other half of the money was paid out, on the order of the court, to the parties entitled thereto, but the plaintiff's share was kept by Bellmer in a sack, with a tag on it, on which was written the amount of money, and the name of the case to which it belonged, until March 6, 1876, when his term of office expired. On that day he turned it over to D. E. Callahan, his successor in office, and took his receipt therefor. The money was deposited with Bellmer, and by him turned over to Callahan, without any order of court or of the county auditor, and no entry of it was ever made in any of the county books. Callahan held the office of county treasurer during three successive terms, the last term ending on the first Monday of January, 1883. It does not appear what became of the money after it was given to Callahan. It was never demanded of him by plaintiff, or by any person in her behalf, nor paid to her, or any one for her, nor was it turned over by him to his successor in office. Callahan died, and this action was afterwards brought to recover the money, with interest and costs, from the defendants, who were sureties on each of his official bonds.

The defendants answered to the complaint, and, among other defenses, pleaded that neither treasurer was authorized to receive the money sued for in his official capacity, and also that there was a defect of parties, because on each of the bonds there was a large number of sureties who were not made parties defendant in the action. At the trial defendants objected to all evidence showing the receipt of the money by the treasurer, and their objections were overruled. They also moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that there was a failure to prove any of the material allegations of the complaint, and this motion was denied. At the conclusion of the trial, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and from that judgment, and an order denying a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

When the mortgage referred to was foreclosed the Code provided that, if there be surplus money remaining in a foreclosure proceeding, after payment of the amount due on the mortgage, with costs, the court may cause the same to be paid to the person entitled to it, and in the mean time may direct it to be deposited in the court. Section 727, Code Civil Proc.

In April, 1864, an act was passed by the legislature entitled "An act concerning moneys deposited in courts of record of this state." St. 1863-64, p. 468. The first section of the act provides that "in all cases in which the statutes of this state authorize the deposit of moneys in the courts of record of this state, the moneys so deposited shall be paid to the clerk of the court, who shall deposit them, in his name of office, with the treasurer of the county." The second section makes it the duty of the treasurer "to receive such deposits of moneys from the clerk of the court as special deposits, and to keep each deposit entirely separate from all other moneys under his control, and to give to the clerk making such deposits receipts for the same, which receipts shall state the court in which action is pending, and also the title of the action in which such deposit is made, and the amount so deposited." The third section provides that for the safe-keeping of all moneys so deposited the treasurer shall be responsible upon his official bond.

It is claimed for the appellants that this act was repealed when the Codes took effect on the first day of January, 1873. Section 18 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that "in all cases provided for by this Code, all statutes, laws, and rules, heretofore in force in this state, whether consistent or not with the provisions of this Code, unless expressly continued in force by it, are repealed and abrogated." If the act was repealed by this provision it was because the subject of the act was one of the "cases provided for" by the Code. We have not been cited to any sections of the Code in force in 1873, which cover the ground occupied by the statute, nor do we know of any. Sections 572 and 573, Code Civil Proc., provide for a different case. In 1874 a new section was added, numbered 2104, which seems to take the place of the statute. In our opinion the act was in force in 1873, and it controlled and justified the action of the clerk.

It is further contended that the treasurer was not authorized to receive the money from the clerk, because it was not accompanied by the certificate of the auditor, as provided in sections 4145 and 4217 of the Political Code. On the other hand, it is claimed for the respondent that these sections have no application to special deposits made by the clerk of a court of record. However this may be, it is clear that the money was deposited and receipted for as required by the act of 1864. Bellmer received it without question, and held it during his term of office, and then turned it over to his successor. It was evidently his duty to so turn it over, and we can perceive no irregularity in the manner of his doing it. Now, if it be conceded that Bellmer received the money irregularly, does it follow that Callahan, after he received it, could embezzle it without any official responsibility? Suppose Bellmer had received from the tax collector public funds, without the certificate and discharge required by the Political Code, and had regularly turned the money over to Callahan, could Callahan have embezzled that money and not be responsible for it on his official bond? We think not. It seems to us that when Callahan received the money in question, whatever irregularities there may have been in making the deposit with Bellmer, he received it in his official capacity, and was bound to pay it out, on the order of the court, or turn it over to his successor in office.

The point that there was a defect of parties is not maintainable. Each of the bonds on which the defendants were sureties was in form joint and several. Section 958, Pol. Code. Section 383 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument, * * * may all or any of them be included in the same action at the option of the plaintiff." Under this section, the plaintiff had the right, at her election, to join as defendants one or more or all the persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument. People v. Love, 25 Cal. 526; People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 436.

If the defendants are liable at all, we are asked to determine under which of the three bonds their liability arises. It was the duty of Callahan to safely keep the money and turn it over to his successor. In the absence of proof as to when it was misappropriated, the presumption must be that the misappropriation took place at the end of his last term, and the liability would therefore be under the last bond.

The judgment rendered in the case was in the ordinary form of a judgment for the recovery of money. That is not the proper form in a case like this, as was held in People v. Love, 25 Cal. 520, and in People v. Rooney, 29 Cal. 643. The case should be remanded to the court below, with directions to pro-ify the judgment in accordance with the cases cited, and as modified it should stand affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the cause is remanded to the court below, with instructions to modify the judgment in accordance with the views above expressed, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KUNZ. (No. 20,292.)

1. JURY—CHALLENGE FOR ACTUAL BIAS—EXAMINATION.

A proposed juror who had testified to holding an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but that he could give him a fair and impartial trial, was asked, in support of a challenge for actual bias, whether the opinion was adverse to defendant, and the question was excluded. Held error; following People v. Brown, 14 Pac. Rep. 90. MCFARLAND, J., dissenting.

2. SAME—CHALLENGE SUSTAINED—REVIEW OF RULING.

The action of the court in sustaining a challenge to a juror, there being no exception to any ruling upon the admission or rejection of evidence, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

3. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—CORROBORATION.

It is not necessary that every fact sworn to by an accomplice shall be specifically corroborated.

4. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF CORROBORATING TESTIMONY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, independent of the evidence of an accomplice, there is evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, the question of its sufficiency is for the jury.¹

Appeal from superior court, Trinity county; T. E. JONES, Judge.

D. G. Reid and J. N. Gillett, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. This case must be reversed on the authority of People v. Brown, 14 Pac. Rep. 90. On the preliminary examination of the jurors, three of them announced, in response to proper questions, that they each had decided opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but thought they could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial. Each was challenged for actual bias by the defendant, who then, to further show the nature of the bias, asked whether the opinion was adverse to the defendant. This question was in each case objected to, the objection sustained, and an exception noted. The defendant challenged the jurors peremptorily, and before the panel was completed exhausted all his peremptory challenges. The question was so recently before us in the case above cited that further discussion of the point is unnecessary. Such evidence has always been held admissible in this state upon a challenge for actual bias, and there are no decisions in which a contrary opinion is intimated. One Kerlin was called and examined on voir dire as to his qualifications to serve as a juror. He was challenged by the district attorney for actual bias. There is no exception to any ruling of the court upon the admission or rejection of testimony, and this court cannot review the action of the court in sustaining the challenge. We understand that the corroborating evidence goes much beyond proof of mere threats on the part of the defendant. There was evidence outside of that of the accomplice of a conspiracy to procure the murder of deceased. We are not prepared to say that this does not constitute some evidence corroborating the testimony of the accomplice which of itself, and without the aid of the evidence of the accomplice, tended to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The sufficiency of that evidence was properly left to the jury. The rule does not require that every fact testified to by the accomplice shall be specifically corroborated.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

MCFARLAND, J. I dissent. While the Penal Code does not allow an exception to a ruling of the court, denying a challenge to a juror for actual bias, it is true that it does allow an exception to a ruling upon the admissibility of evidence on the trial of such challenge; thus presenting a wonderful example of the incident being considered more important than the principle, and a part greater than the whole. But, notwithstanding this anomaly, it does not follow that a judgment of conviction must be reversed every time a court commits an error in ruling upon testimony on the trial of a challenge. The rule of section 1258 that this court must not regard "exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties" applies here, as well as to wiser provisions of the law. Now, in what way was any substantial right of appellant affected by the refusal of the court to allow the three jurors to be asked whether their opinions were adverse to defendant? When the question was asked in each instance the juror had been examined at great length as to the strength and fixedness of his opinion, and defendant had interposed his challenge for actual bias. It must be remembered that whether or not the court should have allowed the challenge is not before us; that was a ruling which we cannot review. The defendant was not injured, therefore, by the rejection of the proposed question, unless we can assume, upon any possible view, that the ruling of the court on the challenge would or might have been different if it had known that the opinion of the juror, such as it was, was adverse to defendant. But the court at that juncture had no business with the question, "to which side does the opinion of the juror incline?" If the opinion of the juror disqualified him, he should have been discharged, no matter from what side the challenge came. And, to assume that the judge of the court below would have changed his ruling, and allowed the challenge if he had known that such change of opinion would have favored one party as against the other, would be to assume that he was partial and unfair,—an assumption utterly intolerable. I cannot see, therefore, how the allowance of the proposed question could possibly have affected the final ruling of the court on the challenge,—a ruling which we cannot disturb. I think, therefore, that the judgment should be affirmed. I have assumed that the question was a proper one, because I suppose that point may be considered as settled by the judgment of this court in People v. Brown, a judgment in which I did not concur, and from which I had no opportunity to dissent. The facts of that case, however, differ from those of the case at bar. The practice lately grown up of asking all sorts of imaginable questions of jurors has come to be a grievous evil, and should be discouraged in every legitimate way.

MENK v. HOME MUT. INS. CO. (No. 7,890.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

1. INSURANCE—MISSTATEMENTS IN APPLICATION—KNOWLEDGE OF INSURANCE AGENT.

In an action on a fire-insurance policy, evidence that the application was made out by an agent of the insurance company, with full knowledge as to the condition of the premises, and that plaintiff did not know what representations it contained, held admissible, under an issue of misrepresentations. The defendants cannot take advantage of misstatements in the application made by their own agent, and known by him to be false.

2. SAME—LOSS—EVIDENCE OF LOSS OF PROPERTY NOT INSURED.

In an action upon a fire insurance policy, where the defendant alleges that plaintiff burned his own property, evidence on the part of plaintiff showing the loss of other property besides that which was insured is admissible.

3. SAME—PROOF OF LOSS—ADMISSIBILITY OF AFFIDAVIT.

In such a case, it is not prejudicial error to permit the plaintiff to read in evidence his affidavit, prepared soon after the fire, making proof of the loss, where he has testified fully as to the facts within his knowledge, and where the effect of such evidence is expressly limited by the court to showing that plaintiff had made the affidavit.

4. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY INSURED—REFERENCE TO APPLICATION.

Where the application for a policy of fire insurance, in describing the property, included the cellar under the building, but in the policy itself the cellar was omitted, and reference was made to the application for a more particular description, held, that the cellar was covered by the insurance.

5. NEW TRIAL—MOTION FOR—QUESTIONS PRESENTED BY.

A general statement in a motion for a new trial, in an action upon a fire insurance policy, that there was no evidence to prove that plaintiff performed all the required conditions of the contract of insurance, is insufficient to allow defendant to make the point that by the terms of the contract, if the parties could not agree upon the amount of loss, it should be referred to arbitration.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco; JOHN CALDWELL, Judge.

Byrne & Cross, for appellant. Gaylord & Searls, (A. B. Dibble, of counsel,) for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Suit was brought upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant, and from the judgment rendered in the action against the defendant, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial this appeal is taken. The application and survey were expressly referred to and made part of the policy, and it was further stipulated that such application and survey should be considered a part of the contract and a warranty by the assured, and that any false representation, by the assured, of the condition, situation, or occupancy of the property, or any omission to make known any fact material to the risk, or any overvaluation, should render the policy void.

Among other defenses, it was claimed that there was an overvaluation of the property and a misrepresentation as to its value; that a portion of the premises was occupied by a tenant as a saloon for the sale of liquors, which fact was not mentioned in the application, which stated, as to the occupancy of the premises: "First story by the applicant as a brewery; the second story as a lodging-house, and family residence in the rear." It was also claimed on the trial, although there was no special plea of such defense, that the application contained a warranty in the above-quoted language that the applicant resided with his family on the premises, whereas, in fact, he did not reside there, but the premises were occupied by a tenant. In addition to the above language bearing upon this last point, the application, in reply to the question, "Each story, how occupied?" has this: "Second story by tenant as a lodging-house." It is plain that there is no representation that the applicant personally resided there. The rear was occupied as a residence by the tenant who had the lodging-house.

On the trial the plaintiff was permitted to testify, against the objection and exception of the defendant, that the application was in fact made out by an agent of defendant by the name of Burckhalter, and that the plaintiff did not know what representations it contained; and, further, that the agent knew all about the premises, and the manner in which they were occupied, and their value. There was other testimony to the same effect. It is claimed that this was error, and the case of Menk v. Insurance Co., 11 Pac. Rep. 654, is relied upon as authority. That was a case by the same plaintiff to recover for the same loss, the property being insured in the two companies at the same time, Burekhalter being the agent for both companies. Counsel assert that the language of the two complaints is practically identical. In that case this court said, in effect, that the complaint alleged that the policy was issued upon an application made and signed by the plaintiff, and that such testimony was in contradiction of the complaint and should have been ruled out. The language of that complaint is not before us, except in the statements quoted from the opinion. In this case the allegation is simply, "a copy of the application of plaintiff for said insurance, referred to in said policy, is also hereto annexed." Obviously this is not an allegation that the application was made out by the plaintiff. Of course, whoever made it out, it was the application of the plaintiff, and was signed by him or his agent. The only point in the offered testimony was that if the agent, knowing all the essential facts, made out the application for plaintiff, the company cannot take advantage of defective statements contained in it as not complying with the requirements of the company; nor would misstatements be fatal to the claim of plaintiff, which the agent well knew to be false, when he made out the application, received the money of the applicant, and issued the policy.

The tendency of the decisions is plainly to hold all those conditions waived which, to the knowledge of the agent, would make the policy void as soon as delivered. Otherwise the company would knowingly receive the money of the applicant without value returned, and the whole transaction would be a palpable fraud. Kruger v. Insurance Co., 13 Pac. Rep. 156. This consideration answers several points made by the defendant, which need not be further referred to.

It is claimed that the plaintiff was allowed, against the objection of defendant, to prove, in making out his loss, the value of property not insured. The application describes the property as follows: "Viz.: $2,000 on his 2-story frame building and cellar, value $6,700,—the first story occupied as a brewery, the second story as a lodging-house, and family residence in rear; $400 on his brewery apparatus, such as kettle, beer kegs, tubs, faucets, cooler, and tools, value $1,400; $100 on his household furniture contained therein, value $300; situate north side Front street, Truckee, Nevada county, Cal." In the policy the property is described thus: "Viz.: $2,000 on his 2-story frame building occupied as a brewery, lodging-house, and family residence in rear, situate north side Front street, Truckee, Nevada county, California; $400 on his brewery apparatus; and $100 on his household furniture contained therein; $2,500 other concurrent insurance permitted, reference being had to application and survey No. 88,038, on file in this office, which is made a part hereof."

The words "and cellar" are omitted in the policy. The amount of insurance, $2,000, was asked upon the frame building and cellar, which were together valued at $6,700. No separate valuation was placed upon the frame building, nor was any insurance asked upon it as a separate property. The cellar was inclosed by the frame building, and probably, when he came to write the policy, the agent concluded that the two constituted one building. The cellar was in the rear portion of the frame building, and "was a stone building, having its floor somewhat lower than that of the frame building, and rising 13 or 14 feet above the level at that floor, but not as high as the ceiling by about 5 feet. 'It was made of rocks; walls two feet thick. Had iron doors. Covered on top with bricks and fourteen inches of dirt.'" The application was expressly referred to in aid of the description. There can be no doubt that the cellar was included in the policy.

We are unable to discover any error in the admission of evidence in regard to the personal property. Read in connection with the application it seems plain that the articles for which the recovery was had were included in the policy. We see no injury to the defendant in the fact that the plaintiff was allowed to testify as to the loss of other property beside that which was insured. It was a part of the statement as to what was burned, and then it had a bearing upon the issue tendered by the defense, that plaintiff had burned his own property.

The plaintiff was allowed to read in evidence his affidavit, which was prepared soon after the fire, to make proof of loss. The effect of the paper as evidence was expressly limited by the court to showing that he had made the affidavit. The most that can be said about it is that the evidence was immaterial. In the face of the fact that the plaintiff had been on the stand, and had testified fully as to the facts within his knowledge, we will not presume that the jury could have disregarded the positive injunctions of the court. We do not think that the error, if it were error, could have prejudiced the rights of the defendant. It does not appear that the affidavit was ever sent to the defendant, and if it had been, and the defendant set up as a defense the alleged breach of the contract in making the statement charged to be false, we see no materiality in it.

The evidence offered to show that liquor had been sold to Indians, admitting its materiality, was clearly incompetent.

The defendant is not in a position to make the point that, by the terms of the contract, if the parties could not agree upon the amount of loss, it should be referred to arbitration. Waiving the question as to whether it should have been pleaded, there is no specification in the statement on motion for a new trial of insufficiency of the evidence, under which it could be raised. A general statement that there was no evidence which proved, or tended to prove, that the plaintiff at any time complied with or performed all the conditions or any of the conditions of the contract of insurance by him to be performed, would not be sufficient.

Judgment and order affirmed.

ROACH, Adm'r, v. COFFEY, Judge, etc. (No. 12,143.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

ADMINISTRATOR—CONTEST BETWEEN HEIRS—RIGHTS OF ADMINISTRATOR—MANDAMUS.

In California an administrator, having been made a formal party defendant in a contest between heirs, to settle the rights of all persons in the estate, filed cross-interrogatories, and applied to have them annexed to a commission to take depositions which had been issued. His application was refused, and he filed a petition for mandamus to compel the probate judge to grant it. Held, that the administrator was not entitled to contest the claim of the parties to heirship in the estate or to distribution, and that mandamus would not lie.

Department 2.

Petition for mandate. Superior court, San Francisco; COFFEY, Judge.

John A. Wright, for petitioner. Edward R. Taylor and E. D. Sawyer, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is a petition to compel the respondent by a writ of mandamus to settle certain proposed cross-interrogatories. During the pendency of the administration of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, in the court of respondent, one Florence Blythe, in pursuance of section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, filed her petition in said court for the purpose of ascertaining and declaring the rights of all persons to said estate, and to whom distribution thereof should be made. Notice was issued on said petition, and after the return-day thereof the said Florence filed her complaint as provided in said section. In her complaint she made a great many persons parties defendant, and, among others, William Savage and David Savage, and also the petitioner herein, who was and is public administrator and administrator of said estate. William and David Savage filed an answer to the complaint of said Florence, denying her heirship, and averring that they and certain other persons were the true heirs; and afterwards procured a commission to issue out of the court of respondent to take the depositions of certain witnesses in England. A day was fixed for the settlement of direct and cross-interrogatories before the respondent. The petitioner herein served and filed certain cross-interrogatories, and asked to have them settled and annexed to the commission; but, upon motion of said William and David Savage, the respondent omitted to annex said interrogatories to said commission, upon the ground that petitioner, as administrator, was not entitled to contest the claim of the parties in said action to heirship, or distribution of said estate, and this proceeding is brought to compel respondent by mandamus to settle the said interrogatories of petitioner, and annex them to said commission.

We think that it is the settled law of this state that an administrator cannot represent either side of a contest between heirs, devisees, or legatees, contesting for the distribution of an estate. He cannot litigate the claims of one set against the other. His duty is to preserve the estate, and distribute it as the court shall direct. It is true that petitioner was named as a formal party in the complaint filed by Florence Blythe; but the only averment in relation to him is that he was administrator. He is not alleged to be a claimant to the estate; and there are no issues to which his interrogatories could be addressed. Estate of Wright, 49 Cal. 550; Bates v. Ryberg, 40 Cal. 465; Estate of Marrey, 3 Pac. Rep. 896.

Prayer of petitioner denied, and writ dismissed.

SHUMWAY v. LEAKEY. (No. 11,700.)

1. SHERIFF—PROPERTY HELD UNDER ATTACHMENT—KEEPER'S FEES—ORDER OF COURT.
Under the statute of California, relating to the fees of the sheriff of Lassen county, which provides that he shall be allowed for his trouble and expense in keeping property under attachment such sum as the court shall order, not exceeding three dollars per diem, for keeper's fees, the sheriff has no right to the fees unless the court makes such order.
2. SAME—WHAT AMOUNTS TO ORDER—REMARK OF JUDGE.
In such a case, when the judge of the court in which the attachment suit was pending, in a conversation with the sheriff on the street, told him to pay the fees, this does not amount to an order.
3. SAME—ACTION AGAINST—ALLOWANCE OF FEES—ORDER OF COURT.
In an action against a sheriff to recover money retained by him as fees for keeping and preserving property under attachment, without first obtaining the order of the court allowing said fees, as required by the statute of California, a motion made by defendant, after plaintiff has rested his case, to have the court then make an order allowing the fees, is properly denied, as such order was to be made, if at all, in the attachment suit.
4. SAME—RETAINING MONEY—PENALTIES—DEMAND.
Under Pol. Code Cal. § 4181, which provides that if a sheriff neglects * * * to pay over, on demand, money which may come into his hands by virtue of his office, the amount thereof, with 25 per cent. damages, and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per month from the time of demand, may be recovered by the person entitled thereto, the party seeking to avail himself of such severe penalty must be exact in his proceedings; and a demand for an amount greater than that claimed in a suit therefor, and much greater than that found due by the court, is not sufficient to justify the court in allowing the penalty and interest.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; PRESSLEY, Judge.

E. V. Spencer, for appellant. A. D. Goodwin and A. L. Shinn, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is an action under section 4181 of the Political Code, which provides in relation to a sheriff that, "if he neglects or refuses to pay over on demand to the person entitled thereto any money which may come into his hands by virtue of his office, (after deducting his legal fees,) the amount thereof, with 25 per cent. damages and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per month from the time of demand, may be recovered by such person." The defense of the sheriff was that, after deducting his legal fees, there remained only $76.66, which he duly tendered to the plaintiff, but which plaintiff refuses to receive. The fees which he claimed the right to deduct were keeper's fees, etc., upon an attachment in the cause. The controversy turns upon the right to deduct these fees.

The provision of the statute in relation to the fees of the sheriff of Lassen county is as follows: "For his trouble and expense in taking and keeping possession of and preserving property under attachment or execution, or other process, such sum as the court shall order: provided, that no more than $3 per diem shall be allowed to a keeper." Laws 1869-70, p. 158. With reference to similar provisions, it is the settled rule that unless the court makes such order the sheriff has no right to the fees. Bower v. Rankin, 61 Cal. 108; Lane v. McElhany, 49 Cal. 424; Geil v. Stevens, 48 Cal. 590. Now, in this case, there was no such order. The findings state that the sums claimed as fees were paid by the sheriff "without at any time obtaining an order of said court allowing, fixing, or authorizing such payment, or any portion thereof." And this finding is sustained by the evidence.

The objection to the offer of defendant to prove that before paying out the fees "he had asked the Hon. J. W. HENDRICK, superior judge, about paying the bills, upon meeting said judge upon the street, and that said judge told him to pay them," was properly sustained. What the judge told the defendant on the street is not an order. Even if the judge had promised out of court to have the order entered, it would not have amounted to an order. Campbell v. Jones, 41 Cal. 518. Nor was there error in the denial of the defendant's motion, made after the plaintiff had rested his case, to have the court then make an order allowing the fees. Such order was to be made, if at all, in the attachment suit. The motion was not a part of the case before the court, and hence cannot be considered on this appeal. The court, therefore, properly rendered judgment against the defendant.

But we think the court erred in allowing the penalty of 25 per cent., and interest at 10 per cent. per month. The statute provides that the penalty is to be imposed for non-payment "on demand." In seeking to avail himself of such a severe penalty, the party must be exact in his proceedings. And without expressing any opinion as to whether a demand in general terms, without naming any sum, would have been sufficient, we think that a demand for $921.47, when the amount claimed in the complaint was only $848.73, and the amount found to be due only $366.73, was not sufficient. This point does not appear to have been taken before the learned judge of the court below, nor is it made on appeal. But we think that justice requires this disposition of the case. In this view it is not necessary to determine whether the penalty can only be recovered in an action for a false return.

We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for $366.73, with interest from February 25, 1885, at legal rates, and for costs of suit.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for $366.75, with interest from February 25, 1885, at legal rates, and for costs of suit.

SWAMP-LAND RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 407 v. WILCOX. (No. 11,782.)

1. SWAMP-LANDS—ASSESSMENTS—ORDER OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—ALTERATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a swamp-land reclamation district to enforce the payment of a swamp-land assessment, plaintiff offered in evidence an order appearing in the "minute-book" of the board of supervisors, in which, by Pol. Code Cal. §§ 4029-4031, all orders of the board are required to be recorded; and it was conceded that, without the direction of the board, the order had been altered by B., who at the time of the entry, but not at the time of the alteration, was ex officio clerk of the board. B. testified, against objection, that he made the alteration to correct what appeared to him, on examination, to be a clerical error of his deputy, now deceased, the then acting clerk of the board. The "rough minute-book," containing the original entry from which the record was made, and to which the altered record conformed, was also admitted against objection. Held, that it was error for the court to admit the order in evidence.

2. SAME—RECORD—ALTERATION—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Held, further, that the order was a record which B. had no right to alter or amend, and that parol proof was inadmissible to correct or change the record.

3. SAME—ASSESSMENT LISTS—DESCRIPTION.

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 3461, requiring certain assessment lists to contain "a description, by legal subdivisions, swamp-land surveys, or natural boundaries," a description, naming the adjoining proprietors on the respective boundaries, is sufficient.

4. SAME—ASSESSMENTS AND BENEFITS—DUTY OF COMMISSIONERS.

Pol. Code Cal. § 3456, provides that assessments for swamp-land improvements shall be proportionate to the resulting benefit, and section 3461 provides, among other requisites, that the list must contain "the amount of the charge assessed against each tract." The list in question conformed to the requirements of section 3461. Held, that the commissioners were not required to report that, in making the assessment, they had complied with section 3456, and that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, they must be presumed to have regularly performed their official duty.

5. SAME—ASSESSMENT LIST.

In an action to enforce the payment of a swamp-land assessment, it appeared that, in the assessment list, there was no dollar-mark before the figures opposite defendant's name, under the heading "Amount of charges assessed." In a number of assessments the dollar-mark preceded the figures under that heading, and in others the mark did not appear. Held, that the figures must be construed to represent dollars.

6. SAME—OATH OF COMMISSIONERS.

This commissioners of swamp-land assessments were verbally sworn before viewing the land, but it did not appear that they subscribed their oath, and filed it in the county clerk's office, as required of all "officers" by Pol. Code Cal. §§ 904, 909. Held, that whether the commissioners were or were not "officers," within the meaning of those sections, a failure of strict compliance with their requirements would not avoid official acts fully performed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; T. B. McFARLAND, Judge. W. H. Beatty, Add C. Hinkson, and Freeman, Johnson & Bates, for appellant. A. P. Catlin, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to enforce payment of a swamp-land assessment. The plaintiff was organized as a swamp-land district in January, 1882, to reclaim certain swamp lands situate on Andrus island, in Sacramento county; and, as alleged in the complaint, the assessment sought to be recovered was thereafter regularly levied on land owned by the defendant within the district. In the court below judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

The validity of the assessment is assailed by the appellant upon several grounds, but they need not all be noticed.

*Reversed in banc. See 17 Pac. 241, 75 Cal. 443.
Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—52

In support of the averment that commissioners were appointed to view the lands of the district, and to assess upon them the proper charge for their reclamation, the plaintiff offered in evidence at the trial an order appearing in minute-book "K" of the records of the board of supervisors, which read as follows:

"OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,

"FRIDAY, August 25, 1882.

"Swamp-land district No. 407. The report of the trustees of swamp-land district No. 407, was received and the following report adopted: 'Ordered that J. M. Upham, J. M. Stephenson, and John Miller, three competent and disinterested persons and residents of Sacramento county, be, and are hereby, appointed commissioners, who must, in the manner provided by law, view the land of said district and assess thereupon the proper assessment and charge for the reclamation of said land, to-wit: The sum of $78,000, in the manner and at the cost surveyed, planned, and estimated by J. C. Pierson, engineer of said district, and by the board of trustees filed this day with the clerk of this board.'"

The defendant objected to the entry being received in evidence upon the ground that when made it was an order appointing commissioners to view and assess a charge on lands in swamp-land district No. 341, and that it had since been altered and changed, and was therefore irrelevant and immaterial. And in this connection counsel offered to show that from August 25, 1882, until 1885, the record read as follows: "Swamp-land district No. 341. The report of the trustees of swamp-land district No. 341, was received and the following report adopted: 'Ordered that J. M. Upham, J. M. Stephenson and John Miller,' " etc. Then followed the balance of the order as above set out.

Thereupon the attorney for the plaintiff admitted in open court that on the seventeenth day of July, 1885, the day before the trial, Thomas H. Berkey, in his presence, changed the figures designating the number of the district from "341" to "407." It was then shown that Thomas H. Berkey was the county clerk of Sacramento county on the twenty-fifth day of August, 1882, but that his term of office had expired before he changed the record as above stated, and that he was then acting as a deputy county clerk; that the record of the proceedings of the board of supervisors, of which the entry in question was a part, was signed by the president of the board, but was not signed by Berkey, or any of his deputies, and that the alteration was made by Berkey when the board of supervisors was not in session and without its direction or permission. Berkey was called as a witness and testified, against the objection of defendant, that he made the alteration as soon as his attention was called to what appeared to him, by a comparison of the records and examination of different pages of the record-book, to be a clerical error made by one Parnell, now deceased, who, in August, 1882, was his deputy, and as such was the acting clerk of the board of supervisors. A book was also introduced in evidence, against the objections of defendant, described by the witness, Berkey, as the book of original entry, and what he termed the "rough minutes"—a book in which the clerk first entered the minutes of the proceedings of the board, and from which the record of its proceedings was made up. In that rough minute-book appeared the following entry under date of August 25, 1882: "The board of swamp-land com., No. 407; report of trustees filed and ordered adopted; see order." Upon this showing the court overruled the objections of defendant, and admitted the order in evidence.

In so doing we think the court erred. The county clerk is ex officio clerk of the board of supervisors, and as such must record all the proceedings of the board. And the board must cause to be kept a "minute-book," in which must be recorded all orders and decisions made by them, and the daily proceedings had at all regular and special meetings. Sections 4029-4031, Pol. Code. The order in question was, therefore, a record which, it is evident, Berkey had no right to alter or amend, even though he had personal knowledge—as he did not have in this case—that it was erroneously entered. Dyer v. Brogan, 11 Pac. Rep. 589; Pacheco v. Beck, 52 Cal. 3; Wigginton v. Markley, Id. 411. Nor was parol proof admissible, in a collateral proceeding like this, to correct or change the record. This must be so on principle, and has been held in many similar cases. Thus, in Jordan v. School-District, 38 Me. 170, it is said: "School-districts are required by law to keep a record of their proceedings by a sworn clerk. Such proceedings can therefore be proved only by the record, or a copy thereof, properly authenticated. The parol proof offered was consequently properly rejected." So, in Morrison v. City of Lawrence, 98 Mass. 221, it is said: "Parol evidence was inadmissible to prove any acts or proceedings of the city council, or that the record of such proceedings as kept by the clerk was erroneous or defective." See, also, Mayhew v. District of Gay Head, 13 Allen, 134, and City of Logansport v. Crockett, 64 Ind. 319.

If the record was, in fact, erroneous in the particulars named, the plaintiff's remedy was an application to the board of supervisors, or some other direct proceedings, to have it corrected.

The defendant also objected to the assessment list, offered in evidence by the plaintiff, upon several grounds, and his objections were overruled. One ground of objection was that the land was not properly described. The Code required the list to contain "a description by legal subdivisions, swamp-land surveys, or natural boundaries of each tract assessed," and "the number of acres in each tract." The land assessed to the defendant was described as a portion of two swamp-land surveys, "bounded on the north by the lands of Mrs. R. F. Davis, on the east by the lands of L. C. Ruble, on the south by the lands of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, and on the west by Old river,—number of acres, 100." This should be held, we think, to be a sufficient description, as otherwise it would seem impossible to describe the land so as to comply with the statute. Evidently, it could not have been described by legal subdivisions, nor, being a portion of two surveys, by swamp-land surveys. If, then, the words "natural boundaries" are to be construed as excluding all artificial boundaries, or boundaries made by man, it must follow that no sufficient description of the land could be made. We do not think such a result was intended or should be declared. In our opinion any description which clearly identifies and marks out the land is sufficient.

Another ground of objection was that it did not appear from the face of the assessment list, or from any other evidence, that the assessment or charge was made in proportion to the whole expense, and to the benefits which would result from the works of reclamation, nor that the charge was estimated in gold and silver coin of the United States, nor in any kind of money. Section 3456 of the Political Code requires the commissioners to "view and assess upon the lands situated within the district a charge proportionate to the whole expense, and to the benefits which will result from such works, and estimate it in gold and silver coin of the United States." And section 3461 provides what the list must contain, as follows: "The list must contain: (1) A description by legal subdivisions, swamp-land surveys, or natural boundaries of each tract assessed. (2) The number of acres in each tract. (3) The names of the owners of each tract, if known; and if unknown, that fact. (4) The amount of the charge assessed against each tract."

The list returned was signed by the supposed commissioners, and complied with the requirements of section 3461, and there is nothing to show that the assessment was not made in full compliance with section 3456. The commissioners were not required to report that in making the assessment they had complied with the requirements of section 3456, and, if they had done so, their certificate to that effect would not have been even prima facie evidence of the fact. People v. Hagar, 49 Cal. 232. They were, however, charged with an official duty, and, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, must be presumed to have regularly performed that duty. Section 1963, subd. 15, Code Civil Proc. It is true that there was no dollar-mark before the figures, "4,746.45," placed opposite the name of defendant, under the heading, "Amount of charges assessed;" but the record shows that this was only one of a number of assessments contained in the list, and that "in a number of cases there was a dollar-mark ($) preceding the figures in columns headed with the words 'Amount of charges assessed,' and in a number of other instances, as in this, the dollar-mark did not appear." It is not shown when or in how many places the dollar-mark did appear, but if it was prefixed to some of the items in the column, then all the figures standing in the same column, and in the same relation to other similar items, must be construed to be dollars, without a repetition of the mark before each item. People v. Empire G. & S. M. Co., 33 Cal. 171.

Still another ground of objection was that it did not appear that Upham, Stephenson, and Miller took, subscribed, and filed their oath of office in the office of the county clerk, before they assessed the land and made the assessment list. It did appear that they were sworn verbally by a justice of the peace, before they went out to view the land. It is not necessary to decide whether or not they were such officers as sections 904 and 909 of the Political Code refer to; for, if they were, their official acts, after being fully performed, were not rendered void by the fact that they had failed to comply strictly with the requirements of those sections.

After carefully examining the whole record, we find no error of which the defendant can complain, save the one first above noted; but for that error the judgment and order should be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

WHYLER and another v. VAN TIGER. (No. 11,931.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1887.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD—APPOINTMENT—ISSUE OF LETTERS.

Where a mother was appointed guardian of the person and estate of her minor son, and on the same day presented her bond, which was approved, a lease made by her of the ward's property on the following day was held valid, though no letters of guardianship had been issued to her, and she had not taken the oath of office.

2. SAME—LEASE IN INDIVIDUAL NAME.

A lease purporting to be made by one tenant in common in her own right, and as the guardian of the estate of her co-tenant and ward, is valid, although signed and delivered as her individual deed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; PHIL. W. KEYSER, Judge.

This action was brought by Joseph Martin Whyler to recover the possession of the undivided one-half of 300 acres of land situated in Sutter county, California, for an accounting of the rents and profits, and for $150 damages for withholding possession. The land in controversy was leased to Henry Van Tiger by Mary E. Whyler, as guardian of the estate of Joseph Martin Whyler, but the lease was signed and delivered as her individual deed.

The cause was tried by the court, a jury being waived, and the court found from the evidence and admissions of counsel the following facts:

"(1) That the plaintiff is a minor, under the age of 14 years, and now is, and more than two years last past has been, a resident of Sutter county, California, and has estate therein. (2) That on the twenty-eighth day of September, 1885, Mary E. Whyler, who was the mother of said minor, filed her petition with the clerk of this court, asking to be appointed the guardian of the person and estate of said minor, Jos. M. Whyler; and thereupon, by an order entered on its minutes and without notice, this court appointed her such guardian, and fixed her bond at $1,000; and thereafter, to-wit, on the twenty-ninth day of September, 1885, she presented her bond conditioned according to law, and the order of said court, which, on the same day, was duly approved by the judge thereof, and she immediately entered upon the discharge of her duties as such guardain. No letters of guardianship were issued to said Mary E. Whyler, nor did she take the oath of office. (3) That on the third day of May, 1886, John T. Allment and Mary E. Whyler filed their petition with the clerk of this court, asking that said John T. Allment be appointed guardian of the estate of the said minor, Joseph M. Whyler; and thereupon, by an order entered in its minutes, and without notice, this court appointed John T. Allment guardian of the estate of said minor, and fixed his bond at $500; and thereafter, to-wit, on the fourth day of May, 1886, the said John T. Allment presented his bond, conditioned according to law, and the order of said court, which on the same day was duly approved by the judge thereof; that letters of guardianship were issued to said John T. Allment, and thereafter, to-wit, on said last-mentioned day, the said John T. Allment took and subscribed the oath of office. (4) That said plaintiff and Mary E. Whyler were, on the twenty-eighth day of September, 1885, ever since have been, and now are, the owners in fee as tenants in common, in equal shares, of the land and premises described in plaintiff's complaint. (5) That on the thirtieth day of September, 1885, the said Mary E. Whyler, acting for herself, and also as guardian of the estate of said minor, Jos. M. Whyler, duly made, executed, and delivered to defendant a written lease of said premises, for the period of four years from the date thereof; that on said last-mentioned day said defendant entered into the possession of said premises, and ever since has held, and now holds, the possession thereof, as the lessee thereof.

"(1) As conclusions of law, I find that Mary E. Whyler was the legal guardian of the person and estate of said minor, Jos. Martin Whyler, at the time she executed the lease to the defendant of the premises in controversy. (2) That she executed and was authorized to execute said lease, at the time it bears date, for herself and as such guardian, to said defendant, and that said lease conveyed to said defendant the right of possession of said premises.

(3) That said defendant entered into possession of said premises under and by virtue of said lease, and is now and was on the fifteenth day of May, 1886, entitled to and is and was lawfully in the possession thereof. (4) That the defendant is entitled to judgment against the plaintiff for costs.

J. H. Craddock, for appellant. Stabler & Bayne and Sanborn & Phipps, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. There is no error in the record. We think that Mrs. Whyler was a guardian when she executed the lease to defendant, and that the lease was properly executed.

The judgment must be affirmed. So ordered.

PEOPLE v. WEST. (No. 20,317.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 5, 1887.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT MURDER—VERDICT—SUBSTANCE AND FORM.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1151, a verdict of the jury, on the trial of a defendant charged with an assault with an intent to commit murder, "We, the jury in the above-entitled case, find the defendant guilty," is sufficient in form and substance.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—FORM OF VERDICT.

On the trial of a defendant charged with an assault with intent to commit murder, it is not misleading to instruct the jury that, if they find the defendant guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, their verdict shall be, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty," but if they find him guilty of the lower crime of assault their verdict shall designate the crime, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of assault."

3. SAME—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—DISCUSSING MERITS OF CASE.

It is not a prejudicial disobedience of the admonition of the court not to talk about the merits of the case, for a juror to state, at the conclusion of the charge of the court, that there is a misunderstanding among the jury as to the testimony of a witness, and ask to have stated what the testimony was.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—ASSAULT—DECLARATIONS OF PROSECUTING WITNESS.

When a witness is called by the defense for the purpose of showing that the prosecuting witness did not know who assaulted him, and testifies to a conversation had with the prosecuting witness the morning after the commission of the offense, in which he told him he did not know whether it was the defendant or not, it is competent to ask him, upon cross-examination, if the prosecuting witness did not tell him the evening before that it was the defendant who assaulted him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county. W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Reardan & Freerer, for appellant. John C. Gray and Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The defendant was charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. The jury found the defendant guilty in the following language: "We, the jury in the above-entitled case, find the defendant guilty." It is claimed that this verdict is contrary to law; does not find the defendant guilty of any offense; and that, because the lesser crime of simple assault is included within the crime charged in the information, the verdict is ambiguous and uncertain. The jury were given four forms of verdict, the court saying: "I have prepared forms of verdict for you. You will find that they conform to the definition of the crime and the different offenses which I have defined to you. If your verdict be that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged in this information, then it is simply essential for you to find a verdict like the following: 'We, the jury in the above-entitled case, find the defendant guilty,' and that imports the conviction of the offense with which the defendant is charged in the information. If, however, you should in your wisdom arrive at the conclusion that the defendant is guilty of the lower crime of assault, which I have defined to you, then, in that event, it will be essential that you designate the character of the offense, and your verdict in that case would be: 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of assault.' " In the case upon which appellant relies, (People v. Ah Gow, 53 Cal. 628,) the form of the verdict was: "Guilty of the indictment as charged to him." It was there held that the jury had failed to find the defendant guilty of anything. An assault with intent to commit murder is not divided into degrees, and the general rule is that a verdict of guilty is a conviction upon every material allegation in the information. People v. March, 6 Cal. 543. Section 1151 of the Penal Code provides that a verdict of guilty upon the general issue imports a conviction of the crime charged in the information. Under the instructions given in the court, the jury could not have been misled, and the verdict is sufficient in form and substance.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the charge of the court to the jury one of the jurors said: "I would like to ask one question, if the court please, about which there is a conflict among the jury. The evidence of the two men who swore that they saw this man West, at 6 o'clock or a little after that, going through that lane, and that of the defendant with regard to it, is not clearly understood. The question is whether he swore that he was there at all, and the two men swore that they saw him in there at that time?" It is not pretended that the jurors in any material respect disobeyed the admonition of the court not to talk about the merits of the case, and this question itself indicates nothing prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. It is simply an inquiry on the part of one of the jurors, and indicates only that there was a misunderstanding as to the testimony of one or more of the witnesses. The inquiry of the juror was answered by stating the testimony to him, to which there was no objection. During the progress of a trial a juror may not hear clearly what has been said, and without impropriety may ask a fellow-juryman whether the testimony is as he understands it. In the absence of something more than the showing that is made here, we must hold that the defendant was not injured. People v. McCurdy, 68 Cal. 576, 10 Pac. Rep. 207.

There was no error in permitting the witness Ward to answer the question, "How did it come up?" The defense had attempted to show by him that the prosecuting witness did not know whether it was West or another person who had committed the assault; and, for that purpose, had been permitted to show that Weyman had said to him on the morning after the commission of the offense that he (Weyman) did not know whether it was West or a white man. We think it was legitimate cross-examination of the witness to inquire whether, in the conversation had with the same party the evening before, he had not said that it was West who assaulted him.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KERRIGAN. (No. 20,297.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—EXCLUSION OF SPECTATORS—PUBLIC TRIAL.

During the progress of a trial for an assault with intent to commit murder, the court made an order directing that the lobby outside of the court-room should be cleared of spectators, and that no person except officers of the court, reporters of the public press, friends of the defendant, and persons necessary for her to have on said trial, should be allowed to remain; but no order was made requiring the doors to be closed, and the friends of defendant and reporters were permitted to come and go at will. The order of the court was made on behalf of the defendant, as well as to preserve order, because the attendance and conduct of a large crowd in the court-room tended to excite the defendant. Held, that defendant's right to a public trial was not violated.

2. INSANITY AS DEFENSE—MORAL INSANITY.

Under the decisions of California, moral insanity, as distinguished from mental derangement, is no excuse for crime, nor an exemption from punishment therefor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

J. A. Hosmer and D. T. Sullivan, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, for the People.

PATERSON, J. The defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder. The defenses interposed at the trial were, not guilty, and insanity. During the progress of the trial in the court below the defendant became greatly excited and indulged in profane and abusive language, addressed to the judge and other officers of the court. Her conduct created so much commotion among the spectators that the trial was seriously interrupted, and the court found it necessary to make an order excluding spectators from the court-room. Appellant claims that she was deprived of the constitutional right of a public trial by the making and enforcement of this order.

There is some controversy as to the scope of the order,—which was not entered in the minutes at the time,—but the judge certifies that the order was “that the lobby outside of the court-room should be cleared of spectators, as their presence tended to irritate and excite the defendant, and that no persons except officers of the court, reporters of the public press, friends of the defendant, and persons necessary for her to have on said trial, should be allowed to remain.” It appears further, from the statement of the judge, that no order was made requiring the doors to be closed, and that, in fact, the friends of defendant and reporters were permitted to come and go at will; that the order was made by the court on behalf of the defendant, as well as to preserve order, because the attendance and conduct of a large crowd of spectators in the court-room evidently tended to excite the defendant; and it is apparent from the affidavits, showing the conduct of the defendant and many of the spectators, that such was the fact.

In our opinion, the order and action of the court, as shown by the bill of exceptions, were not in violation of the defendant's right to a public trial. It was proper, we think, under the circumstances, to exclude from the court-room those who were excluded, not only because of the vulgar and profane language of the defendant herself, but because such action was evidently necessary to protect the court from indignity and indecorum. No actual injury to the defendant is shown. It is not shown that any person who could have been of any service to the defendant on her trial was excluded. While it is very important that all the rights guaranteed by the constitution to a person charged with crime should be fully and fairly awarded to him, it is also important that courts of justice should be upheld in the enforcement of all necessary and reasonable rules for the orderly, speedy, and effective conduct of their duties. People v. Swafford, 65 Cal. 224, 3 Pac. Rep. 809; Grimmett v. State, 2 S. W. Rep. 631; section 128, Code Civil Proc.

It is claimed that the court erred in its charge to the jury upon the subject of moral insanity; that the court, in effect, took the evidence upon this question from the jury's consideration by instructing them, in substance, that there is no such thing as moral insanity. Counsel for appellant has not pointed out the particular instruction to which his objection is directed; but the following, from those given by the court of its own motion, evidently shows the views of the court as expressed to the jury: “In our courts of law there is no such doctrine established or recognized as moral insanity, distinguished from mental derangement, as an excuse for crime, and as an exemption from punishment therefor. There is no such type of insanity recognized in our courts, as, for instance, that a person may steal your property, burn your dwelling, murder or attempt to murder you, and know at the time that the deed is a criminal act, and wrong in itself, and deserves punishment; having the ability to correctly reason on the subject, and yet be held guiltless and not punishable on the ground solely of a perversion of the moral senses."

It may be true, as claimed by appellant's counsel, that the weight of authority in this country is against the doctrine here enunciated. The authorities cited by him support his contention that "moral insanity is now as well understood by medico-jurists, and almost as well established by judicial recognition, as the intellectual form." But it is not an open question in this state. The instruction quoted is within the test of insanity as given by this court in former decisions, and we adhere to the rule of decision with confidence in the correctness of the principle established. If the defendant had sufficient mental capacity to appreciate the nature of her act; if she knew and understood that she was violating the rights of another by an act which was in itself wrong, and which was prohibited by the law, and the commission of which would entail punishment upon herself; if she had the capacity thus to appreciate the character and comprehend the consequences of her act,—she is responsible to the law for the act thus committed, and must be judged accordingly, regardless of any perversion of the moral senses, however great; for, if great moral depravity should be taken as a test of insanity, then the highest degree or enormity of crime would, by virtue of its own atrocity, furnish the best evidence of insanity on behalf of the one who committed the act.

The third point relied upon by the appellant is that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence. It is claimed that the defense of insanity was established by a preponderance of evidence, and that there is no testimony, in fact, sufficient to cause a substantial conflict. To support this contention, we should have to hold that the testimony of Dr. Dozier, a physician of 20 years' practice, 11 of which were devoted exclusively to the patients of the Napa Insane Asylum, is unworthy of consideration or belief. This we cannot do. The witness, as first assistant physician of the asylum, had defendant under his personal observation for a period of about six weeks, and testified that he never saw her, and never spoke to her at any time while she was under his charge, when she impressed him as being an insane person. There was other evidence in the case which tended to corroborate Dr. Dozier in his theory that her malady was that of extreme moral depravity, or moral insanity only, and that she was capable of distinguishing right from wrong.

We see no errors, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; TEMPLE, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

PEOPLE v. RICE. (No. 20,234.)

1. RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS—INFORMATION—ALLEGATION OF VALUE.

Under Pen. Code Cal., defining the crime of receiving stolen goods, it is not necessary, in the information charging a person with that crime, to allege that the property was of any value.

2. SAME—TIME OF OFFENSE—VARIANCE.

On the trial of a person for receiving stolen goods, it is not a material variance, within Pen. Code Cal. § 955, prescribing when time is material, that the evidence shows the crime to have been committed three months before the time stated in the information.

3. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—ABSENCE OF COUNSEL OF ACCUSED.

It is not a cause for reversal that, on the trial of a person charged with receiving stolen goods, his counsel was absent when the court overruled the demurrer to the information; no reason being assigned for his absence, and it not being shown that defendant was injured thereby.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

W. D. Grady and R. H. Ward, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Appellant was accused by information, and convicted of the crime of receiving stolen property. There is no allegation that the property was of any value, and the information was demurred to on that ground. The demurrer was overruled, and that ruling is assigned as error. There is nothing in the Code defining the crime which, by necessary implication, requires that the value of the property should be alleged, and it is sufficient to charge the offense as defined by the Code. People v. Avila, 43 Cal. 196; People v. Shuler, 28 Cal. 490. The punishment for receiving stolen goods does not in any degree depend upon the value of them. Therefore, value need not be stated. 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. 930.

Independently of any admission by defendant's counsel at the trial that the property alleged to have been stolen was stolen, we think the evidence sufficient to justify a finding that it was stolen. No one testified to having seen it stolen, but the circumstances proven, in our opinion, established the fact beyond a reasonable doubt. The evidence shows that the offense was committed three months before the time stated in the information. We think the variance immaterial. Pen. Code, 955.

It appears that defendant's counsel was not present when the court announced the overruling of his demurrer to the information. No reason is assigned for his absence, nor is it shown, or attempted to be shown, that the defendant was in any way prejudiced thereby. The rule which requires that a defendant on trial for a felony must be present during the entire trial, does not apply to a point like this, and there is no reason why it should.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WOLFF v. PROSSER. (No. 11,898.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 25, 1887.)

PARTITION—DECREE—BENEFICIARY NOT A PARTY—HARMLESS INJURY.

In an action for partition of certain mining claims, a grantee of the plaintiff was made a beneficiary under the decree, though not a party to the suit. It appeared, however, that the sum to be distributed to him amounted to only $10. Held, that although such grantee's right should not have been determined, it was a proper case for the application of the maxim, "de minimis non curat lex," and the error was without substantial injury.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Sierra county; F. D. LOWARD, Judge.
Taylor & Holl, for appellant. Van Clief & Weihe, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action for the partition of certain mining claims. The court ordered the property to be sold and the proceeds divided in a specified way. Part of the division consisted in the payment to "John Gale, the grantee of said Wolff," of one-sixth of what should remain after applying the proceeds as directed. The only point made is that, since Gale was not a party to the action, his right to any part of the proceeds should not have been determined. Conceding this to be so, it appears from the record that after applying the proceeds in the manner first directed by the decree, the sum to be distributed to Gale amounted to only $10. We think this is a proper case for the application of the maxim, de minimis, etc., and that the error was without substantial injury. We therefore advise that the judgments be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PEOPLE ex rel. ATTORNEY GENERAL v. LEONARD. (No. 11,933.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 26, 1887.)

1. OFFICE AND OFFICER—ELIGIBILITY—LUCRATIVE OFFICE UNDER UNITED STATES.

Section 20, art. 4, Const. Cal., providing that "no person holding any lucrative office under the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state," etc., should be construed to mean eligible to hold office as well as to be elected to office, and hence disqualifying a state supervisor from holding this office after he had received and entered upon the duties under a lucrative federal appointment.

2. SAME.

Section 20, art. 4, Const. Cal., provides that "no person holding any lucrative office under the United States * * * shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state," etc. Held, that the words "lucrative office" refer solely to the office "under the United States," and one holding such lucrative office is disqualified to hold any state office, no matter how small the emolument of the latter may be.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county; J. F. ROONEY, Judge.

F. D. Nicol, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. This action was instituted for the purpose of having the office of supervisor of the First district of Tuolumne county declared vacant. The court below gave judgment in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, and from that the defendant has appealed. It appears that he had been duly elected by the people of his district to the office of supervisor thereof, and had held it for some months, receiving for his services less than $500 a year as salary, and that then he was appointed to the office of postmaster of the city of Sonora, which is a lucrative office under the United States. It is contended by the relator, in support of the judgment, (although the defendant was eligible to the office of supervisor at the time he was elected to fill it, and he held it legally and properly up to the time when he was appointed to and held the office of postmaster,) that the moment he thus accepted the latter office he became an unconstitutional holder of the office of supervisor, and that the same at once became vacant and subject to be so declared by the proper court, under section 20, art. 4, of our state constitution. That section reads as follows: "No person holding any lucrative office under the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state: provided, that officers in the militia, who receive no annual salary, local officers, or postmasters whose compensation does not exceed $500 per annum, shall not be deemed to hold lucrative offices."

In seeking to interpret the meaning of a constitutional provision, it is proper always that the intent of the framers of such an instrument should, if possible, be ascertained and carried out. Upon looking at the section under discussion, we find it the same as originally passed by the convention of 1849. The primary matter, as shown in the first clause of the section, to which the minds of the members of that and succeeding constitutional conventions seem to have been addressed, was to make ineligible to any state civil office of profit, any person who held a lucrative office under the United States, or any other power. The main object, then, must have been to prevent a conjunction of a federal and state office of profit in the same person, without any condition whatever; then the inconvenience of so arbitrary a rule was thought of, and thence came the determination to exempt from the terms "civil office of profit," or "lucrative office," officers in the militia to whose positions no salary is attached, and local officers and postmasters who did not receive by way of compensation more than $500 per annum. If the section in controversy can be so construed as to permit the holder of a civil office of profit under the state to be appointed to and hold, at the same time, a lucrative office under the United States, then the prime object of the members of the constitutional convention, which made such section a part of the law of the land, viz.: The prevention of dual office-holding by one person under two separate and distinct governments, and the separation of the allegiance justly due one by its officers from that due to another power,—would be defeated, and the earnest intentions of that body rendered utterly abortive.

In addressing himself to the discussion of such a matter as the one now in hand, the distinguished Chief Justice RYAN, in State v. Trumpf, 50 Wis. 112, 5 N. W. Rep. 876, and 6 N. W. Rep. 512, after deploring the fact that it had become the law of that state, through successive decisions of its court of last resort, that "eligibility" in the constitution of that commonwealth meant eligibility to hold office, and not eligibility to be elected thereto, was constrained to say this: that "the distinction between eligibility to election to office and eligibility to hold office is too nice to enter into a rule of judicial decision." So it appears to us, when we come to consider the motive which must of necessity have actuated the constitutional assembly that enacted the provision which we are considering, and the cogent and powerful reasons which would occur to the mind of any earnest thinker, why such a restriction should be placed on the holding of office by one man, at the same time, under more than one government, (such as that it would tend, if the duties of both offices were onerous, to the neglect of one or both, or to the undue influence of the office-holder as a powerful agent of some ambitious president, or head of a department, if the federal office was a lucrative one, and the like,) that it was clearly intended that one holding "a lucrative office" under the United States should not hold a "civil office of profit" under the state.

The case of Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 121, which is cited to us as declarative of the proposition that "eligibility," as used in our constitution, does not mean incapacity to hold, but incapacity to be elected to a civil office of profit under the state, while holding a lucrative federal office, does not, as we understand it, go to the extent claimed, for there the question involved was, whether or not the holder of a lucrative federal office was eligible for election to a state office, and therefore the language used in that case, in so far as it does not directly apply to the point actually submitted for decision, is but obiter dictum. And we are not without authority as to the correctness of the view which we take of the meaning of the word "eligibility" as used in the text of the state constitution, although there is no case to which we have been enabled to have access, which involves the precise question in issue here; that is, whether one duly eligible and elected to a civil office of profit under the state can be permitted to hold that office after he has accepted and is in the incumbency of a lucrative federal office. The nearest approach to it is that of State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566. There it appeared that Clarke was United States district attorney for the state of Nevada when he was elected to the office of attorney general of the state. The constitution of that state is similar in its language to ours upon the point under review, being as follows: "No person holding any lucrative office under the government of the United States, or any other power, shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state; provided, that postmasters, whose compensation does not exceed $500 per annum, or commissioners of deeds, shall not be deemed as holding a lucrative office." That court used this language in determining the meaning to be attached to the word "eligible," as used in the Nevada constitution: "We agree with the defendant that the framers of the constitution intended to prohibit one who was holding a lucrative federal office from holding a state office at the same time. But instead of restricting the meaning of the word 'eligible,' as defendant contends, we think, to carry out the intention of the constitutional convention, we ought to give it a more extended signification than is generally given, and hold that it means both 'incapable of being legally chosen' and 'incapable of legally holding.' "

And we have found upon investigation that in very many, if not all, of the various state constitutions, the principle seems to have been incorporated and adopted of prohibiting the holding by one person, at the same time, of a lucrative federal office and any one of the more important state offices. And in most of such constitutions the word "eligible" has (as it appears to us) been made use of, as it is in our constitution, in a broad and far-reaching sense. In the case of Carson v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 327, this is said: "The term 'eligible,' as used in our constitution, relates to capacity of holding, as well as capacity of being elected to, an office." In Brady v. Howe, 50 Miss. 626, "eligibility" is defined to mean capacity to take and hold an office; one not eligible to mean one disqualified from taking and holding. And in State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 99, "the term 'ineligible' means as well disqualification to hold an office, as disqualification to be elected to an office." And so it will be found upon examination that in nearly all, if not all, of the cases where "eligible" was said to mean capacity to be elected to an office, and not capacity to hold it, the party seeking to hold the office was declared not to be eligible, because of the want of capacity to be elected; and there is nothing said in any of them which, by fair construction and interpretation, in the light of the facts of the case, shows that the mind of the court was directed to, and intended to decide, where unlimited and unexplained by other language, that eligibility to office did not mean the qualification to hold as well as to be elected to an office. So that, upon the first ground contended for by the appellant for the reversal of the judgment, it is apparent he is without legal support.

Neither can we concur with appellant's second proposition, which is that, because the annual salary of his office of supervisor was less than $500, therefore section 20, art. 4, of the constitution does not apply. The words "lucrative office," as used in that section, refer solely to the office "under the United States,"—the federal office. If the salary of the office "under the United States" exceeds $500,—which is admitted to be the case here,—then its incumbent cannot hold "any civil office of profit under this state," whether the profit of the latter exceeds $500 per annum or not. The words "local officers," immediately preceding "postmasters," refer evidently to local federal officers. The words "officers of the militia" probably mean such officers when called into the federal service. At all events, it is clear that "lucrative office" applies only to offices under the United States, and "civil office of profit" only to offices under the state.

Therefore the judgment should be affirmed.

HEINLEN v. BEANS and another. (No. 11,999.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 29, 1887.)

APPEAL—FROM JUDGMENT ENTERED BY ORDER OF SUPREME COURT.

When the supreme court, upon appeal, affirm the judgment of the court below, or directs the entry of a specific judgment, and such judgment is entered by the lower court, it cannot be appealed from.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

G. A. Heinlen, for appellant. John Reynolds, for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. When this case was here upon a legitimate appeal, this court reversed the judgment and directed the court below to enter judgment for defendants. 12 Pac. Rep. 169. The court below entered judgment as directed, which fact is not disputed. From that judgment, which this court directed to be entered, plaintiff now appeals; and respondent moves to dismiss the appeal for the obvious reason that no appeal lies from such a judgment.

When this court, upon appeal, affirms the judgment of the court below, or directs the entry of a specific judgment, and such judgment is entered by the lower court as directed, the litigation is over, and the case ended.

Query: Whether the attempt to appeal in this instance is not a contempt under subdivision 4 of section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The appeal of appellant from an order of the court below refusing to allow him to amend his complaint after the remittitur had reached that court, is also dismissed. Kirby v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 604, 10 Pac. Rep. 119.

A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which, in the absence of manifest abuse, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Indictment for an assault with a deadly weapon.

John J. West, for respondent. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People, appellants.

THORNTON, J. This is an appeal from an order granting the defendant a new trial. One of the grounds on which the motion for a new trial was made is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. An order granting a new trial on such ground is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and is never disturbed by this court unless there is a manifest abuse of discretion by the trial court. We find no such abuse here.

We find no error in the refusal of the instruction to which our attention is called.

HAUSLING v. HAUSMAN and another. (No. 12,001.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

JUDICIAL SALES—MOTION TO SET ASIDE SALE UNDER FORECLOSURE OF LIEN.

Sale of a mining claim was made under a decree of foreclosure of a laborer's lien taken pro confesso. The defendant moved to set aside the sale on the ground that the confession was induced by promises that the judgment should not be enforced without consent; that plaintiff would liquidate certain liens against the claim, take a conveyance thereof, dismiss his action, and reconvey an interest in the claim to defendant; that in accordance with such agreement defendant had conveyed the claim to plaintiff, but that thereupon plaintiff repudiated and refused to carry out the agreement to reconvey. Held, that the court properly refused to set aside the sale, as the rights of the parties under the alleged agreement could be properly adjudicated only by an action brought in a court of equity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYERS, Judge.

Otto Tum Suden and W. B. Lardner, for appellant. C. A. & F. P. Tuttle and J. M. Fulweiler, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal from an order made by the superior court of Placer county, refusing to vacate and set aside the sale of a certain mining claim under a decree of foreclosure of a laborer's lien, to restrain the sheriff from executing a deed of the property, and to enter satisfaction of the judgment and decree under which the sale was had. The decree was made and entered on the twenty-first of May, 1886, upon the complaint of plaintiff and the answer of the defendant Hausman, in which answer all the facts alleged in the complaint were admitted, and judgment and decree confessed and prayed for in accordance with the allegations and prayer of the complaint. The sale under the decree was made on the twelfth of July, 1886, the respondent being the purchaser, and the motion leading to the order appealed from was heard and denied on the twenty-third of November, 1886.

In support of his motion, defendant, appellant here, presented and filed his affidavit, from which it appeared that he was the owner of the mining claim, and that, on or about the first of August, 1885, he and respondent entered into a verbal agreement, by which the respondent was to superintend the working of the mine at a fixed salary per month, and was to purchase a one-tenth interest therein at a fixed sum, to be paid for by his labor; that, after August 1st, the mine was to be worked jointly by the parties, and the profits and losses were to be divided between them in proportion to their respective interests; that the appellant was to furnish all the money required to put the mine upon a paying basis, and the respondent was to be debited with the one-tenth part thereof; that both parties performed the conditions of the contract until about the first day of February, 1886; that between the first of August and the first of February the mine was worked at a great pecuniary loss, and the respondent's share of the loss was more than sufficient to balance the amount due him for labor; that on the first day of February the respondent filed a claim of lien upon the mining claim for the labor performed thereon by him, and thereafter in due time commenced the action to foreclose his lien, in which the decree in question was rendered; that various other parties filed liens upon the claim for labor performed by them, and in due time commenced a joint action to foreclose their liens; that the parties then made a new verbal agreement, under which the appellant was to confess judgment in favor of respondent as prayed for in his complaint, the judgment, however, not to be carried into execution without appellant's consent, and respondent was to buy in the claims of the other lienholders, the appellant furnishing the money therefor; and, on this being accomplished, the appellant was to convey to respondent the mining claim by a good and sufficient deed, and the respondent was then to dismiss his action, and reconvey to appellant the undivided nine-tenths part of the claim; that in accordance with this agreement the claims of the other lienholders were purchased, and the appellant then, on or about the twentieth of April, 1886, conveyed the mining claim to respondent, without any consideration other than that here set forth, and the respondent accepted the deed and caused it to be placed on record. The affidavit then further states that, having received and recorded the deed, respondent repudiated his agreement, set up a claim to the entire mine adverse to appellant, under the latter's deed, and that he now holds the mine adversely to appellant and claims to be the sole and only owner thereof.

In answer to the appellant's affidavit the respondent read two affidavits, one made by his attorney, John M. Fulweiler, and the other by himself. In his affidavit Fulweiler denies the statements of appellant about dismissing the action and not enforcing the judgment, and says that it was distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the action was not to be dismissed, but that judgment might be entered and enforced. The respondent also denies that the action was to be dismissed, and says that the appellant voluntarily executed and delivered to him the confession of judgment, and that it was then and there mutually agreed by and between them that the judgment and decree of the court should be entered up in accordance with the confession, and within a reasonable time thereafter the amount of the judgment should be paid to respondent by appellant; that pending such payment the execution of the judgment was to be staid, and upon payment it was to be satisfied; that shortly thereafter appellant refused to pay as agreed, the amount due respondent, and that by reason of such failure and refusal respondent, on the twenty-first of May, 1886, procured the entry of judgment, upon appellant's confession, as he of right was entitled to do.

It further appears from the bill of exceptions that on the hearing of a similar motion made on the sixth of July, 1886, to set aside the same judgment, the attorneys for appellant admitted in open court that no part of the indebtedness claimed by respondent, and for which the judgment had been confessed and entered, had been paid, but the same was then due respondent from appellant.

Upon this showing we cannot say that the court erred in refusing to set aside the sale, and to order satisfaction of the judgment to be entered. There was a manifest conflict as to some of the material facts of the case; and, besides, the real contest seems to be in reference to the title to the mine. Counsel for appellant contend that when respondent accepted a deed of the property—and that it is an admitted fact that he did so—his debt was satisfied, his lien lost or merged, and he took, and thereafter held, nine-tenths of the title, in trust for appellant. It is further said that respondent has repudiated his trust, and set up an adverse claim to the whole property under his deed, and to permit him now to receive the sheriff's deed would tend to cloud appellant's title, and render it more difficult for him to establish his rights. Undoubtedly, if the facts be as claimed by appellant, the purchase of the property by respondent, under his decree, gave him no greater rights than he already had. The sheriff's deed would not confer any new rights, or extinguish or affect appellant's equities. But conceding this, what was appellant's remedy? He admits that the legal title is in respondent under the deed of April 20, 1886. Now, if the sale were set aside, and the judgment satisfied, the title would still be in respondent, and appellant would still be required to bring his action in equity to compel the conveyance to him of the nine-tenths interest which he claims. Courts do not ordinarily deal with questions by piece-meal, and, besides, the matter of preventing or removing clouds upon titles is one of purely equitable cognizance.

Upon the showing made, it seems to us, the appellant should have commenced an action in a court of equity, where all the questions involved could have been tried and the rights of both parties fully ascertained and determined.

We conclude therefore that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

BRYAN v. IDAHO QUARTZ MIN. CO. (No. 11,790.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

1. DEED—RIGHT OF WAY FOR FLUME—RESERVATION—WASTE WATER.

A deed granting to a mining company a right of way across grantor's land for a flume to its quartz mine, and for a reservoir and waste water ditch, reserving to the grantor the right to use so much of the waste water from the reservoir as he shall choose, does not imply a covenant that there shall be any waste water, nor, by its mention of the mine as the terminus of the flume, that all of the water conveyed thereby shall be used at such mine; and the grantee is not prevented from tapping its flume between the grantor's land and its mine, to supply water to another mine.

2. CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—PAROL EVIDENCE.

A contract being perfectly clear in its terms, parol evidence of prior conversations between the parties, and of what was understood respecting the consideration, is properly rejected.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW.

A finding of law cannot be reviewed on appeal, when it is, if anything, too favorable to appellant, and respondent has not appealed therefrom.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.

Frank Power and Farley & Little, for appellant. Cross & Simonds and C. W. Kitts, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The plaintiff made a deed by which he granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed to the defendant the right to make and maintain a water ditch upon and across his land, along a line then surveyed, to a certain point upon the land, and the right to construct and maintain at such point a reservoir, not exceeding one and one-half acres, the exact site thereof to be thereafter determined, and the right to "lay down and maintain upon said premises an iron pipe, flume, ditch, or other conduit leading from said dam or reservoir to the Idaho quartz mine; also a strip of land, one rod in width, along the whole length of said pipe or ditch, said pipe and ditch to be the center of said strip; also the land upon which said reservoir shall be constructed, not exceeding one and one-half acres in extent; also the right of way, with sufficient land for a ditch to carry away the waste water from said dam or reservoir, said ditch to be constructed on such land as the grantee may hereafter determine; also the right of said grantee, or its successors, and its and their servants, officers, agents, and employes, to at all times enter upon and pass over and through said premises, for the purpose of repairing and maintaining said ditches, pipes, and reservoirs. * * * The land herein conveyed being simply for right of way for said ditch, reservoir, and pipe, and for no other purpose. Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in anywise appertaining, and the reversion, reversions, remainder, remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, to have and to hold all and singular of said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, and to its successors and assigns forever." The deed contained also the following clause: "It being understood and a part of the consideration for this conveyance that the grantor shall have the right at all times to appropriate for his own use, and to conduct, wherever he shall desire, so much of the waste water flowing over said dam or reservoir as he shall choose."

The plaintiff's grievance is that the defendant allowed the Maryland Mining Company to tap its pipe "by a branch pipe or tap in said iron pipe leading to the said Idaho quartz mine at a long distance from said reservoir and said Idaho quartz mine, and intermediate the same;" and that by reason of such diversion there was not enough waste water for his purposes. But we do not think he has any legal ground of complaint. It does not appear that he was the owner of any of the water which was conducted across and collected upon his land. All the water-right which he has comes from his contract with the defendant. And by this contract he is entitled only to the waste water. In order to say that the plaintiff is entitled to the water sold to the Maryland Company, we must affirm that such water is "waste water," which we are unable to do. It is perfectly true that the quantity of waste water is diminished by the use of the Maryland Company. But there is no covenant that there shall be any waste water. Nor is there anything in the contract imposing upon the defendant an obligation to use all the water at the Idaho mine. That mine is simply mentioned as the terminus of the flume leading from the reservoir. We see no restriction whatever upon the disposition which the defendant may make of the water. If the plaintiff desired any such restriction, he should have had it put in the contract.

The contract being perfectly clear, and the action being in affirmance of the contract, the court below was right in rejecting parol evidence of prior conversations, and as to what was understood, etc. If the branch pipe put in for the use of the Maryland Company were upon plaintiff's land, it might be objected by him that this additional burden was not authorized by his deed. But it appears from the findings that this branch pipe was put in "at a point between the land of plaintiff and the Idaho quartz mine." We think, therefore, that the judgment refusing any relief to the plaintiff was proper.

Upon the cross-complaint of the defendant the court decreed that the defendant "is the owner of the right of way forever over the lands hereinafter described, for a ditch, pipe, flume, conduit, and reservoir, to store and convey water, etc., * * * for any lawful purpose." The defendant argues that the decree ought to have adjudged that it is the owner in fee-simple of the land covered by the reservoir and the ditch, and not simply of a right of way. But not having appealed, it cannot be heard upon this question. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, the only doubt is whether this part of the judgment is not too favorable to him. The other matters argued do not require special mention.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DOBBINS. (No. 12,106.)

1. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—CONFLICTING SECTIONS.

Section 4484, Pol. Code Cal., providing that, if conflicting provisions are found in different sections of the same chapter or article, the provisions of the sections last in numerical order must prevail, has no application where the sections are passed at different times.

2. SAME—CONFLICTING PROVISIONS AS TO FINES—LATEST AMENDMENT.

The provisions of Pen. Code Cal. §§ 634, 636, as to the disposition of certain fines being in direct conflict, section 634, having been last amended when the fines in dispute were collected, is the latest expression of the legislative will, and controls in the matter of their disposition.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SUBJECT OF STATUTE EXPRESSED IN TITLE.

The title of the act of March 12, 1885. "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Penal Code,' approved February 14, 1872, by amending section 634. relating to fish and game," sufficiently expresses its subject, and the act is valid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; T. B. McFARLAND, Judge. J. F. Wendell, for appellant. A. B. Dibble and A. D. Mason, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an agreed case, and the only question involved is whether the provisions of sections 634 or 636 of the Penal Code govern as to the disposition of fines collected for violations of chapter 1, tit. 15, of that Code, the two sections being in direct conflict. It appears from the agreed statement that the district attorney of Solano county, the appellant here, had in his hands the sum of $305, being the one-fourth of certain fines collected in cases prosecuted by him for violation of that chapter in the justices' courts of his county, during the year 1885, and subsequent to May 12th of that year; and the question is what is to be done with that money. Of the other three-fourths, the sum of $610 was paid to the informers, and $305 to the district attorney, and about this there is no controversy.

Section 636 was amended on March 30, 1878, and, until it was again amended on March 24, 1887, in so far as it related to the disposition of moneys collected for fines, reads as follows: "One-half of all moneys collected for fines for violation of the provisions of this chapter shall be paid to informers, and one-half to the district attorney of the county in which the action is prosecuted."

Section 634 contained no provision relating to the moneys collected for fines until March 12, 1885, but it was then amended, the amendment taking effect May 12th, so as to contain the following provision: "One-half of all moneys collected for fines for violation of the provisions of this chapter shall be paid to the informer, one-quarter to the district attorney of the county in which the action is tried, and one-quarter shall be paid into the fish commission fund."

It is claimed for the appellant that section 636 must control as to the disposition of the money, because it is last in numerical order, and there is nothing in the chapter, apart from the conflicting provisions, to indicate an intention that the section first in numerical order should prevail; and section 4484 of the Political Code is cited as decisive of the question. That section provides as follows: "If conflicting provisions are found in different sections of the same chapter or article, the provisions of the sections last in numerical order must prevail, unless such construction is inconsistent with the meaning of such chapter or article."

There can be no question that the four Codes constitute but one statute, (section 4480, Pol. Code; People v. Applegarth, 64 Cal. 229,) and that if the two conflicting sections had been passed at the same time, the rule invoked would apply. But the question here is, does that rule apply where the sections were passed at different times? We do not think it does. It is an old and well-settled rule that when two laws, upon the same subject, passed at different times, are inconsistent with each other, the one last passed must prevail. So it has always been the rule that when different provisions of a statute, all passed at the same time, could not be reconciled, the one that came last in point of position must prevail. And this was upon the theory that effect should always be given to the latest, rather than to an earlier expression of the legislative will, presumption being that the latter part of the statute was last considered. Section 4484 ought not to be so construed as to change these old and well-established rules, unless it clearly appears that at the time of its passage such was the legislative intent. We are unable to see anything indicating such an intent; on the contrary, the section seems to be only the plain expression of what was already well-established law. In our opinion, therefore, section 634, being the latest expression of the legislative will, must be held to be the law, and must control as to the disposition of the moneys referred to therein.

The point is also made that the provision of section 634 for the disposition of the fines collected for violations of that chapter is unconstitutional, because that subject is not expressed in the title of the act. The act is entitled, "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Penal Code,' approved February 14, 1872, by amending section 634, relating to fish and game." In People v. Parvin, ante, 783, (decided August 23, 1887,) this court had under consideration an act passed by the legislature entitled, "An act to amend section 3481 of the Political Code." It was objected that that act was void because the subject of the act was not expressed in its title, but the court held the title sufficient and the act valid. Upon the point in hand that case is decisive of this.

In our opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

ELMER v. GRAY and another. (No. 12,063.)

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD—ALLOWANCE FOR SUPPORT OF WARD—POWER UNDER WILL.

Where the same persons were named in the will as executors and guardians of the residuary legatee, and the will, in a clause giving plaintiff a monthly allowance during her life, directed the "executors" to expend such further sums for her care and comfort as they should deem necessary, the guardians, after their discharge as executors, have power to increase the allowance.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; PHIL. W. KEYSER, Judge.

R. D. Clement, for appellant. E. A. Davis and S. J. Stabler, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to construe a will. The defendants Gray and Wilbur were nominated in the will the executors thereof, and the guardians of the estate of the testator's child, who was the residuary legatee. The plaintiff is the person named in the fifth clause, which is as follows: "Fifth. I give and devise to my sister, Mary Elmer, now of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $40 per month, from the date of my death during her natural life; and if it is necessary for her care and comfort, I will and direct that my executors pay to her, or expend for and on her behalf, such other and further sums as they in their best judgment may deem meet and proper; and in case of her death to give her a decent burial." The defendants paid this sum, together with an increase of $10, until the distribution of the estate to the residuary legatee, of whose estate they are now guardians by the terms of the will. They now doubt whether they have power to increase the allowance, because the above clause of the will vests the discretion in them as "executors," and they are no longer executors but are guardians. We think they have the power. The leading intention of the testator in this regard was to make a suitable provision for his sister during the rest of her life. For this purpose he gave her an allowance of $40 per month "during her natural life;" and because he could not foresee what her needs might be as increasing age crept upon her, he vested a discretion in certain persons to increase the allowance if they thought it was necessary. The word "executors" seems to us to have been used simply as a designation of the persons who were to exercise the discretion, and not as a limitation of the time in which it was to be exercised, and it is unimportant that the official name of these persons has been changed.

We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

GREEHN v. SHUMWAY. (No. 11,642.)

APPEAL—APPEALABLE ORDER—REFUSAL TO ACT—REMEDY.

The denial by a trial court, after final judgment, of an order allowing the sheriff's bill of expenditures for an attachment and sale in the action, is simply a refusal to act, and therefore not appealable, the remedy, if any, being by mandamus.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; JOHN G. PRESSLEY, Judge.

E. V. Spencer and J. E. Raker, for appellant. Goodwin & Shinn, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The case of Shumway v. Leakey, ante, 841, (just decided,) was an action under section 4181 of the Political Code, to recover money in the sheriff's hands, which he had refused to pay over to the party entitled. No order had been made fixing the amount of the fees, and upon that ground it has just been decided that the sheriff was not entitled to retain what he claimed as his fees out of the money in his hands. Pending the trial of said case the sheriff made a motion for an order allowing his fees. Shumway (defendant in the attachment suit and plaintiff in the suit above-mentioned) objected, "on the ground that such proof was irrelevant, and that the court had no jurisdiction to hear, or settle, or allow the said bill of expenditures after the same had been paid. The said objection was sustained, and the motion denied by the court. To which ruling counsel for said sheriff duly excepted." The sheriff attempts to make this action of the court the subject of an appeal. If the court had acted upon the application, and made an order allowing or disallowing the fees, it would then be a question whether such order was appealable. It is apparent, however, that the court simply refused to take any action in the matter, one way or the other. And we think it clear that this "order" is not appealable. If the sheriff has any remedy, it is by mandamus to the proper court to take action in the matter. The "order" not being appealable, there is nothing before the court.

We concur. BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the proceedings upon attempted appeal are dismissed.

GRUPE v. BYERS and another.

(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)

HOMESTEAD—DIVORCE—CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND TO WIFE.

In a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by a wife upon homestead property, held, that a deed, signed by the husband alone, conveying to his wife all his interest in the homestead, made subsequent to a decree of divorce, was valid, and divested the property of its homestead character.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

This suit is brought against the defendants, husband and wife, for the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by the wife after their divorce. Some time previous to the divorce the wife had made a selection of the property covered by the mortgage, as a homestead, and executed a written declaration thereof for the joint benefit of herself and husband. The decree of divorce made no disposition of the homestead property; but, subsequently to the rendering of the decree, the husband made a deed of the same to his wife, which was signed by himself only, and thereafter the wife executed the mortgage in question, which was not signed by the husband. The defendants claimed that the property still retained its homestead character.

Aug. Muenter and W. B. Nutter, for appellant. J. C. Byers, for respondent. J. H. Budd, for guardian ad litem. Louitt, Woods & Levinsky, amici curiae.

BY THE COURT. We are of opinion that the deed to the wife executed by the husband, after the decree of divorce in this case, was a valid one, and conveyed all the interest of the grantor. The mortgage of the wife was therefore valid, and the plaintiff (mortgagee) is entitled to a judgment of foreclosure. The portion of the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and on such new trial the views above expressed are to be followed. Ordered accordingly.

OULLAHAN v. MORRISEY. (No. 11,393.)

1. APPEAL—JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION.

Where a party consents to the entry of judgment against himself he cannot appeal from it; or, if he can, can be heard only as to that portion to which he did not consent.

2. SAME—JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT—COSTS.

The supreme court of California has no jurisdiction of an appeal involving only the question of costs which amount to less than $300.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINERTON, Judge.

D. S. Terry, F. T. Baldwin, and J. C. Campbell, for appellant. Joseph H. Budd, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. The plaintiff, having consented to the entry of the judgment against himself, cannot appeal from it; or, if he can, can be heard only as to that portion to which he did not consent. That in this case is at the most the demand for costs, which, being less than $300, does not give this court jurisdiction. The appeal must be dismissed. So ordered.

HITCHCOCK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 12,071.)

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—APPLICATION TO OPEN—REVIEW BY CERTIORARI.

The notice in proceedings to determine title to decedent's estate, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1664, prescribing the practice in such cases, was served by publication, and on February 5, 1886, an order was made declaring all persons, named or not named, who had not appeared, to be in default. Petitioner, a non-resident, had not heard of the proceedings prior to July 14, 1886, and was not named in any of the proceedings prior to September 7, 1886, when she filed her motion to open the default, and for leave to appear and answer. Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make an order denying petitioner's motion, and that the order could not be disturbed on certiorari.

In bank. Application for writ of review, superior court, San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Section 1664, Code Civil Proc. Cal., prescribes that the notice referred to in the opinion shall be served in the same manner as a summons in a civil action, and that, upon proof of service, the court shall have jurisdiction to determine the interest of all persons in the property, and its determination shall be final and conclusive. By section 473 the court may allow a defendant upon whom the summons in an action was not personally served to answer within one year after rendering judgment. By section 1713 the provisions of part 2 of the Code, of which section 473 is a part, are made applicable to, and constitute the rules of practice in, the proceedings mentioned in the title embracing section 1664.

T. Z. Blakeman, (Edward J. Pringle and Broadhead & Hæussler, of counsel,) for petitioner.

Petitioner is entitled to one year in which to appear and move to set aside her default. Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 473, 1664, 1713; Guy v. Ide, 6 Cal. 99; Francis v. Cox, 33 Cal. 323; *Gracier v. S. 97; Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land Co., 18 How. 277; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 235; Cooley, Const. Lim. 357; Boorman v. Santa Barbara, 65 Cal. 314, 4 Pac. Rep. 31; Galpin v. Santa Barbara, 65 Cal. 314, 4 Pac. Rep. 31.

McAllister & Bergin, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari to review an order of the respondent denying a motion of petitioner to open a default, and for leave to appear and answer, in certain proceedings pending in respondent's court in the matter of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased. After the expiration of one year from the issuing of letters of administration in said estate of Blythe, deceased, one Florence Blythe, proceeding under section 1664, Code Civil Proc., filed a petition for the purpose of ascertaining and declaring the rights of all persons to said estate. A notice was issued upon said petition in pursuance of said section, in which a large number of persons were named, but in which petitioner herein was not named. The notice was published in manner as required for the service of summons by publication, and on February 5, 1886, which was five days after the return-day of the notice, the court made an order adjudging all persons (named or not named) who had not appeared, to be in default. Thereafter, on February 25, 1886, said Florence Blythe filed her complaint as provided by said section 1664, alleging her sole heirship, but did not name petitioner herein in said complaint or in any subsequent proceedings prior to the seventh day of September, 1886. Petitioner is not a resident of, and has never been in, the state of California, and did not know and had not heard of said proceedings prior to July 14, 1886. On September 7, 1886, she filed her motion, in due form, to open the default, and for leave to appear as an heir of said Blythe, deceased, and to answer the said complaint of said Florence Blythe, presenting at the same time her proposed answer, duly verified with affidavit of merits, etc. Her motion was denied February 15, 1887, and we are asked to annul, upon certiorari, the order denying this motion.

We are of opinion that the respondent had jurisdiction to make the order complained of, and that it cannot be disturbed on this proceeding. But whether the proceeding in which the ruling complained of occurred will be conclusive against petitioner at the final distribution of the estate, or whether, having had no notice and not having been made a party, she does not come within the express exception of the final clause of said section 1664, which provides that "nothing contained in this section shall be construed to exclude the right, upon final distribution of any estate, to contest the question of heirship, title, or interest in the estate so distributed, when the same shall not have been determined under the provisions of this section,"—these are questions which do not arise here. The prayer of the petitioner is denied, and the writ dismissed.

WARDER v. ENSLEN. (No. 11,843.)

1. MORTGAGE—ABSOLUTE DEED—REDEMPTION—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

An absolute deed was given as security for the payment of a debt, under an agreement that, whenever the grantor could sell the premises for an amount sufficient to pay the debt, the defendant would reconvey the premises, on payment of said debt. Possession was given to the grantee, who was to have the rents and profits, etc., as interest upon the debt. The premises could have been sold for enough to pay the indebtedness any time after January, 1879, but plaintiff made no attempt to do so, and made no attempt to redeem until January 22, 1885, and defendant never denied plaintiff's right to redeem prior to that date. Held, that defendant's possession did not become adverse until January 22, 1885.¹

2. SAME—ADVERSE POSSESSION BY MORTGAGE—REDEMPTION, WHEN BARRED.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 346, the mortgagee must have held adverse possession for five years after the breach of some condition of the mortgage, before the mortgagor's right to redeem is barred.

3. TRIAL—FINDINGS—DISCREPANCY.

If a discrepancy exists in findings of fact by the trial court, the more specific findings of particular facts must control.

B. McKinne, Kittrell & Maddux and Ben T. Rawlins, for appellant. W. L. Dudley and Wright & Hazen, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment, and the contention of appellant is that the facts found by the court below are insufficient to support the judgment. It is an action to redeem a mortgage. Substantially, the court found that the plaintiff, being indebted to the defendant in the sum of $12,440.38, for the sole purpose of securing the payment of said indebtedness, executed and delivered to defendant, August 29, 1877, an instrument in form of a deed absolute, purporting to convey the premises described in the complaint, which was made by the plaintiff, and accepted by the defendant, as security for the payment of said sum of money, and for no other purpose whatsoever. "Simultaneously with the execution and delivery of said instrument, and on the same day, to-wit, the twenty-ninth day of August, 1874, the plaintiff and the defendant made and entered into an agreement by the terms of which the defendant agreed to and with the plaintiff, that, whenever the plaintiff could sell the above-described land and premises for a sufficient sum of money, to pay the defendant the amount of the aforesaid indebtedness, to-wit, the sum of $12,440.38, that then the defendant would, on demand, reconvey to this plaintiff the whole of said land and premises on payment to the defendant of said sum of $12,440.38. And the plaintiff at the same time promised and agreed upon his part that, whenever he could sell said land for a sufficient sum to pay said indebtedness to the defendant, he would, on demand of said defendant, sell said land and pay said indebtedness and redeem said land. And it was then and there further mutually agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, that, until the sale or redemption of the said land, the defendant should have and receive the rents and profits, use and occupation of the said land and premises, and that the same were and should be deemed equal and equivalent to any and all interest that might or could accrue upon said sum of $12,440.38, and the defendant further agreed to pay all taxes upon, and the cost of all necessary repairs, and the insurance of the improvements on, the said premises; and the defendant, in consideration of having and receiving the use and occupation, rents and profits, of said premises, agreed that the same should be in full payment of said interest, and defendant further agreed, for a valuable consideration on the part of plaintiff, that he would pay and discharge said taxes, make said repairs, and would at all times keep said improvements fully insured. Thereupon, and in pursuance of said deed and agreement, the defendant entered upon and has since possessed the premises."

The plaintiff never afterwards made any effort to sell the land, although it would have sold for enough to pay the debt at any time after January, 1879, and the land has not been sold, and no part of the indebtedness has been paid. The defendant has never at any time demanded of plaintiff that he should sell or redeem said land. On the twenty-second day of January, 1885, the plaintiff offered to pay said sum of $12,440.38 to defendant, on condition that he would convey said land to plaintiff, plaintiff then having said money in a bank subject to his order. Defendant waived the actual production of said money, and demanded that plaintiff exhibit evidence of the alleged indebtedness, which plaintiff refused to do, or to state whether any existed. The defendant did not enter into the possession of said premises under claim of title exclusive of other right, founding such claim upon said deed from plaintiff, but he entered into the possession under and in pursuance of said agreement, to hold the same as security for said debt, and he never, at any time prior to January 22, 1885, gave the plaintiff notice that he, defendant, claimed the land as his own, or denied the right of plaintiff to redeem the same, except so far as his (defendant's) possession under said agreement, after the said land had become salable for enough to pay said indebtedness, was notice of an adverse holding.

The court further finds the defendant has, ever since the twenty-ninth day of August, 1874, been in the exclusive possession of said land, and ever since January 1, 1879, holding the same adversely to the plaintiff under claim of title under said deed, and at all times asserted said right when called upon to disclose his claim respecting said land. And also finds plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 346 and of sections 319, 322, and 343, Code Civil Proc.

The findings of an adverse holding and of the bar of the statute of limitations are attacked by appellant, on the ground that the court does not find that the action is barred by the provisions of section 346, Code Civil Proc., which alone applies to this case. That section reads as follows: "An action to redeem a mortgage of real property, with or without an account of rents and profits, may be brought by the mortgagor, or those claiming under him, against the mortgagee or those claiming under him, unless he or they have continuously maintained an adverse possession of the mortgaged premises for five years after the breach of some condition of the mortgage." The contention of the appellant is that the findings show that the possession of defendant was not adverse before the twenty-second of January, 1885, and this action was commenced within a few days thereafter. The specific findings of fact certainly sustain that contention, and "if a discrepancy exist, the more specific findings of particular facts must control." Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 301. The specific findings show that the entry and possession of the defendant was not adverse to the plaintiff up to January 22, 1885. In Frink v. Le Roy, 49 Cal. 314, the defendant had entered into and held possession of the mortgaged premises under a contract not materially different from that under which the defendant entered into and held possession in this case. The court in that case said it would hardly be claimed that the plaintiff would be barred of the right to resume the possession upon payment or tender of the balance of the mortgage debt.

The possession of the defendant must be adverse for five years after the breach of some condition of the mortgage, in order to bar the plaintiff's right of action to redeem. We so held in Cohen v. Mitchell, 9 Pac. Rep. 649. Here the findings show that the possession was not adverse for any such period.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

By THE COURT. In this cause we are of opinion that the judgment should be modified so as to read as follows: "The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to enter judgment on the findings for the plaintiff."

McCLAIN v. BUCK. (No. 11,671.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—PERSONAL PROPERTY—CHANGE OF POSSESSION—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

By an agreement supplemental to an absolute sale of personal property by plaintiff to R., plaintiff was authorized by R., on default in payment, to retake the property. R. made default, and refused to deliver to plaintiff the property, which, since the sale, had been in the continuous possession of R. Defendant, with knowledge of these facts, caused the property to be sold under an execution against R. In an action for conversion, held, that under Civil Code Cal. § 3440, declaring void as to creditors certain transfers not accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, the transfer was void, as to defendant.¹

Cal., and known and described as the 'Vacaville Reporter or Judicion newspaper material.' " At the trial it appeared that plaintiff sold the property in question, with other property, to one Raleigh Barcar, on the tenth day of October, 1884. The purchase price was $1,250, of which $500 was paid down, and for the balance Barcar executed to plaintiff two promissory notes, one for $500, with interest, payable one year after date, and the other for $250, with interest, payable 18 months after date. At the time of the sale, plaintiff executed and delivered to Barcar an absolute bill of sale, in which the consideration was recited and the property described. After the sale was made and plaintiff had gone away, but within two hours, as he testified, he "considered the thing was not safe enough," and went back and had Barcar execute a "supplementary agreement" in the following words: "It is hereby agreed that the party of the first part to the foregoing sale and agreement shall, upon default in the payment of either of the notes specified in said memorandum of sale and agreement between J. D. McClain and Raleigh Barcar, be authorized and permitted to enter upon and take possession of the printing presses, types, and stock and materials mentioned therein, to secure payment of said notes, said property being considered as pledged to secure payment of said notes." The possession of all the property sold was immediately delivered to Barcar, and he held it till the $500 note matured. Then plaintiff demanded from him payment of the note, and not receiving the money, demanded that possession of the property be given back. This was refused. On the next day plaintiff read to defendant his contract and "explained to him its terms and asked him to assist Barcar to pay it or fix it up." Defendant said he would see about it the next day. On the next day defendant caused the property to be attached as the property of Barcar, and thereafter had it sold under execution. Plaintiff demanded the property from the officer who held it under execution, and sought by injunction and other means to prevent its sale, but failed in all his efforts.

Upon these facts plaintiff submitted his case, and thereupon, on motion of defendant, a judgment of nonsuit was entered against him. He then moved for a new trial, and now prosecutes this appeal from the order denying his motion.

The nonsuit was properly granted. If title revested in the plaintiff under his agreement with Barcar, there was no delivery of the property followed by an actual and continued change of possession. The same is true if plaintiff had, under the agreement mentioned, a right to take possession from Barcar, for the right to the possession of personal property is a thing in action, and is therefore personal property. Civil Code, § 14, sub. 3. In either view, the transfer was not valid under the statute, against defendant, a creditor, (Civil Code, § 3440,) unless accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession. The notice of plaintiff's claim which defendant had was immaterial. Buck was a creditor, while Barcar remained in possession, and, as against such creditor, the transfer was void. Civil Code, § 3440, supra.

The order must be affirmed. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

1. LEVEE TAXES—PAYMENT—WARRANTS ON LEVEE FUND—COIN.

Under the California act of March 25, 1868, entitled "An act to provide for the protection of certain lands in the county of Sutter from overflow," levee taxes may be paid with either warrants drawn on the levee fund, or with money, but, when paid with money, the payment must be in gold or silver coin.

2. SAME—REGISTRY OF WARRANTS—ORDER OF PAYMENT.

Section 13 of the said act provides that the treasurer shall keep a register of warrants in the order of their presentation for payment, and, when no money is in the fund, to indorse on each warrant the date of its presentation, "and thereafter pay the same in the order of registry, as from time to time any money shall be paid over to him to the credit of the particular levee fund on which the same is drawn." Held, that the right to payment in order of time of presentation existed only when there was money in hand, and that the section did not qualify the right given by section 12 to use the warrants in payment of taxes without reference to the order of their registry.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county; PHIL. W. KEYSER, Judge.

On demurrer to complaint.

E. A. Davis and J. H. Craddock, for Prescott, appellant. Stabler & Bayne and Sandborn & Phillips, for McNamara and others, respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. This action was brought to restrain the tax collector of levee district No. 6, of Sutter county, and the treasurer of said county, from receiving in payment of levee taxes any warrants drawn on the levee fund, except in the order of their registration. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained in the court below; and plaintiff, declining to amend, judgment went for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Appellant is the holder of a number of warrants issued and registered in 1871, and he contends—First, that all levee taxes must be paid in gold or silver coin; and, second, that at least no later warrants can be received for taxes while older registered warrants remain unpaid.

The last clause of section 12 of the act under which the district was organized is as follows: "Warrants drawn on any levee district fund shall be paid out of any money in the county treasury belonging to such fund, or they may be received by the tax collector in payment of the tax authorized to be levied for the construction of levee, or other work of protection, of said district." Section 16 provides that "all taxes levied and collected by virtue of this act shall be paid in gold or silver coin of the United States." And appellant contends that, as these two sections are in conflict, section 16, being the last in numerical order, and the latest expression of the legislative will, must obtain. But that rule of construction can be resorted to only when the conflict between two laws, or two parts of laws, is so complete as to baffle all attempts to reconcile them. All parts of a statute are to be reconciled, and effect is to be given to each part, if it can be done; and here it can be easily done. The statute, upon its face, means that the taxes may be paid either with warrants or with money, but that when paid with money it must be with a particular kind of money. And this appears still more clearly when we consider the historical fact that a few years before the passage of the act in question the state adopted the policy of excluding paper money from her fiscal system.

Section 13 provides that the treasurer shall keep a register of warrants in the order of their presentation for payment, and, when there is no money in the fund, shall indorse on the warrants the date of their presentation, "and thereafter pay the same in the order of its registry, as from time to time any money shall be paid over to him to the credit of the particular levee fund on which the same is drawn." This provision deals only with the right of holders of warrants to have them paid in money, in the order of registry, when "from time to time any money" shall be in the fund. It in no way qualifies the right given by section 12 to use warrants in payment of taxes without reference to the order of their registry. Judgment affirmed.

McLERAN v. BENTON and another. (No. 9,220.)*(Supreme Court of California. August 31, 1887.)1. MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE—VAN NESS ORDINANCE OF SAN FRANCISCO—CLAIMS TO REAL ESTATE—RELINQUISHMENT—POSSESSORS.

Under the Van Ness ordinance of San Francisco, passed June 20, 1855, by which the city relinquished its claims to real estate within certain limits, to the possessors thereof on or before January 1, 1855, provided that such possession continued up to the time of the introduction of the ordinance, or if interrupted by an intruder or trespasser, had been or might be recovered by legal process, held, that the proviso includes ousters before January 1, 1855, and one evicted before the ordinance took effect must recover possession by virtue of his prior possession, before his action thereon was barred by limitation, and not by virtue of any title vested in him by the ordinance.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT—VOID LEASE—RELEASE BY TENANT—TENANTS IN COMMON—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

A lessee, holding under a void lease from a tenant in common, released to persons who had contracted to purchase the premises from the tenant in common, if they should obtain such release. Held, that the releasees were neither tenants at will nor on sufferance, and that a deed to them made thereafter by such tenant in common, with a bona fide intention to pass the title, vested in them all the grantor's right of possession, so as to constitute their possession adverse as against the other co-tenants, and give them the benefit of the Van Ness ordinance of San Francisco relinquishing the city's title in favor of possessors.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ESTATES OF DECEDENTS—PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES—HEIRS.

In California, the personal representatives having the exclusive right to bring suit on behalf of the estate, for the benefit of creditors, heirs, and devisees, an action barred by limitations against such representatives is also barred against the heirs, though they be under disability.

4. SAME—DISABILITY—ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

A right of action having accrued to one under no disability, who died without bringing suit, the disability of those claiming under her does not stop the running of the statute.

5. APPEAL—DECISION—SECOND AND THIRD TRIAL—LAW OF THE CASE.

Where, on the first and second trials of a cause, a lease has been introduced in evidence without objection, the decisions of such causes on appeal, where it was not questioned, do not make its validity the law of the case, so as to preclude the trial court to hold it invalid on the third trial, when it is merely introduced to show the nature of the lessee's possession.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco; OLIVER P. EVANS, Judge.

The following is an epitome of the history of the case, and of the facts as found by the court: In 1849 Jacob Harmon and wife, Eleonora, entered into possession of a tract of land embracing the land in controversy, which consists of separate parcels lying in what is now a populous portion of the city of San Francisco, and generally known as "Woodward's Garden," "Benton's Church," and "Judson & Shepard's Acid Factory." The lands are within the boundaries of the territory described in the Van Ness ordinance. See St. 1858, p. 52 et seq. Harmon continued in the actual occupation thereof until the time of his death, November, 1850. Eleonora was divorced from Jacob in 1849, and by the decree was awarded an undivided half of the property. Jacob appealed from the judgment. Pending the appeal he died testate, and his executors were substituted as parties. To his son, Jacob, Jr., then five years of age, he bequeathed two undivided thirds of his property, and appointed the executors to be guardians of said Jacob, Jr. To his daughter (there were but two children) he gave the remaining one-third, when she arrived at the age of 18, if her conduct satisfied the executors, and with the proviso: "If it should so happen that her conduct should not be entirely unexceptionable, yet not lost to every sense of propriety, in that case it is my will and desire that my executors should relieve her urgent wants and necessities, but in no case to give her more than one-third of my entire property."

And if she should fail to comply with the conditions which I have imposed upon her, then and in that case I give the remaining one-third to my son, Jacob, Jr."

The decree referred to was affirmed by this court, (Harman v. Harman, 1 Cal. 215,) and by proceedings afterwards had in the court below the lands were sold at auction, by commissioners therefor appointed by the court, on March 28, 1851. At the sale Eleonora was the highest bidder, and upon payment to the commissioners they conveyed the land to her. The children were not made parties. Eleonora and her husband, Michael Foley,—to whom she was married November 20, 1852,—were put into possession under orders from the court, and the executors never afterwards occupied or claimed the property. An inventory, acknowledged by Foley and wife, was filed May 31, 1852, in which all of the lands in controversy are described as the separate property of Mrs. Foley. In September, 1851, Michael Comerford went into possession, under a parol agreement with Foley and wife, to cultivate the lands on shares, and remained in possession thereunder until August 16, 1852, when Foley and wife and Comerford executed an instrument in the form of a lease to said Comerford, from said sixteenth day of August, 1852, to the sixteenth day of January, 1856, at the monthly rental of $83.75. This instrument was never acknowledged by any of the parties to it, but was recorded August 24, 1852. Comerford continued in possession under and by virtue of the lease until January 27, 1853. The court found as a fact that during this last-named period Comerford was a tenant at will of Foley and wife, both parties having treated it at the trial as void, and, if admissible at all, only to show the character of Comerford's holding. On the eighteenth day of June, 1853, Foley and wife entered into a written agreement with Brannan and others, whereby they agreed to sell to the latter all of the lands, and assigned the lease in consideration of $6,000. Brannan & Co. paid Foley and wife $100 in consideration of the agreement, but it was understood and agreed that the conveyance was to be only in the event that satisfactory arrangements should be made with Comerford to deliver the possession to Brannan & Co. Interviews were had with Comerford by Foley and wife and Brannan & Co., which resulted in an assignment by him of all interest which he held under the instrument which they all regarded as a valid lease; and on the termination of Comerford's tenancy, and his surrender of possession to Brannan & Co., in consideration of $5,000, which they paid, Comerford was allowed to gather his crop then growing, which was done prior to December, 1853, and from that time until October, 1855, the court finds that said Comerford was a caretaker and bailiff in the employ of Brannan & Co.

As to those portions of the lands claimed by defendants Benton, Judson, and Woodward, however, said defendants were let into possession in 1854, under deeds from Brannan & Co. conveying them severally in fee-simple. On June 27, 1853, Brannan & Co. paid to Eleonora, personally, the balance of the $6,000 purchase price, and in pursuance of their agreement with Brannan & Co., Foley and wife attempted to convey the lands to Brannan & Co. by deed, but the deed was not acknowledged so as to constitute it a valid conveyance by Mrs. Foley, and it is admitted that it is void. The court found that "said defendants Benton, Judson, and Woodward, ever since their entry into possession in 1854, have been severally and respectively in the actual, continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession, holding the same against all the world, of the several parcels described in their answer, claiming the same under said conveyances in good faith, and having paid a valuable consideration therefor, and as early as 1854 made and have since continued to make large and valuable improvements thereon. * * * That such possession was continued without interruption ever since, and that they held and continued during all of said time in possession of said premises without any trespass or intrusion by any person or persons whatsoever."

Kitty Foley, daughter and only surviving child of Eleonora and Michael, was born July 8, 1853. Jacob, Jr., died unmarried and intestate in October, 1859, and Eleonora, his mother, died intestate in November following. Prior to her death she married (in 1859) one James Holmes, who survived her. Mary Ann Harmon was married to Peter Roussel, and afterwards, to-wit, on May 21, 1861, said Mary Ann and Peter conveyed the lands in controversy to plaintiff in consideration of $10, provided, however, that the undivided half of all lands which he, said plaintiff, might recover under said deed by virtue of proceedings he agreed to prosecute at his own expense, should be by him conveyed to said Mary Ann. In 1854 Eleonora and her children, Mary Ann, Jacob, and Kitty, removed to Santa Clara county, where Foley died the same year, and they did not have the actual possession any time thereafter. Plaintiff proved no other deraignment of title or right to the possession than his said deed from Mary Ann and Peter.

The court below found as conclusion of law that the defendants were the owners in fee, and gave judgment for them accordingly.

The Van Ness ordinance, herein referred to, was passed by the city council of San Francisco, June 20, 1855, and was approved and ratified by the legislature March 11, 1858. By it the city relinquished all claim to lands within certain limits, in favor of the possessors or lessors on or before January 1, 1855, excepting certain lots on the water front and others reserved for public purposes, "provided that such possession has been continued up to the time of the introduction of this ordinance in the city council, or if interrupted by an intruder or trespasser, has been or may be recovered by legal process." The ordinance further provided that its true intent was that leased property should be considered as in the possession of the landlord. Certain titles of Spanish origin, and others derived from grants prior to the incorporation of the city, were excepted from its operation.

A. L. Rhodes, for appellant. Wilson & Wilson, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This action was commenced 25 years ago, and has been before this court several times on appeal. The tracts of land in controversy are of great value, and are popularly known as "Woodward's Garden," "Benton's Church," and "Judson & Shepard's Acid Factory." The property is within the exterior limits of the territory described in the Van Ness ordinance, and the principal questions involved relate to the title conferred by that ordinance, and to defendant's plea of the statute of limitations. After the second decision by this court, (43 Cal. 473,) the defendants filed in the court below an amended answer, setting up more fully the facts upon which they relied in their affirmative defense.

Inasmuch as the appellant places great reliance upon the decisions on the former appeals, it becomes necessary for us to review the matters adjudicated, and ascertain to what extent the law of the case has been established. It is said that because the lease was regarded and treated at the first and second trials, and on the former appeals, as valid by all the parties and by this court, the objection made at the last trial and on this appeal, that it is invalid because not acknowledged by Mrs. Foley, cannot be considered; that it must now be regarded as a valid lease. The fact is, as stated, that the lease was at the first and second trials regarded as valid, and creating a term for years, and was so treated by this court on appeal. 31 Cal. 30, and 43 Cal. 468. At the last trial, however, the lease was objected to, and held to be void as a lease for a term of years, but was introduced and considered in evidence, only "to show the character of Comerford's holding; to show a recognition of tenancy on the part of Comerford creating a tenancy at will, and to illustrate the possession that was taken subject to it." We do not think that the decisions upon this question on the former appeals have become the law of the case. The evidence and the purposes for which the pretended lease was introduced present a different question on this appeal. It is only where the evidence is the same that the doctrine contended for by appellant applies. It is doubtless true, as a general proposition, that a previous ruling of the appellate court upon a matter directly in issue, is, as to all subsequent proceedings, a final adjudication, and becomes the law of the case, from which the court ought not to depart, nor allow the parties to be relieved. But when such a ruling relates to a matter of fact, the principle can be invoked only when the fact appears again to the appellate court under the same circumstances in which it was originally considered. Mitchell v. Davis, 23 Cal. 381, Trinity Co. v. McCammon, 25 Cal. 121; Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 418; Nieto v. Carpenter, 21 Cal. 483. In our opinion, therefore, the court below was not bound to consider the lease as a valid lease for a term of years; and that it created simply a tenancy at will we have no doubt. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. §§ 19, 112.

It is further contended that the decree and sale, followed by a deed from the commissioners to Eleonora, executed March 28, 1851, were void as to the children of Jacob Harmon, deceased, because they had not been made parties to the action after the death of their father, and, therefore, that Eleonora and the children were tenants in common.

On the second appeal it was said: "The decision on the former appeal, and in Ewald v. Corbett, [32 Cal. 493,] would be destitute of all basis if the estate of Jacob Harmon would not descend, or could not be distributed, under the statute regulating common property;" and it was in effect decided that the commissioners' deed of March 28, 1851, was void, and the fact that the defendants and others effected their purchase from Mrs. Foley in good faith was immaterial, the papers which the parties executed having shown that the premises were a portion of the Harmon estate, in which the children of Mrs. Foley had an interest, which Mrs. Foley had not competent power to convey. Under that decision we must hold that "the undivided half of the premises, that is to say, the undivided half of the interest therein which Harmon and wife held immediately preceding his death, vested in Eleonora, either by virtue of the decree of divorce or the statute of this state providing for the distribution of the common property upon the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband, and the remaining half vested in their two children; that the right and interest in the premises, acquired or held by Harmon by virtue of his possession, conceding they were the lands of the pueblo or the city, would descend to his heirs, if not devised by him, and that the same might be distributed under the statute relating to common property." It would seem to follow, therefore, that Eleonora and the children were tenants in common at the time the lease to Comerford was delivered, (43 Cal. 476;) and that if they had been in possession of the property on January 1, 1855, and remained till June 20, 1855, they would have received the Van Ness ordinance title. The same result probably would have followed had Comerford remained in possession under the lease until June 20, 1855. If we assume this to be true, then, up to the time of the assignment by Comerford of his interest in the lease to Brannan and others, December, 1853, the rights of Mrs. Foley and the children in the premises would be fully preserved. This brings us to the inquiry—a most important one, so far as Mrs. Foley's interest is concerned, at least—as to the legal effect of Comerford's assignment to Brannan and others. By the terms of the instrument it was provided "that, whereas, T. O. Laram * * * and Samuel Brannan have become the owners, by purchase, of the within described premises; now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of five thousand dollars, to me paid, * * * I do by these presents assign, transfer, and surrender to said * * * and Brannan all my right, title, and interest in the said premises, under and by virtue of the within lease." What right, title, or interest did Comerford hold by virtue of the lease which could be transferred by him? He was a mere tenant at will, and could not assign the remainder of the term named in the lease. A tenancy at will is not assignable. If a tenant at will attempt to underlet or surrender, he thereby determines his will and relinquishes the estate. Cooper v. Adams, 6 Cush. 90; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. §§ 62, 83. Without the consent of Mrs. Foley, Brannan and others would be merely tenants at sufferance, and liable to an action of trespass against them. Reckhow v. Schanck, 43 N. Y. 451.

The tenant at sufferance has merely a naked possession; stands in no privity to the landlord; is not liable for rents, unless expressly made so by statute; nor is he entitled to notice to quit. The landlord may put an end to the tenancy when he thinks proper, and may, under certain circumstances, treat the one in possession as an intruder or trespasser. Hauzhurst v. Lobree, 38 Cal. 563; Meirer v. Thiemann, 15 Mo. App. 307; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 65. The relation of Brannan and others to the Foleys, therefore, depended upon the understanding and oral agreement of all the parties, and there is no question as to what that agreement was. The court found, and the finding is supported by evidence, that the preliminary agreement of sale under which Brannan and others were let into possession, was a mere temporary arrangement, with a view, before completion of the purchase, to securing from Comerford a termination of his tenancy; and it was not until after this was accomplished that the purchase price was paid by Brannan and others to the Foleys. There was no recognition by the Foleys of Brannan and others as tenants. The transaction was, as between the Foleys and Brannan and others, to be a sale of all right, title, and interest of the former, or the $100 which had been paid was to be returned to the latter. The consent of Comerford was not necessary to terminate his interest in the property. The Foleys could have terminated it without his consent; and the sale by them to Brannan and others was itself a sufficient expression of their will to end the tenancy, and precludes the idea of a tenancy at will on the part of Brannan and others. Pratt v. Farrar, 10 Allen, 520.

If the Foleys had sold to strangers, instead of to Brannan and others, the latter would not have been entitled to a notice to quit, from the purchaser. The conveyance of the property, ipso facto, destroys all privity or relationship between the owners and the tenant at sufferance. Esty v. Baker, 50 Me. 325. The same result must follow when the sale is made to the tenant at sufferance himself, especially when, as in this case, it is expressly understood that the sale depends upon the result of negotiations on the part of the purchaser and seller to secure the surrender of all claim on the part of the tenant at will, so that the full title may vest in the purchaser. There was no relation of landlord and tenant between the Foleys and Brannan and others. Such relationship was never contemplated. The Foleys recognized Brannan and others as purchasers of the land. The parties all acted in good faith, believing that all the right, title, and possession of the Foleys had passed to their grantees. Comerford paid rent to no one after they all arrived at this understanding, but was permitted to remain on the place till the fall of that year, to gather his crop, at which time he surrendered possession to Brannan and others, who paid him $5,000 therefor. After such surrender, the court finds that he acted as the bailiff, or care-taker, for the purchasers. The Foleys received $6,000, the purchase price in full, from the purchasers, in June, 1853, left the premises, and never afterwards claimed any right to the same; nor has any one on their behalf ever offered to repay any money received by them. The fact that the writings which passed between the parties turned out to be void, cannot change the acts; nor can it alter the intention of the parties, verbally expressed, and that intention was that Brannan and others should have actual possession of the premises, to have and to hold the same in their own right, without interference or claim, trespass or intrusion. Such possession they took in 1854 and held until the commencement of this suit, eight years later; and, unless we are mistaken as to the effect of the attempted assignment by Comerford to them, they received by virtue of the possession thus given to them the Van Ness ordinance title, to the extent, at least, of the interest held and controlled by Mrs. Foley, who voluntarily relinquished the premises.

The possession of Brannan and others was clearly adverse, and the statute began to run in their favor and against the executors from the time of their entry. Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 123, 8 Pac. Rep. 818; Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 90; Ang. Lim. §§ 388-410.

Another and more difficult question relates to the interest which descended to the heirs of Harmon. The executors have never been discharged. When Harmon died, (in 1850,) Mary Ann and Jacob, Jr., were, respectively, seven and four years of age. Neither Mrs. Foley nor her children had possession of the premises after December 16, 1853, and this action was not commenced until June 4, 1862; and, upon the authorities construing the statutes then in force, and determining the rights of minors in property represented by executors, we must hold that there was during the period mentioned no saving of infancy. The will was duly probated. The executors took possession of the property, and retained the same until put out by the sheriff under order of the court, made in the action for divorce and division of the property. If the entry of the defendants was wrongful, the devisees of Harmon could not maintain an action, for that right existed exclusively in the executors, who in all suits for the benefit of the estate represented both the creditors and the heirs. Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 493; Halleck v. Mixer, 16 Cal. 579. It would seem to follow, therefore, that when the executor is barred of his action, the heir is barred, although the heir or devisee be laboring under a disability. Wilmerding v. Russ, 33 Conn. 68. The general rule is that when a trustee is barred by the statute of limitations, the cestui que trust is likewise barred, even though an infant, (Hill, Trustees, 267, 403, 504,) and that the heir or devisee is dependent upon the diligence of the executor for the maintenance of his rights with respect to the real property, but is not without a remedy by an action for damages against his executor and his sureties, or by a proper proceeding to compel him to bring suit. Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 29. This subject has been very carefully considered, and the decisions and statutes of this state elaborately reviewed by the circuit court and the supreme court of the United States, and the conclusion reached that, where the administrator in this state neglects to bring an action to recover property of the estate until it is barred under the statute of limitations applicable to the subject, the heir is also barred, even though the heir be a minor at the time the action accrues to the administrator. Meeks v. Vassault, 3 Sawy. 214; Meeks v. Olpherts, 100 U. S. 564.

But it is claimed by the appellant that he is not seeking a recovery upon the title or right of possession held by Jacob Harmon in his life-time; that the only purpose of proving prior possession was to prove and identify the persons in whom the Van Ness ordinance title vested; that it is upon that title that this action is brought, and, as that title never was in Harmon or his estate, the executor could not maintain an action upon the title; and that the interruption by an intruder or trespasser, referred to in the ordinance, means an ouster between the first of January, 1855, and the twentieth of June, 1855; also that the statute did not commence to run against the Van Ness ordinance title until it vested in plaintiff's grantor, which was not until May 11, 1858. Unfortunately, however, for the appellant, all of these contentions have been disposed of adversely to him by the decisions of this court. There was no ouster during the interval referred to, and the proviso under which they claim title embraces persons evicted by intruders and trespassers, as well before the first of January, as those evicted afterwards and before the twentieth of June. The statute commenced running on the eleventh day of April, 1855, and one who was ousted by an intruder before the ordinance took effect, in order to acquire the ordinance title, must recover possession from the intruder by virtue of his prior possession, in a suit commenced before his right of action on his prior possession is barred by the statute of limitations. He cannot recover from such intruder by virtue of any title vested in him by the ordinance. Pickett v. Hastings, 47 Cal. 269; McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 467; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 48 Cal. 7. On the day that the statute of limitations commenced to run, April 11, 1855, Mrs. Foley was a widow, and could have maintained an action. She died in November, 1859; but, as the statute had commenced to run, it did not stop at her death because of the disability at that time of any person claiming under her. The disability must exist at the time the right of action first accrues. The statute commenced to run against the executors on the eleventh day of April, 1855. Their cause of action was, therefore, barred on the eleventh of April, 1860, and this bar operated equally against the devisees of Harmon. The finding of the court as to ownership is sufficient. Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 530, 9 Pac. Rep. 738.

We have examined the evidence and think that it supports the findings. There are some errors relied upon by appellant, but we find nothing prejudicial in any of them, and the judgment and order must be affirmed, except as to those parcels of land described in the stipulation of counsel, upon which an order of dismissal has been entered herein.

BROUGHTON v. VASQUEZ. (No. 11,617.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—DEED IN CONTEMPLATION OF INSOLVENCY.

A deed of certain lots was executed and delivered as security for the payment of a note in pursuance of an oral agreement made more than four months previous. The grantor was subsequently shown to have been insolvent at the date of delivery, and was legally adjudged so within 30 days thereafter. Held, that the deed in question was a mortgage, and not a conveyance made in contemplation of insolvency; and, in the absence of fraud, would be treated as delivered at the time it was agreed to be made.

CROSS v. REID and another. (No. 12,086.)

1. PLEDGE—PLEDGE STOPPED TO CLAIM ADVERSELY TO PLEDGEOR.

So long as the pledgee of stock holds it as collateral security for a debt, and has a right to so hold it, he cannot assert that he holds it adversely to the pledgeor, and thus show title under the statute of limitations.

2. SAME—PLEDGE OF CORPORATE STOCK—TITLE OF PLEDGEE.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 2889, one to whom a certificate of shares of corporate stock is issued as security for a debt, does not, as against the pledgeor, obtain the legal title to the stock.

3. APPEAL—RIGHT OF APPELLANT TO QUESTION JUDGMENT AS BETWEEN APPELLEES.

In an action against a corporation to recover a sum of money alleged to be due plaintiff as dividends, the company paid the amount into court to abide its decision, and two other persons, claimants of the fund, were substituted as defendants. The court rendered judgment in favor of one of the defendants, by consent of both, and ordered the money to be paid to him. Held, that the plaintiff, having no title himself, could not, on appeal, question the correctness of the judgment, as between the two defendants.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge.

Freeman, Bates & Rankin and H. A. Reardon, for appellant. R. H. Taylor and E. H. Gaylord, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of T. W. Sigourney, deceased, brought this action against the Eureka Lake & Yuba Canal Company, a corporation, to recover the sum of $15,000 for dividends, alleged to have been declared by the company after December 1, 1878, upon 750 shares of its capital stock owned by the estate of Sigourney. The complaint was filed on the fourteenth of June, 1884, and thereafter, under the provisions of section 386 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the company paid the money into court, and James Reid and M. Zellerbach were substituted as defendants. Reid and Zellerbach filed an answer to the complaint in which they denied that on the first day of January, 1867, or at any other time, Sigourney was, or until his death continued to be, the owner of the stock; and they averred that in pursuance of a certain written agreement, made by and between Sigourney and Zellerbach, on the twenty-third day of August, 1865, the stock was deposited in the hands of John Parrott, who delivered it to Sigourney, and that Zellerbach became entitled to receive back the stock before Sigourney's death, and was thereafter entitled to receive the same from his estate, and from the plaintiff as the administrator of the estate; that subsequently, on or about the seventh day of January, 1881, Zellerbach sold, assigned, and transferred all his interest in the stock and the proceeds thereof, and all dividends accrued or to accrue thereon, to Reid, and that Reid then became and ever since has been the owner of the stock, and entitled to receive all dividends declared thereon. The plaintiff filed an answer to "that part and those allegations of the pleading filed herein by the said Reid and Zellerbach, the interpleaders, upon which they base their claim to affirmative relief, and to the funds and moneys sought to be recovered by plaintiff in this action," in which he denied each and all of the facts set up by the interpleaders.

The case was afterwards tried by the court, without a jury, and findings of fact were filed as follows: "(3) In 1866 Zellerbach deposited with one John Parrott 1,250 shares of the stock of said corporation, as security for the payment of two promissory notes made by him, Zellerbach, to said T. W. Sigourney, one note for $40,000 and one for $10,000. Afterwards Zellerbach deposited with said Parrott the 750 shares above mentioned, as additional security for said notes. (4) During the time said 1,250 shares and 750 shares were in the hands of Parrott, said Zellerbach voted them at the meetings of the corporation, and received to his own use all the dividends thereon. (5) On the twentieth day of April, A. D. 1881, plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of T. W. Sigourney, deceased, filed a supplemental complaint in the superior court of Nevada county, in the action commenced by said Sigourney, July 1, 1864, in the district court for said county. In said supplemental complaint the said $40,000 and $10,000 notes were sued on. In said action a judgment and decree was rendered, under which the 1,250 shares were sold, and realized a sum sufficient to satisfy said notes, together with all interest thereon, and all costs of the action, and costs and expenses of sale, leaving the said 750 shares the property of Zellerbach, free and clear of any charge or incumbrance. The said Reid was not a party to said action. Zellerbach continued to be the owner of the stock until January 7, 1881. (6) On the seventh day of January, A. D. 1881, said Zellerbach assigned to said Reid the said 750 shares of stock, and also all and singular his claim and demand against the estate of T. W. Sigourney, deceased, for the said stock or the value thereof. At that date said Reid became and still is the owner of said 750 shares of stock. (7) There is no evidence to show when the dividends, amounting to said sum of $15,000, were declared, except that they were declared since December 1, 1878. (8) The said $15,000 is deposited and remains in this court to abide the decision of this action."

Upon these findings, judgment was entered in favor of Reid, "for the sum of $15,000, the amount in controversy between him and the plaintiff," and directing that the said sum be paid to him out of the money deposited in court in the action. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

It is now claimed for the appellant that the clause, "afterwards Zellerbach deposited with Parrott the 750 shares above mentioned as additional security for said notes," found in finding 3, and the clauses, "leaving the said 750 shares, the property of Zellerbach, free and clear of any charge or incumbrance," and "Zellerbach continued to be the owner of the stock until January 7, 1881," found in finding 5, and the clause, "At that date said Reid became and still is the owner of said 750 shares of stock," found in finding 6, are not supported by, but are contrary to the evidence. This is said to be so, because—First, it appears from the evidence that the 750 shares were deposited to secure Sigourney for a balance due him upon a previous transaction in which Zellerbach had settled with him in greenbacks, and had agreed to pay the difference between greenbacks and gold, that difference being $15,500; and, second, the plaintiff and his intestate had held the stock, claiming it adversely to Zellerbach, for a time more than sufficient to give them title to it under the statute of limitations.

As to the evidence, it is sufficient to say that there was a substantial conflict between that produced by plaintiff and defendants. The defendants' evidence fully supports the findings, and they cannot, therefore, be set aside for the reason urged. And as to the claim of title under the statute of limitations, the answer is that if the stock was in fact pledged, as the court found it to have been, then Sigourney had a right to retain it until the debt for which it was pledged was satisfied. But that debt was not fully satisfied until the judgment of this court, affirming the judgment of the lower court in Cross, Administrator, v. Mark Zellerbach and Eureka Lake & Yuba Canal Company, Consolidated, No. 9,796, was entered. The case is not reported, but the record here shows that the judgment of affirmance was entered on the thirtieth day of November, 1885. It is evident, therefore, that, while Sigourney held the stock as additional security for the $40,000 and $10,000 notes, and had a right to so hold it, he could not assert that he held it adversely, and thereby acquire a right to it under the statute.

It is also claimed that when the certificate for the 750 shares was issued to Sigourney, he became the owner of the legal title to the stock, and that that title must prevail here, this being a mere action at law. This claim cannot be maintained. Sigourney was only the pledgee of the stock, and as between him and the pledgeor the general property remained in the latter. Section 2889, Civil Code; Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 151; Brewster v. Hartley, 37 Cal. 25. And when the debt, to secure which the pledge was given, was paid, the lien was extinguished. Besides, this is not an action to recover the stock, but dividends declared upon the stock, in which the plaintiff has no interest.

The point is made that the assignment of the stock to Reid did not carry antecedently-accrued dividends, and that, as the court did not find that the dividends in question were declared subsequent to the time of that assignment, Reid was not entitled to them. There might be something in this point if Reid was seeking to recover the dividends from the plaintiff, or the estate of Sigourney. In that event the plaintiff could probably resist payment until a full and complete right to the money was established in the party claiming it. But that is not the case. Here the money is in court, and both parties are actors in seeking to obtain it. The plaintiff, as has been shown, has no interest in the money, and whether it should be paid over to Reid or Zellerbach is a matter that does not concern him. Zellerbach united with Reid in asking for the judgment rendered, and if it be conceded to be wrong, the plaintiff cannot be heard to complain of it.

Several other points are made, but they do not require special notice. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are confirmed.

73 Cal. 365

Ex parte MIRANDE. (No. 20,335.)

(Supreme Court of California. 1887.)

1. LICENSE TAX—ORDINANCE REQUIRING LICENSE FOR SHEEP RAISING—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Under Const. Cal. art. 1, §§ 11, 12, relating to local municipal regulations and taxation, and section 25, subd. 27, of the county government act of California, passed in March, 1883, authorizing boards of supervisors, for purposes of revenue or regulation, to license all lawful businesses in the county, an ordinance of a board of supervisors of Mono county requiring every person engaged in raising, herding, grazing, or pasturing sheep in the county to procure a license, paying therefor certain sums proportioned at $50 per thousand sheep, and providing that every person engaging in that business without a license shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by fine, and if the fine is not paid, by imprisonment, is valid, whether passed for purposes of taxation or regulation.

2. SAME—SPECIAL PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

Such ordinance, not imposing any other or greater burden on any person than on all others similarly situated, is not in violation of Const. U. S. amend. 14, or of Const. Cal. art 1, § 21, prohibiting special privileges and immunities.

3. SAME—PROPERTY TAX AD VALOREM.

The constitutional provision in relation to uniform taxation does not prevent the imposition of a license tax upon a business, the property used in which is subject to and has paid a property tax ad valorem.

4. BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—PROCEEDINGS—RECESS.

There is no irregularity in the proceedings of the board of supervisors of a county, from the fact that the board took a recess as a board of supervisors from July 10th to July 19th, and, in the interim, acted as a board of equalization.

5. SAME—POWER OF ADJOURNMENT.

A board of supervisors of a county has power to adjourn from time to time until its business is completed, and the use of the word "recess" instead of "adjourn" by the clerk is unimportant.

6. HABEAS CORPUS—TO REVIEW ERRORS.

A writ of habeas corpus cannot be made the vehicle for determining mere errors where a conviction has been had, and the commitment thereon is in due form.

7. LICENSE TAX—COMPLAINT FOR NOT TAKING OUT LICENSE.

A complaint charging defendant with having committed a misdemeanor in the county of M. between June 25, 1887, and July 8, 1887, by willfully being engaged in, and carrying on, the business of grazing, herding, and pasturing sheep in said county, without taking out or providing a license therefor, in violation of ordinances of the board of supervisors of said county known as "Ordinance No. 18" and "Ordinance No. 21," specifying the dates of passage and the substance of their provisions, is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, and, the other proceedings being regular, to authorize the entry of judgment against defendant.

In bank. Application for discharge on writ of habeas corpus to justice's court, Bridgeport township, Mono county; FRANCIS HANSON, Justice.

Jas. E. Goodall and W. O. Parker, for petitioner. Richard S. Miner, for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. Petitioner was convicted on a charge of violating the provisions of an ordinance of the board of supervisors of the county of Mono, relating to the business of "raising, grazing, herding of sheep" in said county; which ordinance is in the following language:

"ORDINANCE NO. 18.

"The board of supervisors of the county of Mono, state of California, do ordain as follows:

"Section 1. Every person engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep in the county of Mono, state of California, must annually procure a license therefor from the tax collector, and make therefor the following payment: (1) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control 5,000 sheep or more, shall constitute the first class, and must pay $250 per annum for the first 5,000 sheep, and for every additional 1,000 sheep the sum of $50. (2) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control 4,000 sheep, and less than 5,000, constitute the second class, and must pay $200 per annum. (3) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control 3,000 sheep, and less than 4,000, constitute the third class, and must pay $150 per annum. (4) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control 2,000 sheep, and less than 3,000, constitute the fourth class, and must pay $100 per annum. (5) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control 1,500 sheep, or less than 2,000, constitute the fifth class, and must pay $75 per annum. (6) Those owning and having in their possession and under their control 1,000 sheep, and less than 1,500, constitute the sixth class, and must pay $50 per annum. (7) Those owning or having in their possession and under their control less than 1,000 sheep, constitute the seventh class, and must pay $25 per annum.

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall engage in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep, or be so engaged within the county of Mono, state of California, without first obtaining a license therefor, as prescribed by section 1 of this ordinance, is guilty of misdemeanor.

"Sec. 3. The tax collector shall have the collection of the license provided for by this ordinance, and it is hereby made his duty to collect the same, and he may enforce the collection, as provided by section 3360 of the Political Code of the state of California.

"Sec. 4. The county auditor shall prepare and have printed suitable blank licenses for the tax collector, to carry out the provisions of this ordinance, with blank receipts for the tax collector when sold.

"Sec. 5. The tax collector shall collect a fee of one dollar for each license sold, which shall be paid into the salary fund of the county.

"Sec. 6. All money collected for license under the provisions of this ordinance shall be paid over to the county treasurer as other moneys, and placed to the credit of the general fund of the county.

"Sec. 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force on and after fifteen days from its passage, and all ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

"The above ordinance was passed by the board of supervisors of Mono county, state of California, at a regular meeting, July 19, 1886, by the following vote: Ayes—Geo. Watterson, H. Boone, William Davison, A. F. Hector. Nays—

“Chairman pro tem. of the Board of Supervisors of Mono County, State of California.

“Attest: BEN H. MILLER, Clerk.”

Ordinance No. 18 was amended on the seventh day of April, 1887, as follows:

“ORDINANCE NO. 21.

“The board of supervisors of the county of Mono, state of California, do ordain as follows:

“1. Every person who commences or carries on, in the county of Mono, any business, trade, profession, or calling, for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required by any ordinance of the board of supervisors of said county, without taking out or procuring the license prescribed by each ordinance, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200, and unless said fine be paid shall be imprisoned in the county jail of said county until such fine be satisfied, such imprisonment not to exceed one day for each dollar of the fine. Such fines, when collected, to be paid into the county treasury for the use of the general fund of the county.

“2. This ordinance shall be published in the Bridgeport Chronicle Union, a newspaper published in said Mono county, at least two weeks, said publication to be made for the period of fifteen days after the adoption thereof, and said ordinance to take effect in fifteen days after its adoption.

“The above ordinance was passed by the board of supervisors of Mono county, state of California, at a regular meeting of said board, April 7, 1887, by the following vote: Ayes—H. Boone, L. Goodnow, William Davison, A. F. Hector, and J. A. Creaser. Noes—None.

“Filed and recorded in Liber B, page 2, April 7, 1887.

“O. H. KISTER, Clerk.”

It is objected by petitioners that ordinance No. 18 is void, because not passed at a regular meeting of the board. It appears that the board met on the sixth day of July, 1886, pursuant to its ordinance fixing the terms thereof, in accordance with the act of March 14, 1883, known as the “County Government Act.” Not having finished the business pending before it, the board “took a recess” from time to time up to and including July 19th, on which last day the ordinance in question was passed. The board had power to adjourn from day to day, or from time to time, until its business was completed. Ex parte Benninger, 64 Cal. 291; Ex parte Benjamin, 65 Cal. 310, 4 Pac. Rep. 23. The fact that, in adjourning from time to time, the clerk used the term “recess” instead of “adjourn,” we deem unimportant. The object of an adjournment to a given time, and of a record thereof, is to give to persons having business before the board notice of the time when they may have a hearing, as well as to retain the power of the board to act during the remainder of the term, by showing that jurisdiction so to do is still claimed. These objects are as well attained by the announcement that the board takes a recess until a specified hour or day, as by the use of the term “adjourn.” Nor do we think there was any irregularity in the proceedings of the board, in the fact that when it took a recess, from, say July 10th to July 19th, as a board of supervisors, and in the interim acted as a board of equalization.

By the complaint defendant is charged with having committed a misdemeanor, in the county of Mono, between June 25, 1887, and July 8, 1887, by willfully being engaged in, and carrying on, the business of grazing, herding, and pasturing sheep in said county, without taking out or providing a license therefor, in violation of ordinances of the board of supervisors of said county, known as "Ordinance No. 18" and "Ordinance No. 21," specifying the dates of passage and the substance of their provisions. This was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and, upon the proceedings had in the cause, to authorize the entry of judgment as rendered against defendant, unless such ordinances are void. A writ of habeas corpus cannot be made the vehicle of determining mere errors, where a conviction has been had, and the commitment thereon is in due form. If the court below had no jurisdiction of the offense charged, or if it affirmatively appears by the record that the prisoner was tried and sentenced for the commission of an act which, under the law, constitutes no crime, the judgment is void, and the prisoner should be discharged. Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 214.

The further contention of petitioner may be summarized as follows: Ordinances 18 and 21 are void because unreasonable, unjust, oppressive, partial, discriminating, unfair, special, in contravention of the general policy of state legislation, and violative of article 1, § 21, of the constitution of the state of California, and of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution.

Sections 11 and 12 of article 11 of our state constitution provide as follows:

"Sec. 11. Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

"Sec. 12. The legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes,—but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes."

In People v. Martin, 60 Cal. 153, this court had occasion to pass upon section 12 of the present constitution, and in referring to taxes imposed for county purposes, used these words: "The power to impose such taxes for such purposes, in our opinion, no longer remains with the legislature; but the constitution expressly gives it the power, by general laws, to vest in the corporate authorities of the counties, cities, towns, or other public municipal corporations, the power to assess and collect taxes for those purposes. The taking of the power to impose such taxes from the legislature, and vesting it in the local authorities, is but another of the many evidences, to be found in the new constitution, of the intention to bring matters of a local concern home to the people." This decision was rendered in March, 1882.

The county government act, above referred to, was enacted in March, 1883. Subdivision 27 of section 25 of said act, defining powers and duties of supervisors, reads as follows: "To license, for purposes of regulation and revenue, all and every kind of business not prohibited by law, and transacted or carried on in such county, and all shows, exhibitions, and lawful games carried on therein; to fix the rates of license tax upon the same, and to provide for the collection of the same by suit or otherwise."

In view of the judicial interpretation given to similar legislation by this court, and by the tribunals of sister states, we are unable to see wherein the ordinances under review are subject to the criticism of being unjust, excessive, oppressive, discriminating, special, unequal, and partial. Ordinance No. 18 is general, in the sense that it applies alike to every person engaged in the business of raising, grazing, herding, or pasturing sheep in the county of Mono, and the rate of the license is left entirely to the discretion and judgment of the board of supervisors. Upon this subject Judge Cooley says: "A license tax cannot be deemed unequal, because reaching one occupation only, if it is to reach all who follow that. Let it reach all of a class, either of persons or things, it matters not whether those included in it be one or many, or whether they reside in any particular locality, or are scattered all over the state." Cooley, Tax'n, 128. "If a revenue authority is what seems to be conferred, the extent of the tax, when not limited by the grant itself, must be understood to be left to the judgment and discretion of the municipal government, to be determined in the usual mode in which its legislative authority is exercised; but the grant of authority to impose fees for the purpose of revenue would not warrant their being made so heavy as to be prohibitory, thereby defeating the purpose." Id. 408. In the case of Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal., on page 610, this court, referring to similar objections which were made to an ordinance, said: "But an ordinance will not be pronounced invalid by the courts on either of these grounds, unless in a plain case," and adopted the rule applicable to this class of cases as stated in St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 547. In the case of Cooper v. District, 4 McArthur, 250, the same objections to a similar ordinance were discussed by the court. In that case the defendant was prosecuted for selling, as a produce dealer in the Washington market, without obtaining a license as required by an ordinance of the District of Columbia. In passing upon the objections that the ordinance was unequal, unjust, discriminating, and unreasonable, the court said: "It is not for the court to decide whether the act is wise, or whether the members of the court would have voted for it. The discretion on the subject has been committed to the district government. When power is given to a municipality to pass laws necessary or proper to carry the power into effect, the degree of their necessity or propriety should not be minutely scrutinized." Glenn v. Baltimore, 5 Gill. & J. 424. Also: "But by unreasonableness the courts do not simply mean that the tax must not be larger than the judges think was wise. It would be presumed to be reasonable, if laid by an authority endowed with discretion on the subject." "The objection that the license is in restraint of trade cannot avail when the power to impose it is granted." In this case the court refer to the Railroad Cases, 92 U. S. 612, and quote from the decision therein as follows: "Perfect equality and perfect uniformity of taxation, as regards individuals and corporations, or the different classes of property subject to taxation, is a dream unrealized. It may be admitted that the system that most nearly attains this is best; but the most complete system that can be devised must be imperfect." County v. Kennedy, 11 Pac. Rep. 757.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the question as to whether the license in question is imposed for revenue purposes or for the purposes of regulation, for the reason that the board possessed authority to impose it for either or for both. Ex parte Mount, 66 Cal. 448, 6 Pac. Rep. 78. Herding and grazing stock is, or may be, a business, and it is upon such business that the license is imposed. That the property used in any particular calling is subject to, and has paid, a property tax, ad valorem, as in this case, does not interdict the right to impose a license upon the business in which such property is used. The constitutional provision in relation to uniformity of taxation does not apply to prevent such license tax for such reasons. St. Louis v. Green, 6 Mo. App. 590; Cooley, Tax'n, 389, 390. We do not find that any other or greater burden is imposed upon the defendant by the ordinances in question than are imposed upon all others similarly situated, and fail to see wherein there is any violation of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, or of section 21 of article 1 of our state constitution. The case of County v. Cone, ante, 100, is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. There the ordinance sought to discriminate against non-residents of Lassen county, and therein was unequal and violative alike of the state and federal constitution.

Upon the whole case as presented by the record, we are of opinion that the writ should be dismissed, and the prisoner remanded.

We concur: THORNTON, J.; TEMPLE, J.; PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

PEOPLE v. BRYAN. (No. 11,891.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—STATE SWAMP LANDS—DEFECTIVE APPLICATION—SUIT TO CANCEL PATENT.

The complaint in a suit to cancel a swamp-land patent, alleged that one Mack made application to purchase swamp land; that said application was approved, purchase money paid, and certificate of purchase issued to him; that he subsequently conveyed to one L. "the land described in said certificate of purchase," and that a patent was issued to L. This patent contained nothing to connect it with the application of Mack, nor was there any averment in the complaint connecting the patent with such application. Held, that the patent may have been issued to L. upon his own application, and the presumption was in favor of its regularity.

2. SAME—STATE MUST RETURN PURCHASE MONEY.

The state of California sought to have a land patent canceled for an innocent mistake in the procedure. Held, that she must offer to return the purchase money.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Shasta county; AARON BELL, Judge.

E. C. Marshall and Jackson Hatch, for appellants. Edward Sweeney and Clay W. Taylor, (W. C. Belcher, of counsel,) for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This is a suit in equity to have a swamp-land patent canceled, on the ground of an alleged defect in the application filed in the surveyor general's office. Final judgment was entered for defendant upon demurrer to the complaint.

1. The complaint alleges that one Mack made an application to purchase; that said application was approved, and a certificate of location issued; that Mack paid the purchase money, and that a certificate of purchase was thereupon issued to him; that he subsequently conveyed to one Libby "the land described in said certificate of purchase," and that on September 5, 1883, a patent was issued to Libby. This patent, which is set forth in the complaint, contains nothing whatever to connect it with the application of Mack; nor is there any averment in the complaint connecting the patent with such application. For anything appearing in the complaint to the contrary, the patent may have been issued to Libby upon his own application, which may have been perfectly regular. There is a presumption in favor of the regularity of the patent, and the pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader. If Libby's patent was, in fact, issued on Mack's application, that fact should have been stated in the complaint.

2. It is expressly alleged that the land was open to purchase; and the good faith of the applicant is not questioned. This being the case, if the state can come into equity for the purpose of having her patent canceled for an innocent mistake in the procedure, (which is not entirely clear,) she must conform to equitable principles, and offer to return the purchase money. U. S. v. White, 9 Sawy. 131, 17 Fed. Rep. 561. The case of U. S. v. Minor, 114 U. S. 238, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836, is not in conflict with this. In that case the patent was set aside for actual fraud, and the government was not required to return the purchase money, because it was forfeited under section 2662 of the Revised Statutes by the false oath of the applicant.

We think the demurrer was properly sustained, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TIPTON. (No. 20,307.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTION RELATING TO ANOTHER OFFENSE.

On the trial of an indictment for stealing a cow, where the prosecuting witness testified to having found on defendant's premises pieces of the hide of the missing cow and her horns and head which was skinned, the court instructed the jury that "all persons slaughtering cattle must keep the hides with the ears attached for 15 days; and all persons having such hides in their possession must exhibit the same for examination on demand being made by any person," such being the provision of Pol. Code Cal. § 3185. Held, that such instruction was in effect invoking against defendant the commission of another offense, and was therefore erroneous.

2. SAME—RECEIVING EVIDENCE OUT OF COURT.

Where, on the trial of an indictment for larceny in stealing a cow, horns, about which there was nothing peculiar, and which had been introduced in evidence on the general statement of a witness that they were the horns of the stolen cow, were handled and examined by one of the jurors during a recess in the court, such examination does not amount to receiving evidence out of court within the meaning of Pen. Code Cal. § 1181, subd. 2, providing that a new trial may be granted where the jury has received any evidence out of court.

3. SAME—APPEAL—ALLEGATION OF VENUE IN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In a bill of exceptions, which commenced with a venue, and subsequently recited the bringing of an information against the defendants by the district attorney of S. county, (the county of the venue,) the testimony, the substance of which only was set out, was given as stating the offense to have been committed "in said county and state." Held, to furnish some proof of the county in which the offense was committed, and sufficient to sustain the verdict.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

Z. G. Peck, H. C. Rolfe, Harris & Gregg, and Hight & Damron, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEARLS, C. J. The defendant was charged, with one Atkins, with the crime of grand larceny, for the felonious taking and stealing of a cow, the property of one J. M. Corbett. Defendant was convicted, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

It appears from the record that at the trial the prosecution offered in evidence the horns of an animal claimed by the witness to be the horns of the stolen cow, and that during a recess of the court, and in the absence of the judge and a portion of the jurors, J. V. Gilbert, one of the jurors, picked up and examined said horns, held them in his hands for some time, turned them over, and looked at them. This conduct is assigned as a cause for which a new trial should have been granted, under subdivision 2 of section 1181, Pen. Code, which provides that the court may grant a new trial "when the jury has received any evidence out of court other than that resulting from a view of the premises." The prosecuting witness had identified the horns as those of his cow, and they were in evidence as such, but there was nothing peculiar about them so far as appears, and their identification depended entirely upon the general statement by the witness that they were the horns of the cow he had lost. Under such circumstances, it is hard to discover how an examination of them by the juror amounted to evidence in the case. Evidence is that which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or influence the belief respecting it. Viewed by themselves, the horns proved nothing, except their existence as such, and that was not a material fact in the case. The evidence depended upon the credit to be attached to the statement of the witness that they were the horns of his cow, and that statement was not strengthened by an examination of the horns by the juror. Had the witness described the horns, and certain peculiarities possessed by them, and then presented them in support of his claim that they were the horns of his animal, it might at least be plausibly urged that comparing them with the testimony afforded evidence, but nothing of the kind was attempted, so far as appears from the record. We are of opinion the examination made by the juror did not amount to receiving "evidence out of court," within the meaning of the statute.

There was evidence tending to show that the larceny was committed in the county of San Bernardino. The bill of exceptions commences with the title of the cause, and proceeds as follows:

"State of California, County of San Bernardino.—ss. Be it remembered, that the above-named defendants were jointly informed against by the district attorney of San Bernardino county, state of California," etc. The bill of exceptions only purports to give the substance of the testimony of the witnesses. In detailing the testimony of J. M. Corbett, the complaining witness, the following language is used: "J. M. Corbett, the complaining witness, being first duly sworn, testified as follows: 'That on the second day of April, 1887, I was the owner and in the possession of a certain black milch cow, which on said day was stolen from Metcalf's field, where I had staked her out, in said county and state. I last saw her there about 6 o'clock in the evening of April 2d, when I milked her. I found the next morning at Tipton's slaughter-house, in said county and state, certain pieces of the cow's hide, and her horns and head which was skinned, which I identified,'" etc.

Were this a pleading, the allegation as to venue would be sufficient, and as evidence it furnishes some proof of the county in which the offense, if any, was committed. The verdict was not, therefore, for this reason contrary to evidence; and as upon other points there was ample evidence to sustain a conviction, the contention under this head needs no further consideration.

The giving of the following instruction is assigned as error: "All persons slaughtering cattle must keep the hides, with the ears attached, for fifteen days; and all persons having such hides in their possession must exhibit the same for examination, on demand being made by any person." The instruction is in the language of section 3185 of the Political Code. This section is assailed by the appellant as being in violation of section 19 of article 1 of our state constitution, which guaranties the rights of the people "in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable seizures and searches." Treated as a police regulation, we are not prepared to say, without a more complete showing than is here presented, that the regulation is so unreasonable as to render it void. But as applied to the case at bar an equally serious question arises. There is no penalty whatever affixed to a violation of section 3185, and, if any liability can accrue from such violation, it must be established in a civil action in favor of a party injured thereby. A failure to comply with the requirements of the statute is not made a crime, or the evidence of a crime, and as it had no application to the case on trial, the instruction should not have been given. It may be claimed, however, that the instruction contained a mere enunciation of an existing law, from which the defendant was not injured. But is this true in the present case? Would not the jury be most likely to draw an inference of guilt from the fact that the hide in question was not preserved, coupled with the instruction given? The facts, so far as they appeared in reference to the disposition of the property alleged to be stolen, or any part thereof, were proper to be considered by the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. They were evidence to be considered. The statute in question was not evidence on the point, and yet, as given, we think it was likely to be taken by the jury as an important factor in the problem of guilt or innocence.

It is a familiar doctrine of the common law that a defendant can only be convicted of the crime with which he is charged, or of a lesser crime included in such charge, and that evidence of his having committed another and distinct offense is not to be received for the purpose of rendering it probable that he is guilty of the offense charged. If he has violated every law of the land except that involved in the charge against him, it cannot be shown to enhance the probabilities of his guilt. Yet in this case a violation of section 3185 is invoked against defendant to aid in establishing his guilt under an information for larceny. If he is guilty, it is because he committed grand larceny, and not because he violated section 3185. The judgment and order appealed from should for this cause be reversed.

There is a portion of the charge given by the court not entirely free from objection, viz., that wherein the jury are informed that circumstantial evidence is legal evidence: "Therefore, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, by the reasoning of common sense, by which men of common sense are guided in forming their opinion as to the conduct of others, that the defendant committed the offense in manner and form," etc., "you are bound to convict," etc. Common sense is a valuable adjunct in reasoning, and in the deduction of facts from testimony, but the jury should be satisfied of the guilt of a defendant from the evidence, and the "reasoning of common sense" can never authorize a conviction in the absence of testimony. No doubt the court below intended to inform the jury, in substance, that in deducing facts from the testimony they should pursue the methods followed by men of common sense. The language used was probably a mere oversight, and, while perhaps not very material, may better be corrected.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PEOPLE v. CLOUGH and another. (No. 20,558.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 10, 1887.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE.

The court instructed the jury: "If you believe that an accomplice has testified in this case, and you believe beyond all reasonable doubt from his testimony, to a moral certainty, that the defendant is guilty of the alleged offense in the information mentioned, and then in connection therewith you believe there is evidence, outside of that, which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense,—outside of showing the commission of the offense itself and the circumstances thereof, then it would be your bounden duty to convict him." Held, that this was consistent with Pen. Code Cal. § 1111, providing that "a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient, if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof."¹

2. SAME.

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1111, the evidence corroborating the testimony of an accomplice need not tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice. It is sufficient if it tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WM. W. CROSS, Judge.

Atwell & Bradley, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MCKINSTREY, J. The defendant Clough was convicted of burglary of the first degree. As portion of his charge, the judge of the superior court instructed the jury, in the precise language of section 1111 of the Penal Code, as follows: "A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence, which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient, if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." And in another portion of his charge the learned judge said: "Where a number of persons have been engaged in the commission of an offense, when any one of them turns state's evidence and testifies to the circumstances under which the alleged crime was committed, no one of the parties engaged in the commission of the crime can be convicted upon the testimony of the accomplice, unless there is other evidence outside of his testimony which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the connection is not sufficient if it simply shows the offense or the circumstances of the offense itself."

The language last quoted added no force to the charge previously given in the language of section 1111 of the Penal Code, but we are of opinion that it could not have been understood by the jury as laying down any different rule from that declared in the section referred to. It was, in effect, a statement that, to justify a conviction, there must be evidence independent of the testimony of the accomplice, tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and that such independent evidence was not sufficient if it merely showed the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof. After calling the attention of the jury to the distinction between proof of a fact and evidence tending to prove it, the learned judge proceeded: "Whenever the prosecution introduces evidence which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the given offense, then the jury may take into consideration, and should do so, the evidence of the accomplice, for the purpose of determining whether or not the defendant is guilty of the given offense; but this evidence, which tends to prove the connection of the defendant with the commission of the alleged offense, must be evidence upon propositions other than those showing the fact of the offense itself committed and the circumstances thereof." The judge then told the jury, in substance, that, even if they should believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, from the testimony of the accomplice, that the defendant was guilty, yet if there was no other independent evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, it was their bounden duty to acquit him. And immediately afterwards the judge said: "But if you believe that an accomplice has testified in this case, and you believe beyond all reasonable doubt from his testimony, to a moral certainty, that the defendant is guilty of the alleged offense in the information mentioned, and then in connection therewith you believe there is evidence, outside of that, which tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense,—outside of showing the commission of the offense itself and the circumstances thereof,—then it would be your bounden duty to convict him."

We do not think the repetition of the word "outside" in the foregoing citation could have misled. As first used it was evidently intended to exclude the testimony of the accomplice, and to require the corroborating evidence to consist of matter substantiated otherwise than by such testimony. The instruction last cited is excepted to by appellant, on the ground that "it invades the province of the jury, and sets aside the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code, because that section does not make it incumbent upon the jury to convict upon the evidence of an accomplice, although it may be corroborated in some slight respects." And it was said in argument: "The jury is to be the judge of the evidence, and to say to the jury that it must convict a defendant upon any corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice, is to say that which no court in this state has a right to say." But the court did not tell the jury that it was their bounden duty to convict the defendant if there was any evidence tending to corroborate the accomplice, but, in effect, if they believed the testimony of the accomplice, and that testimony proved defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt, they should convict, provided there was evidence, independent of such testimony, which "tended" to connect the defendant with the offense. The statute does not make it necessary that the evidence bearing upon the corroborative fact shall prove the ultimate fact beyond all reasonable doubt. "The corroborating evidence may be slight; nevertheless the requirements of the statute are fulfilled if there be any corroborating evidence which, of itself, tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense." People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 616.

The point in opposition to the instruction may be stated thus: A jury has no legal right to believe the testimony of an accomplice unless he is corroborated in the manner prescribed in the Penal Code; they can only convict upon the testimony of the accomplice and its corroborations; in other words, in case the independent circumstances tending to connect the defendant with the alleged offense do not establish his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, they must of themselves persuade and lead to a belief of the accomplice's testimony. It might be contended that the instruction was erroneous because some evidence tending to corroborate might not corroborate the testimony of the accomplice and render it credible; and thus the accomplice's testimony and the slight evidence of corroboration might fail to establish the defendant's guilt to a moral certainty. But section 1111 of the Penal Code does not require that the corroborating evidence shall be such as shall prove that the accomplice has told the truth; nor does it declare that he must be presumed to have sworn falsely—such presumption to be overcome only in case the other evidence shall show he has told the truth. It simply requires that in addition to his testimony—however trustworthy that testimony—there must, to justify a conviction, be evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. Of course mere evidence of the corpus delicti is not such evidence. The purpose of the statute is made more apparent by a view of the law as it stood prior to its passage. In Power's Rosc. Crim. Ev. it is said that the condition of the English law as to the corroboration of accomplices was "somewhat peculiar." Crim. Ev. 121. It has been repeatedly laid down, both in England and the United States, that a conviction on the testimony of an accomplice, uncorroborated, is legal. Rex v. Atwood, 1 Leach, 464; Rex v. Durham, Id. 478, and other cases cited in Roscoe; 2 Roy. Rec. 38; 1 Wheeler, Crim. Cas. 448; 5 Roy. Rec. 94; People v. Costello, 1 Denio, 83; State v. Brown, 3 Strob. 508; Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 326; Dick v. State, 30 Miss. 593; State v. Stebbins, 29 Conn. 463; State v. Watson, 31 Mo. 361; Steinham v. U. S., 2 Paine, 168. While the law was fully established in England that one charged with crime could be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the judges almost invariably advised juries not to convict upon such uncorroborated testimony. They sometimes went further and directed an acquittal where the testimony of an accomplice was the only evidence. In Roscoe it is said the law was in an anomalous state. "For it is universally agreed by all the authorities that, if the accomplice were uncorroborated, a judge would be wrong who did not advise the jury not to convict; whereas the court of criminal appeal would be bound to pronounce an opinion that the judge who did not so advise them was right."

The apparent anomaly is done away with by section 1111 of our Penal Code. Under it, although the jurors are the sole determinators of the facts proved by the evidence, yet if there is no evidence, other than the testimony of the accomplice, tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, the judge may direct an acquittal. This, however, simply because the statute prohibits a verdict based upon testimony of an accomplice alone, even although the jury may believe such testimony to be entirely true, and that it establishes the defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt; not because the jurors are prohibited from believing the testimony of the accomplice in the absence of the corroboration mentioned in the statute. The legislature might have declared an accomplice incompetent to be a witness; but he may be a witness, and the legislature have not said that he shall not be believed if uncorroborated, but that a conviction shall not be had upon his testimony, unless there is other evidence tending to prove the defendant's complicity in the offense charged. As to those who have faith in their movements, the worlds move notwithstanding any attempt to forbid such faith. The law-makers have deemed the motives to intellectual assent too complicated and too sacred to be interfered with. But they have limited the practical consequences of the reliance of jurors upon the testimony of an accomplice, by providing that no verdict shall be based on his testimony, in the absence of other evidence tending to prove the guilt of the defendant. If, however, there is any independent evidence tending to prove such connection of the defendant with the crime, the superior court will not be justified in directing an acquittal; and it is obvious that the power so to direct must be exercised with extreme caution.

On the argument it was suggested that the court below excluded from the consideration of the jury all the evidence, except the testimony of the accomplice, and any independent evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged. But the instructions left it with the jury to decide whether they should believe the testimony of the accomplice. In deciding that question they were bound to take into consideration all testimony contradictory of that of the accomplice, and all circumstances—including the fact that he was an accomplice, if he was one—tending in their nature to affect his credibility. The jury were told carefully to scrutinize all the testimony, and were properly charged as to reasonable doubt. The instructions with respect to the testimony of an accomplice were needlessly prolix and repetitive, but there was no substantial error in the charge prejudicial to the rights of defendant. There was evidence, other than the testimony of the accomplice, tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (No. 20,327.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 10, 1887.)

1. HOMICIDE—INFORMATION—CHARGING FELONIOUS INTENT.

An information for murder charged that defendant "did willfully, feloniously, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, make an assault in and upon one William Krumdick, a human being, and did then and there inflict upon the body of said William Krumdick a mortal wound, of which said mortal wound, so inflicted by said James Davis, the said William Krumdick did afterwards * * * die," etc. Held, that the charge was not merely that the assault, but also the infliction of the mortal wound, was felonious and of defendant's malice aforethought.

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION.

Under Pen. Code Cal. §§ 950, 959, prescribing the requisites of indictments and informations, and requiring a statement of the facts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, an information for murder is sufficient if it charges that the defendant did unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill the deceased, naming him, and stating the appropriate time and place.

3. JURY—CHALLENGE TO PANEL.

A departure from the forms prescribed by articles 3 and 4, c. 1, Code Civil Proc. Cal., with respect to the "drawing and return" of the jury, such as may deprive a defendant of an opportunity to secure a competent and impartial jury, is ground for a challenge to the panel.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lake county; R. J. HUDSON, Judge. Spencer & Henning and Crawford & Tabor, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. Appellant was found guilty of murder of the second degree, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. The information is as follows:

"State of California against James Davis—Information for murder.

"James Davis is accused by the district attorney of said Lake county by this information of the crime of murder, committed as follows: 'The said James Davis, on the ninth day of December, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-six, at the said county of Lake, and state of California, did willfully, feloniously, premeditatedly, and of his malice aforethought, make an assault in and upon one William Krumdick, a human being, and did then and there inflict upon the body of the said William Krumdick a mortal wound, of which said mortal wound, so inflicted by said James Davis, the said William Krumdick did afterwards, to-wit, on the thirteenth day of February, 1887, die, in the county of Lake aforesaid, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California.'"

Under our statutes an indictment or information is sufficient if it charges that the defendant did unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill the deceased, naming him, and the time and appropriate place being stated. People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 200; People v. Murphy, 39 Cal. 55. And in the cases cited it was held that the sufficiency of an indictment is not to be tested by the rules of the common law, but by the requirements of our statute. In People v. Martin, 47 Cal. 102, the indictment averred that the defendants "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and of their malice aforethought, in and upon one Valentine Eichler, did make an assault, and with an ax, in and upon the head of said Valentine Eichler, then and there feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought, did strike and beat, giving to said Valentine Eichler then and there, and with the ax aforesaid * * * divers mortal wounds, of which the said Valentine Eichler instantly died," contrary, etc. The indictment was held good, notwithstanding it did not conclude with words to the effect, "and so the grand jury say that the defendants, the said Valentine Eichler, in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, willfully, and of their malice aforethought, did kill and murder," contrary, etc. That case holds, in effect, that, although it is not necessary to state the instrument wherewith the mortal blow was given, yet if the indictment charges that the defendant inflicted the mortal blow of which deceased died, "feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought," it is sufficient.

In the present case the information was demurred to on the ground that it neither charges that defendant killed the deceased willfully and of malice aforethought, nor that he inflicted the wound, of which the deceased died, willfully and of his malice aforethought. Does the information charge that the mortal blow was stricken "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, premeditatedly, and of malice aforethought?" If so, it is sufficient, within the authority of the cases above cited.

In State v. Owen, 1 Murph. 458, it was said that, at the common law, where the death is occasioned by a wound, bruise, or other assault, the stroke should be expressly laid. In that case it was charged that the defendant, "in and upon one Patrick Conway, in the peace of God and the state then and there being, feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an assault, and that he, the said John Owen, with a certain stick of no value, which he, said John Owen, in both his hands, then and there had and held, in and upon the head and face of him, the said Patrick Conway, then and there feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought, did strike and beat, giving to the said Patrick Conway then and there, with the stick aforesaid, in and upon the head and face of him, the said Patrick Conway, several mortal wounds, of which said several mortal wounds the said Patrick Conway then and there instantly died." In that case it was held that the words "then and there," preceding the averment that the wounds were mortal, so connected that averment with the allegation that the blows were struck "feloniously, willfully, and of his malice aforethought," as to make these last words applicable to the giving of the mortal wounds. And in their opinion the supreme court of North Carolina refer with approbation to certain English decisions. Thus: "Where the indictment charged that A. feloniously and of his malice aforethought assaulted B., and with a sword, etc., and then and there struck him, etc., (held) the first allegation 'feloniously and of his malice aforethought,' applied to the assault, ran also to the stroke to which it is essential." And so where an indictment stated that the prisoner did willfully, feloniously, and of her malice aforethought, mix poison with the intent the same should be taken and eaten by the deceased, "and the said poison then and there delivered to the deceased," the indictment was held sufficient by all the judges, without the words "feloniously and of her malice aforethought," immediately preceding the allegation of delivering the poison; for they considered that these words ran by the word "and" and the words "then and there," and became applicable to the delivery of the poison.

We think like reasoning is applicable to the information before us, and that the charge is not merely that the assault, but also the infliction of the mortal wound, was felonious and of defendant's malice aforethought. The acts constituting the alleged offense—murder—are stated "in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of ordinary understanding to know what is intended." The acts charged in the information as constituting murder are "clearly and distinctly set forth in ordinary and concise language," etc. Pen. Code, §§ 950, 959. The demurrer was properly overruled, and the motion in arrest of judgment properly denied.

The defendant challenged the panel of jurors upon the ground that the panel was not selected and drawn in conformity with the requirements of articles 3 and 4, c. 1, tit. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and specified certain particulars in which the provisions of the Code had been departed from. The challenge was denied by the prosecution, and the court proceeded to try the same. A strict conformity to the statutory method of selecting, returning, and drawing grand and trial jurors is practicable, and cannot be too strongly recommended. A departure from the forms prescribed with respect to the "drawing and return" of the jury, such as may deprive a defendant of an opportunity to secure a competent and impartial jury, is ground for challenge to the panel. It is difficult to lay down a rule which shall indicate in every case as the question arises what is or is not sufficient compliance with the statute; but we are satisfied that in the case before us there was no such "material departure" from the forms prescribed with respect to the drawing or return of the jury as required the court below to allow the challenge to the panel. Pen. Code, §§ 1059, 1065.

Judgment and order affirmed.

CERF v. REICHERT, Surveyor General. (No. 12,201.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 12, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS.—PURCHASER AT EXECUTION SALE.—RIGHT TO PATENT.

A. purchased a quantity of state land, paid a portion of the purchase money, and received the usual certificate of purchase. Plaintiff purchased the land at execution sale, received a sheriff's deed, paid the residue of the purchase money, but was refused a patent by the register of the land-office for failure to present the certificate of purchase, as provided by Pol. Code Cal. §§ 3518, 3519. The certificate had been assigned to another party by A. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a patent for the land under section 2, act of March 27, 1872, (St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 587.) providing that where lands have been sold by the state, and certificates of purchase issued upon part payment of the purchase money, and such lands have been subsequently sold under execution, and a sheriff's deed issued therefor, the register of the state land-office shall issue to the grantee named in such deed a patent for such lands upon making full payment, etc.

2. SAME—CAL. ACT MARCH 27, 1872, NOT REPEALED BY AMENDMENT OF 1874.

The act of March 27, 1872, (St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 587,) provides that where lands have been sold by the state, and certificates of purchase issued upon part payment of the purchase money, and such lands have been subsequently sold under execution, and a sheriff's deed issued therefor, the register of the land-office shall issue to the grantee named in such deed, or his assignee, a patent for such lands, upon the production and surrender of the sheriff's deed and assignment, if any, and upon making full payment, etc. Held, that as that act was passed during the session of 1872, it prevails over the provisions of the Political Code inconsistent therewith, the latter being presumed to have been enacted on the first day of the session; and hence the act of March 27, 1872, is not to be revealed by implication by the amendment of 1874 to section 3518 of the Political Code, permitting the owner of a certificate of purchase, lost, destroyed, or beyond his control, to make proof thereof, and to procure a duplicate certificate.

3. STATUTES—ENACTMENT—CALIFORNIA POLITICAL CODE ENACTED ON FIRST DAY OF SESSION.

The provisions of the Political Code of California are to be construed as having been passed on the first day of the session of the legislature of 1872, and the laws of that session, where inconsistent with the Code, are to prevail.

In bank. Application for writ of mandate from Sacramento county.

A. C. Bolton, for petitioner. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an application for a mandamus to compel the respondent, as register of the state land-office, to issue to the petitioner a patent to the W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, and lots 3 and 4 of section 16, in township 10 S., range 2 W., Mt. Diablo B. and M. An alternative writ issued, to which respondent made answer, and the cause is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. In July, 1868, one Otis Ashley applied to purchase the land in question, paid 20 per cent. of the purchase price thereof, and, in due time, received the usual certificate of purchase. In 1883 a judgment was obtained against Ashley, under which an execution issued, pursuant to which his interest in the land above specified was sold by the sheriff, and purchased by the petitioner. There having been no redemption, Cerf, in due time, received a sheriff's deed of the premises, paid the residue of the purchase money, presented a receipt showing such payment, together with his sheriff's deed to the respondent, and demanded a deed, which was refused. After petitioner received his sheriff's deed, Ashley assigned his certificate of purchase, but to whom does not appear, and no report of such assignment had been made to the respondent when the patent was demanded.

Upon these facts the contention of the attorney general is that the respondent was not bound to deliver the patent to petitioner until the certificate of purchase, or a duplicate thereof, issued in lieu thereof, was surrendered.

The Political Code was approved March 12, 1872, and took effect January 1, 1873. Section 3519 of such Code provided that upon final payment for any tract of state land, and "upon the surrender of the certificate of purchase by the person entitled to the same," a patent should be prepared, etc. No provision was made for issuing a patent, except upon the surrender of the certificate of purchase. Section 3518 of the same Code provided that if a certificate of purchase was lost or destroyed, a duplicate might issue upon the proofs and notice specified therein, which duplicate should have the force and effect of the original. In Duncan v. Gardner, 46 Cal. 25, this court held that the certificate must be surrendered before the register could be compelled to issue a patent, and that a writ of mandamus would not lie without an offer to surrender the certificate. The Code made no provision for cases where the certificate, though not lost or destroyed, was yet beyond the reach or control of the owner. Certificates of purchase, and all rights acquired thereunder, were subject to sale by deed or assignment, duly executed. Pol. Code, § 3515.

On the twenty-seventh day of March, 1872, an act was approved entitled "An act for the relief of the purchasers of state lands," by the second section of which it was provided that, where lands had been sold by the state, and certificates of purchase issued upon part payment of the purchase money, and such lands had been subsequently sold under execution, and a sheriff's deed issued therefor, the register of the state land office was directed to issue to the grantee named in such deed, or his assignee, a patent for such lands, upon the production and surrender of the sheriff's deed and assignment, if any, and upon making full payment, etc.

The provisions of the Political Code are to be construed as having been passed on the first day of the session of the legislature of 1872, and the laws of that session are, where inconsistent with the Code, to prevail. It follows that the act of March 27, 1872, (St. 1871-72, p. 587,) became a law, whether consistent with the Code or not. It applied to cases where the holder under a sheriff's deed, who could not usually present the certificate of purchase, and who, though holding the title of the original purchaser, could not procure a patent under the Code of 1872.

In 1874 section 3518 of the Political Code was amended so as to permit the owner of a certificate of purchase, lost, destroyed, or beyond his control, to make proof thereof as provided in the section, and to procure a duplicate certificate. The amendment extended the right to receive a duplicate to cases where, although not lost or destroyed, the certificate was beyond the control of the owner. The amendment does not in terms repeal the act of March 27, 1872, but respondent contends that its effect is to repeal by necessary implication that act. Repeal by implication is not favored, and it is only in cases of clear repugnancy that a repeal by implication occurs.

In Ex parte Smith, 40 Cal. 419, it was said: "An act of the legislature is repealed by a subsequent act when it appears from the last act that it was intended to take the place of or repeal the former, and when the two acts are so inconsistent that effect cannot be given to both. That they are repugnant in principle merely forms no reason why both may not stand." It was further said in the same case that "an exception is not repugnant to the general rule, or, if it be, it is only to the extent of the exception."

The legislature of 1872 found a class of cases to which the general law, that the certificate of purchase must be presented to the register, could not well be applied; for those cases they provided that the sheriff's deed should stand in lieu of the certificate; thus creating an exception to the general rule which specified the certificate as the only evidence upon which the patent could issue. This legislation still left a class of cases unprovided for. As the exception only applied to sheriff's deeds, a party claiming under a tax deed, or by any other title than such sheriff's deed, and who could not aver that he was the owner of the certificate, and that it was lost or destroyed, and not having such certificate in his possession, was without remedy. We may well suppose that the object of the amendment of 1874 to section 3518 was intended to apply to this class of cases. At all events, we fail to detect any repugnancy in the law which provides generally for the evidence of ownership of state lands, which shall entitle parties to patents, and at the same time creates an exception under which different evidence shall suffice in a single class of cases.

We are of opinion that the act of March 27, 1872, was not repealed by the amendment of 1874 to section 3518 of the Political Code, and that it remains in full force and vigor. The holder of the certificate of purchase is not a party to the proceeding, and his rights (if any he has) cannot be concluded by the effect of our action.

Let the writ be made peremptory, so as to require respondent to prepare a patent and certificate, as required by law, and submit the same to the governor, and upon such patent being signed by the latter, and duly attested and sealed, to countersign and deliver the same to petitioner, Cert.

PEOPLE v. RASCHKE. (No. 20,291.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 14, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SIGNING AFTER PRESCRIBED TIME—PRESUMPTION.

When a bill of exceptions is settled, but not within the time required by statute, the reasons of the court for signing it after the prescribed time will not be inquired into, but it will be presumed that they were sufficient.

2. LARCENY—FELONIOUS INTENT—INSTRUCTION.

Defendant obtained goods under contract, and with the consent of the owner, but with the felonious intent to steal them. On the trial for larceny, the instruction of the court omitted the element of felonious intent, charging that if the jury believed that defendant intended to convert the goods to his own use, and did so convert them, then he was guilty of larceny. There was no language used which was equivalent to felonious intent, or which conveyed the idea of stealing. Held error MCKINSTRY and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.

3. SAME—SPECIAL PROPERTY IN DEFENDANT.

Under Penal Code of California, where possession of goods is obtained under contract, and with the consent of the owner, and a special property in them passes to the taker, but there is a felonious intent to steal at the time possession of the goods is obtained, this is such felonious taking as constitutes larceny.

4. SAME—GRAND LARCENY—VALUE OF PROPERTY FOUND IN DEFENDANT'S POSSESSION.

Defendant, with his confederates, feloniously obtained goods amounting in value to more than the sum fixed for grand larceny. Held, that he was guilty of grand larceny, even though the goods found upon his premises did not amount to more than that sum.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge. R. Percy Wright, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

MCFARLAND, J. The attorney general contends that the bill of exceptions in this case cannot be considered because it was not presented and settled within the time mentioned in the Code; but as it was settled "we will not inquire into the reasons which may have induced the action of the judge in signing the bill of exceptions after the statutory period, but will presume they were sufficient." People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 422; People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 510.

The information accused the appellant, jointly with one T. Furlong, of the crime of grand larceny. He was convicted as charged, and appeals from the judgment. The information charges that the appellant and said Furlong "did feloniously steal, take, and carry away," a large number of small articles, principally glass and crockery ware, and amounting in value to $58.60, "the personal property of one I. Bernard."

Appellant's point that the verdict was against the evidence—that is, that the findings of fact which the jury must have made are not supported by the evidence—is not tenable. There was considerable evidence on all contested questions of fact.

Appellant contends also that admitting all the facts as claimed by the prosecution, such facts do not constitute larceny; and that, therefore, the verdict is against law. And these facts, which the jury had the right to find, were substantially as follows: The appellant, together with said Furlong and one Lewandowsky, by false representations as to their property, financial ability, future intentions, etc., induced said Bernard to sell and deliver to them the property alleged to have been stolen. Bernard delivered the property to them at a place on the corner of Folsom and Twenty-third streets, in San Francisco, where they proposed to open and conduct a saloon and fruit store, and took from two of them a promissory note due in 30 days; but the understanding was that the property in the goods was to remain in Bernard until the note was paid. A couple of weeks afterwards, but before the maturity of the note, Bernard, hearing that there was some trouble at the place above named, went there and found the saloon closed and the property gone. Procuring a search-warrant, he went to appellant's residence, and found some of the property secreted there—appellant having denied that he had it. There were other circumstances in proof not necessary to state here, from all of which the jury might have found a felonious intent on the part of appellant and his associates from the beginning of the transaction. The contention of appellant, however, is that, as the possession of the goods was obtained by appellant and his associates under the contract, and with the consent of their owner, and as a special property in them also passed, therefore there could not have been that felonious taking which is necessary to constitute larceny.

Larceny, under the present provisions of the Penal Code—so far, at least, as they are applicable to this case—is substantially the same as at common law. We have examined a great many adjudicated cases, both English and American, where the question was, what is a sufficient "taking" within the definition of the crime of larceny? At first it was, no doubt, the rule that the element of trespass was a necessary ingredient of the crime; and that, when the possession of the thing charged to have been stolen had been originally obtained by the consent of the owner, there could be no larceny. It was soon held, however, that there might be larceny where there had been, in fact, a delivery by the owner, but where there had been no change of property, nor of legal possession, and where there was a mere temporary custody given for a special purpose, or where the possession had been obtained fraudulently, with a felonious intent. 2 Russ. Crimes, (8th Amer. Ed.) 21 et seq. The most difficult phases of the question arise where a defendant charged with larceny has by false and fraudulent pretenses obtained possession of the property under the guise of a purchase and sale. It is clear that in such a case, where there has been a change both of the legal possession and the entire property of the owner in the thing delivered, there can be no larceny; otherwise where there has been a change of possession, but no change of property. Some doubt has been entertained, however, on the question whether or not there could be larceny where there had been a change of possession without a change of the general title, but accompanied by the creation of some sort of trust or special right in the fraudulent buyer; but with respect to that question the law is undoubtedly settled to be that if there was a felonious intent to steal, at the time possession of the goods was obtained, then there was a sufficient "taking" to constitute larceny. As early as the time when "East's Pleas of the Crown" was written, the learned author of that treatise, after an exhaustive review of the cases decided down to that date, declared the rule to be as follows: "First, that where, notwithstanding a delivery by the owner in fact, the legal possession remains exclusively in him, larceny may be committed exactly the same as if no delivery had been made; secondly, that where by the delivery a special property, and consequently a legal possession, apart from any felonious intent, would be transferred, if it be found that such delivery were fraudulently procured with a felonious intent to convert the property so acquired, then, also, the taking amounts to larceny." 2 East, P. C. 682. The rule thus stated was clearly the law established by the adjudicated cases reported at that time; it has not been changed, but has been recognized by subsequent cases down to the present time, and is to-day a part of the English and American common law. The principal case noticed by text writers as indicating a different rule is Wilson v. State, 1 Port. (Ala.) 118; but an examination of that case will show that the syllabus, which does indicate a different rule, is not justified, either by the facts of the case or the text of the opinion of the court. The rule, as above stated, no doubt gives a somewhat dangerous power to a jury. As was said by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, the secret intention of a defendant, and the time when that intention was formed in his mind—whether before or after he obtained the property—are matters about which a jury, in many cases, can have no certain knowledge; and their power, in times of excitement, might be arbitrarily exercised to satisfy their own prejudices or public expectation. Lewer v. Com., 15 Serg. & R. 99. On the other hand, Judge COWEN regretted that the rule had not been applied to cases where the absolute title to the property passed. Ross v. People, 5 Hill. 294. At all events we must declare the law as we find it; and if change be desirable, the change must be made by the legislature. The general authorities on the question are too numerous to cite here. Most of them are referred to in the first pages of the second volume of Russell on Crimes, (8th Amer. Ed.) and in East's Pleas of the Crown, under the head of "Larceny and Robbery." A case precisely like the one at bar has not arisen in this state to our knowledge; but this court has recognized the rule as above stated in People v. Stone, 16 Cal. 370; People v. Jersey, 18 Cal. 338; People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280; and in other cases.

The point made by appellant that the goods found on his premises did not amount to more than $50, and that, therefore, he was not guilty of grand larceny, cannot be successfully maintained. If he was guilty of larceny at all, it was because he, with his alleged confederates, in the first instance, feloniously obtained the goods from Bernard, and the goods thus obtained amounted in value to over $50.

We have discussed the foregoing questions because they will necessarily arise if the case be tried again; for the judgment must clearly be reversed, because the instructions to the jury were erroneous in one important and material matter. The charge of the court followed the rule hereinbefore stated with one marked exception; it did not include the element of felonious intent. The court, referring to the specific features of the case as presented by the evidence, told the jury several times, and in various forms of language, (substantially,) that if appellant, or those whom he aided and abetted, obtained possession of the goods by false representations, and the title did not pass, and that, at the time possession was so obtained, the party obtaining possession of the goods intended to convert them to his own use, and did so convert them, then appellant was guilty of larceny. But nowhere in the instructions on that point were the jury told that the appellant, at the time possession of the goods was obtained, must have had a "felonious intent;" nor was any language used which was the equivalent of felonious intent, or which conveyed the idea of stealing. Of course, the intent to convert the property to his own use, in a certain sense, and perhaps in a popular sense, as understood by the jury, is present with the buyer at every sale, whether the sale be honest or fraudulent. But every fraudulent purchaser of property who intends to convert it to his own use, is not guilty of larceny. It would hardly be contended that an insolvent merchant could be convicted of that crime because he bought goods on credit when he knew that he could not, and would not, pay for them. Persons frequently gain advantages over others in trades, by false representations, without having that felonious intent to steal which actuates thieves when they commit genuine larcenies. In a case, therefore, like the one at bar, when the charge sought to be proven was in the nature of a constructive larceny, and where a jury might have confused mere moral delinquency with crime, it was material to the appellant's rights to have the jury instructed that the felonious intent must have existed at the time possession of the goods was obtained. For this reason the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment is reversed and cause remanded.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; TEMPLE, J.; PATERSON, J.

McKINSTRY, J. I concur in the judgment, and with what is said by Mr. Justice McFARLAND, except as to what is said with respect to the charge of the court. I agree, however, that the charge was ambiguous, and was such as may have misled and confused the minds of the jurors.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. The foregoing opinion drawn up by McFARLAND, J., as to the charge to the jury by the trial court, directly conflicts with People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185, where the point passed on in this case is distinctly made, considered, and decided. The obtaining possession of personal property by artifice or fraud, where title does not pass to the taker, with an intent, at the time of the taking, to convert it to the taker's use, and the subsequent conversion of it to his use by the taker, is a felonious taking, and is larceny. People v. Smallman, supra; U. S. v. Durkee, 1 McAll. 196-206. I am of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

ROBERTS v. ELDRED. (No. 11,937.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION—ACCOUNTING—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

In an action for the dissolution of a partnership, and for an accounting, the evidence showed that the defendant, who had charge of the books, had made false entries, not giving plaintiff credit when he should, making improper charges against him, and improper credits in his own favor. The referee to whom the cause was referred found a balance in favor of plaintiff, and the report of the referee was adopted by the trial court; but the books of the firm showed a small balance in favor of defendant. Held, that the judgment of the lower court would not be disturbed on appeal, there being nothing in the record to show that the result arrived at by the referee and the court below was not correct.

2. SAME—EXPERT BOOKS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the dissolution of a partnership, and for an accounting, when the evidence showed that the books had been so improperly kept by the defendant that it was impossible to tell anything about the condition of the affairs of the partnership from said books, the attorneys stipulated that experts should be employed by the referee to reduce the books to intelligible shape. The experts made out a set of new books from the old books. Held, that the expert books were properly admitted in evidence in connection with the report of the referee.

3. SAME—REAL ESTATE—FIRM PROPERTY.

Real estate purchased by partners and deeded to them in their individual names, and paid for out of the firm's moneys, assessed for taxation in the firm's name, and used in the prosecution of the firm's business, is firm property.¹

4. SAME—ITEMS ACCRUING SINCE SUIT COMMENCED.

In an action for the dissolution of a partnership, and for an accounting, the amount of a payment on a note and mortgage on firm property, made by plaintiff since the commencement of the suit, was considered in the accounting. Held, that the averment in the complaint that the mortgage was unpaid was a mere matter of evidence, and not to be regarded; and that it was proper to include the payment in the accounting.

5. PLEADING—MISJOINDER—WAIVER.

Where an item is set forth in the complaint, and there is no demurrer for misjoinder, it is too late to raise the objection on appeal.

6. ANSWER—VERIFICATION—PRESUMPTION.

Where the record states that the answer was verified, but does not say by whom, there being but one defendant, the court will infer that it was verified by him, unless the contrary is made to appear.

7. APPEAL—ERROR IN RELIEF—NEW TRIAL.

An error in the relief awarded by the court, upon the facts found, cannot be considered on motion for a new trial, but can only be presented upon appeal from the judgment.

HAYNE, C. Action for dissolution of copartnership and accounting. The case was referred to the court commissioner to report the state of the accounts. After taking testimony the commissioner made his report, which consisted principally of matters of mere evidence, and showed that the balance coming to plaintiff was $8,610.35. There was then a trial before the court. The court filed findings of its own, which referred to and adopted the report of the commissioner. Judgment was thereupon entered for dissolution of the copartnership, and the sale of the firm property, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of certain specified debts of the firm, and of the sum found due to the plaintiff, viz., $8,610.35; and that judgment be docketed against defendant for any balance which might remain due to the plaintiff after such application of proceeds. The decree also declared these sums to be secured by lien on the firm property. The record is tangled and confused, and almost everything that occurred is alleged as error. We deem it sufficient to notice the following points:

1. It is said that the evidence does not show that so large a sum as $8,610.35 was due to the plaintiff. But we cannot say from the record that it was not. The record shows that the conduct of the defendant was most reprehensible. For two years before suit "he didn't do anything but spend his time at Haines & Snyder's stable across the street." He had charge of the books, but kept them in a grossly improper manner, omitting to make entry of sums paid in by plaintiff, and making improper charges against plaintiff, and improper credits in his own favor. These books, although introduced in evidence, are very naturally not in the record. The fact that the "expert books" showed a balance in favor of plaintiff of only $100, which is so much insisted on by appellant, does not seem to us to be very material. These expert books were merely an intelligible presentation of what was in the books of the firm, which were grossly incorrect and insufficient. In response to a question of the court as to whether everything was in the new books that was in the old books, the expert answered: "No, sir; our report will tell you they are not all entered. We did not claim to take the position of referee; we left that out very carefully. We posted every entry of cash, and all the entries that we found in the cash-books, into the new books, and made up a complete new set. We opened an account with every one that Mr. Eldred's books showed had paid in or received cash, and made no changes in the account, except some that were made under the testimony, and as directed by Mr. Eldred, the defendant, who was with us a good deal." Eldred's books, however, were incomplete. "He kept no ledger account to amount to anything, no account of sales or purchases, stock, bills receivable, profit and loss—nothing, in fact, but cash account, such as it was." Many of the accounts which he did keep were false, and credit was not given to plaintiff in cases where it ought to have been. It will not do for defendant to take refuge behind such books as these. If the result which the referee and the court arrived at was not correct, the record should have made the error appear. The only thing which is clearly apparent from this record, besides the misconduct of the defendant, is hopeless confusion in the accounts. It is eminently a case where the action of the court below should not be disturbed.

2. There was no error in admitting what are called the expert books. As above stated, the defendant failed in his duty in the matter of keeping accounts. "It was impossible to tell anything about the condition of the affairs according to the books of the firm as kept by Mr. Eldred." In view of this condition of affairs, the attorneys stipulated that experts should be employed by the referee to reduce the accounts to some intelligible shape. These experts made out a set of books from the old books, as stated above, and we think that under the circumstances the court properly admitted them in connection with the report of the referee to enable the judge to comprehend the state of the accounts.

3. It is stated with confidence that there was no evidence that the real property ordered to be sold was partnership property. But it was bought while the parties were partners. The deed was made to "E. R. Roberts and H. P. Eldred." The defendant himself testifies that part of the price was a note "we gave him for part of the purchase price;" that plaintiff borrowed money on his own note for another portion of the price; that the firm paid this note, and that "I gave credit in the cash-book for it as a disbursement of the firm;" that "from the time we purchased this lot up to this date it has been used in the prosecution of the business of said firm as our shop and place of business;" that he caused the property to be assessed as firm property, and gave the assessor sworn statements to that effect; that he paid the taxes and credited himself on the books of the firm with such payments. And the plaintiff testified that "we bought the real estate in the complaint named as a firm, and for the firm, and it has always been used by the firm in its business." We think this evidence justified the court in treating it as firm property.

4. It is urged that the amount of a payment of a note and mortgage on the above real property, paid by plaintiff since the commencement of the action, should not have been considered in the accounting. But it was proper to include this payment. A court of equity will not make an incomplete settlement of accounts, but will go on and adjust the whole matter, even if it involves items accruing after the commencement of the suit. The evidence of this payment by plaintiff does not contradict any material allegation of the complaint. The averment that the mortgage was unpaid was true at the time it was made, and, besides, was a matter of mere evidence, and therefore was not to be regarded. It amounted merely to giving one item of the indebtedness. If it was proper to give one item of the indebtedness, it would be to give any other; and if it be proper to put in the debit side, it would be to put in the credit side; and in this way a complaint for an accounting would contain all the accounts.

5. When the defendant bought into the firm, he agreed to pay plaintiff $1,796, which has not been paid; and this sum is part of the claim of plaintiff in his complaint. It is argued for the defendant that this indebtedness accrued before the formation of the partnership, and therefore was not properly a part of the accounting. Assuming this to be so, the claim was set forth in the complaint, and there was no demurrer for misjoinder. It is now too late to raise the objection.

6. There was no error in admitting the answer of the defendant, Eldred, in the attachment suit. The record states that this answer was verified, but does not say by whom. The natural inference is that the verification was by the defendant in the case, there being no other party defendant. If this was not the fact, it should have been made to appear. Compare Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 141, 142. Numerous other assignments of error in the admission of evidence are made, but we are unable to see that there was any error prejudicial to the defendant.

7. It is contended that the court went too far in decreeing that the sum due from defendant for his interest in the firm should be a lien on the partnership property, as it was not a matter between them as partners. But assuming this to be so, it is not an error which can be considered on motion for new trial. It is simply error in the relief awarded by the court upon the facts found, and hence can be presented only on appeal from the judgment. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 595, 596; Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 74. In this case the appeal taken from the judgment has been dismissed.

We therefore advise that the order denying a new trial be affirmed

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

ROSE v. NEVADA & G. V. W. & L. CO. (No. 11,715.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 15, 1887.)

PUBLIC LANDS—ADDITIONAL ENTRY BY SOLDIERS AND SAILORS—OCCUPANCY—ALIENATION.

Rev. St. U. S. § 2306, which provides for an allowance of an additional entry of land to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, is entirely independent of other sections of chapter 5, among which it is placed, and the provisions of other sections of that chapter respecting residence upon land entered are inapplicable to additional entries under section 2306; and one who has patented land under this section has the right to alien the land without having entered upon it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge, of Sierra county, presiding.

Cross & Simonds, and Gaylord & Searls, for appellant. Chas. W. Kitts and A. J. Ridge, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The patent to plaintiff's grantor was issued under the provisions of section 2306, Rev. St. U. S. This section was a part of the act of congress passed April 4, 1872, and is entirely independent of other sections of chapter 5, among which it is placed. Section 5596, Rev. St. U. S. Unlike our Codes, the Revised Statutes of the United States are not to be read as one act, it being expressly provided that "the arrangement and classification of the several sections of the revision have been made for the purpose of a more convenient and orderly arrangement of the same, and, therefore, no inference or presumption of a legislative construction is to be drawn by reason of the title under which any particular section is placed." Section 5600, Rev. St. U. S. Under the act referred to as amended in June, 1872, the additional entry allowed to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors was confined to lands contiguous to the tract embraced in the first entry. 17 St. at Large, 333. A year later this restriction was removed, and the section as originally passed was restored. The natural and logical conclusion to be drawn from these acts is that occupancy on the part of the claimant is not required. The government certainly did not intend that the beneficiary should abandon his original homestead, which he has cultivated and improved, in order to secure the additional number of acres which he is authorized by the statute to locate at another place. The provisions of other sections of chapter 5, respecting residences upon the land entered, are, therefore, inapplicable to the additional homestead entries under section 2306. Knight v. Leary, 54 Wis. 459, 11 N. W. Rep. 600. Assuming the irrevocable power of attorney from Gano and wife to Talbot to be as claimed by appellant, an assignment of the applicant's right to the land, and of Gano's right to his additional homestead, still we find nothing in the statutes referred to which will authorize us in holding such power of attorney to be null and void. As stated before, section 2306 is independent of the other provisions of chapter 5, and in the absence of an express prohibition against an alienation of the property by the claimant, after the issuance of a certificate from the general land-office, to locate in person or by agent a certain number of acres, we cannot say that the right so to alienate does not exist. It is a right which need not in terms be granted by the sovereign authority, for it exists if not expressly prohibited, or opposed to public policy. The location and entry were made in the name of Gano, the beneficiary of the act. Congress has not said that the right to sell should not exist before actual entry, nor has it required any occupation, consideration, or duty of any kind, as a condition precedent. In all cases where it has been the intention of congress to prevent alienation by the beneficiary, such intention has been clearly expressed. Thus, the act of congress of 1854, under which the Sioux half-breed scrip was issued, provided expressly that no transfer or conveyance of the certificate should be valid. Myers v. Croft, 13 Wall. 291; Mullen v. Wine, 26 Fed. Rep. 206.

The commissioner of the general land-office has authority to make such regulations respecting the disposal of the public lands as he may deem proper, and such regulations, when not repugnant to the acts of congress, have the force and effect of laws. Pope v. Athearn, 42 Cal. 607. The right of claimants to enter additional lands under section 2306, through attorneys and assignees, has been the subject of much discussion among the officers of the land department of the government. In a letter to the secretary of the interior, dated February 17, 1877, the commissioner called attention to the injustice and hardship of rules which had been formulated and adopted by the department regulating entries under section 2306. Acting upon the suggestions therein contained, Secretary Chandler directed a modification of his former decision so as to allow entries to be made by agents and assignees under certain restrictions. The officers of the land department received Gano's entry under his power of attorney to Talbot, considered the evidence respecting his claim to the land described in the complaint, and upon their decision the patent of the government has been issued to him in his name. There is nothing in the regulations under which they acted repugnant to the acts of congress, and their action is final and conclusive.

We have considered this case upon its merits, disregarding the question of the sufficiency of appellant's assignments of error, or his right to attack the validity of the patent without showing that his claim is connected with the paramount source of title.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GOLDEN STATE & MINERS' IRON-WORKS v. DAVIDSON and another.
(No. 11,608.)

1. ACTION AGAINST PARTNERSHIP—PARTNERS NOT SERVED—MORTGAGE—PRIORITY BEFORE JUDGMENT.

Two of several mining partners mortgaged their interest in the mining property to plaintiff, and subsequently defendants brought an action against the partnership for supplies furnished. In this action two of the partners were not served with summons, and did not appear. The action was not brought under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 388, which provides for the suing of associates transacting business under a common name, by such name; service upon one being service upon all, and the judgment binding the joint property of all the associates. Held, that under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 414, providing that "where an action is against two or more defendants, jointly or severally liable, and the summons is served on one or more, but not on all, the plaintiff may proceed against the defendants served in the same manner as if they were the only defendants," the partners not served were not bound by the judgment, and, the partners who were bound having mortgaged their interest to plaintiff before the judgment was obtained by defendants, such mortgage was a prior lien upon the property.

2. SAME—PRIORITY OF FIRM CREDITORS—REALTY—RULE OF EQUITY.

Defendants held a judgment against the joint property of a partnership, and plaintiff was a mortgagee of the interest of two of the partners; the mortgage having been executed before defendants obtained their judgment. Having foreclosed the mortgage, plaintiff brought an action of ejectment against defendants, who had purchased the property at the execution sale under their judgment. Held, that the rule as to the priority of firm creditors, so far as real property is concerned, is a rule of equity, and not of law, and could not avail defendants in the action at law where the equitable right was not set up.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge. Gray & Haven, for appellant. A. C. Adams, W. K. Boucher, and A. L. Rhodes, for respondent.

Ejectment for an undivided seven-tenths of a mine.

HAYNE, C. On November 13, 1880, and subsequently, Richard F. Knox, Joseph Osborne, W. T. Robinson, S. P. Ely, and Phillip V. R. Ely were mining partners engaged in working the Esperance mine, the legal title to which stood as follows: Eight-tenths in Knox and Osborne, (one of these eight-tenths being held in trust for Robinson) three-twentieths in S. P. Ely, and one-twentieth in Phillip V. R. Ely. On December 13, 1880, Knox and Osborne mortgaged their seven-tenths to the plaintiff. It does not appear whether or not this mortgage was recorded. On October 10, 1882, the property as mortgaged was sold under a decree of foreclosure. Although the defendants were parties to the suit, the decree reserved the question as to the priority of their judgment mentioned below. The plaintiff became the purchaser at the sale, and in due time obtained the sheriff's deed. The defendants' title is as follows: Between February 28, 1881, and September 12th of the same year, the partnership became indebted to the defendants for supplies furnished and money paid in and about the working of the mine; and on September 23, 1881, the defendants commenced an action at law against the five partners to recover what was due on such indebtedness. No service of summons was had upon the two Elys, who were non-residents, and they did not appear. On December 13, 1881, a judgment was rendered against all the partners, by which it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiffs in said action (defendants herein) "do have and recover of and from the said defendants, Richard F. Knox, Joseph Osborne, W. T. Robinson, Samuel P. Ely, and Phillip V. R. Ely, partners and associates doing business under the firm name of Knox & Osborne, the sum of $5,035.17, in gold coin of the United States, together with plaintiffs' costs and disbursements amounting to the sum of $72." The judgment contained the following provision: "And it is further ordered and adjudged that the said plaintiffs do have execution against the separate property of the defendants, Richard F. Knox, Joseph Osborne, and W. T. Robinson, or either of them, the parties served with process in this action, as well as against the joint property of all the said defendants, partners, and associates, as aforesaid."

An appeal was taken from this judgment, but no stay of execution was had, and pending the appeal execution was issued, and on February 27, 1882, the property was sold to the defendants, who, after the usual period, received the sheriff's deed. Upon the appeal it was held that the action was not brought under section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in relation to persons transacting business under a common name; and that section 414 of the Code did not authorize a judgment against the joint property; and that inasmuch as the two Elys had not been served with process, and had not appeared, the judgment should be modified by striking out their names. The court did not, however, order the clause above quoted, as to the joint property, to be stricken out. Davidson v. Knox, 67 Cal. 143, 7 Pac. Rep. 413. It will be perceived, therefore, that since the title acquired under the foreclosure proceedings related back to the date of the mortgage (Bank v. Hodgdon, 64 Cal. 98) the plaintiffs herein had the elder title, but only as to the interests of two of the partners; while the defendants had the junior title, although it purported to include the interests of all the partners, and was derived through a debt against the firm.

The court below gave judgment for the defendants, upon the theory that partnership creditors have a priority against creditors of individual partners. We think this was erroneous, for two reasons:

1. Even if it be assumed in favor of respondents that the judgment in Davidson v. Knox could be enforced against the joint property of the partners, it does not follow that the purchasers at an execution sale under this judgment acquired the legal title as against the appellant's mortgage. Conceding the rule as to the priority of firm creditors to its fullest extent, it is, at all events so far as real property is concerned, a rule of equity and not of law. See Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 580. The priority is worked out through the lien of the partners. Jones v. Parsons, 25 Cal. 104, 105; Story, Partn. § 97. And if it be true that the purchaser of a specific tract at a sheriff's sale under a judgment at law is subrogated to this lien, it must be asserted by appropriate proceedings in equity, and cannot avail him in an action at law where the equitable rights are not set up. See Ross v. Heintzen, 36 Cal. 320; McCauley v. Fulton, 44 Cal. 362; and compare Allen v. Phelps, 4 Cal. 258, 259.

2. But the judgment in Davidson v. Knox was not against all the partners, nor could it be enforced against their joint property. This was held upon the appeal in that case, (67 Cal. 143, 7 Pac. Rep. 413.) It is true that the execution sale took place before this decision was rendered, and was under the judgment before it was modified. But the case is authority for the proposition that the action was not brought under section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure. And if that be so, there was no way in which the joint or the several interest of the Elys could be affected, without service of summons upon them, or their appearance. Hence the purchaser at the execution sale did not acquire their interest in the partnership property. Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 230. Leaving out their interests, and the interest of Robinson, (because it was merely equitable, and cannot be considered in ejectment,) it is manifest that the respondents can claim to have acquired only the interest of Knox and Osborne, which passed under a prior lien to the appellants.

We think that upon the evidence the court below should have rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for seven-tenths of the property. And we therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—CONSIDERATIONS—MONEY LOANED FOR GAMBLING PURPOSES.

A promissory note given to plaintiff for money loaned to be used in throwing dice can be enforced, where it appears that plaintiff loaned the money in good faith to the defendant, and it does not appear that plaintiff won any of the consideration of the note, or defendant lost any of it, in the game, or that there was any fraud or conspiracy to cheat defendant or induce him to play.

"One day after date, for value received, I promise to pay to Jas. H. Corbin, or order, three hundred and fifty dollars. H. WACHHORST."

From the judgment rendered against him, and an order denying a new trial of the action, the latter has appealed. The grounds of his defense as set up in the action were: (1) That about the time he executed the note he was intoxicated, and that he was further plied with intoxicating liquors by the plaintiff, and fraudulently induced to sign the note without knowing what he did, and without any consideration whatever. (2) That the note was given for a consideration, if any, which is contrary to the policy of the law and to good morals in this: "That on said thirtieth day of January, 1886, the defendant visited the saloon of the plaintiff, and while in a state of intoxication was further plied with intoxicating liquors, and then induced by plaintiff to engage in a gambling dice game with plaintiff, and while in a condition not to know what he was doing, fraudulently, and with the intent to deprive defendant of his money, was induced by plaintiff to wager large sums of money upon a throw of dice; upon which defendant is informed by plaintiff that he lost a large sum of money with plaintiff, and that for these alleged losses plaintiff, taking advantage of the incapacitated condition of the defendant, fraudulently obtained his signature to the alleged instrument. That there was no other consideration for said alleged promissory note, and that the same was for money alleged to have been lost by defendant while playing at dice with plaintiff."

Upon evidence which is sufficient to sustain them, the findings of the court upon the issues thus made were: That on the day of the date of the note sued on, the defendant made and delivered it to the plaintiff. That the plaintiff is still the owner and holder of the note, and that no part thereof has been paid, although the defendant had been requested to pay it before suit brought. That "on the evening of the said thirtieth of January, between 5 and 6 o'clock, defendant entered the saloon of plaintiff, in Sacramento city, and requested plaintiff to engage with him in the game of throwing dice. Plaintiff consented, and after they had played a short time, a third person came into the saloon and joined with them in the game; subsequently a fourth person also played with them. The game was played for money, and also occasionally for drinks, and was continued until about 10 o'clock P. M. Plaintiff did not play all the time; he would quit sometimes to attend to matters of business about the saloon, but he played in the game most of the time. During the evening defendant borrowed money a number of times from plaintiff. When a sum was borrowed the amount was written generally by defendant himself on a card, and when another loan was made the last card was torn up, and the whole amount written upon a new one. About, or a little after, 9 o'clock the whole amount thus borrowed was $350. Plaintiff then took a blank promissory note from a book containing numerous blanks of that kind, and, after dating it, wrote in the sum of $350 and handed it to defendant, telling him that it was a note for $350, the amount which he owed him, and asked him to sign it. Defendant took the note, looked at it a few minutes, and then, signed it and handed it to plaintiff. No part of the consideration of the note was money won by plaintiff from defendant; it was all for money loaned by plaintiff to defendant, which plaintiff took out of his money drawer and his safe. Plaintiff himself was not winner at the game, and of the players it does not appear who was winner or loser when the game ended, about 10 o'clock. There is no evidence of any fraud, or any conspiracy to cheat defendant or to induce him to play. The allegation of the answer, that at the time the note was signed defendant was 'in a state of intoxication which incapacitated him from entering into the alleged or any contract whatever,' is not sustained by the evidence, and I therefore find it to be not true. I find that none of the averments of subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 are true."

The game in which these parties were engaged was not one forbidden by any statute of this state. Admitting that the plaintiff knew the money which the defendant borrowed from him was to be used afterwards in the game of dice-throwing, he did not loan it with a view to have it used in a game declared by law to be unlawful, and was entitled to recover on a contract the consideration of which was money loaned. It is claimed that the Civil Code provides that a contract is not lawful when it is "contrary to good morals." Conceding, without deciding, that a note given for money lost at dice-throwing is a contract based upon "an immoral consideration," and still the defendant was liable on the note, for he borrowed money from the plaintiff, and gave the note therefor, and if the defendant used it in playing at dice-throwing as he did, and the plaintiff knew it would be so used when he loaned it, and the plaintiff, as he did, loaned the money in good faith to the defendant, who knew what he was doing, and the plaintiff is not shown to have won the money for which the note was given, nor the defendant to have lost it in the game, the latter is liable on the note. Poorman v. Mills, 39 Cal. 345. For non constat from the findings but what the money loaned in good faith to a man competent to contract, may be still in his possession, or have been used for some other purpose to his advantage.

There is no prejudicial error shown by the record, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

GOULD v. HUNTLEY. (No. 11,647.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 15, 1887.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

In an action to recover a mare levied on by defendant under an execution against G. and H., it appeared that plaintiff bought the mare with a ranch of G., his father, taking immediate possession and management of the ranch. G. then went east, where he remained six months, and then returned, and lived with plaintiff on the ranch pursuant to a stipulation in the conveyance. Previous to the sale plaintiff had cared for the mare, and used her in G.'s employ. After the sale G. occasionally drove her, and she was being led by him when levied on. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of an immediate delivery, and an actual and continued change of possession, to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, under Civil Code Cal. § 3440, relating to fraudulent conveyances.¹

2. SAME.

In an action to recover a header levied on by defendant under execution against G. and H., the evidence showed that plaintiff and H. bought the header in partnership, and, after a few days, H. transferred his interest to plaintiff, on plaintiff's agreement to pay their vendors for the header, which plaintiff did. Plaintiff afterwards had exclusive use of the header, and it was on his ranch when levied on. H. was on the ranch part of the time, but owned a place where he was most of the time. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a sale, accompanied by an immediate delivery, and an actual and continued change of possession, within the statute relating to fraudulent conveyances. Civil Code Cal. § 3440.¹

¹ Respecting the change of possession sufficient to overcome the presumption of fraud, as against the creditors of the vendor, and when that is question for the jury, see Stull v. Weigle, (Pa.) 8 Atl. Rep. 578; McClain v. Buck, (Cal.) 14 Pac. Rep. 876; Hogan v. Cowell, (Cal.) 14 Pac. Rep. 780; Dodge v. Jones, (Mont.) 14 Pac. Rep. 707; Young v. Poole, (Cal.) 13 Pac. Rep. 492; Cook v. Rochford, (Cal.) 12 Pac. Rep. 568, and note.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to recover the possession or value of one bay mare and one header, which were levied upon and sold by the defendant, as sheriff of the county of Placer, under an execution duly issued upon a judgment against Joseph G. Gould and C. A. Hines, and it is stipulated that the only question involved is as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's possession of the mare and header, to enable him to hold them as against the creditors of his vendors. It appears from the record that Joseph G. Gould was the father of plaintiff, and owned a ranch in Placer county, known as the "Gould Place." Concerning the ranch and mare the plaintiff testified as follows: "The 'Gould Place' spoken of was my father's ranch up to September, 1884. At that time my father conveyed this ranch to me, and I immediately went into possession of the entire ranch, buildings and everything, and from that time to the present I have been in possession of the same, and have conducted the business of farming there. Immediately after my father conveyed the ranch to me he went east and remained until March, 1885. When he came back he came to the ranch, and since then he has lived in the same house with me, because he reserved this right in the conveyance to me. He is seventy-nine years old. I bought the mare the same time the ranch was conveyed to me, and I have ever since had exclusive possession of the ranch and mare, except that my father lived in the house with me and drove the mare several times to Sacramento. * * * I bought the mare from my father in September, 1884. I had used her in my father's employ for over six months before the purchase, and had principally cared for her during that time. I kept her both before and after the sale on the Gould place. * * * My father has not exercised any authority or control over the mare since I bought her, or over anything on the ranch since he conveyed it to me, except as above stated."

Concerning the header the plaintiff testified:

"C. A. Hines and I bought the header in the spring of 1884, and also the beds, and brought them into the field and ran them in partnership for a few days; then he turned his interest in them over to me on condition that I would pay our vendors for them, which I afterwards did. Hines did not afterwards use the header. * * * After Hines let me have his interest in the header and beds, I ran the machine myself during the balance of the season, cutting grain whenever I could get a job; Hines had nothing more to do with it, and after the ranch was conveyed to me by my father, I took the header and beds home and put them under shelter, where they remained until they were attached. Hines, who is married to my sister, has been on the ranch some of the time since I owned it, but not continuously. He has a place of his own, 50 miles away, where he has been most of the time." The above is substantially all the testimony there is in the case, except that a deputy-sheriff was called as a witness for the defendant, and, having stated that he levied the execution on the twenty-fifth of March, 1885, said: "At the time I found her [the mare] and levied upon her, J. G. Gould had her by the halter. He was leading her for the purpose of putting her to a horse. C. E. Gould was not present." Upon this testimony the court below gave judgment in favor of plaintiff, and denied the defendant's motion for a new trial.

It is now claimed for the appellant that the plaintiff's possession of the property in question was not such as is required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, and that the court therefore erred in giving the plaintiff judgment. So far as it relates to the header, we are satisfied that the judgment was right, and the motion properly denied. There can be no question that when Hines sold to the plaintiff his interest in the header, the sale was accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession.

And, so far as it relates to the mare, we think the judgment must also be sustained. The ranch was conveyed to plaintiff in September, and he took and held the actual and exclusive possession of it for six months. The mare was sold to the plaintiff at the same time, and, so far as we can see, his possession of her during the whole six months was open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership. It was such as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner. It was an open, visible change manifested by such outward signs as rendered it evident that the possession of the vendor had wholly ceased. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 506; Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 201. And it was not necessary that the plaintiff's possession of the mare be continued indefinitely. It was said by REDFIELD, J., in delivering the opinion of the supreme court of Vermont in Dewey v. Thrall, 13 Vt. 284: "After a sale of personal chattels has become perfected by such a visible, notorious, and continued change of possession, that the creditors of the vendor may be presumed to have notice of it, the vendee may lend or let, or employ the vendor to sell, or perform any other service about the thing with the same safety he may a stranger." So in Stevens v. Irwin, supra, this court said: "This possession must be continuous—not taken to be surrendered back again—not formal, but substantial. But it need not, necessarily, continue indefinitely, when it is bona fide and openly taken, and is kept for such a length of time as to give general advertisement to the status of the property, and the claim to it by the vendee." See, also, Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316. In the light of these decisions we cannot say that the plaintiff's possession of the mare was not sufficient, the court below having found that it was, and we think, therefore, that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RAMIREZ. (No. 20,338.)

1. DYING DECLARATION—IMPENDING DEATH.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, a dying declaration was offered in evidence, the first sentence of which was, "I, A., believing I am about to die, do make this, my dying statement." The surgeon who attended deceased testified to his condition, and the character of his wounds, and that on the day before the declaration was made witness informed deceased that he was going to die, and he thereupon expressed a wish to make a dying declaration. Held, that the admission of such declaration in evidence was not erroneous.¹

2. HOMICIDE—WITNESS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, on a trial for murder, the testimony of defendant's witness tended to show that deceased was exhibiting a belligerent propensity just before the killing, and that one P., a co-defendant, was endeavoring to restore peace by inducing deceased to withdraw from the company, he may be asked, on cross-examination, whether P. did not "come out and run the deceased over a hundred yards at that time."

3. SAME.

Such witness may be asked, on cross-examination, also, whether P. did not come out and point a pistol at deceased, and say, "Don't you fight that man R."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

J. R. Patton, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the State.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Appellant was tried on a charge of murder, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. One of the grounds upon which he insists that his motion for a new trial should be granted is that the dying declaration of the deceased was improperly admitted in evidence. The condition of the deceased and the character of his wounds were testified to by his attending physician and surgeon, who further testified to having informed the deceased the day before he made his dying declaration that he was going to die, and he thereupon expressed a wish to make a dying declaration. The opening sentence of the declaration is as follows: "I, Fernando Asero, believing I am about to die, do make this, my dying statement." We think it sufficiently appears from all the evidence before us on this point that this declaration was made under a sense of impending death, and therefore was properly admitted. As reported, the facts in People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72, are not the same as in this case.

The defendant's witness, Torres, testified on his examination in chief to what occurred between the deceased and one Prado and some other persons just prior to the homicide. On his cross-examination witness was asked this question: "Didn't Prado come out and run the deceased over a hundred yards at that time?" The question was objected to as immaterial and incompetent. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. The objection was properly overruled. The evidence of this witness tended to prove that deceased was exhibiting a belligerent propensity just before the shooting commenced, and that Prado was endeavoring to restore peace by inducing deceased to withdraw from the company he was in. Prado and defendant were jointly charged, although the latter had a separate trial. It was material for the defendant to prove that deceased brought on the affray, and for the prosecution to show the reverse. This witness was also asked on cross-examination: "Didn't Prado come out and point a pistol at deceased and say, 'Don't you fight that man Roderiguez?'" To which there was the same objection as to the preceding question, the same ruling and exception. We think the ruling of the court constitutes no error. It does not appear that the question was answered. But the witness did state, after narrating some other events, that he saw no other weapon than a pocket-knife which deceased had.

We discover no ground for disturbing the judgment or order denying the motion for a new trial. Judgment and order affirmed.

MANNING v. DALLAS. (No. 12,002.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING THE STATUTE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 458, the defendant cannot take advantage of the statute of limitations as a defense, unless it is specially pleaded either by setting forth the facts constituting the defense, or by citing the particular section and subdivision of the Code under which it is claimed the action is barred.

2. ASSUMPSIT—LABOR AND SERVICES.

Where under a complaint for services rendered, the plaintiff was entitled to recover such a sum as the defendant had agreed to give for his services, or, if no price was agreed upon, then such sum as his services were reasonably worth, the court instructed the jury that, "though the plaintiff has brought suit for a certain sum, you are authorized to bring in a verdict for such a sum as you may think his services were reasonably worth, if you find he is entitled to anything." Held no error.

3. SAME—COMPENSATION AT EMPLOYER'S DISCRETION.

The court refused to give the following instruction: "If from the evidence you find that the compensation A. was to receive from D. for his services was to be at the entire discretion of D., then I charge you that you must render a verdict for the defendant, no matter what you may think his services are worth," but instructed the jury that, "when services are rendered upon an understanding that the remuneration is to be at the discretion of the employer, no action is maintainable for the value of such services." Held, that whatever error there may have been in the court's refusal to give the former instruction was cured by the giving of the latter.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; WM. O. MINOR, Judge.
Turner & Maddux, for appellant. Stonesifer & Minor, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to recover the balance due on a mutual, open, and current account for work and labor, alleged to have been performed by plaintiff for defendant between the ninth day of December, 1881, and the tenth day of January, 1886. The answer denied any indebtedness on a mutual, open, and current account, and alleged payment, and also alleged that so much of the account as accrued "during the years 1881, 1882, and 1883, has long since been barred and is barred by the provisions of chapter 3, tit. 2, pt. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California." The case was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant then moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

Several points are made on the statute of limitations, but they need not be separately considered. The statute was evidently not pleaded. There are only two ways of pleading the statute,—one by stating the facts showing the defense, and the other by stating "generally that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section — (giving the number of the section and subdivision thereof, if it is so divided, relied upon) of the Code of Civil Procedure." Section 458, Code Civil Proc. As neither of these ways was adopted, the attempt to plead it must be treated as altogether a failure. But if the statute had been properly pleaded, the same result must have been reached. There was testimony from which the jury might find, as they did, that the account was mutual, open, and current, and that no part thereof was barred.

At the request of the plaintiff the court instructed the jury as follows: "Though in this case the plaintiff has brought suit for a certain sum, yet I charge you that you are authorized to bring in a verdict for such a sum as under the evidence you may think his services were reasonably worth, if you find he is entitled to anything." It is claimed that this instruction was erroneous, because "the plaintiff bases his right to recover on a contract that he was to receive a certain amount for his services, and not on a quantum meruit." The instruction was properly given. Under the complaint the plaintiff was entitled to recover, if he had performed services for the defendant, such sum as the defendant had agreed to pay him for his services, or, if no price was fixed, then such sum as his services were reasonably worth. Freeborn v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 337; Leitensdorfer v. King, 7 Colo. 436, 4 Pac. Rep. 37; Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 324.

The court refused to instruct the jury, at the request of the defendant, as follows: "If from the evidence you find that the compensation Manning was to receive from Dallas for his services was to be at the entire discretion of Dallas, then I charge you that you must render a verdict for the defendant, no matter what you may think his services are worth," etc. It is insisted that this instruction was a proper one, and that the court erred in refusing to give it, citing Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 510. The answer is that the court, at the request of the defendant, did instruct the jury in the following language: "When services are rendered upon an understanding that the remuneration is to be at the discretion of the employer, no action is maintainable for the value of such services." If there was error in refusing to give the instruction as first asked, that error was obviously cured by the instruction as given.

The other points do not need special notice. After carefully looking at the whole record, we are satisfied that no error was committed prejudicial to the defendant, and the judgment and order should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

VENDOR AND VENDEE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—PART PAYMENT—EQUITY WILL NOT DECREE FORFEITURE.

Equity will not decree a forfeiture of a vendee's rights under a contract for the sale of a mining claim, and thereby deprive him of the possession of the mine and of the amount paid towards the purchase price, although he may have failed to work the mine as required by the contract, and to pay the balance of the purchase price when due.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.
Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action upon a contract made by the plaintiff's intestate for the sale of a mining claim, to the defendant, for the sum of $6,500. It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant had paid only $1,300 of the agreed purchase price; that he had failed to work the mine as required by the contract; that the full amount of the purchase money had become due, and that in consequence of his failure to pay the same he had by the terms of the contract forfeited all his rights thereunder. The prayer is that it be decreed that defendant has committed a breach of said contract, and has forfeited all his rights thereunder and to the possession of said property." The defendant in his answer alleged that he had paid $1,504.50 of the purchase money; and he denied that by not paying the balance thereof or otherwise he had failed to comply with the terms of the contract, or had forfeited all or any of his rights under it. Judgment was entered declaring forfeited all the defendant's rights under the contract, and ordering the possession of the property to be restored to the plaintiff; and the defendant appealed. In Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 118, the court said: "It is a universal rule in equity never to enforce either a penalty or forfeiture. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1319, and cases cited. On the contrary, equity frequently interposes to prevent the enforcement of a forfeiture law." Judgment declaring a forfeiture had been entered in that case, and was reversed. This case is in all essential particulars like that, and the judgment here should also be reversed, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint if so advised.

SEARLS and FOOTE, CC., concurred.

BY THE COURT. For reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint if so advised.

APPEAL—FILING TRANSCRIPT.

In bank.

Motion to dismiss appeal on the ground that the transcript was not served and filed within 40 days after the appeal was taken. It appeared from the clerk's certificate of proceedings in the lower court that the motion to set aside the judgment and grant a new trial was made and denied on February 11, 1887, and that the time to prepare a bill of exceptions was extended from time to time, and finally settled on April 22, 1887. The transcript was filed within 40 days from that date. Rule 2 of the supreme court, upon which the motion was based, is as follows: "The appellant in a civil action shall, within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, and the bill of exceptions and the statement (if there be any) are settled, serve and file the printed transcript of the record, duly certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties, or by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken."

BY THE COURT. The motion to dismiss the appeal herein is denied. We do not see that the appellant is in any default for not having filed the transcript on appeal; the bill of exceptions not having been settled until the twenty-second of April, 1887. Rule 2 of this court. Motion denied.

BAWDY-HOUSE—ORDINANCE PROHIBITING RESORT TO—VALIDITY.

An ordinance of the city of Stockton declaring it to be unlawful for any person to visit, for the purpose of prostitution, any place maintained for the purpose of prostitution, and providing a penalty of a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 3 months, or both, is valid, and not in conflict with the general laws of the state.

In bank. On writ of habeas corpus from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Petitioner was arrested for visiting a house for the purpose of prostitution, in violation of the following ordinance:

"The mayor and city council of the city of Stockton do ordain as follows, [ordinance No. 229:]

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to keep, conduct, occupy or maintain, for the purpose of prostitution, any building, house, room, or place within the corporate limits of the city of Stockton.

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person to be or become an inmate of, or, for the purpose of prostitution, to frequent, any building, house, room, or place kept, conducted, occupied, or maintained for the purpose of prostitution.

"Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful for any male person to frequent any building or buildings, house or houses, place or places, kept, conducted, occupied, or maintained for the purpose of prostitution.

"Sec. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons knowingly to rent, furnish, or permit to be used for the purpose of prostitution, any building, house, room, or place owned or controlled by such person or persons.

"Sec. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person, for the purpose of sexual intercourse, to visit, be, or remain in any building, house, room, or place kept, conducted, occupied, or maintained for the purpose of prostitution.

"Sec. 6. It shall be unlawful for any male person to live, room, or habitually associate with any female or females who keep, conduct, or maintain, or who are inmates of, or who, for the purpose of prostitution, frequent, any building, house, room, or place kept, conducted, occupied, or maintained for the purpose of prostitution.

"Sec. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person by words, actions, or signs, or by any means whatever, to solicit, entice, or attempt to entice, any person for the purpose of prostitution.

"Sec. 8. It shall be unlawful for any person to aid, abet, or assist any person or persons to do any of the things which are declared to be unlawful by the provisions of this ordinance.

"Sec. 9. Any person convicted of violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

J. C. Campbell and J. H. Budd, for petitioner. Frank R. Smith, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We are of the opinion that the city council of Stockton had authority to enact the ordinance under which petitioner was convicted, and that so far as it affects this prosecution it is not in conflict with the general laws of the state. The writ is dismissed, and the prisoner remanded.

PEOPLE v. GUIDICE. (No. 20,333.)

1. ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON—SIMPLE ASSAULT—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, there being no evidence tending to show that a simple assault only had been committed, instructions are not erroneous which require the jury to acquit, or find the defendant guilty as charged.

2. SAME—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, as to the right of self-defense, that if the prosecuting witness made the first hostile demonstration in such a manner as would have justified a reasonable man, in defendant's situation, in believing that prosecutor intended to inflict upon him great bodily injury, and if, acting upon these appearances, and believing it necessary for his own protection, and to prevent great bodily injury to himself, defendant struck the prosecuting witness with a deadly weapon, he was justified in doing so, is correct.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCann, Judge.

The charge of the trial court as to the right of self-defense, which is referred to in the opinion, was as follows:

"In this case it is not denied by defendant that he struck the prosecuting witness with an axe, but he claims it was done in necessary self-defense, and to repel a dangerous attack which the prosecuting witness was then making, or about to make, upon him. The right of self-defense of a party violently assaulted by another to repel such attack, and fully protect himself, is a law of nature. It antedates all written enactments, and is fully recognized in the laws and regulations of all civilized people. The right is expressly recognized by our own statute, and the conditions under which it may be asserted are clearly defined. These are that the party was not himself the first aggressor, or, if the aggressor, that he had in good faith withdrawn from the contest before he struck the blow. Second, that the striking was necessary to prevent the infliction upon himself of a great bodily injury by the party stricken.

"To justify the use of a deadly weapon in self-defense it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that in order to save his own life, or to prevent his receiving great bodily harm, the attack upon the prosecuting witness was absolutely necessary; and it must appear that the prosecuting witness was the assailant, or that the defendant had really and in good faith endeavored to decline further struggle before the blow was given. A bare fear of the commission of the offense, to prevent which defendant used a deadly weapon, is not sufficient to justify it; but the circumstances must be sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man, and the party attacking must have acted under the influence of such fears alone. It is not necessary, however, to justify the use of a deadly weapon, that the danger be actual. It is enough that it be an apparent danger; such an appearance as would induce a reasonable person, in defendant's position, to believe that he was in immediate danger of great bodily injury. Upon such appearances a party may act with safety; nor will he be held accountable though it should afterwards appear that the indications upon which he acted were wholly fallacious, and that he was in no actual peril. The rule in such cases is this: What would a reasonable person,—a person of ordinary caution, judgment, and observation,—in the position of the defendant, seeing what he saw, and knowing what he knew, suppose from this situation and these surroundings? If such reasonable person, so placed, would have been justified in believing himself in imminent danger, then the defendant would be justified in believing himself in such peril, and acting upon such appearances.

"The defendant is not necessarily justified because he actually believed that he was in imminent danger. When the danger is only apparent, and not actual and real, the question is, would a reasonable man, under all the circumstances, be justified in such belief? If so, the defendant will be so justified. If this was defendant's position, it was his right to repel the aggression, and fully protect himself from such apparent danger. If he could have withdrawn from the danger, it was his duty to retreat. Between his duty to flee and his right to kill he must fly, or, as the books have it, must retreat to the wall. But by this is not meant that a party must always fly, or even attempt flight. The circumstances of the attack must be such, the weapon with which he is menaced of such a character, that retreat might well increase his peril. By 'retreating to the wall' is only meant that the party must avail himself of any apparent and reasonable avenues of escape by which his danger might be averted, and the necessity of striking his assailant avoided. 'But if the attack is of such a nature, the weapon of such a character, that to attempt a retreat might increase the danger, the party need retreat no farther.' 'These definitions and interpretations of the law of self-defense are general rules that are to be applied by the jury to the situation and conduct of both the defendant and the prosecuting witnesses, as they shall determine that position and conduct to have been from the evidence in this cause.' 'Mere words of insult or of reproach, however grievous, will not justify an assault, a blow, or a threatening demonstration with a deadly weapon. But, while mere words will not justify an assault, they may possess significance, as illustrating or explaining the subsequent acts of the parties, and determining who is the first aggressor, especially if threats or menacing expressions are uttered. Leaving out of consideration the mere words of reproach, which of these parties was the aggressor? Which made the first attack?'

"If from the evidence you believe that, without any overt act or physical demonstration upon the part of the prosecuting witness Bowman sufficient to warrant the defendant, as a reasonable man, in believing that he was in great bodily danger, he, the defendant, struck witness Bowman with a deadly weapon, such striking, under such circumstances, was not justifiable. Upon the other hand, if you believe that the prosecuting witness himself made the first hostile demonstration against the defendant by drawing, or attempting to draw, a pistol, or otherwise assaulting him, in such a manner and under such circumstances as would have justified a reasonable man, in defendant's situation, in believing that the prosecuting witness was about to inflict upon defendant great bodily injury, the defendant was justified in acting upon these appearances and belief; and if necessary for his own protection, and to prevent great bodily injury to himself, he struck prosecuting witness with a deadly weapon, he was justified in so doing, and your verdict should be one of acquittal.

"I believe, gentlemen, that is a full, complete, and intelligent definition of self-defense, and I presume you understand now how to apply it to the facts and circumstances in the case before you. You will now go to your room, and find whether the prisoner is innocent or guilty. If you find for the state, you will find the verdict as guilty; say so under the proper heading. If you find, under all the circumstances, that the defendant is not guilty, then your verdict will be just in those words, 'Not guilty.'"

J. Edward Marks, for appellant. William T. Jetter and Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was charged with an assault with a deadly weapon, and, having been convicted, complains of certain instructions given by the court. It appeared in the evidence that the assault was made with an axe. The prosecuting witness and the defendant agree as to the mode in which the axe was used, and on this point the evidence is not conflicting. In effect, the court told the jury that they must find the defendant guilty as charged, or must acquit; thereby failing to charge that the crime of simple assault was included in the information, and that it was competent for them to find the defendant guilty of the lesser offense. If there was any evidence tending to show that a simple assault had been committed, the instruction was erroneous. We find no such evidence in the record. The real issue raised by the defendant was that he was acting in self-defense. The prosecuting witness said that he was assaulted by the defendant, who struck him with an axe, with such force as to knock him down. The defendant's account of the blow given is as follows: "I was afraid he would shoot, so I struck him with the blunt end of the axe I had in my hand. I tried to hit him on the arm that held up the pistol, but I missed his arm and struck him in the side. He fell down. He still held onto the pistol. I hit him twice more."

It may be true that an axe is not necessarily a deadly weapon; that whether, in the particular case, it is so or not, will depend upon the mode in which it is used. But here was a blow struck with force, intended to be sufficient to disable an antagonist, and actually knocking him down. So used, it was necessarily a deadly weapon, and the defendant was not injured by the failure of the court to instruct the jury as to simple assault. Besides, the defendant did not request any instruction upon that point.

The instruction in regard to the right to act in self-defense was taken from the case of People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115, and has been approved by this court. It correctly lays down the law on that subject. In the case of People v. Flahave, 58 Cal. 249, it was said in the charge there reviewed that it must appear that it was absolutely necessary to prevent death or great bodily injury, to justify the use of a deadly weapon in self-defense. This instruction was not qualified by any statement of the right to act upon apparent danger. Here the right of the defendant to act upon appearances was fully and clearly stated.

Order and judgment affirmed.

ROSS v. WILLIAMS. (No. 11,848.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 19, 1887.)

DEED—MISTAKE IN DESCRIPTION—RIGHTS OF PARTIES—REFORMATION.

A settler on public lands gave a wrong description of the land in his application for a patent, owing to a mistake of the government surveyor in marking the stakes, and a patent for the land issued containing such wrong description. The property, after several conveyances, was conveyed to plaintiff, but the original patentee remained in possession under an agreement with plaintiff by which he was to have the privilege to repurchase the land by a certain time. After the mistake in the description was discovered, plaintiff conveyed the land to the government, and received a patent in the name of the original patentee for the land as actually settled by the patentee. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to a reformation of the deeds from his grantor, and to the possession of the land taken in by the reformation.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Larson county; M. MARSTELLER, Judge.

This is an action brought by A. E. Ross, plaintiff, against Joseph Williams, Michael Coffee, and D. M. Gloster, defendants, to reform certain conveyances, and to recover from defendant Williams the possession of the land put in by such reformation, with damages for its detention. The defendant Williams, as a pre-emptor, settled upon and improved "lots numbered 2, 3, and 4, and the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 12, in township 24 N., of range 17 E., of Mount Diablo base and meridian, containing one hundred and forty-three 95-100 acres;" but in proceeding to obtain a patent therefor, and in issuing the patent therefor, the land was by mistake described as "lots numbered 2, 3, and 4, and the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 13." He also, under the homestead laws, settled upon and improved the "N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, and the W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 12, and the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 1;" but in his proceedings to obtain a patent therefor, and in issuing the patent, the tract was described by mistake as the "W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 13, and the W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 12."

The defendant Williams sold the land to the defendant Coffee, who sold to defendant Gloster, intending to convey the land actually settled on by Williams, but followed the description found in the patent from the United States.

In January, 1882, Williams being in possession of all the land under an agreement with Gloster, by which he had the right to purchase all of it from Gloster, but the time in which he was to make such purchase being about to expire, he requested plaintiff to buy the land, and thereafter give him (Williams) an extension of time, upon such terms as Williams and the plaintiff might agree, in which to purchase and pay for it. The plaintiff purchased all of the land from Gloster, who on January 20, 1882, executed and delivered to plaintiff a warranty deed, by which he intended to convey to plaintiff the land which Williams had settled upon and improved, and which was intended to be conveyed to him by the government; but Gloster followed the description as made in the deed to him, as conveyed to Williams by the United States.

It appeared that in making the government survey the surveyors made a mistake in marking some of the stakes, which misled the defendant and others in describing the land in their applications, and the error thus made continued through all the writings. This mistake was discovered in 1882, and, the attention of the land department of the government being called to it, was corrected before this suit was commenced, as to patents, by plaintiff's deeding the property conveyed to him by Gloster to the United States, and receiving a patent in the name of Williams for the land settled on by Williams. Plaintiff bought the land from Gloster for $1,309. He then gave to defendant, Williams, a contract of sale whereby he agreed to convey the land to defendant at any time within five years, upon payment of the purchase price above stated, interest, taxes, and other advances, such interest to be paid annually. This agreement was made the sixteenth day of February, 1882, and it provided that, if defendant failed in any part of his agreement, he would deliver possession of premises to plaintiff. Defendant failed to comply with the agreement as to payment of interest, and before commencement of this action he surrendered the agreement, and notified plaintiff that he could not comply with it. After it was learned that a mistake had been made in the description of land, defendant claimed that he was on public land, and refused to surrender possession to plaintiff. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendant, Williams, appeals.

E. V. Spencer, for appellant. J. D. Goodwin, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action brought for the purpose of reforming certain conveyances, and to recover certain lands which should have been properly described, but which by mistake were erroneously set out, therein. The plaintiff had judgment against all the parties defendant, but only one of them, Williams, appeals therefrom, and from an order denying him a new trial.

The points made by the appellant are that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and that the court erred in its rulings upon the admission and exclusion of evidence. To us the findings appear to be fully sustained by the evidence. We have examined with care the various rulings of the court as to the exclusion or admission of proffered evidence, and find that tribunal either to have been right in its action, or that its rulings did not and could not have had the least effect upon the decision in the cause. The effort of Williams to retain the land, and the money for which he had sold it, and his refusal to convey it by the description which it was originally intended to have, appears to have been inspired by a supposition he seems to have entertained that in some way unexplained by the record he could keep the plaintiff out of his just rights.

There is no merit in the appeal, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

ANSON v. TOWNSEND. (No. 12,062.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 20, 1887.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—PAROL GIFT OF LAND.

A parol gift of real estate to one who had entered into possession of the premises before the gift was made, and who made no improvements thereon, and expended no money by reason of the gift, nor gave any other valuable consideration therefor, is void under the statute of frauds, and will not prevail against one holding the legal title.¹

2. PARTIES—REAL PARTY IN INTEREST—TRUSTEE WITH LEGAL TITLE.

In an action to recover real estate, the fact that the plaintiff holds the legal title makes him, so far as the defendant is concerned, the real party in interest, and entitles him, under the Code, to maintain the action, and it is immaterial that such legal title is held in trust for a third person.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

Chipman & Garter and J. F. Ellison, for appellant. Jas. T. Matlock and R. B. Snelling, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The principal questions involved in this case relate to the validity of an alleged parol gift of real property. The property in question consists of certain lots in the town of Red Bluff, which, in June, 1882, were owned by Abraham Townsend, and on which there was then a small dwelling-house. The defendant claims that Abraham Townsend made her a parol gift of the lots on the eighth of June, 1882, and that she thereby acquired a right to them which a court of equity will protect as against the legal title.

The facts upon which this claim is based may be briefly stated as follows: The defendant was the wife of Wilbur Townsend, and he was the son of Abraham Townsend. Wilbur had deserted defendant, leaving her with a young child, named Grace, and with no means to support herself and child except her own labor. Defendant was in the house, living there, when, on the eighth of June, 1882, and upon the premises, as she testifies, "he [Abraham Townsend] told me he gave me the property; it was mine if I would take good care of Gracie, and educate her and bring her up right. * * * He gave me the key to the front part of the house, and told me it was mine; the house was mine." Mollie Kennedy was a witness for defendant, and testified that she "heard a conversation between A. Townsend and the defendant, relative to the property in dispute. It was on June 8, 1882, I heard A. Townsend tell her that she could have the home, and it was hers; and for her always to take good care of Gracie, and that the home was hers. He gave her a key to the house. She said: 'Mr. Townsend, can I plant some vines out in front?' I want to make a shade.' He said: 'Yes; you can do whatever you want to with the house; the house is yours; I give you this house; it is yours.' He said for her always to take good care of Gracie, and give her a good education, and Gracie came around, and kissed him, and says: 'Gran'pa, you aint going to throw me out in the street?' and he says: 'No; I never intended to.' Thereafter the defendant continued to occupy the house until some time in the spring of 1883, when it was burned down. The lots were then vacant and unoccupied until the fall of 1884. Early in June, 1883, Abraham Townsend died. Administration was had upon his estate, and in September, 1884, the lots in question were distributed to Mrs. Etteville Townsend, the widow of deceased. After the distribution Mrs. Townsend erected a new house on the lots. In reference to this new house and her possession of it defendant testified: "Mrs. E. Townsend put it there, and after the death of A. Townsend, I did not object to her building on the place. I was living in town at the time it was built. I did not pay for any part of the house that is now on the property. I moved into it about a week after it was completed. The widow Townsend did not give me a key to it. I went in at the back door; it was unlocked. The front door was locked, and the key was on the inside of the door. It was dusk when I moved in. I did not get Mrs. Townsend's consent before I went in."

¹Previous possession will not take a parol conveyance out of the statute of frauds. Possession must be taken in pursuance of the sale. Birbeck v. Kelly, (Pa.) 9 Atl. Rep. 313; Green v. Groves, (Ind.) 10 N. E. Rep. 401. Equity protects a parol gift of land, equally with a parol agreement to sell it, if accompanied by possession, and the donee, induced by the promise, makes valuable improvements on the land. Dowson v. McFaddin, (Neb.) 34 N. W. Rep. —. In general, as to the part performance that will take a contract out of the statute of frauds, see Martin v. Patterson, (S. C.) 2 S. E. Rep. 859, and note.

The foregoing is substantially all of the testimony on which defendant rests her case; and the question is, does it show such a gift of the lots as a court of equity will enforce? It is, of course, settled law that courts will compel the specific performance of parol contracts for the sale of real property when there has been a part performance of the contracts. And parol gifts will be enforced under like circumstances and conditions as parol sales. Freeman v. Freeman, 51 Barb. 306, and 43 N. Y. 34; Manly v. Howlett, 55 Cal. 94; Bakersfield Ass'n, v. Chester, Id. 102. But it is not always easy to determine what acts will constitute a sufficient part performance to remove a case from the operation of the statute of frauds. The general rule is that nothing will be considered a part performance which does not put the purchaser or donee in a situation which is a fraud upon him unless the agreement is fully performed. Fry, Spec. Perf. § 388; Edwards v. Estell, 48 Cal. 196. And before any acts otherwise sufficient can be treated as a sufficient part performance, it must appear that they were done in pursuance or fulfillment of the parol agreement, or in just reliance thereon. They must be done with a view to the agreement, and be referable exclusively thereto. Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 762-764; Miller v. Ball, 64 N. Y. 286; Jervis v. Smith, 1 Hoff. Ch. 470. Moreover, equity will not enforce the specific performance of a contract where the party asking its enforcement cannot be compelled to perform it specifically on his part. "The contract must be just and equal in its provisions, and the subject-matter must be such that equity can take jurisdiction of it, and compel performance by both of the parties. The remedy must be mutual as well as the obligation, and where the contract is of such a nature that it cannot be specifically enforced as to one of the parties, equity will not enforce it against the other." Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403.

Now, looking at the case made by the defendant, how can it be said that a refusal to enforce the alleged gift will operate as a fraud upon her? She entered into the possession of the property, not under or in pursuance of the gift, but in advance of its being made. She made no improvements upon the property, but simply occupied the house till it was burned down. She stood by while Mrs. Townsend, the distributee of the lots, erected a new house thereon, making, so far as appears, no claim to them, and, when the house was completed, surreptitiously took possession of it. She paid nothing, and did nothing, except to support her little girl, which she was legally bound to do in any event. The grandfather of the child was not legally bound to support and educate her, and his promise to do so, if made, could not have been enforced. Mills v. Wyman, 3 Pick. 207. In our opinion, the gift, if made as claimed to have been, was within the statute of frauds and void.

The point was made at the trial that the plaintiff was not the real party in interest, but was suing for and in the interest of Mrs. Etteville Townsend, who had conveyed the property to him by deed. Upon this point the court, of its own motion, instructed the jury as follows: "Under the Code of Civil Procedure every action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest, and it is the province of the jury to say from the evidence who that party is; whether it is Mrs. Abraham Townsend or the plaintiff. Should the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff in this action is not the real party in interest, but that the real party in interest is Mrs. Abraham Townsend, then their verdict should be for the defendant." The instruction was clearly erroneous for two reasons: First, we find nothing in the evidence to justify such an instruction; and, second, as the plaintiff had the legal title, it did not concern the defendant whether he held it in trust for Mrs. Townsend or not. So far as concerned the defendant, he was the real party in interest, and might sue in his own name. Walker v. McCusker, 12 Pac. Rep. 724.

The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

STOCKTON v. KNOCK, Adm'r, etc. (No. 11,867.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—WAIVER—EVIDENCE OF, UNDER GENERAL ISSUE.

Plaintiff, by stipulation in an action for a divorce, waived all claim to community property; and the decree, granting her a divorce, directed such property to be set apart to the husband. In ejectment brought against the husband's administrator for a homestead which was community property, held, that such decree and stipulation, and the will of decedent, were admissible in evidence under the general issue.

2. SAME—EXAMINING PLEADINGS TO EXPLAIN DECREE.

In a petition for divorce, plaintiff described a certain homestead, alleging it to be community property; and the decree, granting her a divorce, awarded in general terms all community property to the husband. Held, in an action of ejectment brought by her against the husband's administrator to recover as homestead a portion of such community property, that the petition in the divorce suit might be considered in determining what property was awarded to the husband by the decree, and that the homestead was included in such award.

3. SAME—DIVORCE GRANTED WIFE FOR CRUELTY—COURT MAY AWARD COMMUNITY PROPERTY TO HUSBAND.

Where the wife, in an action for divorce, by stipulation waives all claim to community property, the court has power, under Civil Code Cal. § 146, subd. 3, in a decree granting her a divorce for extreme cruelty, to award all such community property, including homestead, to the husband.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Lassen county; W. T. MARSTELLER, Judge.

E. V. Spencer and J. E. Raker, for appellant. Goodwin & Davis, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought an action of ejectment against the defendant, the administrator of her divorced husband's estate. The land sued for was a homestead, duly declared such by the husband, from community property, during the life-time of both the parties and the continuance of their marriage. The trial court gave judgment for the defendant; and from that, and an order refusing to grant her a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

In her complaint she claims the right to enter, take possession, and hold the land in dispute, and that the defendant wrongfully withholds the possession thereof from her, which allegations he by his answer denies. It would therefore appear as if, under the general issue thus pleaded, the defendant had a right to introduce in evidence the judgment roll showing the divorce proceedings had between the parties in another action, which tended to show as a matter of fact that the plaintiff did not have the right, as she claimed, to enter upon the land in dispute at the time of the commencement of her action. Simple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26. There was nothing in the answer which confessed the plaintiff's right of entry, and pleaded the judgment in the divorce proceedings by way of estoppel, as an avoidance of such right of entry. Therefore the case of Young v. Wright, 52 Cal. 407, cited to us by the appellant, is not in point. We hold, against the appellant's contention, that the judgment roll, the stipulation of counsel as to the disposition of the property mentioned in the petition for a divorce, and the will of said H. C. Stockton, deceased, were admissible in evidence.

It is next to be considered what effect, if any, the decree of divorce had upon the plaintiff's claim to a right of entry and possession as against the administrator of the estate of the deceased, H. C. Stockton, her divorced husband. The petition for a divorce contains this averment: "Plaintiff further says that defendant owns a tract of land of 320 acres, the homestead of plaintiff and defendant, situate on Susan river, about seven miles north-west of Susanville, in this county, known as 'Stockton Mill;' that he also owns horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs, the number of which is unknown to plaintiff, and other personal property; that all said property is common property, and was acquired since the marriage of plaintiff and defendant, and was not acquired by gift, devise, or descent." The part of the decree of divorce pertinent to the matter in hand is as follows: "And it further satisfactorily appearing to the court that the community property is of little value, and that the defendant is considerably in debt, and he having undertaken the care and education of the said four boys, the children of plaintiff and defendant, and the plaintiff having voluntarily relinquished all claim to the property, it is further ordered and adjudged that the whole of the community property be set apart to the defendant." The stipulation filed in the cause reads thus: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed that if the court should be of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a divorce, then the plaintiff waives all claim to the property, or any of it; and the parties mutually agree that if the court be of the opinion that the interests of the children will be protected, that the plaintiff shall have the custody of the three girls, and the defendant of the four boys, and consent to a decree so awarding the custody, if the court is of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree at all." By his will the decedent, H. C. Stockton, left all his property, real and personal, to his four boys, and directed further "that a certain saw-mill known as the 'Stockton Saw-Mill,' situated near the town of Susanville, in Lassen county, state of California, and now owned by me, and also the ranch connected therewith, shall be kept until the youngest boy shall become of lawful age," then the property to be divided, etc.

From this documentary evidence it is plain that the court granting the divorce intended to and did assign the homestead and community property of the parties to the husband. The complaint identifies a certain "Stockton Mill" as a tract of 320 acres of land, the homestead of the parties, and declares that it and all the personal property described therein is community property; thus definitely including in the community property, as a part of it, the homestead known as "Stockton Mill." The decree, following the complaint, assigns all the community property, as set out in that pleading, to the husband, and, as the greater includes the less, the Stockton mill homestead, as described in the complaint in the action, passed to H. C. Stockton by the decree rendered therein; for the decree can be made certain as to the description of the property it meant to assign to the husband, by reference to the complaint, which contained sufficient description of it. Certum est quod certum reddi potest.

The land described in the declaration of homestead is that sued for in the present action, and it is plain to us, from all the facts and circumstances disclosed in the record here, that the only homestead the parties ever had while they lived as husband and wife, was the one involved in this controversy, and decreed to H. C. Stockton, by the court trying the action of divorce, together with other property belonging to the community. But the plaintiff contends that the court which granted the divorce did not have the power to make the decree which it rendered in the premises, from the fact, as she alleges, that the husband was found guilty by that tribunal of "extreme cruelty" towards her, which was a bar to the assignment to him of a homestead taken from community property, as he was not an "innocent party." As a conclusive answer to that, it may be said that, as the plaintiff of her own motion stipulated that the court should assign the whole of the property set out in her complaint to her husband, and as the language of Civil Code, subd. 3, § 146, leaves it entirely discretionary with the court to assign or not the homestead, either absolutely or for a limited period, to the innocent party, subject to the future disposition of that tribunal, it would seem as if the trial court had full power and authority to make the decree which it did. The other points made do not require notice.

It is evident that the plaintiff could not, in an action of ejectment, recover from one in possession property to which she had no right of entry. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; T. B. McFARLAND, Judge.

Hart & White, for appellants. Freeman & Bates, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. When this case was before department 1 of this court, it was, in our opinion, rightly decided. 11 Pac. Rep. 693. The law applicable to the facts appearing in the record was correctly stated, and little more need now be added.

It is urged for the appellants that the facts as stated in the opinion are at variance with those stated in the complaint, and that by not looking at the complaint the court was led into error. The allegation in the complaint which is referred to is to the effect that Brewer & Co., being the owners of the carload of grapes in question, on the third day of October, 1883, shipped the same by railroad from Sacramento to Chicago, to be there sold by the defendants as commission merchants, and the proceeds to be accounted for to the owners of the fruit; that Brewer & Co. then and there received from the railroad company a bill of lading, and on the same day assigned the grapes to Cook & Son, by writing on the bill of lading an assignment, which is set out, and by delivering such bill of lading to Cook & Son. It is claimed that under this averment there can be no question that Brewer & Co. owned the grapes when they were shipped, and that if there was an agreement between the parties, either express or to be implied from their acts and course of dealing, that the consignees should have a lien upon the grapes for any general balance due them, then their lien attached the moment the grapes were delivered to the railroad company to be shipped, and that lien could not afterwards be divested by any act of the consignors. In support of this position the principal cases relied upon are Valle v. Cerre's Adm'r, 36 Mo. 588, and Bailey v. Railroad Co., 49 N. Y. 75, 76.

In the first-named case it is said: "Whether or not the given consignment is to be considered as made to cover a general balance of account, will depend upon the special arrangements, agreements, and understanding of the parties; but where such an agreement exists, and the consignment is made in pursuance of it, and there is nothing else in the case which is inconsistent with the hypothesis, the case would be governed by the same principle, and a delivery to the carrier will be considered as a constructive delivery to the consignee. Russ. Fact. 203; Clark v. Mauran, 3 Paige, 373; Bryans v. Nix, 4 Mees. & W. 791; Desha v. Pope, 6 Ala. 690; 3 Pars. Cont. 261, and note w. In such case the shipment and delivery of the goods to the carrier, under the bill of lading, amounts to a specific appropriation of the property, with an intention that it shall be a security or a payment to the consignee for the advances he has made."

In the New York case, the court said: "It must appear that the delivery was made with intent to transfer the property. Until this is done the parol agreement is executory, the title remains in the consignor, and he has the power to transfer the property to whomsoever he pleases. * * * If A. has property upon which he has received an advance from B., upon an agreement that he will ship it to B. to pay the advance, or to pay any indebtedness, he may or he may not comply with his contract. He may ship it to C., or he may ship it to B., upon conditions. As owner he can dispose of it as he pleases. But if he actually ships it to B. in pursuance of his contract, the title vests in B. upon the shipment. The highest evidence that he has done so is the consignment and unconditional delivery to B. of the bill of lading. If the consignor procures an advance upon the bill of lading from a third person, or delivers or indorses the bill of lading to a third person for a consideration, it furnishes equally satisfactory evidence that the property was not delivered to the consignee, for the simple reason that it was delivered to some one else. * * * As against the consignor, the delivery of the property to the carrier, with intent to comply with his contract, vests the title in the consignee. It is largely a question in intention."

We fail to see how it can be said that these cases support the contention of appellants, and none which go further in that direction have been called to our attention. Here it does not appear that the car-load of grapes in question was shipped by Brewer & Co. in pursuance of their alleged agreement with defendants, nor that the delivery was made with the intent to transfer the property to them. On the contrary, it is clearly shown by uncontradicted evidence that it was understood in advance that the shipment was to be made for and on account of Cook & Son, to whom the bill of lading was assigned, and delivered immediately upon its issuance. The shipment and assignment of the bill of lading were parts of one transaction, and were wholly inconsistent with the hypothesis upon which the appellants base their claim.

As the case was presented, we see no error in the rulings of the court below, and the judgment and order should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MILLER v. THOMAS and others. (No. 9,933.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 24, 1887.)

APPEAL—MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT—RIGHTS OF PARTIES NOT SERVED WITH NOTICE.

Upon appeal from an interlocutory judgment, where it appears from the record that the portions appealed from could not be modified without disturbing the whole judgment, and prejudicially affecting the rights of parties not served with notice of the appeal, the appeal should be dismissed. McKINSTRY, J., dissenting.

For opinion on former appeal, see 12 Pac. Rep. 432.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

Partition by Henry Miller, Thomas Rea, and Johanna Fitzgerald against Massey Thomas and some 1,200 other defendants. The land in question is the Rancho Las Animas, Santa Clara county, California. The rancho was a Spanish grant to one Mariaud Castro, who died in 1828, leaving a wife and eight children surviving him. Maria Lugardo Castro de Doak, one of his daughters, became the owner, by inheritance, of an undivided one-sixteenth of the rancho. The respective interests of the parties to this appeal are confined to this tract.

Page & Elks, A. W. Crandall, and F. P. Bull, for appellants. Houghton & Reynolds, for respondent.

By THE COURT. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal herein, which was denied. In deciding the motion this court said: "So far as appears to us from the transcript, the judgment might be modified, if necessary or proper, without affecting the right of any party not served" with notice of appeal. "If, however, it should appear on the final hearing that the necessary parties are not before the court on this appeal, the appeal will be held ineffectual." 12 Pac. Rep. 432. The cause has since been argued, and, upon full examination of the record in the light of the argument, we are of opinion that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, for the reason that there can be no just or appropriate modification of the portions of the interlocutory judgment appealed from, without disturbing the whole judgment, and prejudicially affecting the rights of parties not served with notice of this appeal. Appeal dismissed.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—LIABILITY FOR WASTE.

The bondsmen of an administrator charged with wasting the assets cannot defend on the ground that the succeeding administrator was negligent in first seeking to recover the assets in the hands of third parties to whom they had been wrongfully transferred.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

John F. Burris and P. G. Murphy, for appellants. M. L. G. O'Brien and W. C. Burnett, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of the superior court in probate in favor of Patrick Callahan, administrator of the estate of John Connolly, deceased, and against Daniel Connolly, former administrator of the same estate, settling the account of such former administrator at $671.50, and ordering the same paid over to his successor. It appears from the report of the referee appointed to take and state the account of the former administrator that the latter received money and property of the estate of the value of $1,133; that he paid out certain moneys on account of the estate, leaving a balance of $671.50 in his hands due the estate, and that his services were of no value to the estate. The report was approved by the court, and the order entered thereupon, from which this appeal is taken.

Turning to the testimony, and it appears that Daniel Connolly, the former administrator, treated the assets of the estate as though they were his own property; probably proceeding upon the theory that he was the sole heir at law of the deceased. Of the moneys belonging to the estate, he confided $450 to one Reynolds, with a view of its being used in business for their joint account. Of this sum $200 was lost to the estate; the residue having been collected by the successor of Connolly.

The exceptions to the report of the referee are taken, not by Connolly, the administrator, but by Michael H. Gaffney, and S. A. Hussey, his bondsmen. Conceding that they can be heard in this connection, and the most that they claim in favor of their position is that their principal squandered the estate most palpably, and that the security afterwards obtained from Reynolds, by which a portion of it might have been recovered, was lost by the negligence of the attorney of the estate. This is to put the case much stronger than the facts will warrant; but assuming such to be the fact, and we still think the action of the court below correct. The successor of Connolly was under no obligation to look beyond him and his bondsmen for the assets of the estate. His doing so was a voluntary act, without any privity with or authority from Connolly; and if, in seeking to recover from Reynolds a mere debt which the latter owed to Connolly, he was guilty of negligence, it does not lie with Connolly or his bondsmen to find fault. Again, the evidence tends to show that the negligence and wrong, if any, by which the failure to collect the money due from Reynolds occurred, was occasioned by the conduct of Swartz, who was the agent of the bondsmen, and that of Koen, who acted under him.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

RANKIN v. C. P. R. Co. and another. (No. 12,074.)

APPEAL—BY PARTY NOT AGGRIEVED — SUCCESSFUL DEFENDANT NOT AFFECTED BY NEW TRIAL TO CO-DEFENDANT.

In an action brought by the plaintiff against two defendants, judgment was rendered in favor of one, and against the other. The latter moved for a new trial, and the court ordered that the judgment be "set aside, and that a new trial be granted the moving party." From this order the other defendant appealed. Held that, as the order did not affect the judgment in favor of the other defendant, an appeal therefrom was unauthorized, and should be dismissed, because not taken by the "party aggrieved." Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 938.

In bank.

BY THE COURT. The appeal of the S. P. C. R. Co. from the order of the court below granting a new trial is unauthorized, and must be dismissed, because not taken by "a party aggrieved." Section 938, Code Civil Proc. The order in express terms grants a new trial only to the moving party, i. e., the C. P. R. Co. For the purpose of determining the scope and effect of an order granting a new trial, we look at the moving papers, as well as the language of the order. In this case, appellant had judgment in its favor against plaintiff, and plaintiff recovered judgment against appellant's co-defendant, the C. P. R. Co. The latter moved for a new trial, which motion was granted in an order of which the following is a copy: "It is hereby ordered that the verdict and judgment heretofore rendered and entered herein be, and the same are hereby, vacated and set aside, and that a new trial be granted the moving party herein, upon its payment to plaintiff of his costs of the former trial." This order of the court, granting a new trial, did not, and could not, affect the judgment in favor of the S. P. C. R. Co.

Appeal dismissed.

RANKIN v. C. P. R. Co. and another. (No. 12,191.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1887.)

VERDICT—AGAINST ONE OF TWO DEFENDANTS—SILENT AS TO THE OTHER.

In an action brought against two defendants, C. and S., for injuries resulting from their joint negligence, C. and S. answering separately, the jury rendered a verdict against C., but was silent as to S., and the clerk entered judgment against the plaintiff for the costs of S. Held, that this was not a verdict upon the issue raised by the answer of S., and that the judgment should therefore be reversed.

In bank.

PATERSON, J. Plaintiff commenced this action against the C. P. R. Co. and the S. P. C. R. Co. to recover for injuries charged in the complaint to have resulted from the joint negligence of both defendants. Each defendant answered separately, denying the negligence imputed to it, and each charging the other with negligence at the junction of their tracks where the accident occurred. The verdict rendered was in favor of the plaintiff against the C. P. R. Co. for $50,000, but was silent as to the S. P. C. R. Co. Upon this verdict the clerk entered up judgment in favor of plaintiff against the defendant the C. P. R. Co. for the sum of $50,000 and costs, and against plaintiff in favor of the defendant the S. P. C. R. Co. for costs of the latter. Unless we are prepared to overrule the case of Benjamin v. Stewart, 61 Cal. 605, we think the decision therein conclusive upon the question raised here. As we understand that case, it was held that such a verdict was not a decision upon the issue of fact raised by the answer of the defendant not named in the verdict.

The verdict of the jury, like the finding of the court, must pass upon all the issues, and be free from ambiguity and uncertainty. And where there is a party plaintiff or defendant in whose favor, or against whom, judgment may be entered, regardless of the rights of those with whom he is joined, the verdict should expressly declare in favor of or against such party. The intent of the jury should not be left to inference or presumption. Jenkins v. Parkhill, 25 Ind. 473; Settle v. Alison, 8 Ga. 208. Of course, where the plaintiff takes a judgment against some of the defendants, his action amounts to a dismissal of the case against the other defendants sued as joint tort-feasors, and the judgment debtors cannot complain, there being no contribution; but in this case it is the plaintiff who complains that a judgment has been entered in favor of one of the defendants, against his wishes, and without a finding of the jury to support it. The case went to the jury with instructions which show that plaintiff was demanding an adjudication of all the issues as to both parties, and there is nothing subsequent to show consent to anything less on the part of plaintiff, or from which such consent or a waiver may be fairly presumed.

The verdict in this case is not simply informal or defective in matters that the plaintiff was bound to have corrected at the trial or waive the defect. It is no verdict at all upon the issue raised by the answer of the defendant S. P. C. R. Co., and the failure of plaintiff to call for a correction of the verdict does not raise a presumption that the issue had been abandoned by him on the trial.

Judgment reversed.

HONIG v. PACIFIC BANK. (No. 11,758.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING—CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT—UNAUTHORIZED PAYMENT TO AGENT.

Peyser, a collector in the employ of Honig, deposited in a bank, without the latter's knowledge, certain sums of money, and, in designating to whose order the same was to be payable, wrote in the bank register, "N. Honig, by S. A. Peyser." Thereupon the bank issued and delivered to Peyser certificates of deposit payable to the order of "N. Honig," which were afterwards paid by the bank upon the indorsement by Peyser of "N. HONIG, by S. A. PEYSER." Subsequently, Honig, learning of the transaction, ratified the act of Peyser in depositing the money, and sued the bank upon the certificates so paid. Held, there was no contract, express or implied, that the certificates were payable only when indorsed according to the signature in the register; and that Honig was entitled to recover. MCFARLAND and PATERSON, JJ., dissenting.

2. SAME—DEPOSIT BY AGENT—FICTITIOUS PRINCIPAL.

A bank assuming that a depositor, who designates himself as agent, represents a fictitious principal, does so at its peril.

3. SAME—DELIVERY TO AGENT—ACTION ON, BY PAYEE—UNAUTHORIZED PAYMENT TO AGENT.

The fact that a certificate of deposit was in the possession of defendant bank (from which it was issued) at the time of commencing the action, and was never actually delivered to the payee named, is no defense to an action thereon by such payee, when it appears that there had been a constructive delivery to the payee through his agent, and that the possession of the defendant had been obtained by paying the certificate on the agent's unauthorized indorsement of the payee's name.

4. SAME—RATIFICATION OF DEPOSIT BY AGENT—PAYMENT TO AGENT NOT BINDING ON PRINCIPAL.

Upon a ratification of the unauthorized acts of an agent in depositing in a bank certain sums of money, a recovery may be had by the principal of the full amount deposited, as evidenced by certificates of deposit issued by the bank, and wrongfully paid to the agent, without showing the amount actually received by the bank, and although the money drawn by the agent on the first certificate may have been used to purchase the second. MCFARLAND and PATERSON, JJ., dissenting.

TEMPLE, J. This action is brought upon six certificates of deposit, made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff, by the defendant. They are all in the same words, except as to date and amount. The following is a copy of the first issued:

"$250.

No. 3,289.

"PACIFIC BANK, N. W. cor. Sansome and Pine Streets—Series B.

"SAN FRANCISCO, January 19, 1885.

"N. Honig has deposited in this bank two hundred and fifty dollars in gold coin, payable to self or order on the return of this certificate, properly indorsed.

M. W. UPTON, Teller.

"S. G. MURPHY, Cashier."

The deposits were in fact made by one S. A. Peyser, who was the clerk of the plaintiff, and the certificates were delivered to him. When he made the deposits Peyser demanded certificates, and wrote in the register of certificates of deposit, under the head of "To Whose Order," "N. Honig, by S. A. Peyser," and the money was paid to him on each and all of the certificates. Honig had for many years been a well-known business man in San Francisco, but he had never had dealings with the defendant other than to collect money on checks on the bank; and it does not appear, otherwise than by the register and the issuance of the certificates, that the officers of the bank ever knew of his existence.

Peyser was in the employ of Honig, and was intrusted with the collection of moneys, but Honig did not authorize him to make these or any deposits with the bank; did not, in fact, know of the deposits, or that any certificates had been issued, until long after the certificates had been paid to Peyser, as before stated. Of course, Peyser had no authority from Honig to indorse the certificates, or to obtain the money upon them. Some time after their payment, Honig discovered the fact, and brought this suit upon the certificates, although they had been so paid, and had in fact been surrendered by Peyser to the bank, and were still in possession of the bank.

As to the register of signatures, the cashier testified as follows: "The register book of certificates of deposits is a signature book, or book of identification, which is placed before a person making a deposit in this way, and in which he writes his name then and there; and opposite to that man's name is the amount that the certificate is issued for and the number; and, on the return of that certificate to the bank, the paying teller is required to examine and compare the signature of the indorsement with the signature of the party depositing the money; and if that signature is not genuine, and has not the appearance of being genuine, and written by the party who deposits the money, payment is refused upon it."

It is contended that a certificate of deposit is a form of deposit by one with whom the bank has not a regular account; that the depositor, on leaving his money, leaves also his signature, thereby designating upon what indorsement the money may be withdrawn; that the contract really is to pay upon the surrender of the certificate indorsed by the same person, and in the same way, that the register is made in the certificate of deposit book. But the trouble with this contention is that the certificate is a negotiable instrument. On their face, the certificates sued on are payable to N. Honig or order. The register is a private book, kept by the bank for its own convenience and protection. It forms no part of the negotiable instrument issued by the bank. If an indorsement is required, the character of it is indicated on the face of the paper itself, which is expressly made payable to Honig or order.

The exigencies of the defendant's case would require us to hold that: (1) Had Honig presented in person the instrument which is expressly made payable to him or order, the bank could have properly refused payment, and that upon such refusal no action would lie on the part of Honig against the bank. (2) That, had Honig assigned the certificate for a valuable consideration, the assignee could not have obtained the money, although by law it is negotiable, and is expressly made payable to Honig's order. (3) That Peyser could have indorsed Honig's name, and demanded the money, although the defendant knew he was no longer in the employ of Honig, and that Honig expressly protested against his authority to indorse his name, or to receive the money for him. That is, that Peyser was able without Honig's knowledge or consent to constitute himself Honig's agent, and that the agency was irrevocable. And (4) in case of Honig's death, his administrator could not get the money, but Peyser could still obtain it; and, in case of his death, his administrator, too, could have drawn the money.

If I send my messenger boy to make a deposit for me, and he discloses his principal, and the certificate is issued payable in terms to me, the contention is that I cannot collect the money until I cause my own name to be indorsed on the certificate by the boy, who at the time may be in Hong-Kong. This cannot be so. If the bank keeps a certificate book for its protection, its officers must see to it that they get the right signature in the book. It cannot, by taking the wrong signature, prevent the true owner from getting his money on demand.

There is no contract, express or implied, that the certificate was payable only when indorsed according to the signature in the register. The certificate of deposit register is evidently a mere private book, whose contents cannot concern the holder of a negotiable certificate; but, if it were otherwise, it is difficult to discover how it could help the defendant. For, after all, this book only shows the number of the certificate, the amount for which it was drawn, and to whose order it was made payable, which in this case was Honig. The cashier is presumed to know that no act of his could authorize Peyser to act as Honig's agent; and that, if Peyser had then been the agent of Honig, it was competent for Honig to withdraw the agency at any time.

It is said that a person may deposit in a fictitious name, or may give any name he chooses at the bank; so he may represent himself as the agent of a fictitious principal, and in such case he can draw the money in the name in which the deposit was made. Let this be admitted. It does not cover this case. Here, the principal was not fictitious. The bank cannot assume that a named principal is a fictitious person, or, if it does so, it will be at its peril. Morgan v. Bank, 1 Duer, 434. The fact that the certificates were in the possession of the defendant is immaterial. They had been executed and duly delivered to the plaintiff through his agent. The defendant came into possession of them wrongfully, and without having paid them to plaintiff or his order.

It is said that plaintiff cannot recover the full amount of all the certificates, for he has not shown that defendant received more than $300 altogether. This is upon the theory that Peyser may have drawn the money on the first certificate and redeposited it, or some of it, to purchase the second certificate, and so on. This would perhaps have been a tenable position if Honig had sued for money had and received, ignoring the certificate on the ground that the deposit was not authorized by him. But there can be no doubt of the proposition that plaintiff was at liberty to ratify the unauthorized act of his agent, and sue on the certificates, and that he could do this without authorizing Peyser to indorse his name upon the certificates. They were entirely distinct transactions. The action, then, was brought upon several negotiable instruments, each of them reciting the exact amount of money received from Honig, and promising to pay the same to Honig or his order. None of them have been paid to plaintiff or his order, or to his agent. When plaintiff proved the execution and delivery of the instruments, and that they had not been paid, he made out his case. All that appears in answer to this is that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, it is possible that only $300 of Honig's money was received by the bank. We cannot disturb the finding of fact of the trial court on the ground that upon the evidence it is possible that the defendant did not receive so much of the plaintiff's money. The burden of proof was clearly shifted to defendant.

The defendant having possession of the certificates, the plaintiff was not required to produce and surrender them; but, if that were necessary, it was done when the defendant was compelled to produce them and submit them to the court. Having come into the possession of them unlawfully, defendant held them for the plaintiff.

The judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The complaint contains six counts. The first avers that on January 19, 1885, defendant "made and executed unto the plaintiff its certain paper writing whereby it promised to pay unto plaintiff, or his order, the sum of two hundred and fifty [$250] dollars," and that afterwards plaintiff demanded payment of the same, and defendant has not paid the same, nor any part thereof. There is no averment of the specific character of the "paper writing," or that it was ever delivered to plaintiff, or that he ever had possession of it, or that he was ever the owner or holder of it, or that he ever presented it at the bank of defendant for payment. The other five counts are similar to the first, except that in each count a "paper writing" of a different date and for a different amount is averred. The largest amount named in either count is $300; and the latest date, the second day of March, 1885. The aggregate amount of all the paper writings was $1,250, for which sum, with interest, judgment was rendered.

At the trial, plaintiff, to prove the averments of his complaint, procured from the custody of defendant six paper writings, each marked "Paid" on its face, and introduced them in evidence, against the objections and exceptions of defendant. They proved to be paper writings in the form of certificates of deposit, in which plaintiff was named as depositor. The one first in date—and the others were the same, mutatis mutandis—was as follows: "N. Honig has deposited in this bank $250 in gold coin, payable to self or order on return of this certificate, properly indorsed." It was properly signed by the officers of the bank, and was indorsed, "N. HONIG, by S. A. PEYSER." Across its face it was marked with a blue stamp: "Paid 23 Paying Teller."

The undisputed facts of the transaction are these: On the said nineteenth of January—the date of first certificate—one S. A. Peyser went into the bank of defendant and deposited $250, and took for it a certificate of deposit. It is the custom of the bank, when a man wants a certificate of deposit, to request him to write his name in a signature book, or book of identification. Opposite his signature is written the number of the certificate issued him, with date, amount, etc., so that, when it is presented for payment, the paying teller, by comparing the signature by which it is indorsed with the signature previously written in the book, may see that they are the same, and that, therefore, the certificate is "properly indorsed." In accordance with this requirement, Peyser wrote in the signature book "N. Honig, by S. A. Peyser," under the heading, "To Whose Order," and the certificate was issued and delivered to him with "N. Honig" named as depositor. In a few days Peyser returned with the certificate indorsed just as written in the signature book,— "N. HONIG, by S. A. PEYSER,"—was paid the money, and delivered up the certificate to the bank for cancellation. Shortly afterwards he made another deposit, and received another certificate, in the same way, which, in a few days, was paid to him in like manner; and so on, until the six certificates had been thus issued and paid, except that one of them was payable to "N. Honig, per S. A. Peyser," and another was also indorsed by a firm called "Davis & Co.," and seems to have passed through the clearing-house. Each time, Peyser wrote in the signature book, "N. Honig, by S. A. Peyser," and the certificate was thus indorsed before payment. Each certificate was paid before its successor was issued, so that the greatest amount which Peyser ever had at the bank at any one time was $300.

While these transactions were taking place, the plaintiff, Honig, knew nothing whatever about them. He had never authorized Peyser to deposit any of his money at that bank, and did not know that Peyser had made any deposits there, of any character. Honig had never been a customer of the bank, had no account there of any kind, and had never himself received from it any certificate of deposit; and he was entirely unknown to the bank. But, after the transactions were concluded, and all the certificates had been paid and taken up by the bank, the said Peyser died; and, a few months after his death, plaintiff, having then learned of these transactions, demanded of the defendant that it should pay all of said certificates over again to him; and, the demand being refused, this action was commenced. He made no proof at the trial that any of the money deposited by Peyser belonged to him, (plaintiff,) but he relied entirely on the mere fact that his name was in the certificates as depositor.

Upon these facts I do not think that plaintiff was entitled to judgment; and therefore I do not deem it necessary to discuss at length appellant's two points, that the complaint was not sufficient, and that the certificates were not admissible in evidence. I do not see how the principles of law applicable to the peculiar qualities of negotiable paper can be invoked in this case. Those principles apply, ordinarily, when the rights of sureties, indorsees, guarantors, and third persons generally, intervene. If the certificates invoked in this case had not contained the words "or order," or any equivalent words, the claim of plaintiff would not have been of any less legal value. If it be shown that a negotiable instrument, made by A. to B., was without consideration, B. cannot maintain an action upon it against A. Between the original parties there is not often any difference whether a bailment or debt be evidenced by a simple receipt or a negotiable promise, except that, in the latter case, a consideration is presumed. If the money deposited by Peyser with defendant was not the money of plaintiff, upon what principle can he recover in this action? If he had obtained possession of the certificates before payment, and then had demanded payment, or had indorsed them to third parties, different questions might have arisen. The only parties to the contract were the bank and Peyser; part of that contract was that the certificates should have the indorsement which had been written in the book of identification; they were returned with that indorsement; the money was paid, and the instruments were taken up and canceled; and thus the contract was executed and ended before there was any assertion of the claim—real or pretended—of plaintiff.

The only position having any strength which plaintiff could take, is that the certificates, being in form negotiable, import a consideration; that is, make a prima facie case of ownership of the money by plaintiff. Plaintiff, however, in his testimony, entirely repudiates the agency of Peyser in every part of the transaction. He says that he knew nothing about the certificates until after Peyser's death. But, if Peyser was not plaintiff's agent in receiving the certificates, then the insertion of plaintiff's name therein goes for naught, and he can base no right thereon. On the other hand, if, notwithstanding his testimony, he seeks now to adopt and ratify the agency of Peyser, he must adopt the whole of that agency, or none. Story, Ag. § 250. But suppose it be assumed that the money belonged to plaintiff, and was in the possession of Peyser, as his agent, how would the case stand then? It has been held in some cases that an original bailor may maintain detinue against a second bailee; but never, we apprehend, where the second bailee has safely redelivered the thing bailed, according to his contract, to the first bailee, before notice and demand by the original bailor. Story, Bailm. §§ 105-107. If B., having the custody of money of A., intrusts it to C., for temporary safe-keeping, and C. returns it to B. before any notice or demand by A., then A. has no action, either ex contractu or ex delicto, against C., because C. has neither broken a contract, nor done a wrong.

However, I think that no case can be found where an action has been successfully maintained directly upon a negotiable instrument, not lost or destroyed before cancellation, when the plaintiff had never been in possession of the instrument, and had never known of its existence until after its existence had ended. Here, the appellant was in possession of the instruments sued on at the time the action was commenced, claiming to own them as canceled obligations. And it has been directly held in Crandall v. Schroepfel, 1 Hun, 557, that a party claiming to own a promissory note in the possession of another, who also claims to own it, cannot maintain action on it, and that the title to the note cannot be settled in such an action. Of course, this case differs widely from the common case where a man opens a general account with a bank, and a contract relation between the parties exists from the start. There the original party alone has the right to draw against the account, no matter by whom he may send deposits. It no doubt would have been more regular and safer if appellant had required Peyser to take the certificates in his own name, and dangerous complications might have arisen; but, under the facts here, in my opinion, there is no phase of justice, and no rule of law, which compels appellant to repay these dead and canceled instruments.

PATERSON, J. I dissent. The bank and Peyser had the right to enter into an agreement that the former should pay the money deposited by the latter to the order of "N. Honig, by S. A. Peyser," and this agreement was binding, unless the rights of innocent parties intervened. The instrument never was delivered to Honig. The fact that it is negotiable in form is immaterial. If plaintiff's right to recover depends upon the agency of Peyser, it is sufficient to say that the plaintiff must ratify or repudiate all of his acts. He cannot ratify the deposit, and repudiate the indorsement. There is nothing to show that plaintiff owned the money deposited by Peyser. At most, the plaintiff ought not to recover more than $300.

PENDERGRASS, Adm'r, etc., v. CROSS, Judge, etc. (No. 12,243.)

NEW TRIAL.—MOTION FOR AMENDED STATEMENT—PRESENTING WITHIN REASONABLE TIME.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, prescribing the time within which an amended statement, in motion for a new trial, must be presented for settlement, does not apply when the amendments are adopted by the moving party, and in such case the statement so amended may be presented within a reasonable time, (Id. subd. 3;) and, the trial judge having decided that the time of presentment was reasonable, it is his duty to settle and certify the statement.

In bank. Petition for writ of mandate to superior court, Tulare county; W. W. CROSS, Judge.

Sidney V. Smith, for petitioner.

BY THE COURT. A judgment for defendant was entered in an action wherein the petitioner herein was plaintiff, and one Burris was defendant. The plaintiff in that action gave notice of intention to move for a new trial, and served on defendant's attorney a draft statement of the case. Within statutory time the defendant served amendments to the statement, which were adopted by the plaintiff. We say the amendments were adopted, because the plaintiff did not indicate his non-adoption of them by serving notice that the statement and amendments would be presented to the judge for settlement, as prescribed in Code Civil Proc. § 659. The plaintiff, having adopted the amendments, delivered the statement as amended to the clerk, for the judge, to be settled, (the judge being absent from the county,) after the expiration of the time within which the statement and amendments must (upon notice) have been presented to the judge for settlement, or delivered to the clerk for him, had the amendments not been adopted by the plaintiff. The petitioner now prays that the judge be ordered by mandate to settle and certify the statement; the judge having refused to settle it.

Code Civil Proc. subd 3, § 659, does not limit the time within which a statement as amended—when the amendments are adopted by the moving party—shall be presented to the judge, or delivered to the clerk for settlement. It may be done in a reasonable time. The superior judge, as appears from his answer herein, decided that the time was reasonable, provided the law permits a statement as amended, where the amendments are adopted, to be presented for settlement, or to be delivered to the clerk, for the judge, after the time within which the statement and amendments must be presented to the judge, or delivered to the clerk, in cases where the amendments are not agreed to; but that the moving party had neglected "to pursue the proper steps to have said statement settled within the time required by law." The judge having so held that the statement was delivered to the clerk within a reasonable time, it was his duty to settle and certify the statement.

Let the writ issue.

BOWDEN v. PIERCE. (No. 11,004.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 27, 1887.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—EXECUTOR DE SON TORT—CALIFORNIA PROBATE PRACTICE.

There is no such officer as executor de son tort recognized under the California probate practice.

2. SAME—EXECUTOR DE SON TORT—REFUSAL TO ACT.

The fact that one who was named in a will as executor applied for letters, which the court granted, does not make him a trustee of the estate, when he refused or neglected to qualify; and contracts made by him with the executrix, if fair and just, are not void, although they redounded to his benefit.

AMADOR QUEEN MIN. CO. v. DEWITT. (No. 12,030.)*(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1887.)EMINENT DOMAIN—CONDEMNATION OF MINING PROPERTY BY PRIVATE CORPORATION.

Plaintiff, a private corporation, owned two mining claims, and between them was located a mining claim owned by defendant, through which he had constructed a tunnel for his private use. This tunnel the plaintiff sought to condemn, for the purpose of enabling it to work its mines. Held that, plaintiff being a private corporation, the action could not be maintained under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1238, sub. 5,—which authorizes the condemnation of “roads, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes, and dumping places for working mines; also outlets, natural or otherwise, for the flow, deposit, or conduct of tailings or refuse-matter from mines,”—so as to appropriate the property of the defendant to the private use of the plaintiff.¹

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Amador county; C. B. ARMSTRONG, Judge. Stewart & Herrin and John A. Eaton, for appellant. Geil & Morehouse, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to condemn a right of way through a tunnel under defendant's mining claim. The facts of the case as they appear in the complaint may be briefly stated as follows:

¹That the state has no right to take private property for any but a public use, and as to what are such public uses as will justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain, see Johnston's Appeal, (Pa.) 7 Atl. Rep. 167; Heick v. Voight, (Ind.) 11 N. E. Rep. 306, and note; Sholl v. Coal Co., (Ill.) 10 N. E. Rep. 199; In re Railroad Co., (N. Y.) 8 N. E. Rep. 548, and note.

The plaintiff owns two mining claims in Amador county, one situated in a ravine known as "Hunt's Gulch," and the other in a ravine known as "Murphy's Gulch." Between these two claims is a high ridge of land, which is also a mining claim, and is owned by defendant. On its claim in Hunt's gulch plaintiff has a quartz-mill, and in its claim in Murphy's gulch is a large amount of valuable gold-bearing ore. There is a tunnel, constructed by plaintiff and defendant, which extends from a point near plaintiff's quartz-mill, through and under defendant's claim to Murphy's gulch. Plaintiff is working its mine in Murphy's gulch, and is transporting the ore taken therefrom through the tunnel to its mill, and without a right of way through the tunnel for the purpose of so transporting the ore, it cannot continue to work or develop its said mine. The defendant, in May, 1882, obtained a patent from the United States for his mining claim, which contained, among other things, the following condition of sale: "That in the absence of necessary legislation by congress, the legislature of California may provide rules for working the mining claim or premises hereby granted, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to its complete development." This condition of sale was inserted in the patent in pursuance of the provisions of section 2338, Rev. St. U. S., which reads as follows: "As a condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by congress, the local legislature of any state or territory may provide rules for working mines, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development; and these conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent."

The prayer is that "the damages which defendant will sustain by reason of a right of way granted to plaintiff through said tunnel, for the purpose of working plaintiff's said mine in Murphy's gulch, be assessed, and that on the payment of the damages so assessed by this honorable court to the defendant, a right of way for working and developing plaintiff's said mine in Murphy's gulch, through said tunnel, may be condemned by this honorable court," etc.

The defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained, and thereupon, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of defendant.

It is admitted that there was and is no legislation by congress providing rules for working mines, and none by the state except section 1238, Code Civil Proc. That section, in subdivision 5, authorizes the condemnation of "roads, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes, and dumping places for working mines; also outlets, natural or otherwise, for the flow, deposit, or conduct of tailings or refuse-matter from mines."

It is contended, on behalf of appellant, that, under the above quoted section of the Revised Statutes, a right of way through the defendant's mine was reserved by the United States, and that this right of way may be taken and used by any other miner, whenever it becomes necessary to use it in working his mine, upon such terms and conditions as the state legislature may have prescribed. It is further contended that the provisions of section 1238, Code Civil Proc., constitute sufficient legislation by the state to meet the requirements of the case, and to justify the plaintiff in demanding the relief asked for. But was there any such reservation? We are unable to see how the language used can be construed to have such a meaning, and evidently the department of the interior did not so understand it when it issued the patent to the defendant. However this may be, we are satisfied that, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to, the plaintiff cannot have a right of way through defendant's mine condemned for its use in working its own mine. The mine of defendant is his private property, and it is clear that the plaintiff asks for the condemnation in order that it may appropriate a way through that property for its private use. This cannot be done. It was held in Channel Co. v. Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 269, that mining, like the plaintiff's, is a private industry, and that private property cannot be condemned for such a use. We think that case decisive of this, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

I concur: HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte YOUNG AH GOW, on Habeas Corpus. (No. 20,296.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 26, 1887.)

LARCENY — SECOND OFFENSE — COURT MAY IMPOSE PUNISHMENT FOR, UPON VERDICT OF "GUILTY OF PETIT LARCENY."

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 667, providing a more severe punishment on conviction for a second offense of petit larceny, the court may, on a verdict of "guilty of petit larceny," impose a sentence for petit larceny, second offense; the previous conviction being charged in the information, and confessed by the defendant. McKINSTRY, J., dissenting.

In bank. Petition for a writ of habeas corpus to superior court, San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

E. B. Stonehill, Dist. Atty., (D. W. Knox, of counsel,) for the People. Henry I. Kowalsky and Lyman I. Mowry, for petitioner.

THORNTON, J. The return shows that the petitioner for the writ was imprisoned on a commitment issued out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, of which the following is a copy:

"COMMITMENT.

"In the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, State of California, Department Five.

"TUESDAY, March 29, 1887 Present: Hon. JOHN HUNT, Judge.

"The People of the State of California vs. Young Ah Gow.

"Convicted of Petit Larceny—Second Offense.

"The district attorney, with the defendant and his counsel, Mr. L. J. Mowry, came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the information duly presented and filed on the seventeenth day of February, 1887, by the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, charging said defendant with the crime of petit larceny, second offense; of his arraignment and plea of 'not guilty, as charged in said information;' of his trial and the verdict of the jury, on the sixteenth day of March, 1887, 'Guilty as charged.' And defendant's motion for a new trial herein having been denied by the court, defendant by his counsel excepting thereto, the defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which defendant replied he had none. And no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, thereupon the court renders its judgment: That whereas, the said Young Ah Gow having been duly convicted in this court of the crime of petit larceny, second offense, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said Young Ah Gow be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California, at San Quentin, for the term of five (5) years. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the said city and county, to be by him delivered into the custody of the proper officers of said state prison at San Quentin.

"OFFICE OF THE COUNTY CLERK OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

"I, William J. Ruddick, county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, and ex officio clerk of said superior court thereof, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct copy of the judgment entered on the minutes of said court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, in the above-entitled cause, as appears of record in my office.

"Attest my hand and the seal of the said superior court this twenty-ninth day of March, A. D. 1887

"WM. J. RUDDICK, Clerk.

[Seal.]

"By BEVL. McNULTY, Deputy-Clerk."

From the record in the cause of People v. Young Ah Gow (the petitioner) it appears that the defendant was charged by information with the crime of petty larceny, and previous convictions for crimes committed before the petty larceny charged in the information, as follows: Five several convictions of petty larceny, one of burglary, and another of burglary in the second degree. On his arraignment the information was read to him, and he pleaded not guilty of the offense charged in the information, and voluntarily confessed every prior conviction set forth therein.

The plea exhibits a rare aggregation of crime, and a clear confession. We subjoin it: "I am not guilty of the offense charged in the information; and I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of petit larceny in the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the fifth day of October, 1880, as set forth in the information. I confess that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of burglary in the municipal criminal court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the thirtieth day of December, 1873, as set forth in the information. I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of petit larceny in the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the sixth day of August, 1877, as set forth in the information. I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of petit larceny in the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the third day of January, 1879, as set forth in the information. I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of petit larceny in the police judge's court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the fifth day of October, 1880, as set forth in the information. I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of petit larceny in the superior court, department No. eleven, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the thirteenth day of November, 1880, as set forth in the information. I confess and admit that I was, before the alleged commission of said offense, convicted of the crime of burglary, second degree, in the superior court of the county of Sacramento, state of California, on or about the twentieth day of November, 1881, as set forth in the information."

The cause was tried before a jury. The defendant introduced no testimony. The plea of not guilty was alone submitted to the jury, who, after hearing the testimony, without leaving their seats, rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of petit larceny." Thereupon the court proceeded to render its judgment, adjudging the defendant guilty of petit larceny, second offense, and to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of five years. (The return above quoted is a copy of the judgment.)

We are asked on this showing to discharge the petitioner from custody, on the ground of excess of jurisdiction by the court in the sentence pronounced. That the court had jurisdiction of the petit larceny, and of the prior convictions, is not denied. But the point is deliberately made here that the conviction was only for petty larceny, and that the court had no authority to sentence petitioner to an imprisonment in the state prison upon such conviction. But the judgment in the record shows plainly that the sentence was for petit larceny, second offense. In other words, the sentence was for the petit larceny charged in the information, and a previous conviction of the same offense. Pen. Code, § 1207; In re King, 28 Cal. 247; Ex parte Murray, 43 Cal. 457. And under such circumstances the court can pronounce such a sentence as the one here imposed. See Pen. Code, § 667, first clause of the section, and subdivision 3. The court is by these clauses clearly invested with authority to impose such sentence. The judgment follows the verdict and confession of defendant, and is in all respects regular. There were other matters, referred to on the argument, which relate merely to the exercise of jurisdiction, and do not go to the jurisdiction of the court. They merely relate to the procedure on the trial, and are not per se jurisdictional. If they showed error committed in the trial court, they could only be reviewed on regular proceedings in an appeal court. We will add here, however, that we find no error in the record. The trial was according to the rule, and no right of the defendant was trespassed upon. The court followed on the trial the rulings of this court in regard to arraignment, plea, submission to jury, and verdict, in People v. Lewis, 64 Cal. 401, 1 Pac. Rep. 490, and People v. Brooks, 65 Cal. 296, 4 Pac. Rep. 7, and contravened nothing said in People v. King, 64 Cal. 338.

On the argument, some remarks were made on the decisions of this court in the cases just above cited. They were spoken of as inharmonious and contradictory. A careful examination of the opinions in the causes will show that this is not so. We will consider the cases in their order.

People v. King was first decided, the opinion having been filed on the twenty-sixth of November, 1883. King was convicted of petit larceny on an information charging him with the commission of grand larceny, and also with having suffered a previous conviction for felony. The error on which the cause was reversed was as to the sentence pronounced on the verdict. The point is discussed in the opinion, and the points herein noticed were made. On his arraignment King was asked by the court whether he had suffered the previous conviction charged in the information. He pleaded not guilty to the specific offense charged, and admitted the previous conviction. This court said the arraignment was had on a section of the Penal Code (1025) which had been repealed, and that the question asked by the court as to the prior conviction was illegal. Further on in the opinion the court said: "No person accused of a public offense can be required by an unauthorized question asked him at his arraignment to criminate himself," citing Pen. Code, § 688. The question being illegal, King "was not bound to answer it, and his answer could not be read against him, as equivalent to the verdict of guilty, upon which, on conviction, with a verdict of petit larceny, he could be adjudged guilty and punished." The opinion proceeds on the idea that King had been arraigned in a mode unauthorized by law; that the plea of not guilty should be considered as extending to the whole information, as denying all its allegations, both as to the specific offense charged, and the prior conviction, and therefore he had a right to have the jury pass on them; that the jury did pass on them, and found a verdict of guilty of petit larceny. This was regarded by the court as a finding that the previous conviction was not true. We therefore held that the punishment on the verdict could only be for petit larceny, under Pen. Code, § 490, and that confinement in the state prison was not the punishment allowed by law.

The only point really decided was that the sentence was illegal. The observations in the opinion were made in discussing this point, and were made to enforce the conclusion that the sentence to the state prison was not authorized by the law. The starting point in the reasoning was the illegality of the arraignment, which, it is stated, was had under a repealed statute, (section 1025 of the Penal Code.) The illegal part of the plea was there rejected, and it was held to be a plea of not guilty to the whole information. In this view the jury must pass on all the issues. It was held that it did so, in finding the verdict; affirming guilt only as to petit larceny. The verdict was construed as negating the existence of the previous conviction, holding it not to be true. On this construction of the verdict it was held the judgment or sentence could only pronounce the punishment appropriate to petit larceny, which was not imprisonment in the state prison.

People v. Lewis was heard and decided in the month following that in which the judgment was rendered in People v. King, viz., on December 29, 1883. In Lewis' Case the indictment was for grand larceny and previous conviction of a like offense. On his arraignment Lewis pleaded not guilty to the offense charged in the indictment. The court below held this plea as extending to all the averments of the indictment,—to the larceny charged, as well as the previous conviction. Lewis, on the trial, offered to plead guilty to the previous conviction. This the court refused to allow. Construing the plea as above stated, that the previous conviction was denied, the court directed the jury as to the form of the verdict, in accordance with section 1158 of the Penal Code, and the jury found the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of grand larceny, and we find the charge of previous conviction true." The above was sustained by this court, and the action of the trial court approved and affirmed. In Lewis' Case the trial court did what this court said in King's Case would have been correct. The defendant was allowed to plead, according to the usual and lawful mode, to the whole indictment. This he did in his plea of not guilty. No question was asked on the arraignment as to the previous conviction. The arraignment was had under the section of the Code relating to arraignments in criminal actions generally. Sections 988, 1017. He was not arraigned under the repealed section, (1025,) as King was. We think it clear that if King had been arraigned as Lewis was, and the verdict in his case found as in Lewis' Case, the court would, on the views expressed in the opinion in King's Case, have held that the judgment in King's Case was without error. In fine, the elements in Lewis' Case were what the court, speaking by McKEE, J., said were lacking in King's Case. Lewis' Case had the requisite elements, and was affirmed. King's Case lacked them, and was disapproved.

People v. Brooks was decided May 29, 1884. Brooks was charged on an information with the offense of an assault with intent to commit robbery, and a previous conviction of grand larceny. The defendant was arraigned under section 988 of the Penal Code, as Lewis was, and as this court said should have been done in King's Case. This court said, in Brooks' Case, in regard to this arraignment, that the special mode of arraignment prescribed by section 1025 no longer existing, as that section had been repealed, the trial court had to resort to section 988, which prescribed the mode of arraignment in all cases. And it will be here observed, this was the only mode then left for arraignment. If the arraignment was not had under section 988, there was no mode of arraignment provided by statute. Of necessity, the court below was compelled to resort to section 988 as its only guide for arraigning a person charged with a criminal offense. If this mode did not exist, there was no other, unless the court could resort to the common-law mode. On Brooks' arraignment he pleaded not guilty of the offense charged, and "confesses and admits that he was before the alleged commission of the offense convicted of the crime of grand larceny, as set forth in the information." In this case (Brooks') the only question asked was, "Guilty or not guilty?" The question held to be illegal was not put to him. It was further held in Brooks' Case that the voluntary confession was legal. Such voluntary confession is allowed by law. A party may confess his guilt as well in court as out of court. The verdict was held to be proper, and that it was not necessary after the voluntary confession that the jury should find as to the previous conviction. This is in accordance with section 1158 of the Penal Code, which we here insert:

"Sec. 1158. Whenever the fact of a previous conviction of another offense is charged in an indictment or information, the jury, if they find a verdict of guilty of the offense with which he is charged, must also, unless the answer of the defendant admits the charge, find whether or not he has suffered such previous conviction. The verdict of the jury upon a charge of previous conviction may be: 'We find the charge of previous conviction true,' or, 'We find the charge of previous conviction not true;' as they find that the defendant has or has not suffered such conviction."

And this court further held, in the Case of Brooks, that the court might well render judgment on the verdict and the confession under section 1158. The court further held that the confession of the previous conviction is the answer of section 1158. That answer meant that, or it meant nothing. We see no other meaning that can be attributed to the word "answer." We must either give it that meaning or elide it from the statute, which we are not allowed to do. We further held that the first subdivision of section 1093 of the Penal Code allows such confession, and quoted this portion of section 1093 to which reference was made. It was further said that, when confession is made under section 1093, that portion of the information is not read to the jury on the trial, and in fact does not go to the jury, (section 1158,) and the jury, therefore, are not allowed to pass on it. We insert here the repealed sections, and that portion of section 1093 above referred to:

"Sec. 969. In charging in an indictment the fact of a previous conviction of a felony, or of an attempt to commit an offense which, if perpetrated, would have been a felony, or of petty larceny, it is sufficient to state 'that the defendant, before the commission of the offense charged in this indictment, was, in [giving the title of the court in which the conviction was had] convicted of a felony, [or attempt, etc., or of petty larceny.]' If more than one previous conviction be charged in the indictment, the date of the judgment upon each conviction shall be stated, and not more than two previous convictions shall be charged in any one indictment."

"Sec. 1025. When a defendant, who is charged in the indictment with having suffered a previous conviction, pleads either guilty or not guilty of the offense for which he is indicted, he must be asked whether he has suffered such previous conviction. If he answers that he has, his answer shall be entered by the clerk in the minutes of the court, and shall, unless withdrawn by consent of the court, be conclusive of the fact of his having suffered such previous conviction in all subsequent proceedings. If he answers that he has not, his answer shall be entered by the clerk in the minutes of the court; and the question whether or not he has suffered such previous conviction shall be tried by the jury which tries the issues upon the plea of 'not guilty,' or, in case of a plea of 'guilty,' by a jury impaneled for that purpose. The refusal of the defendant to answer is equivalent to a denial that he has suffered such previous conviction. In case the defendant pleads 'not guilty,' and answers that he has suffered the previous conviction, the charge of the previous conviction shall not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial."

"Sec. 1093. The jury having been impaneled and sworn, the trial must proceed in the following order, unless otherwise directed by the court: (1) If the indictment or information be for felony, the clerk must read it, and state the plea of the defendant to the jury; and in cases where it charges a previous conviction, and the defendant has confessed the same, the clerk, in reading it, shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous convictions. In all other cases this formality may be dispensed with."

Now, considering the opinions in the cases together, where is the inharmony or contradiction in the judgments rendered? In construing the opinion in People v. King, attention must be given to its peculiar features, and the language used therein in regard to them. In Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 399, MARSHALL, C. J., speaking, for the court, of some dicta of that court in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, observed as follows: "It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions, in every opinion, are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision. The reason of this maxim is obvious. The question actually before the court is investigated with care, and considered in its full extent. Other principles, which may serve to illustrate it, are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all other cases is seldom completely investigated." In Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 248, BEST, chief justice of the common pleas, used this language with reference to an opinion cited on the argument: "There are expressions used by the chief justice in that case which seem to bear on the present; but the expressions of every judge must be taken with reference to the case on which he decides, otherwise the law will get into extreme confusion. That is what we are to look at in all cases. The manner in which he is arguing is not the thing; it is the principle he is deciding. If ever I could have imagined it could have been extended to such a case as this, I would have protested against, though I could not have prevented, the decision. I would, in my place, have protested against it, for I should have seen the injustice and confusion to which such a doctrine would have been liable to be extended. I am quite satisfied that not one of the learned judges who decided that case ever conceived that its authority could be pressed to the extent to which it has been pressed in this case."

We take it to be a sound rule that the expressions of a judge in an opinion must be taken with reference to the case on which he decides; and if expressions there used go beyond the case, they may be respected, but "ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent case when the very point is presented for decision." The case (King's) before the court was one in which it was first held that the arraignment was had in a mode which was illegal. It was illegal in that a question was asked which was not allowed, since section 1025, which allowed it, had been repealed. The court regarded the plea of not guilty as alone before the court on which the trial was to be had; and the answer was, for the reasons above given, rejected as not in the plea. It was in reference to this state of the case that the court said that "the jury must, by their verdict, find the charge of a previous conviction true or not true." Upon the construction of the plea put upon it by the court, that it was only "not guilty," all the allegations of the information were put in issue, and all must be passed on by the jury. It was in this view that the court said that both charges must be proved, and both must be found upon by the jury. That the defendant must plead to both charges, all the three cases referred to above hold. This was done in all the cases,—in the first case by "not guilty;" and the other cases by "not guilty," and not guilty and a confession of the previous convictions.

In commenting on section 1158, the court did say, in King's Case, that the exception in section 1158, in relation to the rule requiring an issue of fact to be tried as prescribed in that section, being swept away by the repeal of the section of the Code which required an answer to be made, (the reference here was to section 1025,) the defendant stood for trial on his plea of "not guilty." But it had been clearly held in the preceding part of the opinion that the plea of "not guilty" was the only plea before the court. There was no necessity for saying that this was in consequence of the law requiring the answer having been swept away by the repeal of section 1025, which allowed it to be made. This part of the opinion was entirely obiter,—outside of the case. The court must have overlooked section 1093, which refers to such answer by the words "and the defendant has confessed the same," in connection with section 1158, where the answer of defendant in regard to the previous conviction is referred to, neither of which sections quoted above in full (1093 or 1158) had been repealed, and still held their place for the guidance of courts in such cases as those of King, Lewis, and Brooks. The observations of this court in King's Case in regard to section 1158 were made in a cause where the facts were different from the one before us; they relate to a point not necessary to be decided in King's Case, and, though they should be respected, "ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit where the very point is presented for decision." This very point was presented for decision in Brooks' Case.

We will observe here, in relation to the sections above referred to, that 969 was modified in 1874 (see amendments to Codes 1873-74, p. 438) so as to read as it did when repealed April 9, 1880. Section 1025, not in the original Code, was inserted in 1874. See amendments above cited, p. 439. The form of section 1158 in the Code as first adopted was changed in 1874. By the act of April 9, 1880, sections 969 and 1025 were repealed. See amendments to Codes for 1880, part relating to Pen. Code, p. 15, § 30, and Id. p. 19, § 56. In 1874, § 1093 was amended. See amendments of 1874, supra, p. 444. By the act of 1880, (April 9th,) sections 1158 and 1093 were again amended so as to read as they did when the cases above discussed were decided. See amendments of 1880 to Pen. Code, § 64, p. 21, and section 62, p. 24. So it will be perceived that on the same day, and by the same act, sections 969 and 1025 were repealed, and 1093 and 1158 were amended. In so framing the Code, the legislature doubtless came to the conclusion that 1093 and 1158, as they were then framed, furnished a complete system. The above history of the legislation shows that, in the construction put on these sections in Brooks' Case, this court acted in accordance with the legislative intent.

We cannot perceive any lack of jurisdiction in the court in pronouncing the sentence in the case of the petitioner here, and he is therefore remanded to the custody of the proper officer, to be dealt with according to law. Ordered accordingly.

HUTCHINSON v. AINSWORTH and another. (No. 9,603.)

1. MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—DEFECTIVE CERTIFICATE—REFORMATION—LIMITATION OF ACTION.

A mortgage was executed September 3, 1878, and foreclosure was commenced March 25, 1880. On August 19, 1880, plaintiff asked leave to amend her complaint so as to obtain a reformation of the certificate of acknowledgment of the mortgage. The court denied plaintiff's request, but its judgment was reversed March 28, 1883, and, subsequently, such amended complaint was filed. Held, that whether the right to a reformation is or is not barred in three years from the date of the mistake, the amended complaint should be treated as having been filed at the date of the application, and therefore the statute of limitations would not prevent such reformation.

2. SAME—DEFECTIVE CERTIFICATE—RECORDING—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER WITH NOTICE.

A mortgage properly executed and acknowledged, although the certificate of acknowledgment is defective, is valid against a subsequent purchaser having knowledge of it as recorded, though not of its proper acknowledgment, where he parted with no value, and incurred no liability, except a contingent liability which never became fixed.

3. SAME—REFORMATION—MISTAKE—CONFLICT OF EVIDENCE NOT FATAL TO RELIEF.

While, in actions for reformation of written instruments, the mistake must be established in a clear and convincing manner to the entire satisfaction of the court, relief will not be denied simply because there is a conflict in the evidence upon the question of a mistake.

4. SAME—DECREE.

In an action to reform a defective certificate of acknowledgment of a mortgage, the notary who took the acknowledgment testified explicitly to the observance of all the requisites to a valid acknowledgment, and to the mistake in attaching the defective certificate. Held sufficient to sustain a decree of reformation.¹

5. SAME—NOTARY NOT NECESSARY PARTY DEFENDANT.

In a suit for reformation of a certificate of acknowledgment, the notary who took the acknowledgment is not a necessary party defendant.

6. SAME—PLEADING—FORECLOSURE AND REFORMATION SINGLE CAUSE OF ACTION.

A complaint which, in addition to the necessary averments and demand for relief in mortgage foreclosure, contains also the proper allegations and demand for reformation of the certificate of acknowledgment of the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, states but one cause of action.

In bank. Appeal from superior court. Alameda county; A. M. CRANE, Judge.

W. B. Tyler, for appellants. William Reade and W. C. Belcher, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This cause was here on a former appeal, the decision on which is reported in 63 Cal. 286. In 1878, the defendants, Anna Ainsworth and A. G. Ainsworth, made their promissory note to Margaret M. Hutchinson for $3,500, payable on the third day of September, 1879, with interest at 10 per cent. per annum. The note was given for money loaned to said defendant by plaintiff, who is a married woman, and was her separate property. To secure the payment of the promissory note, Anna Hutchinson executed the mortgage to foreclose which this action is brought. The property mortgaged was the separate property of Anna Ainsworth, who is a married woman. The acknowledgment made by said Anna Ainsworth is found to have been properly taken; but the notary, in certifying thereto, failed to specify that he made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, separate from, and without the hearing of, her husband. A copy of the certificate is set out in the report of the case on the former appeal. In that appeal this court reversed the judgment and order of the court below, upon the ground of error in refusing plaintiff's application to amend her complaint so as to show that the acknowledgment was actually taken in compliance with the statute, with a view to a judgment correcting the certificate, as provided by section 1202 of the Civil Code.

The action was brought March 25, 1880. Upon the return of the cause to the court below, and on the eleventh day of May, 1883, the complaint was amended, averring the acknowledgment to have been properly taken, and asking that the certificate be reformed and corrected. To this amended complaint defendant demurred, upon the grounds, among others: (1) That there is a non-joinder of parties defendant, in that Will. H. Burrill, the notary who took the acknowledgment, should have been made a defendant; (2) that two causes of action are joined in the complaint without being separately stated; (3) that the cause of action is barred by Code Civil Proc. subd. 4, § 338. The demurrer was overruled, and this action is assigned as error.

The demurrer was properly overruled. The notary was not a necessary party defendant to the reformation of his certificate. The reformation, if made at all, could only be so made by the judgment of the court. Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 515.

The objection of the demurrer is not that two causes of action are improperly united, but that they are contained in the complaint, and are not separrately stated. Waiving the question whether or not a proper uniting of two causes of action in the same complaint, without stating them separately, is a cause for demurrer, we are of opinion the complaint states but one cause of action. "An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another, for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense." Code Civil Proc. § 22. The facts upon which the plaintiff's right to sue is based, and upon which the defendant's duty has arisen, coupled with the facts which constitute the latter's wrong, make up the cause of action. If these facts, taken together, give a unity of right, they constitute but one cause of action.

¹As to the mistakes against which equity will relieve, and the proof necessary to obtain a reformation of a written instrument, see Benson v. Markoe, (Minn.) 33 N. W. Rep. 38; Guilmartin v. Urquhart, (Ala.) 1 South. Rep. 897, and note; Griffith v. County of Sebastian, (Ark.) 3 S. W. Rep. 886, and note; Bailey v. Insurance Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 250, 256.

In equity the relief or the enforcement of a single right may be varied, and the facts essential to such relief may be set out without objection, as auxiliary to the right to be enforced. In the case at bar the object of the action is to collect a single debt, and to enforce a single lien, to redress a single wrong. To accomplish this object dual relief is sought, but this circumstance, so frequent in equity, does not constitute two causes of action. Pomeroy, at section 459 of his work on Remedies, in discussing this question, uses the following language: "Actions brought to reform instruments in writing, such as policies of insurance and other contracts, mortgages, deeds of conveyance, and the like, and to enforce the same as reformed by judgments for the recovery of the money due on the contracts, or for the foreclosure of the mortgages, or for the recovery of possession of the land conveyed by the deed, fall within the same general principle. One cause of action only is stated in such cases, however various may be the reliefs demanded and granted." Meyer v. Van Collem, 7 Abb. Pr. 222; McClurg v. Phillips, 49 Mo. 315.

Is the cause of action barred by the statute of limitations? To repeat: The note and mortgage were executed September 3, 1878, and fell due September 3, 1879. Suit brought March 25, 1880. Leave to amend the complaint was asked and refused by the court at the first trial on the nineteenth day of August, 1880. Judgment reversed, March 28, 1883. Amended complaint filed May 11, 1883. It will be observed that three years had not elapsed from September 3, 1878, the date of the mistake in the certificate, when plaintiff asked and was denied the privilege of amending her complaint so as to have such mistake corrected. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff having a legal right to file her amended pleading, and having been prevented from so doing by the act of defendants, and through the error of the court below, it should, by application of the doctrine of relation, be deemed and treated as having been filed as of the date of the application and refusal. If A. has a right to answer a complaint filed against him, which right is denied by the nisi prius court, after an appeal and reversal of the order denying such right, he cannot be met with the answer that his time to answer has expired under the statute. This doctrine is quite different from that which prevents a party from taking advantage of a disability, unless it existed in his favor at the time that the statute began to run. A disability to sue may be a misfortune, but, as it cannot be attributed to the acts of others, it must be borne by the party upon whom it rests, except so far as relieved against by statute.

Plaintiffs were under no disability. They asked to exercise a right which was refused by the court, and, as they might well do, they procured a correction of the error by appeal, whereupon they were entitled to stand in the position they would have occupied had the right been granted them in the first instance. Any other rule would render a successful appeal fruitless in a variety of cases. This reasoning proceeds upon the theory that the application to reform the certificate was a cause of action which would be barred within three years from the date of the mistake sought to be corrected, or, if not then known, within three years after its discovery; but it may well be doubted whether the right to reform the certificate of acknowledgment was not a mere incident to the right to recover upon the note and mortgage, which would stand or fall with its principal.

Had we confined ourselves to the statements of the complaint, we might have disposed of the demurrer thereto more briefly, but, as the same question is presented upon a broader field by the findings, we have discussed it in its latter aspect, and are of opinion the demurrer was properly overruled, and that the findings against the plea of the statute of limitations are fully warranted.

We are asked to review the evidence upon the question of a mistake by the notary in certifying to the acknowledgment, and to set aside the finding of the court upon the ground that it is not supported by the evidence; and in this connection are referred to a number of cases in which it is held that to authorize the correction of mistakes by reforming written instruments, the alleged mistake must be clearly made out by proofs entirely satisfactory, and that nothing short of a clear and convincing state of facts showing the mistake will warrant the court to interfere with and reform the instrument. As was said in Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660: "The evidence, it is true, must be clear and convincing, making out the mistake to the entire satisfaction of the court, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving the mistake open to doubt." The conclusion from the sum of all the authorities on the subject is not that relief must necessarily be denied, because there is a conflict of testimony, for that would result in a denial of justice in some of the plainest cases calling for such relief; but that upon all the proofs, taking the facts as they appear to the court, after eliminating testimony unworthy of credence, or based upon mistake or uncertainty, as in other cases, the mistake must be established in a clear and convincing manner, and to the entire satisfaction of the court. Viewed in this light, we cannot say the court was unauthorized by the testimony in the conclusion it reached.

The testimony of the notary, Burrill, is clear and explicit to the facts that he went to the house of the mortgagor; that her husband retired from the room; that he then and there made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and that she acknowledged it, etc., all without the presence or hearing of her husband; and that upon returning to his office he inadvertently attached a printed certificate which would have been valid under the statute as it formerly existed, but which failed to certify that he made the mortgagor acquainted with the contents of the instrument, without the presence and hearing of her husband, as required by the present law. This was a mistake which might well have happened; and upon such testimony, if believed to be true, the court below was fully warranted in the conclusion it reached.

The conveyance, then, having been properly executed and acknowledged, (though not properly certified,) was valid as between the parties to it, and all the world, except subsequent bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, without notice.

The court found that the defendant Tyler had notice of the mortgage as recorded, but no notice in fact that it had been properly acknowledged; that he gave no money or thing of value therefor, and incurred no liability on account thereof, except the contingent liability that, if the rents of the property which was covered by the mortgage did not amount to $500, he would pay his grantor that amount; and that the rents paid said sum, and he never became liable therefor. The testimony supports this finding, and, had the court found a fuller and more complete notice in Tyler, we do not see that such finding could have been disturbed by this court.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SUTTON. (No. 20,605.)

1. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—CROSS-EXAMINATION—SCOPE.

On cross-examination in a criminal trial, where answers of defendant to questions objected to added nothing material to what he had previously voluntarily stated without objection, and only tended to make more clear some of the statements previously made by him, there was no violation of Pen. Code Cal. § 1323, limiting cross-examination of a defendant in criminal actions to matters as to which he was examined in chief.¹

2. SAME—MEDICAL EXPERT—OPINION AS TO MERITS OF TEXT-BOOK.

A medical expert, testifying in a criminal trial, was asked whether "Maudsley's Responsibility in Mental Diseases" was a standard work. The question was asked for the purpose of showing the familiarity of witness with authors upon that subject. Held, that the question was properly excluded, on the ground that the opinion of the witness as to the merits and standing of the work would not tend to prove such familiarity.

3. SAME—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

A medical expert, on cross-examination, may be asked hypothetical questions bearing upon the sanity of defendant, and based on a portion of the evidence, for the purpose of testing his competency as an expert.

4. NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

"To entitle a party to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, it must appear that the evidence, and not merely its materiality, be newly discovered; that the evidence is not cumulative merely; that it is such as to render a different result probable on a retrial of the cause; that the party could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced it at the trial; and that these facts be shown by the best evidence which the case admits."

5. SAME—DISCRETION OF COURT—PRESUMPTION.

Applications for new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence are addressed to the discretion of the court, and its action will not be disturbed except for an abuse of discretion; the presumption being that the discretion was properly exercised.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; E. M. GIBSON, Judge.

Wells Whitmore and M. C. Chapman, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. On the trial the defendant testified on his own behalf, and on his cross-examination stated. "I did not see Martin's [deceased's] cattle on my place but once after I got my gun, and it was too much trouble to get the gun and shoot them. I never thought of shooting them at all. I saw some of Martin's cattle on my said place two years ago, but I did not shoot any of them. The next time that I saw any of them was on September 15, 1886, [the date of the homicide.] There were two bands, 15 in one and 8 in another. When I first saw them I was about a quarter of a mile away, at work at my barn, and when I saw them I went into my house and got my gun to shoot the cattle, but I did not shoot them. I went up onto the hill and saw the band of cattle and Martin [deceased] standing on the top. The cattle were going east." The question that elicited this statement is omitted in the record, and it does not appear that any objection was interposed to it. But at the conclusion of the above statement the district attorney asked this question: "Then the cattle were going toward Martin's place?" The defendant's attorney objected, on the ground that it was not cross-examination. The objection was overruled, and the ruling excepted to. The question was ¹Respecting the latitude permissible in a cross-examination of the defendant in a criminal prosecution, where he offers himself as witness, see Disque v. State, (N. J.) 8 Atl. Rep. 281, and note; Spies v. People, (Ill.) 12 N. E. Rep. 865, and note; State v. Saunders, (Or.) 12 Pac. Rep. 442; State v. Johnson, (Iowa,) 34 N. W. Rep. 177; State v. Robertson, (S. not answered, and the district attorney said: "That was towards the coal mines?" To which the defendant answered: "Yes, sir." The district attorney then said: "The coal mine is not on your premises, is it?" Defendant answered: "No, sir." The district attorney then asked: "Was anybody driving them [the cattle] that way?" Defendant's counsel objected, on the ground that it was not cross-examination. Objection overruled, and ruling excepted to. Answer. "No, sir. There was no one behind the cattle. Martin [deceased] was staying up on the hill to drive the cattle off, I suppose." On his examination in chief the defendant stated that he had been much annoyed by cattle trespassing on his premises; but he did not narrate the facts which he narrated on his cross-examination, without objection, and, so far as the record shows, without being interrogated in relation thereto. If he had testified to the same facts on his examination in chief, the right to ask him the questions objected to on cross-examination would be perfectly clear. And we think the questions objected to, and the answers to them, only tended to make more clear some of the statements previously made by the defendant without objection on his cross-examination.

We fail to see that the answers to the questions objected to add anything material to what the defendant had previously voluntarily stated. So viewing it, we think the rulings of the court correct, under the provision of the Code which limits the cross-examination in such a case to the matters about which the defendant was examined in chief. Pen. Code, § 1323. The cross-examination in this case was quite as clearly within the rule as was that held to be so by this court in People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121.

The next alleged error relied on by the appellant was the ruling of the court sustaining an objection interposed by the district attorney to a question asked Dr. Buck by appellant's counsel. Dr. Buck, called by the defendant, testified that he was familiar with "Maudsley's Responsibility in Mental Diseases." Defendant's counsel then asked him if he knew whether it was a standard work. The district attorney objected, and the court sustained the objection, to which defendant excepted. It is now insisted that the court erred, because an affirmative answer of the witness would tend to show his great familiarity with authors upon the subject upon which he was called to give expert testimony. But he had testified that he was familiar with the treatise in question, and we think his opinion of it would not tend to prove his great familiarity with authors upon that subject. His competency to testify as an expert does not appear to have been questioned. People v. Donovan, 43 Cal. 162, cited by defendant's counsel, has no bearing on this question.

On cross-examination by the district attorney, Dr. Buck was asked: "Would you say that in a case where a man had had a grievance against another man of long standing, and who, seeing that grievance being repeated, should go and get a rifle, walk from a quarter of a mile to a half mile to where the man committing the grievance was, and who should shoot that man,—would you say that that was a case of transitory mania or homicidal mania?" The defendant objected, on the ground "that it was not cross-examination, and evidently an hypothetical question, based upon a portion of the evidence introduced in this case, and not correctly stated, and omitting a large portion of the evidence in the case." The objection was overruled. The defendant excepted, and the witness answered: "As stated by the district attorney, there is nothing in the statement that would indicate any insanity whatever." The witness was then asked this question: "Would you say that a man who is very prompt and careful in the paying of his debts,—would you consider that a matter of insanity, indicating the insane temperament?" Defendant's counsel objected, on substantially the same ground on which he objected to the preceding question. The objection was overruled, and the ruling excepted to. The witness answered: "I should think that was no indication of insanity in any one. I should hope not, I am sure."

We think the rulings of the court upon the objections of the defendant were not erroneous. The witness was being cross-examined, and we think it was proper to ask him such questions as these, for the purpose of testing his competency as an expert. If he had testified that the hypothetical facts embraced in either question indicated insanity, we think the jury would have doubted his sanity. We think the defendant's counsel could not have relied upon those facts as tending to prove insanity. It seems to be well settled that experts of all classes may be asked as to an hypothetical case, and if the facts on which the hypothesis is based fall, the answer falls also.

One of the grounds upon which defendant based his motion for a new trial was newly-discovered evidence, which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial. At the hearing of the motion the defendant produced the affidavits of the witnesses by whom he expected such evidence to be given. To entitle a party to a new trial, on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, it must appear—"First, that the evidence, and not merely its materiality, be newly discovered; second, that the evidence is not cumulative merely; third, that it is such as to render a different result probable on a retrial of the cause; fourth, that the party could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced it at the trial; and, fifth, that these facts be shown by the best evidence which the case admits." 1 Hayne, New Trial & App. § 83. "Applications on this ground are addressed to the discretion of the court below, and the action of the court will not be disturbed, except for an abuse of discretion; the presumption being that the discretion was properly exercised." Id. § 87.

The affidavits produced in this case do not make it clear to our comprehension that the court below, in denying the motion for a new trial, abused its discretion. It is by no means clear that the defendant could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced the evidence claimed to be newly discovered at the trial, nor are we prepared to say that it is such as to render a different result probable on a retrial. Of that the court below was in a much better position to judge than we are. And this court has laid down the rule that applications on this ground are to be regarded with distrust and disfavor. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 180; O'Brien v. Brady, 23 Cal. 243; Jones v. Singleton, 45 Cal. 94; Bartlett v. Hogden, 3 Cal. 58; Hobler v. Cole, 49 Cal. 250; Arnold v. Skaggs, 35 Cal. 684. It not appearing to us that there was any abuse of discretion by the court below, we cannot disturb the order on that ground.

The statement in defendant's brief that "the court, in its instructions to the jury, assumed that the killing was admitted as proved," is not borne out by the record, as far as we can discover. All the instructions which defendant's counsel requested to be given were given.

Judgment and order affirmed.

MORGAN and another v. TILLOTSON and another. (No. 11,916.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 29, 1887.)

1. EJECTMENT--PLEADING--DENIAL OF PLAINTIFF'S TITLE.

In an action of ejectment, it is sufficient to deny the ownership and title to possession of plaintiff. Averments as to the ownership of plaintiff's grantors are immaterial, and need not be denied.

2. MINING CLAIMS--PLACER MINES--ANNUAL EXPENDITURE--RELOCATION.

A failure to comply with the provisions of Rev. St. U. S. § 2324, which requires an annual expenditure of $100 by the locator of a placer mining claim, renders the claim subject to relocation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county; B. F. MYRES, Judge.

C. A. & F. P. Tuttle, for appellants. Hall & Craig, for respondents.

THORNTON, J. Action of ejectment to recover mining ground constituting a placer claim. The question of title was put in issue by the answers. The material averment of plaintiffs' ownership and title to the possession was denied. The averment in the complaint in relation to the ownership of plaintiffs' grantors and predecessors in interest was entirely immaterial, and need not have been denied. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 567.

The question whether the provision of the Revised Statutes of the United States (section 2324) which requires an annual expenditure of a certain amount for labor and materials on each mining claim until the patent is issued, a failure to comply with which provision renders the claim subject to relocation, we regard as settled in the affirmative by the case of Russell v. Brosseau, 65 Cal. 605, 4 Pac. Rep. 643, in this court; and Jackson v. Roby, 109 U. S. 440, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, in the supreme court of the United States. These cases show clearly that judgment should have been rendered for defendants on the evidence, the whole of which was comprised in an agreed statement of facts. Under such circumstances, we consider it unnecessary and unjust to put the defendants to the toil and expense of a new trial.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, with directions to enter judgment for defendants for the land in controversy. Ordered accordingly.

A pledgee, in an action against a sheriff who has levied on the pledge as the property of the pledgeor, cannot set up a title, adverse to the pledgeor, acquired subsequent to the levy of the execution.

2. SAME—TENDER TO PLEDGEE—WAIVER OF CONDITIONS.

A pledgee who admits the sufficiency, so far as the amount is concerned, of a tender of what is due him from the pledgeor, made by a sheriff in execution, thereby waives his right to object to a condition annexed that he surrender the note secured by, or the warehouse receipt for, the pledge.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

W. E. Turner, for appellant. J. H. Budd, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This action was brought to recover possession of 4,255 bags of wheat, or their value, in case a delivery cannot be had, and for $2,000 damages, etc. The material allegations of the complaint were denied by the answer, and defendant Fulkertth justified under a levy on the wheat sued for, made by him as sheriff of the county of Stanislaus, of a writ of attachment issued in the action brought in the district court for the county just named by H. O. Matthews et al. against J. T. Davis, and further under a levy on the same property of a writ of execution issued upon a judgment recovered in the above-entitled action.

At the trial it appears that on or about the seventh day of November, 1878, the plaintiff lent Davis the sum of $2,500, and received the wheat in question in pledge as security for its repayment to him. These facts are established by uncontroverted evidence. At the time of this loan the wheat was stored in a warehouse at Turlock. It had been stored at Turlock before plaintiff made the loan to Davis, having been placed there by Davis in the September preceding. For this wheat a receipt was given by the warehouseman, defendant Perley, of which the following is a copy:

"TURLOCK, CAL., September 16, 1878.

"Received in good order and well-conditioned, from E. C. Vancel, five thousand and fifty-five (5,055) bags wheat, weighing six hundred and fifty-four thousand three hundred and eighty-nine pounds, (654,389 lbs.,) which I hereby agree to deliver in like order and condition, (the danger from fire excepted,) upon return of this receipt and payment of storage at the rate of 50 cents per ton for the first month, commencing August 26, 1878, and 25 cents per ton per month thereafter. Total storage not to exceed one dollar ($1) per ton for the season ending June 1, 1879.

"Stored in the grain warehouse at Turlock, known as 'Chas. Dallas' Warehouse."
GEORGE PERLEY."

This receipt was delivered to the plaintiff by Davis on the seventh of November, 1878, with the following indorsements on it:

"To dispose of for me to the best advantage, I assign the within to John T. Davis.
E. C. VANCEL."

"NOVEMBER 5, 1878. Received on the within receipt 800 bags wheat; estimated weight, one hundred and four thousand pounds.

"J. T. DAVIS."

"I assign the within receipt to H. Barnhart to secure to him the payment of $2,500.
J. T. DAVIS."

The last indorsement of Davis was made at the time of the loan of $2,500. This pledge was a bailment by Davis to the plaintiff. Davis and the plaintiff sustained to each other the relation of pledgeor and pledgee. Plaintiff's transaction was with Davis only. He lent Davis the money, and took his note for it. When the money lent should be paid back by Davis, the plaintiff was bound to return him the wheat pledged.

It is contended on the part of plaintiff that this wheat was the property of one Vancel. Can the plaintiff be allowed to show this? It does not appear that any transactions took place between Vancel and plaintiff until after this action was commenced. Barnhart testified that he lent money to Vancel on this wheat and other property in April, 1879. This action was brought on the seventeenth of February, 1879. Barnhart must recover on his title as it was when the action was commenced. If Barnhart cannot call in aid the title of Vancel when the suit was commenced, it will not avail him to recover in this action. He may show that the money—$2,500—that he paid over to Davis in November, 1878, and for which Davis executed to him his note, was merely a loan to Vancel through Davis, as agent of the latter, and that Vancel, and not Davis, was the pledgeor; that the transaction was one, not with Davis, but with Vancel through Davis as the agent of the former. If the loan was to Davis as principal, and the pledge was made by Davis on his individual account, and the wheat belonged to Vancel, and Barnhart had, before this action was brought, turned over the wheat to Vancel as owner, and received it back from him as his (Vancel's) custodian, he might have relied on Vancel's title. Palmtag v. Doutrick, 59 Cal. 154. Nor does it appear that Barnhart ever lent any money to Vancel until after he had brought suit. He and Davis both testify that the money was lent by the plaintiff to Davis, and that Davis pledged the wheat to him. The plaintiff received the wheat from Davis on a loan made to him, and to him only. It does not appear that Vancel's name was ever mentioned in the transaction at all. Vancel does not appear in the case until after the wheat had been attached by the plaintiffs in the suit of Matthews et al. v. Davis, and a tender, admitted by Barnhart to have been sufficient, of the amount due him by Davis, had been made to him, and refused. The interposition of Vancel as owner, by Barnhart, seems to have been an afterthought resorted to to ward off and defeat the defense herein set up.

We are of opinion that Barnhart showed no right in this case to rely on the title of Vancel to defeat the defense relied on. His right to invoke such title did not arise until after he had begun his suit; and, inasmuch as he could only recover on the title which he had when his action was instituted, a right or title afterwards acquired could not be here available to him. Barnhart testified that he told Hewel (the agent of the sheriff to make the tender) that so far as the amount was concerned, and the sufficiency of the tender, he admitted it. Having made this admission, Barnhart should not be permitted afterwards to allege that the tender was not good by reason of the fact that Hewel said to him, when the tender was made, that he wanted Davis' note from him and the warehouse receipt. If the above should be construed as annexing conditions to the tender, Barnhart waived all right to object to them by admitting the sufficiency of the tender. Civil Code, § 1501.

We do not think that there should be a reversal because the court refused to permit a question to be put to the witness, Davis, on his cross-examination by counsel for defendants, whether, since the seventh or eighth of November 1878, he had paid the loan of $2,500, or any part of it. We are not clear that it was allowable on cross-examination, and that the court erred in ruling it out for that reason. We are the less disposed to reverse, on account of this ruling, for the reason that the defendants might have made Davis their own witness as to the matter inquired about.

Having held that Barnhart was estopped, by reason of his relation to Davis, to avail himself of the title of Vancel, there is but slight necessity to pass on another point of estoppel urged by defendants, based on the statements made by Barnhart, prior to the levy of the attachment, to the attaching creditor (Matthews) and the sheriff, that the wheat was the property of Davis. We do not think this estoppel made out, for the reason that it does not appear that the levy was made in sole reliance upon the statements made by Barnhart.

We see no error in the court's refusing to sign the findings presented by counsel for defendants, for the reasons given in Miller v. Steen, 30 Cal. 402, and Porter v. Woodward, 57 Cal. 538.

It follows from the foregoing that the judgment and order denying a new trial must be reversed, and the cause remanded, that a new trial may be had. So ordered.

WALDEN v. PURVIS. (No. 11,957.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 29, 1887.)

EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS OF DONOR—FRAUD IN GIFT.

In an action against a sheriff, for wrongfully taking cattle donated to plaintiff by his father, a statement alleged to have been made by the father after he had parted with the possession of the cattle is inadmissible, either to prove the fraudulent character of the gift, or for any other purpose.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county; WM. O. MINOR, Judge.
Wright & Hazen, for appellant. Schell & Bond, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action against the sheriff for taking 111 head of cattle, alleged to have been the property of the plaintiff, under attachment against plaintiff's father. The plaintiff claimed 80 of the cattle under a sale from his father. Whatever errors may have been committed by the court in admitting or rejecting evidence in relation to these 80 cattle cannot be considered, because the court held the sale of those cattle to have been fraudulent and void, and so far as they are concerned the judgment was in favor of the appellant.

The balance of the cattle, viz., 31 head, were claimed by the plaintiff before the sale above mentioned. His account of these cattle is as follows: "I know the cattle in controversy. Part of them I bought from my father, and some were my original cattle; thirty or forty, or possibly fifty, head,—what I called my original stock; some of them I got from my father. Farmers would leave some cattle for ranch fees, and he would give them to me, and I also got some by taking the calves of stray cows on the ranch, or a cow would get drowned, or mired in the mud, and the calf was mine. Have had cattle for a number of years; some of them for ten years. Could not say how many I have had for one, nor how many for two, years. Owned them since they were calves. They range from one to seven or eight years."

This being the general position of the parties, the "counsel for defendant" then asked that the witness be allowed to state what Miner Walden [the father] said at that time while in possession of the cattle in controversy. The plaintiff objected to the testimony, and the court sustained the objection, and refused to allow the testimony; to which ruling the defendant then and there excepted." So far as "the cattle in controversy" included the 80 head, it makes no difference whether there was error or not; because, as above stated, the court held in appellant's favor that that sale was void. So far as it relates to the 31 head for which the plaintiff had judgment, the declaration sought to be proven was a declaration of the donor after he had parted with the property, and was inadmissible either to prove fraud or otherwise. Cohn v. Mulford, 15 Cal. 52; Jones v. Morse, 36 Cal. 207.

The other points made do not, in our opinion, materially affect the judgment for the 31 head. We therefore advise that the judgment, and order denying a new trial, be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

1. OFFICE AND OFFICERS—REMOVAL.

Where the duration or time of holding an office is not prescribed by law or by the constitution, the appointing power may remove the incumbent of the office at its pleasure.

2. SAME.

California act of March 31, 1876, providing for the appointment of a superintendent for the house of correction of San Francisco by the board of supervisors, and "that said superintendent shall only be removed for just and sufficient legal cause after a fair and impartial investigation of his case by said supervisors," does not restrain or limit the power of removal to the manner indicated in the act, and the board of supervisors have power to remove the superintendent at their pleasure; following People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 97; Smith v. Brown, 59 Cal. 672.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Action to try the title to the office of superintendent for the house of correction of the city and county of San Francisco, brought by the people, upon the relation of respondent, against the appellant. Appellant, Samuel Shear, on January 29, 1883, was appointed, by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, superintendent for the house of correction of said city and county, under "An act to utilize the prison labor, and govern the house of correction of the city and county of San Francisco," approved March 31, 1876, which reads as follows: "They [the board of supervisors] shall appoint a competent superintendent for the house of correction of said city and county. * * * Said superintendent shall only be removed for just and sufficient legal cause, after a fair and impartial investigation of his case by said supervisors." Appellant duly qualified and entered upon his duties as such. On January 12, 1885, said board declared the office vacant on and after January 15, 1885, and then, immediately after, appointed said John Sedgwick such superintendent, to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Shear. Sedgwick, on January 12, 1885, accepted said office and qualified according to law. Shear refused to surrender the office, under the claim that such superintendent can only be removed for just and sufficient legal cause, after a fair and impartial investigation of the case by said supervisors, as provided in section 4 of said act, and that the board, in declaring said office vacant, assigned no cause, and that there had been no such investigation as provided by that section, and Sedgwick, on January 15, 1885, instituted this action. It was admitted that prior to this action there had been no such investigation, and no cause assigned. After the institution of this action, the said board again, on January 26, 1887, declared the office vacant, assigning a cause after investigation, and again appointed Sedgwick, etc.; but Sedgwick, having already qualified under the former action of the board, did nothing under the latter action. The superior court rendered judgment in favor of Sedgwick, and Shear appealed.

Thos. J. Clunie, for appellant. Davis Louderback, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. On the authority of Smith v. Brown, 59 Cal. 672, and People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 97, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GARTHE v. HART and others. (No. 11,701)

(Supreme Court of California. October 6, 1887.)

1. MINES AND MINING—LOCATION.

Where the first location of a mining claim is valid, and the parties have kept it so by doing what is required by the mining laws of California, a subsequent location, however regular in form, is of no effect.

2. SAME—LOCATION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action of ejectment for a mining claim, where the evidence showed a location by defendant prior to that of plaintiff, and possession by plaintiff, the court instructed the jury that one mode of making a valid location of a mining claim was by taking possession of it, and clearly defining its boundaries; but failed to state the distinction between the right of such locator as against a mere intruder, and as against one who has complied with the mining laws. Held, that the instruction was misleading, and the error was not cured by a subsequent instruction that if the defendant's location was prior to that of plaintiff, and conformed to the mining law, the plaintiff acquired no right under the subsequent location.

3. SAME—BOUNDARIES—PAROL AGREEMENT.

In an action of ejectment for a mining claim, where there is evidence tending to show an adjustment of boundaries between the parties by oral agreement, an instruction that if, under the oral agreement, improvements were made by one of the parties, this would work an estoppel, is erroneous, when there is no evidence that any such improvements had been made.

4. SAME—TRANSFER OF CLAIM—PAROL.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1091, a writing is required to transfer a mining claim, and an oral agreement cannot operate as a transfer.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge.
Cross & Simonds, for appellants. Alfred D. Mason, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. Action of ejectment for a mining claim. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

1. The plaintiff gave evidence tending to show a location in 1881, and a subsequent location in 1884, the marking of the boundaries under these locations, and the recording of both claims. The statement does not show that $100 worth of work was done each year as required by the act of 1872; but this defect in the evidence is not referred to in the specifications. The defendants gave evidence tending to show a valid location in 1880, the recording of the claim as required by a local regulation, the marking of sufficient boundaries, and the performance of the requisite amount of work each year. There is no evidence in contradiction of this. And if it be assumed that the plaintiff's proceedings were regular in all respects, it is manifest that the defendants had the earlier and better right. Where the first location is valid, and the parties have kept it so by doing what is required by the mining laws, a subsequent location, however regular in form, is of no effect. Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 284; Rose v. Richmond Co., 17 Nev. 56, 57. The verdict is therefore unsupported by the evidence.

2. The plaintiff gave evidence of an attempted location in 1879, and of acts tending to show a possession within the rule laid down in several cases. See English v. Johnson, 17 Cal. 109; Table Mountain Co. v. Stranahan, 20 Cal. 209; Hess v. Winder, 30 Cal. 355. The court "struck out all evidence of this first location, for the reason that it appeared that the same had not been made in compliance with law." It does not clearly appear whether this order was in reference to the "location" merely, or whether it extended to the possession also. But we think the order was in reference to the location, because the non-compliance with the mining law would not be a reason for striking out evidence of the possession.

Without saying whether the acts done were sufficient to constitute a possession, we think the court erred in its charge to the jury with reference to it. The charge was as follows: "In order to make a valid location of mining claims, the locator may adopt one of two courses. He may determine to locate his claim in accordance with law and customs. In order to get a title—a possessory title—in this way, he must conform to the requirements of law. * * * As I said, there is still another way by which a miner in this state may acquire a right to the possession of a piece of mining ground. It is by taking possession of it, and clearly defining the boundaries so that they may be readily traced, and holding such possession,—keeping such possession."

In the hurry of the trial the learned judge evidently overlooked the distinction between the right of a party in possession as against mere intruders, and his right as against one who has complied with the mining laws. Possession is good against mere intruders, (Attwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 43; English v. Johnson, Id. 115; Hess v. Winder, 30 Cal. 355; Golden Fleece Co. v. Cable Co., 12 Nev. 321, 322;) but it is not good as against one who has complied with the mining laws, (Du Prat v. James, 65 Cal. 556, 557, 4 Pac. Rep. 562.) We do not see that the error was cured by other portions of the charge. What is claimed as curing the error is the following: "Another question presents itself in this case which I will speak of shortly. Plaintiffs' claim in this case, so far as they are concerned, depends upon a location made by Mr. Penders and son in the year 1881, and a subsequent location made by Wise-man and others in 1884. Of course, if the location of defendants, to which I have already referred, was prior to that of plaintiffs, and they have complied with the requirements of the law since the date of that location, and the location itself was sufficient, no rights could be acquired by plaintiff under the subsequent location." This instruction points to the first ground of plaintiff's right of which the court had spoken. It tells the jury, in substance, that if the defendants' location was prior to that of the plaintiff, and conformed to the requirements of the mining law, the plaintiff acquired no right "under the subsequent location." But it does not say that the defendants' location would prevail over the plaintiff's prior possession, which the court had already told the jury was one way in which the plaintiff could acquire a right to the premises in controversy. At most, the charge was misleading; and we think the jury must have been misled by it.

3. There was evidence tending to show an adjustment of boundaries between the parties by oral agreement. With reference to this the court instructed the jury, at defendants' request, as follows: "The jury is instructed that no estate or interest in real property, (except a lease for not more than one year,) nor any trust or power over or concerning it, or in any manner relating thereto, can be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, otherwise than by operation of law, or a conveyance or other instrument in writing subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." This was undoubtedly correct. Before 1860 a verbal transfer was held to be good when accompanied with a change of possession. Table Mountain Co. v. Stranahan, 20 Cal. 208; King v. Randlett, 33 Cal. 321. In 1860 an act was passed with reference to gold mines, (Laws 1860, p. 175,) and afterwards extended to all mines, (Laws 1863, p. 98,) which was construed to do away with oral transfers. See Patterson v. Mining Co., 30 Cal. 363; Goller v. Fett, Id. 484, 485; Felger v. Coward, 35 Cal. 652. Section 1091 of the Civil Code has been held to require a writing for the transfer of mining claims. Melton v. Lambard, 51 Cal. 259, 260.

The oral agreement, therefore, could not operate as a transfer. It seems to have been supposed, however, that what took place could have some effect by way of estoppel, and in this regard the court instructed the jury "that if they believe from the evidence in this case that the location of John W. Hart and others was the first location, which was good according to law; that afterwards said Hart, Englebright, and their lessees, and J. W. Penders and his grantees, had a dispute as to the boundary line of the claim of each, and that it was finally understood and agreed by all parties that the line claimed by Penders should be treated and considered as the true boundary line between the two mining claims, and that thereupon the grantees of said Penders went in good faith to work upon the land before in dispute, and made improvements thereon under such agreement and understanding,—then I charge you that, in determining the true boundary line between the parties, you may consider such conversation and agreements, if any there was, for the purpose of determining the true boundary line between the mining claims of each party."

This was improper; if for no other reason, because there was no evidence of any improvement made "under such agreement and understanding," or otherwise, and nothing which would give rise to an estoppel. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

CRIMINAL PRACTICE—FORMER CONVICTION—READING INDICTMENT TO JURY.

On trial of an indictment charging the defendant with petit larceny, and four former convictions of the same offense, the defendant pleaded not guilty to the first charge, but confessed the former convictions, and pleaded guilty thereto. Held, that it was error to permit the reading before the jury of that part of the indictment relating to the former convictions, the same being expressly prohibited by Pen. Code Cal. § 1093; and that under Id. § 1153, it was error to instruct or to permit any evidence to go to the jury in regard to the second charge.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. MURPHY, Judge.

Information for petit larceny.

John D'Arcy, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THORNTON, J. The defendant is accused by information of petit larceny, and four previous convictions of petit larceny. On his arraignment he pleaded not guilty of the petit larceny charged in the information, and confessed and pleaded guilty to the prior convictions.

The bill of exceptions recites: "At said trial, the clerk of the court, after having read the first part of the information which charged the crime of petit larceny, as herein stated, was proceeding to read the second part, which charged the prior conviction as above stated and set forth, when defendant's counsel interposed an objection, on the ground that the reading of anything relative to the prior conviction was prohibited by section 1093 of the Penal Code. The court overruled said objection, and defendant's counsel duly excepted. The clerk then read to the jury that part of the information which charged the defendant with having suffered the prior conviction aforesaid, and as herein set forth. The prosecution was proceeding to present to the jury evidence that defendant had suffered said prior conviction, when defendant's counsel objected, on the ground that such evidence was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The court overruled said objection, and defendant's counsel duly excepted. A witness then testified that defendant had suffered said prior conviction. The prosecution then offered in evidence the record of defendant's said prior conviction, when defendant's counsel objected, on the ground that said evidence was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The court overruled said objection, and defendant's counsel duly excepted. The record of defendant's said prior conviction was then read to the jury."

Each of the foregoing rulings was error. People v. Carlton, 57 Cal. 559; People v. Brooks, 65 Cal. 295, 4 Pac. Rep. 7; Ex parte Young Ah Gow, ante, 76, (filed September 26, 1887.) The defendant having confessed the previous conviction, the reading to the jury of that part of the information which related to the previous conviction is directly contrary to law. It is inhibited in section 1093 of the Penal Code. See, also, section 1158, Pen. Code. When the previous conviction is confessed, the jury has nothing to do with it. It is error then to offer any evidence to the jury in relation to it. Pen. Code, § 1158, and cases above cited.

The court also erred in telling the jury that they must find whether the defendant had suffered a previous conviction. This is contrary to the statute. Section 1158, supra. This is only to be done by the jury when the previous conviction is denied. Sections 1093, 1158.

That the defendant was prejudiced by the above rulings of the court we can entertain no doubt.

For these errors the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS. (No. 20,326.)

CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTIONS—MURDER IN FIRST DEGREE.

Upon the trial of an indictment for murder, where the trial judge instructs the jury that if, from the evidence, they believe certain facts and circumstances under which the state claimed the homicide to have been committed, and that defendant, "without further cause or provocation," then killed the deceased, he was guilty of murder in the first degree; and such instruction is erroneous because it omits the essential elements of intent and premeditation,—it is prejudicial error, which is not cured by the fact that a full and correct definition of the offense had previously been given. SEARLS, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; R. CROUCH, Judge. Indictment for murder in the first degree.

F. E. Johnston, A. J. Hull, and H. C. Gesford, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and now appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only point raised on the appeal which I deem it necessary to consider arises on instruction 20, given at the request of the prosecution. It is as follows:

"If the jury believe, from the evidence, that, on the day of the homicide, Clark came to the town of Monticello, and that Williams, seeing or meeting him on the street, spoke to Clark, and said he wanted to see him, and requested Clark to go to the shade on the north side of Fowler's saloon, and if, when they had reached the shade, Williams informed Clark of what he had heard that Clark had said about Williams mistreating his wife, or poisoning his wife, and asked Clark to retract it or take it back, or words to that effect, and that Clark refused to retract or take back what he had said, and that then Williams, without further cause or provocation, shot and killed Clark, then Williams committed murder of the first degree, and you should so find."

This instruction seem to omit the element of premeditation and deliberation in defining murder in the first degree. Before giving this instruction, the court had fully and in various forms defined murder in the first degree, and murder in the second degree.

The first contention on the part of the people is that under such circumstances the instruction, though erroneous, could not have misled the jury to the injury of the appellant. But it is plain that this position cannot be maintained. If a trial judge, in his charge to the jury, recites certain alleged facts which there is some evidence tending to prove, and then tells the jury that, if such facts are proven beyond a reasonable doubt, they must find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree; and such charge is erroneous because the alleged facts do not, as matter of law, constitute murder in the first degree,—it is prejudicial error, which is not cured by the fact that a full and correct definition of the offense had previously been given. Under this instruction, the jury, having found that the recited facts existed, were bound to find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and they had no further use for a definition of the offense. They were expressly told that all the elements of the crime were there, and they must find the defendant guilty.

Conceding that the instruction is thus erroneous, I cannot understand how it can be said not to have prejudiced the rights of the defendant, except upon the theory that we assume his guilt, and also that his defense is a wrongful attempt to evade the demands of justice. But, whatever we may think of the evidence, he is entitled to his "due process," and to a fair trial according to the rules of law. Until found guilty upon such a trial, he stands clothed with the presumption of innocence. With this most important element omitted, the defendant has not had his day in court,—has not been tried and convicted by a jury of the crime with which he was charged, and of which he has been adjudged guilty.

It is also suggested, although we find no such claim in the brief filed for the plaintiff, that the instruction does, in fact, contain the elements of deliberation and premeditation. The plain answer to this is the language of the instruction itself. But the instruction plainly omits an essential element of murder in the first degree, to-wit, premeditation and deliberation; and, even if we could adopt the theory of the prosecution, that the facts recited plainly imply deliberation, the instruction is still erroneous. It invades the province of the jury, and finds for them a conclusion from the evidence, which must always be left for the jury.

In People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, this court attempted to define the degrees of murder, and stated the elements constituting each. It is there said: "To constitute a crime, there must be a joint operation of act and intention. But the common law measures an act which is malum in se substantially by the result produced; holding the doer of the act guilty of the thing done in the same measure as if it were specifically intended." But this guilty intent which the law thus implies from the fact that an unlawful act has been committed, would not, in a case of homicide, raise the offense to the grade of murder in the first degree. It would be, at the most, but murder in the second degree. To raise the offense to murder in the first degree, there must be added the element of deliberation,—not implied, but made manifest by the evidence; but, since no appreciable space of time need elapse between the intent and the act, it is only necessary that the evidence should show, and the jury should find, that, before the act of killing, the specific intent to take life was formed. In each case the intent to take life existed as matter of law. In the one case, however, it need not be proven, and may not, in fact, exist; it is implied from the fact of an unlawful killing. In the other, the evidence must show that there was a deliberate intent to take life. Of course, it is not necessary to show this by express or direct proof of an intent; but the evidence in some way must make it manifest, and the jury must be able to find it from the testimony. To illustrate: Nothing else appearing except that a homicide has been committed by the defendant, the law implies malice; and, as the burden of showing justification or excuse is on the defendant, it would be murder, but not murder in the first degree, because the specific intent to take life is not proven. This last is a most essential fact, and is always an inference from the facts proven, and cannot be taken from the jury, however clear, or even inevitable, the conclusion may be. People v. Walden, 51 Cal. 588; People v. Carrillo, 54 Cal. 63.

Suppose, in this case, the instruction had been: "If you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant had announced that he would take the life of deceased as soon as opportunity occurred, and thereupon, meeting Clark, asked him to go with him into the shade, and then, without any provocation or hostile demonstration on the part of deceased, shot and killed him, it is murder in the first degree." The conclusion that there was the specific intent to take life would be very obvious, and the jury would not be justified on such facts in finding any other verdict than murder in the first degree. And yet the instruction would be plainly erroneous. It would take from the jury the very question of guilt, so far as this grade of the offense is concerned. The verdict would be the finding of the court, and not of the jury. The case, as to the grade of the offense, was taken from the jury, and there was no jury trial. On such theory the court might in every case recite all the other facts, omitting intentions and motives, which are essential to constitute the offense, and tell the jury, if the dry facts are so, they must find the defendant guilty. It would be but one step further to enter judgment without trial, when the guilt is obvious, and then say there was no injury, because the verdict could have been but one way. This degree of refinement—if it be such, and it is only that of the statute—is not necessary in this case, where the recited facts do not necessarily involve deliberation. I have gone into the matter thus fully to show how dangerous such instructions must always be.

It is not necessary to allude to the other instructions which are objected to. Some of them, if standing by themselves, would undoubtedly need qualification; but, on the whole, we think they are not inconsistent, and fairly and correctly place the law before the jury. Many of them are taken from the charge approved in People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 118. Although the whole charge is there approved, but a small part of it was really involved in the exceptions taken in that case, and as to the rest it was obiter. As a whole, the charge was undoubtedly an able resume of the law upon the subject, but, like the instructions just alluded to in this case, some portions, if isolated, would require qualification.

The judgment and order should be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial; and it is so ordered.

We concur: MCKINSTRY, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. Instruction No. 20—the only one about which there can be any serious question—tells the jury that if, from the evidence, they believe certain facts and circumstances, (enumerating them,) under which the prosecution claimed the homicide to have been committed, and that appellant, “without further cause or provocation,” then killed the deceased, he was guilty of murder in the first degree. This kind of instruction is not commendable, and is, at best, hazardous. The particular objection in the present instance is that the elements of deliberation and premeditation were not expressly stated in the instruction. But the court, in other parts of its charge, had fully and in various forms of language instructed the jury about the difference between murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree; and that to constitute the former the killing must be willful, deliberate, and premeditated. For instance, the court, among other instructions, gave the following: “It therefore becomes necessary for me to define what is necessary to constitute murder in the first degree, with reference to the willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing. * * * The killing must have been willful, which implies simply a purpose or willingness to do the killing. Fourth, it must have been the result of deliberation; that is, it must have been done after the slayer had considered and weighed the matter in his mind. And, fifth, it must have been premeditated; that is, preconcerted and planned, and meditated beforehand. And each one of these elements must be proved by the prosecution beyond a reasonable doubt. The law does not imply deliberation and premeditation. That must be proved by the prosecution affirmatively, and beyond a reasonable doubt. And if you find that any of these elements is wanting in this case, or if you have a reasonable doubt as to the existence of any of these elements from the evidence, I charge you that you cannot find a verdict of murder in the first degree.” This language states the law most liberally in favor of appellant.

The facts grouped and enumerated in said instruction 20 were all facts about which there was evidence, and which the jury might well find to be true. There was evidence that appellant had previously threatened to kill the deceased, for the very reasons which the prosecution claimed he did kill him. Keeping in view, therefore, the evidence and the previous instructions, and assuming that the jury found all the facts enumerated in said instruction 20 to be true, and that, “without further cause or provocation,” appellant killed the deceased, I do not see how the jury could have been misled, or could have come to any other conclusion than that the appellant was guilty of murder in the first degree. The proposition presented to the jury, under these circumstances, necessarily includes the elements of deliberation and premeditation, although those or equivalent words were not expressly used in the particular instruction complained of. In People v. Moice, 15 Cal. 331, an instruction similar in principle was affirmed.

I think that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

CHUNG KEE and another v. DAVIDSON and others. (No. 11,605.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 30, 1887.)

CONTRACTS—BENEFICIAL INTEREST OF THIRD PARTY.

Defendants and A. and W. entered into an agreement concerning certain mines, under which the latter were to retain possession and management of the mines, and to turn over to defendants the entire result of each "clean up" of the mines, which was to be applied by defendants to the "defraying of the expenses of running and working said mines," and to the payment of indebtedness of A. and W. to defendants. In working the mines under this agreement, A. and W. became indebted to the assignors of plaintiffs for labor in such working. Held, that the agreement between A. and W. and defendants was not of such a character as to sustain an action by plaintiffs against defendants, under Civil Code Cal. § 1559, providing that "a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it."¹

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GORTSCHALK, Judge.

Jos. H. Budd, for appellants. J. A. Louttit, for respondents.

BY THE COURT. The defendants W. Cook and A. Cook executed a deed which upon its face purported to be an absolute conveyance of certain property therein described, consisting, in part, of some mines, which deed was in fact a mortgage to secure certain indebtedness from the Cooks to the defendants L. Davidson and S. C. Peek. Afterwards, the latter persons executed and delivered to the former an agreement in writing, which stipulated that, if by a certain time the indebtedness secured by the mortgage deed should be paid, L. Davidson and S. C. Peek would reconvey the property set out therein to the Cooks. The agreement contained, among other things, a provision that the Cooks should retain the possession and management of the mines mentioned in the mortgage deed, and that they were to turn over to L. Davidson and S. C. Peek the entire result of each "clean-up" of the "flumes and under-currents of the mines," the result of which "clean-ups"—that is, the precious metals extracted therefrom—was to be applied by those to whom "turned over" "to the defraying of the expenses of running and working said mines," and "the payment of all promissory notes, obligations, and accounts of indebtedness, of whatsoever nature, due said parties of the first part;" that is, L. Davidson and S. C. Peek, "and the firm of Davidson & Peek." L. Davidson was not a member of the firm of Davidson & Peek; that firm, it appears, was composed of M. Davidson and S. C. Peek. While the Cooks under that agreement were working the mines, they became indebted to certain Chinamen for labor done and laborers furnished in such working, and they gave to the Chinamen a written statement of such indebtedness. These claims the Chinamen to whom they were given, and in whose favor they originally stood, transferred properly to the present plaintiffs, who brought this action for the amount due on the assigned claims for work and labor done and furnished in working and running the mines, alleging that, under the terms of the agreement or written contract formerly mentioned, they were entitled to receive those amounts from L. Davidson and S. C. Peek, and the Cooks, out of certain "gold-dust," the result of the "clean-up" of July, 1884, which was delivered to L. Davidson, in accordance with the terms of the stipulation, and which amounted in value to the sum of $5,564.40. From that sum it seems that Davidson paid the firm of Davidson & Peek for goods, wares, merchandise, etc., furnished to the Cooks, and to others upon their order, the sum of $2,794.28, and took therefrom for himself the sum of $1,152.97 on account of advances of money and goods made by him to the Cooks, and that he also supplied towards the payment of a note for $2,000, given by the Cooks for money advanced to them by him the previous year, the sum of $1,700. He also paid about a month afterwards, out of his own money, to a man named Guy, the sum of $425, the amount of a lien for work done by Guy for the Cooks, in the mines aforesaid, in the year 1883. The Cooks did not defend the action, and judgment by default was rendered against them for about $2,100. The action, as to the defendants L. Davidson and S. C. Peek, was tried before a jury, who brought in a verdict for the plaintiffs for $1,900, without interest, upon which a judgment was duly rendered, from which, and an order refusing to grant them a new trial, L. Davidson and S. C. Peek have appealed.

The court instructed the jury: "Third. When a person receives money or property which it is his duty to pay to third persons, as to those third persons he becomes an original debtor and promisor." "Fifth. It is not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove a direct promise from the defendants Davidson and Peek, or either of them, to entitle them to recover, provided the jury believe from the evidence that the gold-dust * * * was delivered to said Davidson in pursuance of said contract, and that the same was sufficient in amount to pay the claim and demand of the plaintiffs, or such proportion thereof as should remain after paying other running and working expenses." "Ninth. The moment the gold-dust was delivered, the plaintiffs' claim, or, at least, the claim of plaintiffs' assignors, became vested, and neither of said defendants, Davidson or Peek, or the Cooks, or either of them, or all, had any right or power to change or divest that right."

The deed and written agreement, when read together, show a mortgage, and the conditions upon which a redemption of the mortgaged property may be had. Respondents contend that the agreement is a contract, made for the benefit of plaintiffs' assignors, and as such can be enforced, although said assignors are not named as parties therein. Section 1559 of the Civil Code, upon which this contention is based, reads as follows: "A contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." The general rule applicable to cases of this kind is that, "when two persons, for a consideration sufficient as between themselves, covenant to do some act which, if done, would incidentally result in the benefit of a mere stranger, that stranger has not a right to enforce the covenant, although one of the contracting parties might enforce it as against the other." Railroad Co. v. Curtiss, 80 N. Y. 222. We cannot say that the contract before us was made expressly for the benefit of the plaintiffs' assignors. On the contrary, we think it was made expressly for the benefit of the parties named therein. The most that can be said is that it is a contract incidentally for the benefit of those who worked in the mine. The clean-up was to be paid by the Cooks to the defendants. The Cooks were largely indebted to these defendants when this agreement was made, and advances evidently were to be made by the defendants to the Cooks during the working of the mine for the running expenses thereof, and this, no doubt, was the consideration which caused the parties to place the covenant referred to in the contract. Such advancements were, in fact, made to the extent of several hundred dollars. It is not necessary that the parties for whose benefit the contract has been made, should be named in the contract. It must appear, however, by the direct terms of the contract that it was made for the benefit of such parties. It cannot be implied from the fact that the contract would, if carried out between the parties to it, operate incidentally to their benefit.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

73 Cal. 511

PEOPLE v. FLYNN. (No. 20,295.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1887.)

1. BURGLARY—POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

The finding of recently stolen property in the possession of a defendant is not sufficient to support a conviction for burglary without other corroborating circumstances.¹

2. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS.

An instruction that the jury might reject, wholly or in part, the testimony of a witness who had "willfully testified falsely in regard to any one person or any one particular fact in the case," was objected to on the ground that it should only have told the jury to distrust or reject the testimony of a witness who had willfully sworn falsely "as to a material point in the case." Held that, under the rule "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others," (Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2061, sub. 3,) the instruction was not erroneous.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGING AS TO FACT.

The mere statement in an instruction that there is a conflict in the evidence in certain respects cannot be regarded as an expression of an opinion upon the weight of evidence, or a charge with respect to matters of fact, in violation of Const. Cal. art. 6, § 19, providing that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law."

4. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT.

An instruction that the jury must be "satisfied" of defendant's guilt is not erroneous, because it omits the words "beyond a reasonable doubt," when the whole of the instructions, taken together, clearly inform the jury that they cannot convict the defendant unless they are satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

5. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for burglary, although the fact that defendant was seen near the place where and about the time when the burglary was committed, is a material circumstance, a conviction based upon circumstantial evidence may be supported without it.

6. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUEST BY ACCUSED.

Omissions by the court to instruct the jury "that no presumption of guilt follows from [defendant's] failure to testify in his own behalf," and to define the phrase "reasonable doubt," as used in some of the instructions, are not erroneous, where defendant's counsel did not request such instructions at the proper time.

7. SAME—SENTENCE—PRIOR CONVICTIONS.

A defendant on trial for burglary pleaded guilty to the charge of "prior convictions" and the court did not instruct the jury as to such prior convictions, nor did it appear from the record that any reference was made to them during the trial. The jury found the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree, but did not find in reference to the prior convictions, which before judgment were withdrawn on motion of the district attorney, and the court only sentenced the prisoner to imprisonment for 10 instead of 15 years. Held that it must be presumed that the clerk had obeyed the law (Pen. Code Cal. § 1093) and omitted to read the prior convictions to the jury, and that the court in view of their withdrawal had disregarded them in considering the sentence.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

Indictment for burglary.

Geo. A. Knight, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the State.

¹ As to the weight to be assigned to the fact of the possession of stolen goods recently after the theft, see State v. Kirkpatrick, (Iowa,) 34 N. W. Rep. 301, and note.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant was charged with the crime of burglary, committed on the third day of May, 1886, by breaking and entering the saloon of one Clement Dixon, in the city of San Francisco, with intent to commit larceny. He was tried and convicted of burglary of the first degree, and sentenced to suffer imprisonment for 10 years. He moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the order denying his motion, and from the judgment. The appellant makes 10 points for the reversal of the judgment, the first five of them relating to the evidence, which, it is claimed, did not justify the verdict.

It was clearly proved that a burglary was committed at the time and place named in the information, and it was not necessary, in order to establish the defendant's guilt, that any of the witnesses should have actually seen him break and enter the premises, or should have seen him in the vicinity of the premises about the time the burglary was committed. It rarely happens that an offense, like that here complained of, can be proved by witnesses who saw and recognized the defendant in the act, and resort must, therefore, ordinarily be had to circumstantial evidence. And the fact that one was seen near the place where a burglary was committed, and about the time of its commission, may or may not be a circumstance tending to show guilt; but it cannot be necessary in every case of burglary to prove that the defendant was so seen before a conviction can be had. Here there was some evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense charged. A considerable sum of money was stolen, and one of the pieces of money taken was found in the possession of, and was claimed by, the defendant when he was arrested on the next day. The court properly instructed the jury as to the possession of recently stolen property, and as to the necessity of other corroborating circumstances being shown before one having such possession could be found guilty. It is unnecessary to detail the evidence at length. The question was, did the defendant commit the crime charged against him? That was a question of fact for the jury, and, as the jury found that he did commit it, we cannot say that the judgment should be set aside because the finding was not warranted.

It is next contended that sundry errors were committed by the court, to the manifest prejudice of the defendant. The defendant did not take the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and the court did not instruct the jury in reference to his failure to do so. It is claimed that "it was the duty of the court to charge the jury that no presumption of guilt followed from his failure to testify in his own behalf, and that they could not consider his failure to testify in arriving at a verdict." It does not appear from the bill of exceptions that any such instruction was asked. If counsel for defendant desired such an instruction to be given, they should have asked it at the proper time; and, as they failed to do that, they cannot now be heard to complain. People v. Haun, 44 Cal. 100; People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 239; People v. Marks, 13 Pac. Rep. 149.

In a portion of its charge to the jury the court used the following language: "And if you are satisfied that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged, and that he committed it in the night-time, that is, between sunset of one day and sunrise of the next, you should find him guilty of burglary in the first degree." It is claimed that this instruction was erroneous because it omitted the words "beyond a reasonable doubt," and left the jury to be simply "satisfied" of the defendant's guilt, no matter whether they entertained a reasonable doubt of his guilt or not. Looking at the whole charge, it will be found that the words "beyond a reasonable doubt" are repeated some 15 times. For example, the court told the jury: "It devolves upon the prosecution to establish the guilt of the defendant to your satisfaction, beyond a reasonable doubt, before you are authorized to find a verdict against him." "All persons charged with a criminal offense are presumed to be innocent until the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of their guilt." "If you have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, you should give him the benefit of the doubt, and acquit him." "You must be satisfied in the case, beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the facts and circumstances of this defendant's guilt, before you will be authorized to bring in a verdict against him." "If you entertain a reasonable doubt of his guilt, however, you should give him the benefit of the doubt, and acquit him."

And the very next sentence after that complained of is as follows: "If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he is guilty of burglary, but are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that it was committed in the nighttime, you should give him the benefit of that doubt, and find him guilty of burglary in the second degree."

Taking, then, the whole charge, and reading, as we must, the different parts of it together, it appears that the jury were clearly told that they could not find the defendant guilty of burglary of the first degree, or at all, unless they were satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. We are unable, therefore, to see how the defendant could have been prejudiced by the part of the charge objected to.

The court also, in its charge, used these words: "If you are satisfied that any witness has willfully testified falsely in regard to any one person, or any one particular fact in the case, then you are authorized to distrust his or her testimony in all particulars; that is, you may reject it entirely if you choose to do so, or you may reject it in part and receive it in part, as you find it contradicted or sustained by other testimony, as you are satisfied of its truth or falsity." It is claimed that the instruction was erroneous, that it should only have told the jury that they were authorized to distrust or reject the testimony of a witness who had willfully sworn falsely "as to a material point" in the case. We think the instruction was properly given. The rule, as stated in the Code of Civil Procedure, is "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others." Section 2061, sub. 3. If a witness has willfully testified falsely as to "any one person or any one particular fact in the case," his testimony, we think, comes clearly within the rule; and we see nothing in People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491, in conflict with this view. See People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 238, 10 Pac. Rep. 502.

The court further stated to the jury that "there is some conflict in the testimony in regard to where this money was obtained, when it was obtained, and where he was a part and portion of the night." This is complained of as being a charge with respect to matters of fact, in violation of section 19 of article 6, of the constitution. We do not think the objection well taken. Judges may state the testimony and declare the law, but must not express an opinion upon the weight of the evidence. We are unable to see how the mere statement that there is a conflict in the evidence in certain respects can be regarded as the expression of an opinion upon the weight of the evidence, or a charge with respect to matters of fact. In People v. Casey, 65 Cal. 261, 3 Pac. Rep. 874, cited by appellant, the court instructed the jury that "the testimony in the case shows that the defendants," etc. This was held to be erroneous, and the court said: "To state the testimony is one thing. To declare what it shows is another and very different thing. It is for the jury exclusively to determine what the testimony shows." That case is not in point here.

The court in its charge nowhere defined or stated what is meant by the words "reasonable doubt," and this failure is assigned as error. No specific instruction upon the subject was asked by the defendant. Possibly he and his counsel then thought that the phrase was so familiar that no definition was required. However this may have been, the fact, as we have seen, that they failed to ask for the instruction is a full answer to the point which they now make.

The last point to be considered relates to certain charges of prior convictions found in the information. Defendant was charged with burglary, and with prior convictions of robbery and burglary. When called upon to plead, he "acknowledged the prior convictions, and pleaded not guilty to the charge in the information." After the jury was impaneled, "the information charging the defendant with the crime of burglary was read, and his plea of not guilty duly stated." The court did not instruct the jury in relation to the charge of prior convictions, and, so far as appears, no reference was made to that charge by any one during the whole progress of the trial. The jury found the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree, but did not find in reference to the prior convictions. Before judgment was pronounced the prior convictions were withdrawn, on motion of the district attorney. It is claimed that, as the information contained charges of prior convictions, these charges must have been read to the jury, and that they impeached the character of defendant, and without doubt prejudiced the jury against him, to his injury. We see nothing to indicate that the charges of prior convictions were read to the jury. Section 1,093 of the Penal Code provides: "If the indictment or information be for felony, the clerk must read it and state the plea of the defendant to the jury; and in cases where it charges a previous conviction, and the defendant has confessed the same, the clerk in reading it shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous convictions." As the defendant, when arraigned, confessed the previous convictions, we must presume that the clerk obeyed the law and omitted the reading of all that related to those charges. The court might have sentenced the defendant to imprisonment for 15 years. The extreme penalty was not pronounced, but the sentence was for 10 years only. As the previous convictions were withdrawn, it must be presumed that the court paid no attention to them in pronouncing judgment, and that the sentence would have been the same if the previous convictions had not been charged in the information.

We conclude from an examination of the whole record that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

DOWER v. RICHARDS. (No. 12,076.)

1. MINES AND MINING—TUNNELING LAND—RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES.

Defendant owned land in fee-simple to which he had acquired title under a grant by town-site patent issued by the United States in 1869. Plaintiff ran a tunnel under this lot, claiming a right to do so, in order to reach and work a gold-bearing quartz ledge situated within said lot, and known to exist at the date of the town-site patent under which said lot was held. Defendant, in order to restore the water to a well which had become drained by reason of the tunnel, sunk a shaft, and caved in the same, and plaintiff brought an action to recover for the alleged trespass. Held, the grant by town-site patent being prior to the passage of the act of 1872, (Rev. St. U. S. § 2320,) which gives to a quartz-mining claim a width not exceeding 300 feet on each side of the center of the croppings of the ledge, vested in the grantee, and those claiming under it, an absolute title to all the land it describes in fee-simple, excepting, under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2386, 2392, only such portion as may contain a mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, or mining claim, or possession, which may be held under local authority or existing laws. And plaintiff in the absence of any contract with defendant, had no right to dig the tunnel.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT.

It is not erroneous to neglect to submit to the jury, as a material issue, the question whether the defendant's grantor had given the plaintiff, before the sale of the lot to defendant, the right to run a tunnel under such lot, when such allegation in the pleadings and the evidence in the case fail to show any consideration to support such agreement.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Nevada county; F. D. SOWARD, Judge.

H. L. Gear, for appellant. Gaylord & Searls and Cross & Simonds, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. Richards was the owner of a lot of ground which he claimed and held by a deed of conveyance from a Mrs. Bigelow, who had acquired it with other land under the town-site patent of the city of Nevada, issued in the year 1869, by virtue of the provisions of title 32, Rev. St. U. S. The plaintiff had run a tunnel under this lot, claiming that he had a right to do so, because, as he alleged, in such way only could he reach and work a "gold mine" situated within said lot, and known to exist at the date of the town-site patent under which said lot was held and claimed. As a consequence, a well belonging to the defendant, located on that lot, several hundred feet from the tunnel, had become drained of its water, and to restore the water to the well the defendant caved in the plaintiff's tunnel at a point where the latter claimed it had reached a spur of the quartz ledge or "gold mine." Because of the alleged trespass of the defendant in digging in his own lot in such a way as to cave in the tunnel of the plaintiff, and to recover the damages resulting therefrom, the latter instituted this action. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the defendant, and from the judgment rendered thereupon this appeal is prosecuted. A bill of exceptions presents the grounds relied on to reverse that judgment.

The main points made in support of the plaintiff's contention are: (1) That the court erred in its instruction to the jury numbered "one;" (2) that it refused to grant 12 instructions requested by the plaintiff.

The instruction first mentioned is as follows: "The jury is instructed that if they believe from the evidence that the place where Philip Richards caved in the tunnel was upon ground to which he had previously derived title under the town-site patent of the city of Nevada, and that such place was not upon any mining or tunnel possession held at the date of, or prior to the date of, such town-site patent, then the jury should find for the defendant, unless you find the acts of the defendant in filling up the tunnel were done through malice and oppression."

It is very plain that the United States, in granting the patent under which the defendant held and possessed his lot, reserved to itself the title to any "gold mine" which might be known to exist in any part of that lot, (section 2392, Rev. St. U. S. 1878, 2d Ed. p. 438;) and the plaintiff urges that, as a consequence, the government, or any one authorized by it to explore such gold mine, may tunnel under a lot granted by a town-site patent dated in the year 1869, and drain the water from a well situated on that lot, if it be necessary to the reasonable and proper construction of that tunnel, even if, while so doing, there be no gold mine existing in that part of such lot under or in which the tunnel runs. This is to say, she claims the right, for her own private purposes, to make use of and run a tunnel in the land of another, and drain his well of water, because in some part of said lot there is a gold mine which was known to exist prior to or at the time the patent was issued under which the defendant claims, and which can only be reached by such tunnel running through another part of that lot in which there is no mine. Is not this an effort on the part of the plaintiff to appropriate the private property of the defendant to the private use of plaintiff? Is it not an enterprise to be conducted solely for her personal profit.

At the time when the patent to the town-site was granted,—that is, in the year 1869,—congress had not passed the act of 1872, (Rev. St. § 2320,) giving a width to quartz-mining claims of not exceeding 300 feet on each side of the center of the croppings of the ledge; so that there was then existing no law of the United States which prescribed the method by which a "gold mine" could be prospected and worked, and as the law then stood it reserved the title to such mine in the government, but went no further. The grant, then, by the town-site patent, carried an absolute fee-simple title to the grantee, and those claiming under it, of all land in which "no gold, silver, copper, or cinnabar mine" existed, or in which no valid mining claim or possession was had or held under local authority or rules or existing laws. Sections 2386, 2392, Rev. St. U. S.

It would therefore appear that the defendant had an absolute fee-simple title to all that part of his lot which had been tunneled prior to the draining of his well, and that the plaintiff had no right, in the absence of any contract with the defendant, to dig that tunnel, and that the defendant did no wrong, and committed no trespass, in caving it in. For it cannot be (in the absence of any law of the United States reserving rights to work gold mines in a specific way) that a mere reservation of the title to such a mine in a patent in any way limits the title which it passes to that portion of the land in which no mine exists; and the grantee takes under the town-site patent all the land it describes by an absolute title in fee-simple, excepting only such portion as may contain a mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, or mining claim or possession which may be held under local authority or existing laws. For example, an individual owns a town-site lot which is 300 feet square. There is in a corner of that lot a gold mine embedded in the ground in the shape of a quartz ledge. The gold mine only occupies a space say 10 feet square. In the absence of any legislation by congress before or at the time when this patent, including that lot, is issued, stating how that mine shall be worked, or of any valid state law to the same effect, authorized by congress, the owner of the lot under the patent holds all the ground, save that part in which the mine is located, by a fee-simple title; and, without some law in accordance with the constitution of the state and of the United States, no man can tunnel under the part of the lot held by this title in fee-simple, except by contract with the owner. This use attempted to be obtained by the plaintiff in tunneling the defendant's land was not a public use, and no valid state law authorizes it. Consolidated Co. v. Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 269. As we have seen, no law of the United States gave it, as the patent issued in 1869, when no legislation had been had as to the manner of working gold mines. The right to 300 feet of ground on each side of a quartz ledge was not granted until the passage of the act of 1872, (Rev. St. § 2320.)

We are of opinion that instruction 1 was correctly given, in so far as it did not inform the jury, as the appellant claims it should have done, that the plaintiff had a right to run her tunnel under the defendant's land in a reasonable and proper manner, in order to reach and work the gold mine which lay in another part of said lot. But the appellant makes a further point on that instruction: she claims that it did not submit to the consideration of the jury a material issue, which was whether or not the defendant's vendor, Mrs. Bigelow, had given to the plaintiff (before her sale of the lot to defendant) the right to run the tunnel as she did. It nowhere appears, either as alleged in any pleading or in evidence, that any consideration whatever moved from the plaintiff to Mrs. Bigelow or the defendant which would support any such agreement; hence the allegation as made in the pleading, and its denial, did not raise any material issue upon which the jury should have been called to pass, and an instruction on the point was unnecessary.

The whole 12 instructions asked for by the plaintiff, and refused by the court, are expressed in such a way as that, taken altogether, the jury must necessarily have been impressed with the idea that the court intended to say to them that, if they believed there was "a gold mine" in any part of the de-defendant's lot, the title thereto being reserved to the government, and not vested in the defendant, the plaintiff had a right to run her tunnel as she did. The defendant had no right to cave it in, and was therefore liable in damages. The instructions would have misled the jury, and were properly refused.

As we have before said, the defendant owned in fee-simple the whole of the lot to which he had a conveyance, except the part in which the alleged "gold mine" lay. There was no valid law of the state or United States existent which at the time of the issuance of the town-site patent prescribed any method of working a "gold mine" so situated. Therefore, the title to the gold mine and its locus remained in the United States government; but, that government not having legislated so as to impose any method of working said mine as a condition or restriction upon the fee-simple holding of the part of the lot where there was no gold mine, the owner of the lot held it absolutely, subject only to the right which might be given by a constitutional state law to condemn it for a public use.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment should be affirmed.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

JANUARY v. SUPERIOR COURT. (No. 20,165.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 30, 1887.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—TIME OF SETTLING—NEW BILL.

Defendant's attorneys, without notice to the opposite side, took a bill of exceptions already filed by them with the clerk, which the court had declared defective, separated the first 10 and last 15 pages therefrom, and between these two portions introduced a statement of the evidence in narrative form, and presented it for settlement. Held, that the bill, as thus presented, was a new bill, and, as defendant's time within which he could regularly file his bill had expired, it was not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to settle it.

2. SAME—DEFECTIVE BILL.

A bill of exceptions, consisting simply of a transcript of the reporter's notes of the evidence and proceedings, is defective, and the court is justified in disallowing it.

3. PRACTICE IN CIVIL CASES—SERVICE OF PAPERS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1011, providing for the service of papers upon attorneys, requires them to be left "in a conspicuous place in the office," in the absence of the attorney. Held, that a box designated by an attorney for the deposit of letters and papers in his absence is "a conspicuous place," within the meaning of the section.

In bank. Application for mandamus to superior court, Sacramento county; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

A. Green Curtis, John H. McKune, and Henry Edgerton, for plaintiff.
Atty. Gen. Geo. A. Johnson, for the People.

PATERSON, J. The first bill of exceptions was prepared in time and properly left with the clerk for the judge. The service of the notice, which was made by depositing a copy thereof through the door into the postal box which had been placed there for the reception of documents, was sufficient. It cannot be said that a box so clearly designated by an attorney as the proper place for the deposit of letters and papers during his absence from the office, is not a "conspicuous place" within the meaning of section 1011, Code Civil Proc.

The bill as originally presented was a transcript of the reporter's notes of the evidence and proceedings, and the court was justified in refusing to settle it. It is claimed, however, that he should have ordered a statement in narrative form. This he did not do, nor did he give any one authority to change or amend the statement which had been presented. Counsel for defendant asked permission of the judge to revise the bill by reducing the evidence to a narrative form, but were informed by the respondent that he would take no action without notice to, or in the presence of, the district attorney. Thereupon defendant's attorneys, without notice to the district attorney or to respondent, took the bill, separated the first 10 and last 15 pages therefrom, and between these two portions introduced a statement of evidence in narrative form. This new bill as prepared was delivered to the clerk on the twelfth day of November, 1885, and notice given to the district attorney that it would be presented to the judge for settlement on the sixteenth day of November, 1885. On the last-named date, the district attorney appeared and objected to the settlement or allowance of the bill, on the grounds that the document presented for settlement was not the bill of exceptions left with the clerk on the eighteenth of August, 1885; that since the filing of the original bill of exceptions with the clerk, the same had been mutilated, portions torn out, and new matter put in; that the time for filing the bill of exceptions had long since expired, and no order extending the time had been made; that the original bill filed was improper in form and substance. The judge heard the evidence as to the facts alleged in these objections, found the same to be true, sustained the objections, and refused to settle the bill, saying: "Now, with reference to the bill as proposed and introduced on the twelfth day of November, this bill must doubtless be held to all intents and purposes to be a new bill. * * * The body of the bill was entirely changed, new matter inserted, and the bill in its revamped form again presented for settlement upon formal notice to the district attorney. It will have to be considered, therefore, from the standpoint of a newly proposed bill, presented at a date subsequent to the expiration of the time allowed for that purpose; defendant's time, as allowed by the court, within which he could regularly present his bill, having unquestionably expired August 20th. Defendant contends that the mere fact that his bill was presented after a lapse of the time allowed, is not of itself sufficient to deprive him of the right to have it settled; that the statute is directory merely; that it is a matter of discretion with the judge whether he will settle it or not, and that he should settle the bill notwithstanding the delay. * * * The discretion, however, which is to be exercised by the court or judge, is intended to be a sound judicial discretion, founded upon a just and legal ground of excuse as contradistinguished from mere arbitrary assertion of personal will power on the part of the individual. The evidence shows that the defendant in this case was afforded, in addition to the time allowed by the statute, a very generous period within which to prepare and serve his bill of exceptions; the time being repeatedly extended by the judge upon the application of his counsel. * * * At the eleventh hour he presents for the consideration of the court a proposed bill in a form which he must have been aware, in fact was bound to know, could not be entertained or allowed." The judge then went on to speak of the manner in which the new bill had been prepared, without excuse for the delay, and concluded that it would be an abuse of judicial discretion, in view of the decisions of the supreme court in People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 422, and People v. Getty, 49 Cal. 581, to allow or settle the bill. The second bill having been prepared by mutilating the original bill without the consent of the court or the district attorney, we think the judge was right in treating it as he did, as essentially a new bill, filed without authority of law or permission of the court; and we cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in refusing to settle the same.

Application denied; alternative writ dismissed.

Ex parte HENSHAW, on Habeas Corpus. (No. 20,310.)

(Supreme Court of California. September 28, 1887.)

1. OFFICE AND OFFICER—POWER OF SUPERIOR COURT TO TRY USURPATION OF OFFICE.
Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. c. 5, the superior court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action brought against the defendant for the usurpation of a public office, and incidentally has the power to determine the question of the existence or non-existence of such office.
2. SAME—JUDGMENT OF USURPATION—COLLATERAL ATTACK—NON-EXISTENCE OF OFFICE.
The judgment of the superior court, finding that the defendant has usurped and is unlawfully holding a public office, cannot be attacked collaterally; and such judgment cannot be annulled by the subsequent decree of that or of any other court adjudging the non-existence of the office.
3. CONTEMPT—FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF JUDGMENT.
The petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus had been arrested and imprisoned for contempt of court in disobeying the orders of a judgment. It was ordered and decreed that, as a punishment for said contempt, he "be, and he is hereby, fined in the sum of $500; and that he pay said fine to the clerk of this court; and it is further ordered and adjudged that, in default of the payment of said fine, he be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Alameda until the said fine is paid; such imprisonment not to exceed one day for each and every dollar of said fine that shall so remain unpaid." Held, that the judgment was a substantial compliance with Pen. Code Cal. § 1205, and was valid.
4. SAME.
When a contempt is not committed in the immediate view and presence of the court, it is not necessary that the judgment should set forth the facts constituting the contempt. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1211. McFARLAND, TEMPLE, and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.
5. SAME—COSTS.
A judgment for contempt in disobeying the orders of court, besides imposing upon the defendant the penalty of fine or imprisonment, decreed that the relator should have his costs in the proceeding, without specifying the amount of such costs. Held, that the whole judgment was not void, there being no judgment for imprisonment for non-payment of such costs.

In bank. Application for habeas corpus.

Moore & Reed, James A. Johnson, and Charles Tuttle, for petitioner. Fox & Kellogg, for respondent.

McKINSTRY, J. The attorney general, upon the relation of one Daniels, commenced an action against the petitioner herein, in which action judgment was entered, by the superior court for Alameda, that the petitioner had usurped, and intruded into, and was unlawfully exercising, the office of police judge of the city of Oakland, and that the relator therein was entitled to the office. From that judgment the defendant therein appealed, but the appeal did not stay its execution. Code Civil Proc. § 949. Upon proceedings taken in the said superior court, the defendant in that action, petitioner here, was adjudged guilty of contempt in that he had disobeyed the judgment, and continued to occupy and exercise the office in disregard thereof.

1. It is contended by the petitioner that the judgment in the action for usurpation was absolutely void, and he was therefore not guilty of contempt in disregarding it; that when the action was commenced, and judgment therein entered, there was no such office as that of police judge of the city of Oakland, because the act of March, 1866, "to establish a police court," etc., "in the city of Oakland," was repealed by the act of 1885, to "provide for police courts," etc. St. 1865-66, p. 193; St. 1885, p. 213. The decisions cited by counsel for petitioner do not meet the question here presented: First, Persons imprisoned for contempt in having refused obedience to judgments in civil actions commanding them to do or refrain from a certain act, have been discharged on habeas corpus when a court of limited statutory jurisdiction has tried an action it had no power to try, and entered a judgment it had no power to enter, and has then attempted to enforce compliance with its judgment by imprisoning a party refusing to obey it. Second. Where there are no public offenses except those made such by statute, persons held under judgments directing their imprisonment have been discharged on habeas corpus, when it appeared that the act charged against the prisoner, and which he had been adjudged to have done or committed, was not a crime, and could not be a crime, however fully it might be stated or described. Third. Where, although the act charged, and of which the prisoner had been found guilty, constituted a crime, yet the court had no power to impose the imprisonment as a consequence of his conviction.

In the last two of the classes mentioned, as in the first, the discharge is founded upon the proposition that the court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment. Why no jurisdiction? Because a court of criminal jurisdiction is limited to the trial of crimes or public offenses, and to the rendition, in each instance, of the judgment prescribed by law. In the second class, the jurisdiction is in part derived from, and is limited by, the statutes declaring certain acts to be public offenses. In the third class, the power to pronounce judgment is derived solely from the statutes attaching certain penalties to certain offenses.

The jurisdiction of the superior court to try the question of usurpation of an office, and, incidentally, the question of the existence of the office, is not derived from the act of 1866, (claimed to have been repealed by the act of 1885,) or from any act relating to a particular office, but from its constitutional grant of general jurisdiction in civil cases, the exercise of which, so far as respects actions of this character, is regulated by the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure treating of "actions for the usurpation of an office or franchise." The act of 1866 provides for a police court, and the election of a judge thereof; the act of 1885 provides for a police court, and the designation of a justice of the peace to be judge of the police court. Under either act the judge of the police court is the police judge within the city of Oakland. The complaint alleged that the petitioner had usurped the office of police judge of the city of Oakland. The court had jurisdiction to decide that petitioner had usurped the office of police judge, if, in its opinion, the act of 1885 was in force, and the petitioner without authority was exercising the office of police judge under that act. It had jurisdiction to decide that the complaint was sufficient to justify such a judgment, and to disregard as surplusage erroneous allegations as to the statutory origin of the office. Moreover, the existence or non-existence of the office described in the complaint was an issue which the court had jurisdiction to try. Its finding upon that issue cannot be assailed collaterally, though it should be conceded the finding was erroneous; or though, in determining the issue, the court may erroneously have believed and assumed a statute was not repealed which was repealed. The trial of the issue could not have been stayed by prohibition, nor could the judgment be annulled by certiorari.

Suppose, in a proceeding like that, the judgment wherein is here claimed to be void, the superior judge should erroneously (in the opinion of another superior judge) hold that a statute creating an office had been repealed, when it had not been repealed, and base a judgment against the people on such erroneous ruling, would not the judgment, if unreversed, be a bar to a subsequent action on the same facts? In such case the judgment would turn on a question of law, and a court can no more set aside a statute, still in force, than it can re-enact a repealed statute. But, in deciding properly or erroneously that a statute purporting to create an office has been or has not been repealed, it neither abrogates nor does it create the office. It construes the law; and a mistake of law in that regard no more invalidates its judgment than does a mistake of law in any other particular. It decides the question of law because its grant of jurisdiction authorizes it to decide all questions of law involved in the issues it has power to try. Except with respect to statutory limitations of the powers of the court itself, a court is authorized to treat statutes as but part of the law, and an erroneous interpretation of a statute, or an erroneous ruling as to the operative force of one of two statutes, apparently conflicting, no more affects the jurisdictional power to render a judgment than does an erroneous interpretation of the unwritten law.

Every judgment that an office has been usurped involves an adjudication that there is an office to be usurped. The court has power to adjudge the existence, unless its jurisdiction is limited by the fact. But here the court had power to determine the fact, since its jurisdiction is not limited by the existence or non-existence of the fact. On the contrary, it has power to try and determine its existence or non-existence. None the less so because the fact depends upon the law. "An action may be brought by the attorney general, in the name of the people of this state, upon his own information, or upon the complaint of a private party, against any person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise within this state," etc. Code Civil Proc. § 803. "In every such action, judgment may be rendered upon the right of the defendant, and also upon the right of the party so alleged to be entitled, or only upon the right of the defendant, as justice may require." Code Civil Proc. § 805.

Even if it should be conceded that the jurisdiction of the superior court in this class of actions is derived solely from the Code of Civil Procedure, it could not successfully be contended that, by section 803, the jurisdiction is limited by the fact that there is an office, established by law, which the alleged intruder has usurped; that any other court may determine, on habeas corpus, or in any collateral proceeding, that, under the law, there is no such office, and therefore that the judgment in the action for usurpation is void. It is claimed that, in the exercise of the habeas corpus jurisdiction, every other superior court in the state has power to decide that the office does or does not exist, but that the court to whom is confided the trial of the question of usurpation has no such power. Surely the legislature (violating no constitutional provision) could confer on the superior court the power to determine, in an action brought for usurpation of an office, whether, under the laws of the state, the office exists. The rest is merely matter of statutory construction. Has the legislature conferred on the superior court the power to determine the question? In our opinion, section 803 places the jurisdiction in the superior court. Even if the act of 1866 was repealed by the act of 1885, and if (by reason of specific averments in the complaint) the superior court had no power to decide that the petitioner had usurped the office of police judge, as created and defined by the act last mentioned, petitioner is not entitled to his discharge. Certainly the superior court did not decide that the petitioner was rightfully in office under the act of 1885.

The superior court adjudged that the petitioner had unlawfully usurped and was unlawfully holding the office of police judge of the city of Oakland. It is claimed by the petitioner that the findings and judgment are to be referred to the averments of the complaint, and are therefore a finding and judgment that he had intruded into the office described in the complaint, and was unlawfully exercising the functions attributed by the complaint to that office; that the references in the complaint to the statutes relating to the police judge of Oakland—his election, term of office, and duties—clearly indicate that the defendant (petitioner) was charged with usurping the powers of police judge of the city of Oakland, as prescribed in the act of eighteen hundred and sixty-six; and that the judgment was that he was exercising such powers. But, if all this should be conceded in favor of petitioner, the result would be the same. It might be admitted that if no such office (police judge of the city of Oakland) exists, in law, the portion of the judgment which declares the relator to be entitled to it is void; but that is a matter with which the petitioner has no concern, except as to the matter of costs, of which something will be said hereafter. If the petitioner was exercising the functions of a judge, as the same are defined in the act creating the office of judge of the police court of the city of Oakland,—trying causes and rendering judgments,—and was called on by the state to show by what authority he was doing these things, he could not defend his conduct by proving no one else had power to exercise such functions. As between the people on the one hand, and the petitioner on the other, the important question was not so much whether the office existed, as whether he was unlawfully exercising public functions, such as were attached to the office when the office did exist. It may be true that an office must exist de jure, but it by no means follows that one who is exercising the public functions of an office, as the same were defined in a repealed statute, can deny the existence of the office, and base upon that denial a right to continue the exercise of powers unauthorized by law.

In argument it is suggested that petitioner did not intrude into the office of police judge, but that he was lawfully exercising the functions of "city justice." But the court found that he had usurped the office described in the complaint. If the office of "city justice" is the same as that of police judge, the superior court adjudged petitioner had usurped that office; if the office of "city justice" is different from police judge, the court adjudged petitioner had usurped the police judgeship.

An office is of the nature of a franchise, in that it can only be derived from the sovereign. Section 803 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for an action against one who unlawfully exercises any public office "or any franchise." A franchise is said to be a particular privilege conferred by grant from government, and invested in individuals. 3 Kent, Comm. 458. If an individual or corporation shall assume, without grant, to exercise powers which are prerogatives of the government, and such as can be exercised by a private person only when granted by the government, can it be doubted that he or it should be adjudged to be unlawfully exercising such powers under the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure which relates to actions for the usurpation of franchises? In such case, would the intruder be permitted to say: "I have not usurped a franchise, because there can be no franchise without a grant?" The response would be: "You have usurped a power of the government. You cannot act as if you had the franchise, and say you are not exercising it." At least, the office of police judge of the city of Oakland was. One who unlawfully has assumed the powers of the former police judge is estopped from asserting, when he is pursued for the usurpation, that the office no longer exists. Our conclusion is that the judgment that the petitioner usurped the office described in the complaint is not void. Whether it be erroneous is a matter to be decided after the appeal therefrom shall have been heard.

2. The contempt judgment of the superior court under which the petitioner is imprisoned, after reciting the proceedings (including the affidavit of one Daniels) on which it is based, proceeds: "Now the court, being fully advised of the facts and of the law in the premises, finds as matters of fact that each and all of the facts, matters, charges, and things stated and specified in the affidavit of said Daniels hereinbefore set forth, and upon which the order to show cause herein was based, are true and correct as there stated and alleged; and as a conclusion of law therefrom the court finds that the same constitute a contempt of the authority of this court. Wherefore, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by this court that, by reason of the acts and conduct of the said F. W. Henshaw, specified and stated in the affidavit of the said S. F. Daniels, hereinbefore set forth, he, the said F. W. Henshaw, is guilty of contempt of the authority of this court; and it is further ordered and adjudged by this court that, as a punishment for said contempt, the said F. W. Henshaw be, and he is hereby, fined in the sum of $500, and that he pay said fine to the clerk of this court; and it is further ordered and adjudged that, in default of the payment of said fine, he be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Alameda, until the said fine is paid; such imprisonment not to exceed one day for each and every dollar of said fine that shall so remain unpaid. It is further ordered and adjudged by this court that the said S. F. Daniels have and recover of and from the said F. W. Henshaw, defendant herein, his costs in the proceeding."

It is claimed by petitioner that this judgment, in so far as it provides for his imprisonment, is void; that the judgment, while purporting to impose the imprisonment as an alternative, yet directs that the petitioner be imprisoned until the fine be paid; or, if not to be so read, that it provides he be imprisoned for the full period of 500 days; that by the terms of the judgment the petitioner would not be entitled to his discharge although he should pay the whole or any portion of the fine prior to the expiration of the 500 days. The argument is based upon the language of section 1205 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "A judgment that the defendant pay a fine, may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, specifying the extent of imprisonment, which must not exceed one day for every dollar of the fine." Section 1446 of the Penal Code, to which reference has been made, relates only to judgments of justices' and police courts. In Ex parte Crittenden, 62 Cal. 534, it was held that, upon a judgment imposing a fine for a contempt, it is competent for the court to direct that the party stand committed until the fine be paid. Even, however, if it be conceded that section 1205 of the Penal Code is a limitation upon the power of courts to punish for contempts, we think the judgment conforms to that section. The judgment directs that the petitioner be imprisoned until the fine be paid; and to avoid the possible interpretation that the word "paid" is used in any sense different from "satisfied,"—the statutory term,—it provides that such imprisonment shall not exceed one day for each and every dollar of said fine that shall so remain unpaid. The judgment further provides that the imprisonment shall not occur at all, except in default of the payment of the fine. In legal contemplation the petitioner was present in court when the judgment was rendered. He certainly could not escape its consequences by reason of his absence, if he was absent. To say that he ought to have been given time to pay the fine, is but to say that the judgment ought to have been one not directed by section 1205 of the Penal Code. We find nothing in the statute which commands or requires the court to give a defendant any definite period of time to raise the money to pay the fine, before the expiration of which he is not to be imprisoned. The judgment specifies the extent of the imprisonment in specifying the maximum of time, and in providing that it shall not exceed one day for each dollar of the fine remaining unpaid. This view accords with the decision in Ex parte Ellis, 54 Cal. 204. The section of the Code does not in express terms authorize the discharge of the defendant who has suffered a portion of the term of imprisonment, in case he shall pay the balance of the fine not satisfied by imprisonment, at the rate of one day for each dollar of the fine. His right to be discharged, under such circumstances, is the result of judicial construction of the language of the section. A judgment in a criminal case which, after assessing the amount of a fine imposed, should also direct that the defendant be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, and specify the extent of the imprisonment, by fixing a term not exceeding one day for each dollar of the fine, would be sufficient in form, and valid, because it would comply with section 1205 of the Penal Code. The judgment before us limits and specifies the imprisonment, by providing that it shall not exceed one day for each and every dollar of the fine remaining unpaid. It is sufficient and valid because it declares what has been decided to be the legal effect of a judgment in literal accord with the statute.

The whole judgment is not void because it attempts to give costs to the relator, or because it does not specify the amount of such costs. It does not provide for the imprisonment of petitioner in default of the payment of costs.

Petitioner also contends the judgment is void because it does not recite the facts which constitute the contempt of which the defendant (petitioner) is adjudged guilty. Section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when a contempt, not in the presence of the court, is committed, an affidavit shall be presented of the facts constituting the contempt. Upon the affidavit may be made an order to show cause. Code Civil Proc. § 1212. When the person upon whom the order is served appears, the court must proceed to investigate the "charge," (Code Civil Proc. § 1217,) and must determine whether the person proceeded against "is guilty of the contempt charged." Code Civil Proc. § 1218. Under the sections of the Code the finding of the superior court that the averments in the affidavit or charge of Daniels, on which the order to show cause was based, were true; that the commission of the acts affirmed in such affidavit constituted a contempt; and that, by reason of the commission by petitioner of the acts alleged in the affidavit, he was guilty of contempt,—was a determination that he was guilty of the contempt charged. Of course, such determination does not preclude us from inquiring if the acts charged, and found to have been done, really constitute a contempt. But the record clearly shows upon what facts, proved to its satisfaction, the court based the contempt judgment. In People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 152, relied on by petitioner's counsel, the judgment was simply that a person "be imprisoned forty-eight hours, and fined $500, for contempt of court." The supreme court held the order should be annulled on certiorari. This was before the enactment of any statute regulating proceedings for contempts. Moreover, the decision was clearly right, upon common-law principles, since, for aught that appeared, the judgment was a mere arbitrary abuse of power, not preceded by any investigation, and not showing an adjudication that any particular contempt had been committed.

In our opinion, the facts charged, and of which the petitioner was found guilty, constituted a contempt which the superior court had power to punish.

Let the petitioner be remanded to custody.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

We dissent: MCFARLAND, J.; TEMPLE, J.

THORNTON, J., (dissenting.) The only inquiry to be made herein is whether the court had jurisdiction to imprison the petitioner for a contempt in the case before us. The petitioner is held to be in contempt for refusing to obey a judgment of the superior court of the county of Alameda, rendered and given in the case of People ex rel. Daniels against The Petitioner. Unless the judgment is void, the court had jurisdiction, and the imprisonment for contempt is valid. The inquiry, then, relates to the judgment rendered. This judgment was rendered in a case in which it was alleged that Daniels was entitled to an office,—that of police judge of the city of Oakland,—which had been usurped by Henshaw, the petitioner here. It is urged here that the office must exist to be usurped; that there can be no usurpation of an office which does not exist; and, if the office does not exist, there is no jurisdiction in the court to inquire into its usurpation, and render any judgment in favor of the plaintiff against defendant.

If the office did not exist in regard to which the suit was brought, we cannot conceive how there can be any jurisdiction in the court to enter judgment against any one usurping it. An office can only be created by the constitution, or some valid statute passed by the legislature. Then the existence or non-existence of an office is a question of law, not of fact. Its existence depends on law, either constitutional or statutory. If no law can be found showing its creation, it cannot exist. To empower a court to render a valid judgment, it must have jurisdiction of the res, where it is a cause in rem, or of the subject-matter and parties, when it is a cause inter partes. If there is no jurisdiction of the parties, the judgment is void, though it may have jurisdiction of the subject-matter. If there is no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the judgment is also a nullity, though the court may have had jurisdiction of the parties. If no res exists, there can be no jurisdiction in a cause in rem, and a judgment pronounced in such cause would be void. If a ship is proceeded against by libel in an admiralty court, in a case appropriate for such proceeding, there would be no jurisdiction if there was no ship. If there was no subject-matter in a cause inter partes, we cannot see any ground of jurisdiction. If an action of ejectment is brought in a court in this state, to recover a parcel of land situate in the state of Nevada, we cannot see that there could be any jurisdiction or any judgment pronounced for its recovery which would not be void. If the parties are myths, fictitious persons, a judgment pronounced in an action between them would be void for want of jurisdiction. The same would result if one of the parties was not a real person. If the court had jurisdiction to inquire, the judgment in that case would be void. A court can have no power to pronounce judgment for or against a non-existent person. Such was the point directly in judicature in Sampeyreac v. U. S., 7 Pet. 233. In that case it was held that a decree in favor of a fictitious person (Sampeyreac) was a nullity. The case cited was this: Under an act of congress purporting to authorize it, a bill of review was filed in the superior court of the territory of Arkansas, to impeach a decree previously rendered in the same court in favor of the complainant in the cause of Sampeyreac v. U. S. The decree had been rendered in favor of Sampeyreac, and against the United States, for a tract of land. The decree on review was held void, for the reason that Sampeyreac was not a real person. The court said: "The original decree in this case was a mere nullity; it gave no right to any one." And this was so held for the reason that the complainant was a fictitious, and not a real, person.

If a court, to render a valid decree inter partes, must have jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and the parties, how can such jurisdiction exist if there is no subject-matter or no parties? Let it be admitted that a court has jurisdiction to inquire whether there is an existent subject-matter; as soon as it finds there is none such, its jurisdiction to enter a decree for its recovery against any person is at an end. It has no more power than it has when a suit is brought to recover a piece of land, and it gives judgment against the defendant for a horse or an office. That such a judgment would be void, we cannot see that there can be any doubt. If such jurisdiction exists, it can only be from a determination of the court that such subject-matter exists, and it is too well settled to be now debated that a court cannot, by holding that it has jurisdiction when it has none, invest itself with jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court must be shown by the record of the case on which it passes. The jurisdiction of the court is always open to inquiry in any court in which the record of the action is put in evidence. It is so open in the same court, or in any other court having jurisdiction of the case before it, and can always be called in question collaterally. A court, in rendering a judgment, always, either expressly or impliedly, affirms that it has jurisdiction. It may enter such judgment, and at any time on its own motion re-examine the cause, and vacate the judgment for lack of jurisdiction. When the record of a judgment is offered in evidence in another court, the jurisdiction is a matter of law, and if, upon an examination of the record, it appears that, upon the application of the law, the court rendering the judgment had no jurisdiction, it can declare such judgment to be void. It is in effect always void,—void ab initio. The judgment is a nullity. It never had life, and was always naught. It gave no right to any one, and none could be acquired under it.

In the action of People, etc., ex rel. Daniels v. Henshaw the complaint is in these words:

"(1) That on the first day of January, A. D. 1885, the city of Oakland was, thence hitherto has been, and now is, a municipal corporation, created, organized, and existing under the laws of the state of California. (2) That among other offices of said municipal corporation, created by statute, and provided by its charter or organic act for the government of said city, is the office of police judge, and the charter of said city provides and requires that there be a municipal election held in said city on the second Monday of March, A. D. 1886, for the election, among municipal officers, of a police judge, for the term of two years next succeeding such election. (3) That on the second Monday of March, A. D. 1886, to-wit, on the eighth day of March, A. D. 1886, a municipal and charter election was duly held in said city, for the election of, among other municipal officers, a police judge, for the term of two years next succeeding such election. (4) That at said election so held in said city one S. F. Daniels received the greatest number of votes cast for police judge of the city of Oakland by the qualified electors of said city, and thereafter, to-wit, on the twenty-ninth day of March, A. D. 1886, and within ten days after receiving a certificate of his election, he took the oath of office, and presented to the city council of said city a bond good and sufficient in form, and as required by law, with two good and sufficient sureties in the penal sum of $5,000, as and for his official bond as police judge of the city of Oakland, for the term of two years next succeeding his said election. (5) That on said second Monday of March, A. D. 1886, and for more than one year prior thereto, the said S. F. Daniels was, thence hitherto has been, and now is, a resident of the city of Oakland, Alameda county, state of California, and during all of said time he has been, and now is, an attorney and counselor at law, eligible and qualified to fill and hold the office and discharge the duties of police judge of said city. (6) That on the seventh day of April, A. D. 1886, the defendant, F. W. Henshaw, usurped and intruded into the office of police judge of said city, and ever since said day he has usurped and intruded into said office, and withheld the same from the said S. F. Daniels. Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment: First. That the defendant is not entitled to the office of police judge of the city of Oakland, and that he be ousted therefrom. Second. That the said S. F. Daniels is entitled to said office of police judge of the city of Oakland, and that he be let and put into possession of said office, and that he have his costs herein, and such other and further relief in the premises as shall seem proper."

The answer of Henshaw is as follows:

"The above-named defendant, for answer in his behalf to the pretended cause of action set forth in the complaint of plaintiff above named, herein filed: First. Admits that the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of said complaint are true. Second. Denies that among other offices of said municipal corporation created by statute, and provided for by its charter or organic act, for the government of said city, or at all, is the office of police judge. Denies that the charter of said city provides and requires, or provides or requires, that there be a municipal election held in said city on the second day of March, A. D. 1886, or at any time, or at all, for the election, among other municipal officers, of a police judge for the term of two years next succeeding such election, or for any term at all. Third. Denies that on the second Monday of March, A. D. 1886, or at any time, or at all, a municipal and charter election, or municipal or charter election, was duly or otherwise held in said city for the election of, among other municipal officers, a police judge for the term of two years next succeeding such election, or for any term, or at all. Fourth. Defendant has no knowledge, information, or belief sufficient to enable defendant to answer the allegations contained in paragraph 4 of said complaint, and therefore denies that at said election so held in said city one S. F. Daniels received the greatest number of votes, or any number of votes, for police judge of the city of Oakland by the qualified electors of said city, and that thereafter, to-wit, on the twenty-ninth day of March, A. D. 1886, or at any time, or at all, or within ten days after receiving a certificate of his election, he took the oath of office, and presented to the city council of said city a bond, good and sufficient in form, and as required by law, with two good and sufficient sureties in the penal sum of $5,000, as and for his official bond as police judge of the city of Oakland for the term of two years next succeeding his said election, or for any term, or at all. Fifth. Answering paragraph 5 of said complaint, defendant admits that the allegations contained therein are true, assuming that the word 'qualified' therein used is intended to convey its ordinary and usual meaning. Sixth. Denies that on the seventh day of April, A. D. 1886, or ever, or at all, this defendant usurped and intruded, or usurped or intruded, into the office of police judge of said city, and ever since said day, or ever, or at all, he has usurped and intruded, or usurped or intruded, into said office, and withholds the same, or withholds the same, from said S. F. Daniels. Wherefore, having fully answered, defendant prays judgment that plaintiff be denied the judgment demanded in his said complaint, and that he take nothing by this action, and that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for defendant's costs herein."

The controversy in the action was as to the office of police judge of the city of Oakland. Is there any such office? If there is, the statutes will show it. There is no such office mentioned in the constitution. We must then find it in some statute. It may be conceded that there was under the act of March 10, 1866, an office of police judge for the city of Oakland. See St. 1865-66, p. 193, §§ 1, 2. In fact, there was such an office created by the second section of the act. The first section created a police court for the city named. The police judge was to be elected at the charter election of said city, held on the first Monday in March, 1867, who was to hold office for two years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. In the following sections of the act the jurisdiction of the police court as established may be found, and other provisions made in regard to the court. Let it be conceded that other statutes existed by which the office mentioned existed.

On the eighteenth of March, 1885, a statute was passed entitled "An act to provide for police courts in cities having 30,000, and under 100,000, inhabitants, and to provide for officers thereof." The first section of the act is in these words: "The judicial power of every city having 30,000, and under 100,000, inhabitants shall be vested in a police court, to be held therein by the city justices, or one of them, to be designated by the mayor; but either of said justices may hold such court without such designation, and it is hereby made the duty of said city justices, in addition to the duties now required of them by law, to hold said police court." The act consists of 15 sections. It proceeds by the second and third sections to define and settle the jurisdiction of the police court established by the first section; by the fourth, to declare who shall discharge the duties of said court in case of the disability of the justice appointed to hold the court under the first section. By the fifth section the power of the justice of the court is declared and conferred. The sixth section provides for a clerk of the court to be appointed by the city council, and defines his duties, and provides for his salary. Section 7 provides for the disposition of the fines and other moneys collected on behalf of the city in the court, and for a report to the city council each month of all bills for fees and costs due the court. Section 8 provides for rooms for the court and dockets. The ninth section provides that the court shall be always open except on non-judicial days, and then for such purposes as by law are permitted or required of the other courts of the state. Appeals are provided for by section 10; section 11, a place of imprisonment, and a place of labor; section 12, for a seal of the court, to be furnished by the city; section 13, for a report to the city council by the city justices, on the first Monday of each month, of all the cases, civil and criminal, in which the city has an interest, or which are required to be entered in the city civil docket, or the city criminal docket, etc. The next section (14) provides that certified transcripts made by the clerk shall be evidence, etc., and that all warrants and other process issued out of said court, and all acts done by said court, and certified under its seal, shall have the same force and validity in any part of the state as though issued or done by any court of record of this state. Section 15 provides that this act shall go into effect upon the expiration of the term of office of the present police judges of said cities, or when a vacancy occurs therein.

That this act of 1885 repeals former acts in relation to a police judge in the city of Oakland, we think there cannot be any doubt. The former acts cannot stand with the act of 1885. There is such a repugnance that they cannot stand together. The former act or acts provided for a police judge, to be elected by the electors of the city at a certain election. This act of 1885 provides that the judicial power shall be vested in a police court, to be held in the city by the city justices, or one of them, to be designated by the mayor. The city justices are elected under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, (which section was held constitutional in Bishop v. City of Oakland, 58 Cal. 572,) and it is made the duty of the mayor, by the act of 1885, to designate one of such justices to hold the police court. The office of police judge to be elected, as before pointed out, ceases, under the act of 1885, upon the expiration of the term of the incumbent in office at the time the act of 1885 was passed, or when a vacancy may occur in such office. These provisions show that the former acts creating the office of police judge are repealed by the act of 1885. The repeal is shown by its being clearly a revision of the former acts on the subject of police courts in the class of cities referred to. See Christy v. Sacramento, 39 Cal. 8; Ex parte Smith, 40 Cal. 419; Estate of Wixom, 35 Cal. 320; People v. Burt, 43 Cal. 560.

That the act of 1885 is constitutional, is clear. The power over this subject is amply conferred by sections 1 and 13 of article 6 of the constitution. It would seem that, under section 1 of article 6, such a court as that established by the act of 1885 may be created by a special law for each city. If a general law is required to create such a law, the act of 1885 is a general law. It is general because it applies to a class of cities. Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 615. It makes no difference in this regard that Oakland is the only city belonging to the class having 30,000, and less than 100,000, inhabitants. There is certainly another (Los Angeles) since the act of 1885 was passed, and there will soon be others. It may be remarked here that the police courts constitute a part of the courts of the state, and the police judge part of the judiciary, and section 6 of article 11 of the constitution has no reference to them. McGrew v. Mayor of San Jose, 55 Cal. 611; People v. Ransom, 58 Cal. 560; Bishop v. City of Oakland, 58 Cal. 572; Jenks v. City of Oakland, 58 Cal. 578; Coggins v. Sacramento, 59 Cal. 599; Const. art. 6, § 1.

The act of 1885, then, repeals all other acts in relation to the office of police judge of the city of Oakland, does away with such office, and is a valid and constitutional act. In this view, it follows that the judgment of the court below, in adjudging that Daniels is entitled to the office of police judge, is clearly erroneous.

Is it also void? For a judgment can also be void as well as erroneous. Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163. If merely erroneous, it is not void. But if void it is also erroneous, and will be reversed on appeal. In accordance with the views expressed in a foregoing part of this opinion, the judgment is void, for the reason that it adjudges a person entitled to an office which does not exist. A court can no more render a valid judgment for the recovery of an office which does not exist, than it can for a non-existent parcel of land or a non-existent horse.

Can a person be imprisoned for refusing to obey a void judgment? We cannot perceive how this can be. A void judgment is a nullity; it can confer no rights on any one, nor deprive any one of a right. An imprisonment under a void judgment is an arbitrary one, beyond the power of any court or judge. It is in no sense within their jurisdiction. To render a judgment of imprisonment is an assumption of power authorized neither by the constitution or law, nor justice. The officer who attempts to execute such a judgment is a trespasser, and may be lawfully resisted by any one against whom the process in his hands runs. It cannot be lawful unless the arbitrary edict of a court or judge can make that lawful which is contrary to all law. The above views are, in our opinion, sustained by the decided cases.

In Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415, there was no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Calderwood was not a party to the action of Batchelder v. Moore, in which judgment had been rendered, and was not dispossessed under it. There was then no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. In Ex parte Kearney, 55 Cal. 212, there was no offense charged against Kearney, hence there was no subject-matter of which the court had or could take jurisdiction. The court held in this case, as correctly stated in the head-notes, as follows: "Where it affirmatively appears from the record of the proceedings of an inferior court that a person was tried and sentenced to be punished for an act which is not a crime, the judgment is absolutely void, and a person in custody under such a judgment will be discharged on habeas corpus. To constitute an offense under subdivision 3, section 38, of order No. 697, as amended by order No. 1196 of the city and county of San Francisco, which provides that 'no person shall address to another, or utter in the presence of another, any words * * * having a tendency to create a breach of the peace,' the words must be uttered in the presence of the person whom they tend to provoke to such breach of the peace." The same is true of Ex parte Corryell, 22 Cal. 179. Corryell had been charged with that which was no crime, and therefore he was discharged. Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, goes on the same ground. The ordinance under which he was convicted was void, therefore the judgment under it was void. Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, is also an authority. In that case it was alleged that the act under which the imprisonment was adjudged was unconstitutional. The supreme court of the United States held that the act was constitutional, and remanded the applicant. The court held that if the act was unconstitutional the applicant was entitled to his discharge. See opinion of court on pages 376, 377, of 100 U. S. Two of the justices (FIELD and CLIFFORD) dissented, holding the law unconstitutional, and were, on that ground, in favor of discharging the applicant. See 100 U. S. 364. The same rulings were made in Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, and in Ex parte Clarke, Id. 399, as in Siebold's Case. In Ex parte Siebold the court cited Rex v. Suddis, 1 East, 306; Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus," B 10; and Bushel's Case, T. Jones, 13, Vaughan, 135, 6 How. St. Tr. 999.

Bushel's Case, which was cited approvingly by the court in Siebold's Case, is thus stated in its opinion: "There, twelve jurymen had been convicted in the oyer and terminer for rendering a verdict (against the charge of the court) acquitting William Penn and others, who were charged with meeting in conventicle. Being imprisoned for refusing to pay their fines, they applied to the court of common pleas for a habeas corpus; and though the court, having no jurisdiction in criminal matters, hesitated to grant the writ, yet, having granted it, they discharged the prisoners, on the ground that their conviction was void, inasmuch as jurymen cannot be indicted for rendering any verdict they choose." Thus holding that the court of oyer and terminer had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. No offense had been committed by the jurors, therefore there was no subject-matter. Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, accords. In Zeehandelaar's Case, 12 Pac. Rep. 259, this court held that a superior court had no jurisdiction to adjudge in contempt and imprison a wit ness for refusing to answer a question which was immaterial to any issue in the case, and discharged the petitioner. In all these cases the court had jurisdiction of the parties. In cases where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the applicant for the writ was remanded, and where it had no such jurisdiction the applicant was discharged. See, also, Hummel's Case, 9 Watts, 416; Com. v. Newton, 1 Grant, Cas. 453; People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74; In re Fernandez, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 32; Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray, 226.

It can make no difference in this case, conceding that the court below held the act of 1885 unconstitutional, or that the former acts had not been repealed by the act of 1885, so far as relates to the office of police judge. The foregoing are questions of law, which go to the jurisdiction of the court. If the act of 1885 is constitutional, and lawfully repealed the former acts, the court below had no jurisdiction to render the judgment herein mentioned, adjudging Daniels entitled to the office as against Henshaw, and ousting Henshaw therefrom. The judgment being void, the commitment for contempt in refusing to obey it is also void, as being beyond the power of the court to render it. In fact, the case should have been dismissed on an inspection of the complaint. It sets forth no title to an existing office; in fact, shows want of title. The affidavit of Daniels was entirely insufficient to confer any power on the court to punish for contempt.

The conclusion above reached applies as well to judgment in a civil as in a criminal action. There can be no punishment by a court under a void judgment in either case.

The applicant for the writ (Henshaw) should, in my opinion, be discharged from custody.

73 Cal. 545

In re Estate of HERTEMAN, Deceased. (No. 9,388.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 6, 1887.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—FINAL ACCOUNTING—PROOF OF DISBURSEMENTS.

On final accounting, an administrator produced an ordinary receipt for $1,500, and testified that $1,085 was for money borrowed on account of the estate, and $415 was for the share of the estate in the amount of the expenses above the receipts of a hotel in which the estate was interested; that he did not take a separate voucher for the $415, as it was not thought necessary, and it was desirable to suppress the fact of a deficit in the business in order to sell the hotel; that the manager of the hotel, to whom the $1,500 was paid, and who signed the receipt, and kept the accounts, had taken the accounts to France, and died there. In a verified account filed after the alleged payment, the administrator stated that the estate had been put to no expense on account of the hotel. Held, that there was no sufficient evidence of the payment of the item of $415.

2. SAME—MISTAKE IN ACCOUNT.

On final accounting, an administrator claimed to have made a mistake in an account filed five years before, by which the estate was credited with $720, the amount received from the rent of a hotel, instead of $120. He testified that the account was made by his attorneys from memoranda furnished by him, and that the error was made in mistaking the figure "1" for "7," and that he signed and verified the account as prepared without going over the details. By the account claimed to be erroneous, and the previous account, it appeared that the rent of the hotel averaged about $150 per month, which for the period covered by the alleged erroneous item would amount to about $720. Held, that there was no sufficient proof of the alleged mistake.

3. SAME—LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATOR FOR FAILING TO PAY TAXES AND INSTALLMENTS.

The value of real property lost to the estate by reason of the failure of the administrator to pay taxes, and to pay installments of purchase money and interest on school lands held under a certificate of purchase, he having under his control sufficient money belonging to the estate to pay such taxes, installments, and interest, is properly chargeable to him in his final account.

4. SAME—INTEREST ON MONEY MINGLED WITH PRIVATE FUNDS.

An administrator is chargeable with interest on money of the estate drawn by him, and mingled with his own funds, and omitted from his account.

Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—61

5. SAME—APPEAL—REFUSAL OF COURT TO SETTLE STATEMENT—MANDAMUS.

The refusal of the trial court to settle a statement, or act upon a motion for a new trial, cannot be reviewed on appeal. If it was the duty of the court to settle the statement, and act upon the motion, mandamus would be the proper remedy.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Final accounting of an administrator. A two-thirds interest in a hotel belonged to the estate; the other third belonging to one Fouroche, who managed it under a partnership agreement made with decedent. The administrator testified that to pay the expenses of two children of decedent, of whom he was guardian, and other expenses, for which there was available no money belonging to the estate, he had borrowed money at different times from Fouroche, amounting in the aggregate to about $1,085; that he and Fouroche on July 7, 1876, had a settlement of the hotel business, and for the borrowed money, when it was found that Fouroche had paid $415 more than his share of the expenses of the hotel above what he had taken in, and that he paid Fouroche $1,500; that he did not take a separate voucher for the $415, as he did not think it necessary, and it was desirable to suppress the fact of a deficit in the business in order to sell the hotel; that Fouroche kept the accounts, which the administrator verified; and that Fouroche took the books to France, where he had since died. A receipt signed by Fouroche was produced, simply acknowledging the receipt of $1,500. It was admitted that there was $1,500 available to the estate on application to the probate court. A verified account filed November 8, 1877, was produced, in which the administrator stated that the estate had been put to no expense on account of the hotel.

Certain real property was lost to the estate by reason of the failure of the administrator to pay the taxes thereon, and to pay installments of purchase money and interest on school lands held under a certificate of purchase from the state. The administrator claimed that there was no money belonging to the estate out of which he could pay such taxes, installments, and interest, and that the land was of no value. From his inventory and appraisal, it appeared that the appraised value of the real property was $501.88, and that at the time of the sale for taxes, and at the time the installments of purchase money and interest became due, there was sufficient money belonging to the estate and under the control of the administrator to pay all such taxes, installments of purchase money, and interest.

The administrator alleged that in his account of November 8, 1877, he had made a clerical error of $600 in favor of the estate. He testified that he was no book-keeper, and knew very little about keeping accounts; that he took memoranda of his accounts to his attorneys, who prepared the account, and that he signed and verified it without going over the details; that the error was made in the amount received from rent of a hotel, by mistaking his figure "1" for "7," thus crediting the estate $720, instead of $120; that he never at one time got $720, but did get $120, for which he meant to give credit; that the memorandum was not preserved, and he did not discover the mistake until he made up his final account. The final account was filed October 9, 1882. To disprove this allegation, an account filed April 15, 1876, was offered in evidence, by which it appeared that the rent of the hotel from April 14, 1875, to March 1, 1876, amounted to $1,590.85. The account of November 8, 1877, was also offered in evidence, from which it appeared that the item of $720 received from the hotel was for the period extending from April 14, 1875, to October 29, 1875, and that the receipts from the hotel averaged about $150 per month, which would amount to about $720 for the period mentioned.

A. W. Thompson, (L. E. Bulkely, of counsel,) for appellant. R. Percy Wright and Selden S. Wright, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by E. Chaquette, administrator of the estate, from an order settling his final account, from the decree of distribution, and from an order refusing to act upon the administrator's motion for a new trial.

1. The particular items of the account with respect to which appellant contends that the court erred are these: First. The item of $415 charged by appellant as money paid to a partner of the deceased to cover loss in running a hotel, and disallowed by the court. Whether such a charge could be allowed under any circumstances it is not necessary to decide, because there was no sufficient evidence of the item. Second. Appellant was charged with $501.89, the value of certain real property lost to the estate by the neglect of appellant to pay taxes, etc. We see no error in this ruling. Third. Appellant claimed a correction of $600 in a former account, rendered several years before, which was not allowed. We cannot see that the court erred in holding that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant this correction. Fourth. Seven hundred and forty-two dollars interest on money of the estate drawn by appellant, and mingled with his own funds, and omitted from his account, and charged to him by the court. This was in accordance with well-settled principles, and there was no error in the ruling. The appeal, therefore, from the order settling the account, presents no grounds for a reversal; and the appeal from the decree of distribution stands on the same footing.

2. After the order settling the account was made, the appellant filed and served a notice of intention to move for a new trial, and prepared and served a statement of the case. The contestants thereupon objected to the settlement of any statement, and to any proceeding on said motion, on the ground that the provisions of the Code relating to new trials were not applicable. The court sustained the objection, and declined to hear, or in any way act on, said motion. If it was the clear duty of the court to settle the statement, and act upon the motion for a new trial, mandamus to compel such action would have been the proper remedy; but this non-action of the court—this nothing—cannot be reviewed on a general appeal of the case. It may be remarked, however, that it is doubtful if the true construction of that part of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to probate matters is that every contested motion in probate proceedings assumes the character of a civil action with all the attendants of a right to a jury trial, motion for new trial, etc. Such a construction would greatly confuse and prolong the settlement of estates,—a matter already sufficiently complicated. The subject is discussed to some extent in the opinion of Mr. Justice TEMPLE in the case of Estate of Moore, 13 Pac. Rep. 880, and there are reasons for holding that the suggestions there made should be adopted as expressive of the true meaning of the Code. However, all we desire in the case at bar is to be understood as not determining whether it was the duty of the court to entertain the motion for a new trial.

Orders affirmed.

BULL v. COE, Adm'r, and others. (No. 12,055.)*

(Supreme Court of California. September 30, 1887.)

1. HOMESTEAD—MORTGAGE OF—FORECLOSURE—PRESENTMENT OF CLAIM AGAINST DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1475, providing that claims secured by liens or incumbrances "on the homestead" must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate, a deed absolute, intended as a mortgage, executed by a husband and wife upon the wife's separate property, which had been declared a homestead, to secure the debt of the husband, cannot be foreclosed after the death of the husband, no claim having been presented against the estate.

*Reversed in banc. See 18 Pac. 808, 77 Cal. 54.

2. SAME—FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE.

The provision of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1500, that an action may be brought to enforce a mortgage or lien against the property of a deceased person where all recourse against any other property of the estate is expressly waived in the complaint, has no application to a mortgage upon a homestead, whether a probate homestead or one selected and recorded before the death of decedent.

3. SAME—ABANDONMENT OF HOMESTEAD.

Where the homestead, upon which the foreclosure of a mortgage is sought after the death of one of the mortgagors, has been released from the lien of the mortgage by the failure of the mortgagee to present his claim against the estate within the time limited for that purpose, the foreclosure proceedings cannot be sustained on the ground of an abandonment by the attempt of the survivor to get a homestead on other property after the expiration of the time for the presentation of claims.

4. SAME.

By Civil Code Cal. § 1243, a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof; and the execution of a deed of the homestead absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, is not an abandonment.¹

5. SAME—ENFORCEMENT OF MORTGAGE FOR EXCESS.

Where a homestead has been released from the lien of a mortgage by the failure of the mortgagee to present his claim against the estate of one of the deceased mortgagors, if the right to enforce it as to any excess above $5,000 remains, the burden of proof is upon the mortgagee to show the existence of such excess.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Wells, Vandyke & Lee, for appellant. Bicknell & White and Chapman & Hendrick, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The defendant, Hattie W. Strong, and her husband, by a deed absolute in form, mortgaged to the plaintiff the wife's separate property, upon which a homestead had been declared, to secure a debt of the husband. The husband died and the defendant Coe was appointed administrator of his estate, and as such gave notice to the creditors to present their claims. The plaintiff did not present any claim, but commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage, under section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure; stating in his complaint that he waived all recourse against the other property of the estate. The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

In the case of Camp v. Grider, 62 Cal. 21, it was held that section 1500 applies only to "mortgages and liens other than liens and incumbrances on the homestead," and that claims secured by liens and incumbrances on the homestead are required to be presented under section 1475. We see no ground for saying that the rule applies only to probate homesteads. Section 1475 expressly mentions "the homestead selected and recorded prior to the death of the decedent;" and it was this "homestead" which the section refers to when it says that, "if there be subsisting liens or incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate." To say otherwise, would be to make the necessity for the presentation of claims secured by liens upon the homestead dependent upon the intention of the survivor to apply or not to apply to have the property set off as a probate homestead. In view of the fact that there is no time limited for the making of such an application, this test would be too uncertain;

¹In California, a homestead cannot be abandoned except in the statutory mode; and a removal from the premises, even to another state, becoming a citizen thereof, voting in its elections, and being offered as a candidate for office therein, where there is no intention to relinquish a residence in this state, is not such an abandonment. Porter v. Chapman, (Cal.) 4 Pac. Rep. 237.

In general, as to what constitutes an abandonment of a homestead, see Newman v. Franklin, (Iowa,) 28 N. W. Rep. 579, and note; Tipton v. Martin, (Cal.) 12 Pac. Rep. 244; Newton v. Calhoun, (Tex.) 4 S. W. Rep. 645; McElroy v. Magoffin, (Tex.) Id. 547; Reece v. Renfro, Id. 545; Gates v. Steele, (Ark.) Id. 53, and note; Kaes v. Gross, (Mo.) 3 S. W. Rep. 840; Sanders v. Sheran, (Tex.) 2 S. W. Rep. 801; Honaker v. Cecil, (Ky.) 1 S. W. Rep. 300, and note; Repenn v. Davis, (Iowa,) 34 N. W. Rep. 326.

and it cannot be supposed that the legislature intended it. Such a test would enable the survivor to lull the creditor into the belief that the application was not going to be made, and, after the time for the presentation of claims had expired, to cut him out by having the property set off as a probate homestead. We think, therefore, that the rule of Camp v. Grider is not to be limited to cases where application is made to have the property set off as a probate homestead.

Nor does it make any difference that the property upon which the homestead was declared was the separate property of the wife. The debt was the debt of the husband, and the claim for it was against his estate. The language of section 1475 is general, and contains no limitation dependent upon the ownership of the property upon which the homestead was declared. It may well be that, in the opinion of the legislature, it was necessary for the probate court to have before it all the facts as to homestead, so as to enable it to act intelligently upon an application to set off a probate homestead, or in applying the funds of the estate in paying off particular liens. At any rate the requirement of the statute is general, and we do not think the court is warranted in limiting it. The failure to present the claim, therefore, released the homestead from the lien of the mortgage. It is not necessary to consider whether the mortgage can be enforced as to any excess which there may be over the sum of $5,000, for it does not appear that there was any such excess in this case. And, if we assume that the mortgage could still be enforced as to that, we think it incumbent upon the party whose right to recover depends upon the existence of such excess, to show that it in fact exists.

The appellant contends that the parties did not reside upon the property at the time the homestead was declared. But the court finds the fact in favor of the respondent; and, while the testimony of the witness Russell is subject to some criticism for ambiguity, we cannot say that the finding is unsupported by the evidence. It is also contended that the homestead was abandoned by the attempt of the survivor to get a homestead on other property. But, in the first place, this attempt was not made until the expiration of the time for the presentation of claims; and in the second place, a homestead in this state can be abandoned only in the manner specified in section 1243 of the Civil Code. There is no pretense that the acts mentioned in that section were done. The deed to the plaintiff, though absolute in form, was a mortgage, and hence did not operate as an abandonment. Mabury v. Ruiz, 58 Cal. 15; Porter v. Chapman, 65 Cal. 365, 4 Pac. Rep. 237.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

In re Estate of DOYLE, Deceased. (No. 9,710.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 7, 1887.)

1. WILL.—PROBATE—CONTEST—PLEADING.

Where the allegations of the contestant of a will are not denied, there is no default, but the proponent makes his proof, and then the contestant proceeds to establish his grounds of contest, and, if he fail in this, the will will be admitted to probate, although no issue was made by denying his ground of contest.

2. SAME.

To the petition of the proponents of a will, appellant filed a written opposition, to which no demurrer or answer was filed by proponents, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1312. The parties, however, went to trial upon the petition. Held, that appellant, not having raised the point in the lower court, could not say that no issue was made up between him and the proponents.

3. SAME—NEW TRIAL.

Where facts are assumed to exist which are alleged by one party, and not denied by the other, but the finding is adverse to the admitted facts, the party aggrieved cannot demand a "new trial" on the ground that the finding, being opposed to the admitted fact, is "against law;" his remedy is by appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. H. C. Newhall and C. F. Hanlon, for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. A petition for the admission to probate of an instrument as the last will and testament of Michael Doyle, deceased, was presented to the superior court by William R. Doyle, named as executor therein. Richard Doyle, brother of deceased, filed his written opposition to the probate, stating as ground of opposition that "the deceased did not make, sign, publish, or declare as his last will" the instrument propounded. No demurrer was interposed to the written opposition, nor was any written answer thereto filed or served. The superior court tried "the contest," and decided and adjudged that the instrument offered for probate was the last will and testament of said Michael, deceased; that it was executed in all respects as required by law; that the testator at the time of its execution was of sound and disposing mind, and not acting under any undue influence, fraud, or duress; and the court ordered that the will be admitted to probate. No appeal was taken from the judgment or order admitting the will to probate. The contestant, Richard Doyle, moved for a new trial of the contest, and has appealed from an order denying his motion.

Section 1312, Code Civil Proc., provides, in effect, that when an opposition is filed and served, the petitioner for probate, or others interested in the estate, may demur to the opposition, or may answer the contestant's grounds, traversing the same, etc.; and that any issue of fact thus raised, must, if requested by either party in writing, be tried by jury; otherwise by the court.

The petition filed by proponent was sufficient; and under its averments he would have been authorized to prove, had there been no contest, that the deceased did "make, sign, publish, and declare as his last will" the instrument offered. Code Civil Proc. § 1308. The petition, therefore, is to have the same effect as if it had expressly averred that the will offered was made, signed, and published as the last will of the deceased. There was, then, in the petition an allegation that the deceased did, and in the opposition an allegation that deceased did not, make, sign, and publish the instrument as his last will.

Appellant claims that a new trial should have been granted by the superior court, because its decision was "against law," within the meaning of section 656, Code Civil Proc.; that the failure of petitioner to deny, by written answer, the allegation of the written opposition, was an admission that the allegation was true. Code Civil Proc. § 1312. It is insisted that the decision of the superior court that the deceased did "make, sign, publish," etc., being contrary to proponent's admission that deceased did not sign, etc., was "against law." As we have seen, a direct issue was made by the averment in the petition that the will was executed and published as prescribed by law, and the averment in the opposition that it was not so executed or published. It may be doubted whether section 1312, which provides that an answer "may" be made to the written opposition, requires such answer when the opposition merely denies an averment implied in every sufficient petition for the probate of a will. It may also be very seriously doubted whether the superior court could base a decision against the beneficiaries under the will upon the failure of the executor to deny that a will whereby he had been appointed executor, and which he had asked to have admitted to probate upon petition expressly or impliedly averring that it was duly executed and published, was not duly made and published. But we do not find it necessary to rest the decision of this appeal upon the determination of the question suggested by either of such doubts.

1. The bill of exceptions included in the transcript shows that on a certain day, "no objection being made, the court proceeded to try said contest on probate of said will. E. J. Hutchinson, Esq., appearing for Richard Doyle, the contestant and plaintiff, H. C. Newhall, Esq., appearing for William R. Doyle, petitioner and defendant, and J. Howard Smith appearing for absent heirs, and testimony having been offered in support of said will, and on the part of contestant in opposition thereto, and the court being satisfied from said testimony that said will should be admitted to probate, the court thereupon made its order admitting the said will to probate."

It appears from the bill that at the trial of the contest the course which we believe to be the usual course, and which is one to which the contestant certainly could not object, was pursued; that is, the petitioner made the prima facie proof that the will was executed in the manner prescribed by law, and that testator was of sound mind, and the contestant then introduced evidence in support of his ground of opposition to the probate. No objection was made by contestant to testimony in support of the petition for probate; and contestant himself, treating the case as if the averment in his opposition were sufficiently denied by the pleading on the part of the petitioner, offered and put in testimony in support of his written grounds of opposition. For aught that appears, the petitioner then introduced evidence to meet that given on behalf of contestant. Upon the testimony so given on behalf of the petitioner and contestant, respectively, the superior court decided the contest. If the appellant is right in his contention, no evidence was admissible upon the part of the petitioner. A party cannot for the first time in this court object, on any ground, to evidence which was introduced by the adverse party at the trial in the court below without objection being made thereto. Scott v. Lumber Co., 67 Cal. 75, 7 Pac. Rep. 131; Bliss v. Ellsworth, 36 Cal. 310. Where evidence is not objected to in the court below because not admissible under the averment of a pleading, it is too late to raise the objection in the supreme court. Scott v. Lumber Co., supra; Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 152; Henry v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 176.

The contestant not only made no objection to the testimony offered on behalf of the petitioner, but introduced evidence in support of the allegations in his written opposition. He did not move for judgment on the pleadings, nor did he in any way call the attention of the court to what is now called the admission by petitioner of everything charged in the opposition. Section 1312, Code Civil Proc., does not, except by inference, limit the time within which the written opposition may be answered; but, if it must be answered within 10 days, here the contest was tried by mutual assent, without objection, the day after the written opposition was filed. Had the objection now urged been made by contestant, there can be no doubt, if it was necessary to make an issue, the court would have allowed the petitioner to file an answer forthwith, or have given him time to file an answer denying the allegations of the written opposition. This would accord with the view expressed in Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318; Clark v. Insurance Co., 36 Cal. 175; and Scott v. Lumber Co., supra. The case was tried upon the assumption of all the parties in the court below that the material allegations of the contestant's pleading were denied. It has been repeatedly held, under such circumstances, that the point that the denial was insufficient, cannot be first made in this court. Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 141. In the case before us, as we have seen, there was direct issue made by the contradictory averments of the petition and the opposition,—the one averring, in legal effect, that the will was duly executed and declared; the other averring that it was not duly executed or declared. The contest was made known by formal written allegations, was understood by the court and parties, and was tried without objection. The appellant ought not to be heard to say that there was no issue made up between him and the respondent in the exact manner provided by the Code.

2. But if the petitioner were entirely correct in his positions in other respects, it would not follow that the court below erred in denying him a "new trial." If the admission by failure to deny is to be treated as evidence that the fact alleged existed, there was no motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence did not justify the finding, and no specification of deficiency in the evidence. If, however, the admission in the pleadings is to be treated as having other and greater effect than an admission at the trial of a fact denied by the pleadings, still a "new trial" was properly refused. It is here insisted there was no issue as to the execution and publication of the will, and therefore there should have been a new trial. Of what issue? We are unable to understand how there could be a trial or new trial—an examination or re-examination—of an issue which never existed. "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court." Code Civil Proc. § 656. When a trial is had by the court, without a jury, a fact admitted by the pleadings should be treated as "found." It has been repeatedly held that the court need not expressly find a fact averred in the pleading of one party, and not denied by the other. If the court does find adversely to the admission, such finding should be disregarded in determining the question whether the proper conclusion of law was drawn from the facts found and admitted by the pleadings. The mere finding by the court against an averment not denied, does not create an issue which a party has a right to have tried. Here the appellant asked for a second trial of a suppositive issue on the ground that there was no issue which the court had right or power to try the first time.

Where all the material issues made by the pleadings are determined by the findings, and the findings are not attacked as unsustained by the evidence, a party cannot demand a new trial upon the ground the court erroneously applied the law to the facts, or drew the wrong conclusion of law from the facts found. The remedy in such case is by appeal. The Code does not contemplate or provide for a new trial or "re-examination" of issues of fact, the findings upon which are indisputably correct. Nothing to the contrary was decided by a majority of this court in Simmons v. Hamilton, 56 Cal. 493. In his dissenting opinion in the case last cited, Mr. Justice Ross said: "Since a new trial is a re-examination of a question of fact, where all such issues are correctly found upon, I am unable to find any authority for a 're-examination' of such facts; in other words, for a new trial, or to see any necessity therefor."

In Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 45, Justice RHODES said: "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact; and when a new trial is granted the finding is set aside, and of course the judgment resting upon it must fall. But the question whether the judgment is authorized by the pleadings or findings cannot be agitated on a motion for a new trial, for it is not involved in a re-examination of the issues of fact. The Code has provided other and sufficient modes for the determination of both branches of that question; and it is very clear that the question whether the issues of fact were correctly found does not depend in any manner on the question whether a pleading states sufficient facts to entitle a party to the relief granted by the judgment, or whether the issues as found sustain the judgment."

We fully concur with Justices RHODES and ROSS that a new trial cannot be granted on the ground that the judgment, or the conclusion of law on which the judgment is founded, is not authorized by the findings of fact. The rule must be the same where, as the appellant claims is the case here, the material allegations in the pleading of one party are not denied by the other. In such case the facts alleged must be assumed to exist. Any finding adverse to the admitted facts drops from the record, and any legal conclusion which is not upheld by the admitted facts is erroneous. An order purporting to direct a new trial would be a vain thing, since any further action of the court must end in the same result; that is, the facts now admitted will then be admitted. If, after the order, there would be any issue to try, it would be because the order granting a "new trial" would have the effect of declaring—not by its terms, but as its legal result—that the failure of petitioner to deny any of the averments of the opposition denied them by implication. But the order was asked on the ground that the petitioner had not denied them.

If the decision of the court was not supported by the facts admitted by the pleadings, the remedy of the contestant was to appeal from the order admitting the will to probate. He was not in a position to demand a "new trial" in the court below. Order affirmed.

PATERSON, J. I concur.

TEMPLE, J. I concur. The provisions of the Code with reference to contesting probate of wills are very peculiar. The enumerated grounds of contest all consist in merely negating the allegations of jurisdictional facts which the petitioner is bound to aver and prove. All these facts must be found and certified by the court, whether there be a contest or not. The burden of establishing them would naturally be on the petitioner. Yet the statute provides that in the case of a contest the contestant shall be plaintiff, and the petitioner defendant, thus compelling the contestant to assume the affirmative. The contest need not cover all the jurisdictional facts; still, the court must find upon all. Evidently it is not contemplated that the evidence given upon the trial of the contest should be all the evidence submitted. Section 1317, Code Civil Proc., provides that the court shall be satisfied from the proof taken, or from the facts found by the jury. Now, the contest may include all the facts which the court is required to certify to upon admitting the will to probate. If, upon a trial of a contest before a jury, the contestant offered no evidence, since the burden of proof is upon him, the jury would be compelled to find all the facts against him, and in favor of the petitioner. In that case, the court, if the contest is all there is before the court, might base the probate entirely upon findings made in the absence of proof. This was certainly never intended. The same procedure is made applicable to a contest after the will has been admitted to probate, as before. In both, the contestant has the laboring oar, as though he is attacking something which he must overcome by affirmative proof. Under such circumstances, I think the theory of the statute must be that the contest begins after the petitioner has made his prima facie case. In such case, the burden would naturally be on the contestant, and all the provisions consistent and harmonious.

In case there is no contest, the petitioner is still required to introduce evidence to establish all the jurisdictional facts. If a contest is inaugurated, and the allegations of the contestant are not denied, there is no provision for a default. In fact, considering the nature of the proceeding, and that the usual case is that there are minors or absent heirs, we should be surprised if anything was taken by default and without proof. When, therefore, the allegations of the contestant are not denied, the petitioner first makes his proof, and then the contestant proceeds, without the presence of the petitioner, to establish his grounds of contest. If he fail in this, the will will be admitted to probate, although no issue was made by denying his ground of contest. On the other hand, if, having heard the proof on the part of the petitioner, the court is then prepared to refuse probate of the will, there would be no occasion to try the contest.

SIDDALL and another v. HARRISON and others. (No. 11,675.)

WILL—ACTION TO CONSTRUER—WHEN IT LIES.

If the superior court has jurisdiction of an action for the construction of a will, (as to which, quære,) it is not bound to exercise such jurisdiction, and may properly refuse to entertain an action brought to have plaintiffs' heirship determined, and certain legacies declared void, where the plaintiffs are not mentioned in the will, and no special reason is shown for the intervention of equity, or for the adjudication asked for before final distribution.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

D. Wm. Douthitt, for appellant. John F. Swift and Robert Harrison, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action is brought against the executors of the will of Elizabeth Traylor, deceased, and a great many other persons who do not appear to have any interest in the estate, or in the controversy, and no reason is shown in the complaint why they are or should be joined as defendants.

The plaintiffs are not mentioned in the will, and claim no interest under it, but they aver that either plaintiff Siddall is the sole heir, or that her co-plaintiff, White, is alone entitled to share the estate with her as heirs at law. By the terms of the will all the property of the testatrix is disposed of, but the complaint avers that various legacies are void, and among them the residuary bequest, and that, the legal and valid legacies being paid, there will be a large sum undisposed of. The plaintiffs aver that the executors claim that neither of the plaintiffs are heirs at law to said estate, and that all the legacies are legal, and should be paid; and they ask that the legacies may be declared void, and that the plaintiffs, one or both, are heirs at law to said estate, and for general relief. To this complaint a demurrer was interposed, which was sustained; the plaintiff declining to amend, final judgment was entered, and the plaintiff appeals.

Among the grounds of demurrer is the claim that the court has no jurisdiction of the action and that the complaint does not state a cause of action. In the recent case of Williams v. Williams, 14 Pac. Rep. 394, it is said that the jurisdiction of the superior court to construe a will was determined in the case of Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 403. The attention of the court does not seem to have been called to the fact that that case was brought in the district court, and arose under the former constitution, nor to the fact that a majority of the court did not concur in the opinion on the subject of jurisdiction. Only Justices THORNTON, SHARPSTEIN, and the chief justice concurred in the opinion. Mr. Justice ROSS concurred specially, saying that he gave his adhesion only because the former court had held that the district court had such jurisdiction, and perhaps property rights had grown up under such decisions. The cases of Williams v. Williams and Rosenberg v. Frank, supra, as also the case of Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 292, were all in a sense consent cases. No one objected to the jurisdiction, and all parties interested desired the decision. In view of these facts, and of the weighty reasons against the jurisdiction given in the dissenting opinion in the case of Rosenberg v. Frank, to which others might be added, I do not know whether the court will adhere to these conclusions, but I am convinced the jurisdiction ought not to be exercised unless some good reason is given for thus interfering with a matter pending in another court. The inconvenience may be very great.

The superior court is liable to be called upon to construe a will to some extent as soon as it is probated. Certain payments, for instance, may be required to be made at once and at intervals. One of the principal reasons given for the interference of a court of equity was to save the executor from liability for misconstruing the will while executing his trust. Here there is no such trouble; but, suppose he has acted during administration under the directions of the probate judge, and, in an action to construe the will another court takes a different view of its terms, which shall prevail? And, if the latter, is the executor responsible? Take the case put by Judge Story (section 1065, Eq. Jur.) as a proper case for the interposition of a court of equity. The will makes certain real estate subject to payment of debts and legacies. It is doubtful, he says, whether the personal estate is exonerated, or is the primary fund to be exhausted before the real estate can be taken. The probate court is competent to determine this. Suppose it has done it, or is about to do it at the instance of creditors, can the executor delay that court, in compelling the payment of the debts until the clause of the will has been construed in an action in another court? And when the matter has been so determined, why should that construction prevail over that of the court to which the matter is specifically referred by the constitution? Shall this court suspend its proceedings until advised by another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction?

But, as already said, if in a proper case courts of equity have jurisdiction to construe wills, and this court shall finally so hold, it is evident the court is not bound to entertain such suits, and should not do so, except in cases where there are special reasons for it. Its interference is always a matter of discretion, and there must always be some other purpose than a mere desire to obtain the opinion of a court of equity. Crosby v. Mason, 32 Conn. 482. And since our courts have in probate proceedings most ample powers, and may recognize and declare trusts, and compel their execution, and in the final decree must define all estates, legal or equitable, which pass under the will or the statute of descents, (Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 459,) it is evident the occasion which would justify such interference can rarely occur.

There is no such exigency in this case. The plaintiffs are not executors, trustees, or cestuis que trust. They claim to be heirs at law, who, in case the residuary legacy is void, might succeed to some of the estate. They ask to have the question of their heirship determined, and some of the legacies pronounced void. No reason is shown why this should be determined in advance of the decree of final distribution. The expense of proceedings of this character is usually saddled upon the estate, and parties should not be permitted to incur costs merely to satisfy idle curiosity.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

RIVERSIDE LAND & IRRIGATION CO. v. JENSEN, Ex'x, etc. (No. 11,950.)

(Supreme Court of California, October 7, 1887.)

1. PRACTICE—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF TRIAL.

In an action to quiet title brought under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 738, the plaintiff was permitted, after the commencement of the trial, to file, upon terms imposed by the court, a second amended complaint, which was substantially the same as the original. Held no error.

2. EASEMENT—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title, the defendant claimed an easement across plaintiff's land. His claim was based upon certain quitclaim deeds made by plaintiff to defendant subsequent to the construction of the irrigating ditch for which the easement was claimed. The defendant testified that it was understood between both parties that he should have a right of way across the plaintiff's land for his ditch. Two witnesses, the president and ex-president of the corporation plaintiff, testified that plaintiff was ignorant of the existence of the ditch at the time the deeds were made, and that there was never any agreement or understanding between the parties that the right of way should pass by the deeds. Held, that the court was justified in finding no agreement to grant defendant the right of way for his irrigating ditch.

3. APPEAL—FINDINGS IN ACCORDANCE WITH ANSWER—DEFENDANT NOT PREJUDICED.

In an action to quiet title, the court found the facts concerning defendant's claim to an easement across plaintiff's land to be as alleged in defendant's answer. Held, that defendant could not be heard to complain of such findings.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, county of San Bernardino; R. E. ARICK, Judge.

Action to quiet title, brought under Code Civil Proc. § 738. The original complaint alleges that the plaintiff, the Riverside Land & Irrigating Company, is a corporation of San Bernardino county, California; that it is the owner of certain lands comprising a part of what is known as the "Rubidoux Rancho," in which the defendant, Cornelius Jensen, claims an adverse interest, and that the defendant's claim is without right. The defendant answered. When the cause came to trial, the plaintiff asked and obtained leave to file an amendment setting forth all the facts out of which grew the defendant's claim. The plaintiff demurred to the defendant's answer, and the demurrer was sustained as to a part thereof, and overruled as to the balance. Upon the trial, certain evidence which the plaintiff attempted to introduce was excluded by the court, and leave was granted a second time to amend the complaint, upon payment of costs. The second amended complaint was substantially the same as the original.

The defendant answered, alleging that he was the owner of the right of way for a water-ditch through which he conducts water for irrigating purposes on lots 25 and 17 hereinafter described; that the land through which said ditch is constructed, until it reaches lot 25, is owned by plaintiff, and is included in the description of the land described in the complaint. Defendant further alleges that he is the owner of two-thirds of the water that flows out of Spring brook into the Santa Ana river, and which is conducted through the ditch aforesaid to and upon lots 27 and 17 for irrigating them, and that said water is necessary for that purpose. For further and separate answer, the defendant alleges that the Rubidoux rancho, in San Bernardino county, California, was at one time owned by Louis Rubidoux, Sr., who had sold, granted, and conveyed to different purchasers several separate tracts of said rancho, as many as 20, containing in the aggregate more than 1,000 acres; that the description in each deed was exceedingly vague and indefinite; that the plaintiff, in 1876, bought of the said Rubidoux such interests that he became owner in common with defendant and another of all that portion of said rancho not sold in severalty by the original owner. It was then agreed between plaintiff and all these persons who had the deeds of such vague and indefinite descriptions that plaintiff should survey and plat and mark by lots the tracts of land so described, and then execute and deliver to each person a quitclaim deed of his land. The agreement was entered into to make certain and definite each owner's tract. Plaintiff made the survey and plat which is known as "Miller & Newman's Survey;" that lot 25 was of the portion allotted to the defendant; that at the time said partition was made it was understood and agreed between plaintiff and defendant that the latter should have the water out of Spring brook and Santa Ana river to irrigate lot 25; that in May, 1877, the defendant, with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, proceeded to construct the ditch, and diverted the water from Spring brook on plaintiff's land into the said ditch, whereby it was conducted to lot 25; that in October, 1878, defendant bought what is known as the "Baldwin Tract," described as lot 17 of the new survey, and the ditch was then extended through lot 25 to lot 17, and the water was there used with plaintiff's knowledge and consent for irrigating purposes; that in July, 1879, the plaintiff quitclaimed to said defendant the lot 17 by that description, and that he now holds under said deed; that in March, 1877, the plaintiff conveyed to defendant lot 25 by quitclaim, but has never conveyed to him the right of way for the ditch.

The action was tried before the court without a jury. The defendant was the only witness who testified that there was any agreement, understanding, or intention on the part of the plaintiff that the right to construct the irrigating ditch should pass with the conveyance of the land; while, on the other hand, both the president and ex-president of the corporation plaintiff testified that, in all their conversations with the defendant in regard to the resurvey, platting, and partition of the land, there was never anything said that could lead the defendant to suppose they meant to give him the right to construct the ditch across the land of plaintiff, and that, as a matter of fact, no such thing was ever thought of or intended, and that at the time of making the deeds plaintiff was ignorant of the existence of the ditch.

Among other findings of fact, the court found—

“(14) That while the Rubidoux *ranch*o was owned by Louis Rubidoux, Sr., he had sold, granted, and conveyed to different persons and purchasers several separate tracts of said *ranch*o,—as many as twenty, containing in the aggregate more than one thousand acres; that the description in each and every grant to the different purchasers aforesaid was exceedingly vague and indefinite; that plaintiff, in 1876, bought of the Rubidoux *ranch*o such interest that it became the owner of thirteen-fourteenths, undivided, of all that portion of said *ranch*o not sold in severalty by the original owners. It was then agreed between plaintiff and all other persons who had deeds of such vague and indefinite descriptions that plaintiff would survey and plat and mark by lots the tracts of land so vaguely and indefinitely described, as nearly correct as could be done, and would then execute and deliver to each person a quitclaim deed to his land designated by lots, and that each would accept such quitclaim deed, and hold according to the description therein. This agreement was entered into to make certain and definite each man's tract. Plaintiff did make such survey and plat, which is known as ‘Miller & Newman Survey.’

“Afterwards, to-wit, on the twenty-sixth day of October, 1878, the defendant bought of the administrator of the estate of William Baldwin, deceased, a tract of land on said Rubidoux *ranch*o, known as the ‘Baldwin Tract,’ which was one of those tracts above referred to with a vague and indefinite description. That upon such purchase defendant immediately took possession of said Baldwin tract, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, and from that time to this has cultivated and improved it. On the Miller & Newman survey said Baldwin tract is known as lot 17; it lies below and immediately adjoining lot 25 aforesaid.”

“(18) That such quitclaim deed was executed by plaintiff to defendant in pursuance of the understanding hereinbefore mentioned, and not otherwise.”

Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The defendant having died since the appeal was taken, it is prosecuted by his executrix.

Curtis & Otis and H. C. Rolfe, for appellant. Byron Waters, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The second amended complaint filed herein shows that the action was instituted under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff at a certain stage in the trial, which was in progress under the first amended complaint, seems to have abandoned the effort to prove certain issues involved in the pleadings, and to have obtained leave of the court (upon conditions as to costs, etc.) to file the second amended complaint, against the objection of the defendant. The effect of this was that the latter pleading was framed upon the theory of the original complaint filed in the action, and the cause was tried upon that basis. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff and from that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The latter, who is now the executrix of the last will of Cornelius Jensen, who died since this appeal was taken, alleges in support of her contention that the court erred in allowing the second amended complaint to be filed; that certain of the findings were not supported by the evidence, and were improperly made.

The gist of the action as stated in the original complaint was the same as that contained in the complaint upon which the trial was had. The amended complaint was only permitted to be filed upon terms imposed by the court, with which the plaintiff complied, and we see nothing in the action taken in the premises, under the circumstances, which worked any hardship or surprise upon the defendant. Therefore, no error was therein committed. Code Civil Proc. §§ 473-475; Hayne, New Tr. §§ 53-56; Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 387.

The appellant, in support of her second point, claims that the quitclaim deed of the plaintiff to her decedent, Cornelius Jensen, dated July 1, 1879, carried with it, as a servitude imposed upon the land thereby conveyed, the right to maintain a certain water-ditch thereon, and use for irrigation the waters running therein; and that the evidence does not sustain the fourteenth and eighteenth findings of the fact; further arguing that those findings were unauthorized, as outside of the issues made by the pleadings. There is nothing in the language of the deed itself which conveys any such right as is thus claimed, and the evidence is conflicting as to whether or not, at the time that deed was executed and delivered, any water-ditch existed as an easement on the land, which had been "obviously and permanently used by the person" (in this case the person being the plaintiff here) "whose estate" was "transferred for the benefit thereof, at the time when the transfer was agreed upon or completed." Civil Code, § 1104. The evidence for the plaintiff negatived the claim that Jensen, the deceased, ever constructed the ditch on its land, or appropriated its water with its consent. On the contrary, it declares that, as soon as it knew of his acts in the premises, it protested against them, and held him as a trespasser. As a consequence of this conflict in the evidence as to the existence of the water-ditch as an easement imposed as a servitude on the land quitclaimed to the defendant by the plaintiff, we cannot say that the court was not justified in making the findings to which the defendant objected, notwithstanding her contention that the evidence showed such an easement as would have impliedly passed under the quitclaim deed. Parol testimony given at the trial supports the findings objected to. The facts which the court recites therein were alleged to be true in the answer. The fourteenth finding contains almost the exact language of that pleading. The eighteenth, referring to the "understanding as hereinbefore mentioned," that is, as set out in the fourteenth finding, says that the quitclaim deed was "executed" in accordance therewith, and "not otherwise." It follows necessarily, then, that the defendant ought not to be heard to complain of those findings, because, as we have seen, the facts which they affirm to have existed were asserted in the answer; and, if the court assented to the defendant's allegations of facts, on which findings were thus invited, we cannot see how it can be said that tribunal committed prejudicial error.

The record discloses nothing which would warrant a reversal of the judgment or order, and they should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

WILL—ANNULLING PROBATE FOR INVALIDITY—FORM OF JUDGMENT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1330, 1331, provides that, if a will is found to be invalid, the probate must be annulled and revoked, and the powers of the executor cease. In a will contest, in which the jury found the will to be void for want of testamentary capacity, undue influence, fraud, and menace, judgment was rendered annulling and revoking the will as to contestant, and adjudging the contestant not bound by the will, and that she take the same share as if decedent had died intestate. Held, that such judgment was void, and could not be reviewed on appeal, although, by stipulation, no exception was taken to its form.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. RIORDAN, Judge.

Matt. I. Sullivan, for contestant. Cowdery & McCutchen, for proponent.

TEMPLE, J. This is a contest as to the probate of a will, commenced after the will had been admitted to probate, but within one year. The contest covered all the grounds expressly defined in the Code as grounds of contest. It was tried before a jury, who found for the contestant: (1) That Morris Freud, at the time of the execution of the proposed will, was not of sound and disposing mind; (2) that he was induced to sign the proposed will by means of undue influence exercised against contestant by the proponents of the will; (3) that the proposed will was procured to be signed by means of fraud or fraudulent misrepresentations, practiced upon him by proponents; and (4) that the will was signed while acting under menace by proponents.

The trial was on September 8th. November 2d following, this stipulation was filed:

"STIPULATION RESPECTING ENTRY OF JUDGMENT AND JUDGMENT ROLL.

[Title of court and cause.]

"It is stipulated that the judgment or order setting aside the last will of the said deceased as to said contestant, Sophia Alexander, may be entered as of November 17, 1884, and proponents' bill of exceptions may be served within ten days thereafter, notwithstanding the said order or judgment may not have been actually entered. It is further stipulated that the judgment roll herein shall consist of the last will of deceased, the order admitting it to probate, the amended grounds of opposition of Mrs. Alexander, proponents' answer, a copy of the verdict of the jury and judgment, and the stipulation as to form of judgment and this stipulation.

"Dated November 2, 1884.

"MATT. I. SULLIVAN, Attorney for Contestant.

"COWDERY & MCCUTCHEN, Attorneys for Proponents."

(Indorsed:) "Filed Nov. 2, 1884."

Afterwards the following stipulation was filed.

"STIPULATION AS TO JUDGMENT.

[Title of court and cause.]

"It is hereby stipulated that the proponents of the will of said Morris Freud, deceased, will take no exception on motion for new trial, on appeal, or otherwise, to the form of the judgment herein in favor of contestant, Sophia Alexander, nor because the said judgment sets aside the proposed will and the probate thereof, only as to the said contestant.

"November 17, 1884.

"COWDERY & MCCUTCHEN, Attorneys for Proponents."

(Indorsed:) "Filed November 17, 1884."

On the same day judgment was entered, by which it was adjudged that the probate of the will be annulled "as to contestant, Sophia Alexander, and that probate of said will be, and the same is, hereby annulled and revoked to the extent that said contestant, Sophia Alexander, is not bound by said will, and shall take, upon distribution of the estate of said deceased, the same share as she would have taken if the said Morris Freud had died intestate."

There can be no question as to the character of the judgment which the statute directs to be entered on such a verdict. The probate is annulled and revoked, and the powers of the executor cease. Sections 1330, 1331, Code Civil Proc. No objection is raised here to the judgment, but the record shows that it is void, and a review of it upon an appeal would be a vain thing.

The cause is remanded, with directions to vacate the unauthorized judgment, and render that required by law.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALE OF LAND—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1547, directing a notice of sale of the property of a decedent to be "published in a newspaper for three weeks successively;" and section 1705, providing that, when any publication is ordered, the judge or court may order a publication for a less number of times than each issue of the paper,—a sale of decedent's property at the instance of creditors, the notice of which was published in a daily newspaper once a week for three successive weeks, pursuant to an order of the court, is valid.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

R. Percy Wright, for appellant. Thos. F. Barry, Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, and M. I. Sullivan, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal from an order confirming a sale of real property, and the ground of the appeal is that it appears from the return of sale that the notice of sale was published in a daily newspaper, once a week for three successive weeks. Section 1547, Code Civil Proc., directs that the notice shall be published in a newspaper for three weeks successively. It is contended that the notice must be published in each issue of the paper, and that on those days on which it is not so published it is not published at all, and, therefore, in such case it will not be published for or during three weeks. The phrase "three weeks successively" evidently means the same thing as "three successive weeks." It simply indicates the time during which the sale must be advertised, and not the manner of the publication, as that it shall be published successively during the period. The word "successively" refers to weeks, and not to the publications of the paper. It is, therefore, within the provisions of section 1705, Code Civil Proc., a case in which the judge or court may order a publication for a less number of times than each issue of the paper; that is, it is not otherwise expressly provided. In this instance such an order was made by the court.

It is claimed that section 1705 only applies to publications ordered by the court; but this is not the language of the Code. "When any publication is ordered" may as well be held to include all notices ordered by the statute. Indeed, if it is not so read, it will be found to apply to very few publications required.

And no reason is apparent why the dispensing power should exist as to the publications directed by the court, and not to those ordered in probate proceedings by the statute. Besides, all the probate proceedings are under the direction of the probate judge. The word "ordered" in the section was probably intended to have the same meaning as the word "required." The order of sale having been made, the administrator was thereby required to make the publication. The question is not whether the court can direct in what paper it shall be advertised, but whether, under section 1705, the court can dispense with the publication in each issue of the paper. In this case it is suggested that the appellant, as administrator, was contumacious, and refused to proceed with the sale, which, at the instance of creditors, had been ordered. To force obedience, an order was made directing the administrator to act, and specifically directing how he should proceed. We think the record discloses no error.

As it appears very plainly that the order must be affirmed on the merits, we have not thought it necessary to determine whether the proper record is before us. Order affirmed.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—SEPARATION—ALLOWANCE FROM DECEASED HUSBAND'S ESTATE.

A husband and wife, after being married six weeks, entered into a written agreement for separation; the husband giving the wife $10,500, and she agreeing to receive it in satisfaction of all marital claims, alimony, and support. They had no children. She continued to live apart from him without any effort to set aside the agreement, or demand for further support, until his death. She then applied to the court for $100 per month, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1466, 1467, providing for the granting of a reasonable allowance for the support of the family of a decedent, during the settlement of his estate. Held, that she did not constitute the immediate "family" of the deceased, within the meaning of the statute, and that the allowance was properly refused.

Department No. 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondents. Horace G. Platt, Wm. Loewy, E. N. Dempsey, and Gordon Blanding, for heirs. Henry P. Highton, for appellant.

MCKINSTRY, J. The appellant, Harriet T. Noah, as widow of the deceased, petitioned the superior court for an allowance of $100 a month for her maintenance, under sections 1466 and 1467, Code Civil Proc. There was no child the issue of the marriage of petitioner and decedent.

The executors answered the petition; and at the trial testimony was given to prove that decedent and petitioner were married October 14, 1875, and, after living together five or six weeks, separated, and thenceforth lived separate and apart until his death, which occurred on the twenty-eighth of August, 1883; that, within six weeks prior to the marriage, decedent gave to the petitioner $2,825 for her personal use, and supplied her liberally during the time they lived together; that the separation was by mutual consent of the parties; that upon the separation the petitioner for the allowance received from the decedent $10,500,—$500 of which was paid by her to an attorney at law who negotiated the settlement for her; that at the time of the marriage decedent owned certain improved real estate at the corner of Spring and California streets, San Francisco, the income from which was then about $500 a month, and had in cash about $35,000; that after the separation the decedent contributed nothing to her support, and she did not look or apply to him for her support or maintenance,—they were as utter strangers, and never spoke or corresponded; that she had expended the money paid her on the separation prior to a point of time about four years before the filing of her petition for the allowance, and during such four years she supported herself from her own earnings, with the assistance of her mother and brother. The value of the property in the hands of the executors when the petition for allowance was heard was $26,400. There was no community property of the marriage. The petitioner, although informed of the death of decedent, did not attend his funeral.

The executors introduced a written agreement for separation, whereby, in consideration of the consent of the decedent that the said Harriet T. should live separate and apart from him, and of the receipt of $10,500 by her, she agreed not to demand any alimony or support from him; that she would not contract any debts on his account; that the $10,500 should be in full satisfaction of "all her marital claims," etc.

By our law, a husband and wife may agree in writing to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them during such separation. Civil Code, 159. Of course, the transaction is subject to the rules which control the contracts of those occupying confidential relations. Civil Code, 158.

It is said by appellant that, upon her application for an allowance, the burden was on the executors of alleging and proving the "fairness" of the contract. The answer of the executors was not demurred to by the petitioner. The answer set forth facts which, if proved, justified the court in finding the agreement to have been fair, and the evidence admitted without objection tended to establish its fairness. The precise objection that the agreement was not admissible under the averments of the answer was not made by appellant when the agreement was offered in evidence. The objection was that it was "incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, on the ground that it was not sufficient in law to vary, alter, or affect the legal rights of the petitioner, on her application, as the widow of the deceased." Moreover, the agreement, as far as it was an agreement to separate, and for her support during the separation, was fully executed during the life-time of the deceased. The husband paid the money, and never sought to compel subsequent cohabitation. The wife received the money, applied it to her support, and ever after voluntarily lived separate and apart from her husband. The order of the superior court was not based upon the agreement alone, but on the further facts that, in accordance with its terms, she ceased to live with him, and from thenceforward was not a member of his family.

In this court the appellant urges that the agreement is void because not acknowledged by her in the manner prescribed for the acknowledgment of conveyances of the separate property of the wife. The objection was not taken in the court below; and, when the contract was entered into, the wife had no vested interest—certainly no “separate” interest—in the separate property of the husband.

But it is said the agreement did not affect the rights of the appellant as a widow,—rights which did not accrue until after the death of Joel Noah. It is not necessary here to decide that appellant, by entering into the agreement, waived or released any of her rights as heir of Joel Noah, deceased. We do not think she was absolutely entitled, as of right, to an allowance during the administration of his estate.

It was held in Massachusetts that while an antenuptial agreement between the widow and deceased, whereby she covenanted to accept a certain settlement in lieu of dower, and in place of any and every claim against his estate, would, if performed, be effectual as a release of dower, it was no answer to her claim for a distributive share of personal estate left by her husband. Sullings v. Richmond, 5 Allen, 187. And that such an agreement was of itself no defense to a petition for an allowance for necessities. Blackinton v. Blackinton, 110 Mass. 461. See, also, Wentworth v. Wentworth, 69 Me. 254. The decisions seem to be based on the limited and inferior jurisdiction of the probate courts in Massachusetts, which had no power to construe or enforce marriage contracts. Sullings v. Richmond, supra. The contracts in the cases referred to—which preceded the marriage, and contemplated its continuation until the death of one of the parties—in no way operated to disturb the harmony of their personal relations, and they continued to live as husband and wife until the decease of the husband. In none of the cases was there any question that the surviving wife, or wife and children, constituted the family of the deceased at the time of his death.

It was held in New York that an antenuptial contract such as above mentioned, precluded the widow from demanding certain articles of personal property directed by statute to be set apart to her. Young v. Hicks, 92 N. Y. 235.

Section 1465 of the California Code of Civil Procedure provides that, upon the return of the inventory of an estate, the court wherein the administration is pending may set aside for the use of the surviving wife, or wife and children, the property exempt from execution. And section 1466 provides that if the amount set apart be insufficient for the support of the widow, or widow and children, the court, or the judge thereof, “must make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as may be necessary for the maintenance of the family, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate.”

By statute of Maine it was enacted: “When an estate is insolvent, or no provision is made for the widow in the will of the husband, the widow shall be entitled to so much of the personal estate * * * as the judge deems necessary, according to the degree and estate of her husband, and the state of her family under her care.” Gilman v. Gilman, 53 Me. 191. In Kersey v. Bailey, 52 Me. 201, the court said the original intention of the statutes of Maine, giving the power to the probate court to set aside property to her, was to furnish a temporary supply for the wants of the widow and family while the estate was in process of settlement. And the learned court also said: “From the tenor of the statute [in this respect like the provision of our Code authorizing an allowance] directing the attention of the judge to the estate and condition of the husband, and the state of the family under the widow’s charge, it is apparent that the legislature, in making the provision, was contemplating the ordinary case where the parties to the marriage relation have lived together till death severed the tie.” In that case the widow, though the legal wife of the deceased, had not lived or cohabited with him as such for more than 40 years. He had deserted her; but she, supposing him to be dead, married another man, with whom she lived as his wife until the death of her real husband. She lost nothing by his death which she had before possessed, and there seemed to have been a tacit relinquishment by each of all claims upon the other for a long period of time. The court concluded she was not entitled to have any part of the estate set aside to her under the statute. The same court had previously held the widow's claim for an allowance was not an absolute right; that the order was in the discretion of the probate judge Murray v. Cargill, 32 Me. 516.

Section 122 of the former probate act of this state reads: "The probate court or judge shall make such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family according to the circumstances," etc. In Estate of H. H. Byrne, the learned judge of the probate court of San Francisco (afterwards one of the justices of this court) said that the right to an allowance, under the section of the statute quoted, was founded on the statute alone. "It is quite different from the right of the heir to inherit, or of the widow to her dower, or the right to one-half of the community property. It is an allowance made to the family. * * * I think that the statute was intended to embrace those who were the immediate family of the deceased; those who were by law entitled, up to his death, to look to him for support and protection. * * * Yet any person to be entitled to any allowance out of the estate must have been in the receipt or in law entitled to demand of deceased a maintenance before his death." Estate of Byrne, Myr. Prob. 1.

We concur in this view of the law. We also think that, in enacting section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the legislature had in contemplation the ordinary case where "the parties to the marriage relation live together until death severs the tie." The letter of the statute may cover other cases. We are not to be understood as saying that, in every instance where the husband and wife have separated, the widow should be denied an allowance. She may have been driven from her home by the cruelty of her husband, and in such case the superior court may, perhaps, make an allowance, although the widow made no effort during the life-time of deceased to reassume matrimonial relations with him. It is enough to say that—since the appellant voluntarily made an agreement with her husband for separation, such as our law authorizes, received and enjoyed the benefits of the money paid for her support during the separation, and voluntarily continued to live apart from him, without any attempt to set aside the agreement, or to assume again the matrimonial connection, or even to demand further means for her separate support—the court below was justified in holding that the petitioner did not constitute the immediate family of the deceased, to whom was to be continued during the settlement of the estate the "reasonable support" which the husband in ordinary cases is presumed to furnish his wife. Order affirmed.

M. died, making no provision in his will for his widow, leaving no community property, and a four-story brick business block, valued at $25,000, his only separate real property. This could not be divided without material loss. No homestead was set apart during the husband's life-time. The widow applied to the court to set one apart, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1465, providing that the court shall set apart a homestead, none having been selected during the life-time of deceased, out of his real estate. Held, as the property in question was of such nature that it could not have been selected as a homestead during the life-time of deceased, the petition was properly denied.

McKINSTRY, J. Deceased left a will wherein no provision was made for his widow, Harriet T. Noah, the appellant. The will was duly probated September 28, 1883; and on the sixth day of August, 1884, appellant petitioned the superior court for an order setting apart a homestead out of the real property of the estate, "or for such other or different order as may be just and proper in the premises." There was no community property, and the only separate real property of the deceased at the time of his death was a certain lot in San Francisco, covered entirely or partially by a brick building four stories high, and which was and had been used exclusively for business purposes. The answer of the executors to the petition of the widow, beside the facts above mentioned, set forth the matters averred in the answer to the application of the widow for an allowance, as contained in the transcript in Re Estate of Noah, (No. 11,634,) ante, 287. It is averred in the petition for homestead that the property above described "cannot be divided without material injury."

In the view we take, it is unnecessary to inquire what might have been the legal effect of the post-nuptial contract given in evidence had there been any property out of which a homestead could have been carved, or whether the court below erred in overruling the objection to the introduction of that contract in evidence.

Appellant contends the order of the court below refusing to set apart a homestead should be reversed, because the court did not find upon the issues made by the pleadings. But, if the findings were proper, the bill of exceptions fails to show that they were not waived.

Section 1465, Code Civil Proc., provides, if no homestead (as was the case here) has been selected, designated, and recorded during the life-time of the deceased, "the court must select, designate, and set apart, and cause to be recorded, a homestead for the use of the surviving husband or wife, and the minor children, * * * out of the common property, or, if there be no common property, then out of the real estate belonging to the deceased." The sections of the Code relating to homesteads to be set apart by the court—probate homesteads—do not define the word "homestead."

It may be conceded that the real property set apart as a homestead to the surviving husband or wife, by order of the court, need not be actually occupied at the time when the order is made; but it would seem that it must be property which could have been selected as a homestead during the continuance of the marriage. Mr. Justice RHODES, speaking for the supreme court, said that there was nothing in the homestead act, as it existed in 1866, "which tended to the conclusion that any property could be set apart as a homestead by the probate court which might not have been dedicated as a homestead under the homestead act immediately preceding the death of the deceased." Kingsley v. Kingsley, 39 Cal. 666. So far as they bear upon the question we are considering, we find no substantial variance between the provisions of the Codes and those of the homestead act referred to in Kingsley v. Kingsley.

It would be doing violence to the plain intent of the statute to attempt to set apart as a homestead a lot and four-story brick building, of the value of $25,000, the building having been erected and occupied exclusively for business purposes, when, as averred in the petition here, "the property could not be divided without material injury." The homestead consists of a dwelling-house on which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated. Civil Code, 1237. The property spoken of in the petition was dedicated to business purposes, and the owner could not have converted an undivided portion of it into a homestead by living in some of the rooms, and filing a declaration.

The probate court may, in a proper case, set apart a homestead, the value whereof—that is, the value of the land and dwelling-house—does not exceed $5,000. The law does not authorize the court to set apart $5,000 worth of property, or $5,000 worth of land on which a dwelling-house may subsequently be erected. This is the more apparent with reference to setting apart as a homestead, for the use of the survivor, separate real property of the deceased "for a limited period." Code Civil Proc. 1468. The superior court would be justified in refusing to set apart land as a homestead unless it were made to appear that there was thereon an edifice which could be used as a dwelling-house. Where the survivor seeks to have set apart a portion of a large building, "and the land on which the same is situated," it should, at least, be made to appear affirmatively that partition of the land and building was practicable. Here, it only appeared to the court below that the property was the separate property of the deceased; that it was of the value of $25,000; that the building was of brick, four stories high: that it had been rented to divers persons, who carried on various kinds of business therein; and that the property could not be divided without material injury.

It is urged by appellant that the court below should have ordered the land and improvements sold, and that $5,000 of the proceeds be paid to her in lieu of a homestead. It is difficult to see why, if she was not entitled to a homestead, she should have money as a substitute for a homestead. But there is no provision of the Codes which authorizes such an order, and by strong implication such an order is prohibited. When a homestead, selected in the lifetime of the deceased, is inventoried at more than $5,000, and a homestead of $5,000 cannot be carved out of it, the court may order a sale of the homestead as selected, and distribute to the surviving wife $5,000 of the proceeds. Code Civil Proc. 1476. Here, no homestead was selected during the life-time of the decedent. Moreover, the appellant sought to have set apart to her a homestead out of the separate property of deceased. In such cases the court can only set apart a homestead "for a limited period, to be designated in the order, and the title vests in the heirs of the deceased, subject to such order." Code Civil Proc. 1468. How was the court to estimate the cash value of the use as a homestead, for a period never fixed by order, of part of property, undivided and inseparable? There certainly is no statutory provision authorizing the court to substitute $5,000 in money for the temporary use of property as a homestead. Order affirmed.

PEOPLE v. TRAVERS. (No. 20,329.)

1. BURGLARY—DEGREE OF CRIME—VERDICT.

An information charged defendant with an attempt to commit burglary, but did not state the time the attempt was committed, nor specify the degree of the crime. The verdict was "guilty as charged." Pen. Code Cal. § 460, provides that "every burglary committed in the night-time is burglary of the first degree, and every burglary committed in the day-time is burglary of the second degree." Held, that the verdict should have stated the degree of the crime, under Pen. Code, § 1157, which provides that "whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty."

2. SAME—REVERSAL—JEOPARDY.

The reversal of a judgment in a criminal case on the ground that the verdict failed to state the degree of the crime, as required by Pen. Code Cal. § 1157, is not sufficient to warrant the court to order the discharge of the accused under Const. Cal. § 8, art. 1, which provides that "no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense."¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Frederick McGregor and Garrel W. McEnerney, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The defendant was charged in the information with an attempt to commit burglary; whether in the night-time or day-time is not stated. The degree is not specified in the information. The defendant pleaded "not guilty." A trial was had, the jury rendered a verdict of "guilty as charged," and the court sentenced the defendant to imprisonment at San Quentin for the term of two years. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and his contention is that the verdict is a nullity by reason of the omission to specify the degree of crime of which the jury found the defendant guilty.

Burglary is divided into two degrees: "Every burglary committed in the night-time is burglary of the first degree, and every burglary committed in the day-time is burglary of the second degree." Pen. Code, 460. "Whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty." Id. 1157. Prior to the adoption of the Code the statute provided that "the jury before whom any person indicted for murder shall be tried, shall, if they find such person guilty thereof, designate by their verdict whether it be murder of the first or second degree." Wood, Dig. 331. The Code has extended this provision to all crimes "distinguished into degrees." Therefore the construction given to the clause of the statute as it existed before the Code, in murder cases, may guide us in construing it in its broader application.

In People v. Marquis, 15 Cal. 38, the defendant was indicted for murder. The verdict of the jury was, "guilty as charged in the indictment." The judgment was reversed. The court said: "The statute [Wood, Dig. 331] provides that the jury shall designate in their verdict the degree of the offense. This they have not done; and the court in a capital case cannot assume that they designed from a general finding to fix the grade of the crime." The judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. In People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129, the court reversed the judgment because the verdict did not designate the degree of the crime. Under a similar statute the supreme court of Alabama held it to be error to pass sentence upon a verdict which did not specify the degree of murder of which the jury found the defendant guilty. The court said that the statute which required the jury to specify the degree was imperative, and that it was the right of the accused to have it complied with. Robertson v. State, 42 Ala. 509. To the same effect are the cases of McGee v. State, 8 Mo. 595; Dick v. State, 3 Ohio St. 89, and Parks v. State, Id. 101. We are unable to find any case in which the contrary has been held. Since the adoption of the Code this court held it to be error, under section 1192, Pen. Code, to sentence a defendant, upon a plea of guilty to a charge of burglary, without first determining the degree. People v. Jefferson, 52 Cal. 452.

¹Neither the plea of jeopardy nor former acquittal can be interposed by an accused at a subsequent trial, upon a showing that his conviction on his former trial was set aside because of an illegal verdict, Robinson v. State, (Tex.) 4 S. W. Rep. 904, and note; and a conviction upon a void proceeding or indictment, when the penalty has not been inflicted, does not operate as a bar to a subsequent indictment for the same offense, U. S. v. Jones, 31 Fed. Rep. 725.

It therefore follows that the judgment must be reversed. And here the question arises, what further order should be made? Appellant's counsel insists that we should order the discharge of the defendant under that clause of the constitution which declares that "no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." Section 8, art. 1, Const. In none of the cases which we have followed thus far was there an order that the defendant be discharged from custody, but in each of them there was an order that the cause be remanded for a new trial. Since we reverse the judgment on the authority of those cases, we deem it proper to make the same orders which were made in them.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE ex rel. DUNN v. MELONE. (No. 20,313.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 8, 1887.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—RUNNING OF STATUTE AGAINST STATE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 345, provides that the limitations prescribed in chapter 3 "apply to actions brought in the name of the state, or for the benefit of the state, in the same manner as to actions by private parties." An action was brought in the name of the state against a defaulting secretary of state. Held, that there was no presumption that the state was not barred in such an action; but the statute of limitations applied to the state without being made expressly applicable to such case.

2. SECRETARY OF STATE—LIABILITY FOR FAILING TO ACCOUNT—COMPTROLLER'S ACCOUNT AS EVIDENCE.

Pol. Code Cal. § 437, provides that "whenever any person has received moneys belonging to, or held in trust for, the state, and fails to render an account thereof, and to make settlement with the comptroller within the time prescribed by law, * * * or who fails to pay into the state treasury any money belonging to the state, upon being required so to do by the comptroller, within 20 days after such requisition, the comptroller must state an account with such person, charging 25 per cent. damages, and interest * * * from the time of failure. A copy of such account in any suit therein is prima facie evidence of the things therein stated." Held, that this section applied to an action brought by the comptroller against an ex-secretary of state for fees received and not paid into the treasury by the latter.

3. SAME—LIMITATION OF ACTION.

Held, further, that the word "whenever," beginning said section, should not be construed to mean "at whatever time moneys have been received," so that no limitation would apply to the action authorized by this section.

4. SAME.

A secretary of state was sued by the state comptroller for fees received and not accounted for by the former. Pol. Code Cal. § 437, provides that where any person fails to pay into the state treasury any money belonging to the state upon being required so to do by the comptroller, within 20 days after such requisition, the comptroller must state an account with such person, etc. Held, that the liability of the secretary accrued at the time he was in default, and not when the comptroller made demand for the deficit, and stated an account; and the statute of limitations began to run from the former period. THORNTON, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of Sacramento; W. C. VAN FLEET, Judge.

Langhorn & Miller, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. Respondent was secretary of state for the term of four years, ending December, 1875. It was his duty as such officer to collect and pay over to the state monthly the fees received by him. On the first of July, 1886, the relator, as comptroller, demanded of him that he account for, and pay into the state treasury, the sum of $11,109.50, alleged to have been received by him while in office, but for which it was claimed he had failed to account, or make settlement with the comptroller, as required by law. Respondent taking no notice of this demand, the comptroller proceeded to state an account under the provisions of section 437, Pol. Code. The account so stated was served upon respondent, who still failed to make any response, or to pay any portion of the amount claimed from him. This suit was commenced August 14, 1886. A demurrer was interposed on the ground that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment entered against the plaintiff, who takes this appeal.

Our statute of limitations is divided into two chapters,—one treating of actions for the recovery of real property; the other of actions other than for the recovery of real property. Section 345, Code Civil Proc., is in this last-mentioned chapter, and is as follows: "The limitations prescribed in this chapter apply to actions brought in the name of the state, or for the benefit of the state, in the same manner as to actions by private parties." In the case of Piller v. Railroad Co., 52 Cal. 42, it was held that subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civil Proc., is applicable to all actions at law not specially mentioned in other portions of the statute. The effect of this must be that all actions at law other than for the recovery of real property are barred by some provision of chapter 3, Code Civil Proc., unless, of course, expressly excepted from its operation by that or some other statute. There can be nothing in the suggestion that the same kind of action as this is cannot be prosecuted by a private party, and, therefore, under section 345, the limitation cannot apply. There is no such requirement in that section. The limitation is to apply in the same manner. Therefore, if we find that the action brought by the state is within the terms of the statute, interpreted by precisely the same rules which would be applicable if the suit were brought by a private party, the action is barred. Under this rule there can be no doubt that the statute is applicable.

It is claimed, however, that the action is founded on section 437, Pol. Code, and by the terms of that section that (1) the statute of limitations does not apply; and (2) the cause of action does not accrue until the account is stated, and demand made as provided in that section. The portions of section 437, Pol. Code, so far as material here, are as follows: "Whenever any person has received moneys belonging to, or held in trust for, the state, and fails to render an account thereof, and to make settlement with the comptroller within the time prescribed by law, * * * or who fails to pay into the state treasury any money belonging to the state, upon being required so to do by the comptroller, within twenty days after such requisition, the comptroller must state an account with such person, charging 25 per cent. damages and interest * * * from the time of failure. A copy of such account in any suit therein is prima facie evidence of the things therein stated."

In reply to this position on the part of the state it is contended: (1) The section 437, Pol. Code, does not apply. It is not averred that respondent did not make monthly settlements, as the law required him to do, during his term of office. If his accounts rendered were false, his case does not fall within this statute; (2) the statute gives no right of action, but only prescribes the procedure, and a rule of evidence; and (3) if no right of action accrues until an account is stated, and demand made, then it had become a stale demand, and, no account being stated within a reasonable time, plaintiff's right of action, and right to make a demand, became barred.

The claim that by the terms of section 437, Pol. Code, no limitation applies to the action authorized by it, is made to depend principally upon the use of the word "whenever." "Whenever any person has received moneys," etc., counsel contends means, "At whatever time moneys have been received." A simple reference to the language of the section will show that this is a forced and unnatural construction. There is a general requirement that those who receive money shall account. The word "whenever" here simply means the same as "if," i. e., in those cases in which parties receiving money do not account, etc.

The next question in logical sequence is the contention of respondent that section 437, Pol. Code, does not apply to this case. Here, too, it seems that a simple reference to the language of the section is sufficient to dispel all doubt. The proceeding is not authorized against those who render no accounts, and make no settlement, but against those who have received money, and render no accounts thereof; and also against those who fail to pay into the treasury moneys belonging to the state, upon being required so to do by the comptroller. The complaint shows that while secretary of state respondent received $11,109.50 as fees, which he has never accounted for, and that he has failed to pay the same, or any portion thereof, into the state treasury, although he had been required by the state comptroller so to do.

The next inquiry naturally is whether a right of action accrued against the respondent upon demand being made upon him under the provisions of section 437, Pol. Code. In addition to that section, it is provided in section 433 of the same Code, that the comptroller may institute suits against persons who, by any means, have become possessed of public money, and who fail to pay over the same, and that of such suits the courts of Sacramento county shall have jurisdiction, without regard to the residence of the defendants. It was conceded, on the oral argument for the plaintiff, that some sort of an action might have been brought on behalf of the state for the alleged default, without proceeding under section 437. This is a weighty concession on the part of the state. Much the strongest position would have been, if on other grounds it were tenable, that the remedy provided in section 437 is exclusive. But under the circumstances, I presume the learned counsel for the people did not deem that position open to him. It is true that when a demand is necessary in order to fix the liability, and put the party in default, the cause of action does not accrue, and the statute does not commence to run until demand has been made. But can it be said that there is not a fixed liability where there is a dereliction which may amount to a criminal default, and for which, perhaps, the defendant might have been at once prosecuted and convicted? The defendant was required, as secretary of state, to account and pay over monthly, during his term, all moneys which should come to his possession. Can it be possible that he has failed to do this, and has retired from office a defaulter in a large amount, and yet has incurred no liability? Of course it was competent for the state to have removed the limitation altogether, but the question is, has it done so? There is certainly no plain provision in the statute to that end. There is nothing to indicate such an intent. It creates no right of action where one did not exist before. It has not, according to the construction given, substituted the new remedy for the old. It merely provides that in case of a defalcation an account may be stated, which shall cast the burden of proof on the officer alleged to be in default, and impose a penalty. There is nothing in the suggestion that the presumption is that the state is not barred, and therefore the statute of limitations must be construed, if possible, so as not to apply to the state. The rule merely amounts to this: The limitation does not apply to the state unless expressly made applicable. There is very little room for the operation of such a presumption here, where our Code expressly provides that the limitations shall apply to the state in the same manner as to private parties.

I think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. The examination of the law bearing on this case, which is comprised in the statutes, (I refer to part 3, tit. 1, c. 3, arts. 5-7, Pol. Code, relating to the secretary of state, comptroller, and treasurer,) shows, in my judgment, that the failure by the secretary of state to render an account, and make settlement, or his failure to pay into the state treasury any moneys belonging to the state, upon being required to do so by the comptroller within 20 days after such requisition, so far as regards moneys which he has never inserted in any account rendered by him, is, under section 437 of the Political Code, an additional breach of his duty under the law, for which he is responsible. On such failure by the officer within the 20 days above mentioned, it is made the duty of the comptroller to state an account with such officer, charging him with 25 per cent. damages, and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from the time of the failure. On this account so stated an action may be brought, and on the trial of this action a copy of the account is, by section 437, supra, made prima facie evidence of the things therein stated.

The statute of limitations did not commence to run in this case earlier than the failure of the secretary of state to account, say at the end of the period of 20 days above mentioned. In this case the requisition of the comptroller was made on or about the first of July, 1886, and the action was commenced on the fourteenth of August, 1886. The action was, then, commenced within 30 days after the end of the 20 days. If it is urged that the defendant was already in default long before the demand by the comptroller was made, upon which default the statute of limitations had run, the reply is that Melone held his office under the law (section 437, Pol. Code) which made his failure to account or pay over a new or additional breach for which he was responsible. That the legislature was competent to enact such a law there can be no doubt. Melone took and held office with this power in the legislature. It was competent for the legislature to impose new and additional duties.

I am of opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

In re Estate of SCHEDEL, Deceased. (No. 11,533.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 24, 1887.)

WILL—REQUESTS TO "CHILDREN"—GRANDCHILDREN.

S. died April 22, 1878, having executed a will April 9th. He bequeathed $2,000 to each of the children of his deceased sister, when he or she should arrive at majority or his brother should die. If either of the children should die before his brother, leaving lawful issue, such issue to receive the parent's share. The sister of S. had died 42 years, and the last of her children 7 years, before the making of the will, which was known to the testator. There were four minor grandchildren of the sister of S. living at the time of the making of the will. Held, that the word "children," as used by testator in referring to the issue of his deceased sister, should be construed to mean "grandchildren."

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county; J. V. COFFEY, Judge. S. W. Holladay, for respondents. Matt. J. Sullivan, for legatees.

BELCHER, C. C. George Schedel duly executed his last will on the ninth day of April, 1878, and died on the twenty-second day of the same month. In the will he uses the following language: "I hereby direct my said executors to pay to my said brother, Claus Schedel, all the net interest, income, and revenue, of all and singular my estate and the property left by me, during the term of his natural life, to be paid to him by my said executors monthly. On the death of my said brother, Claus Schedel, I give and bequeath—First, to each of the children of my said brother, Claus Schedel, the sum of two thousand dollars, gold coin; and to each of the children of my deceased sister, Elizabeth Rosenbohm, nee Schedel, late of Loven, near Boemerlehe, Germany, the sum of $2,000, gold coin; and to be paid to them when he, she, or they shall have arrived at the age of majority, or as soon thereafter as my said brother, Claus Schedel, should die; and if either of the children of my said brother or sister shall have died before the death of my said brother, Claus Schedel, leaving lawful issue, such issue to receive the parent's share." The residue of the estate was given to certain charitable or benevolent societies, but the bequests failed, because the testator died within 30 days after executing his will. The testator was never married, and his parents both died before he did. Claus Schedel died on the second day of February, 1885, and left surviving him two sons and a daughter, and one grandchild, the son of a daughter who died in 1874. The sons and daughter were past the age of majority when the will was executed, but the grandchild was then under age. The sister, Elizabeth Rosenbohm, died in March, 1836, and the testator knew when he made his will that she died in that year. She left surviving her one daughter and two sons, named John and George Rosenbohm. The daughter died in 1845, at the age of 13, without issue. John married, and had one son, named John George. John died in San Francisco in December, 1869, and the testator knew of his death and attended his funeral. John George died in San Francisco in October, 1870. George Rosenbohm, the other son of Elizabeth, married in New Orleans, and died there in February, 1871. He left surviving him four children, the issue of his marriage, named respectively, Henry, Andrew, Amelia, and Johanna Rosenbohm, all of whom were minors when the testator's will was executed, but are now of age and living.

When the estate was ready for distribution the above-named grandchildren of the testator's sister, Elizabeth, claimed that they were entitled, under the will, to have $2,000 distributed to each one of them. The court thought otherwise, and distributed to each one of them only $509, or in the aggregate $2,000. They appealed from the decree, and now insist that the word "children" as used in that clause of the will reading, "to each of the children of my deceased sister," etc., should be construed to mean "grandchildren."

It has been held that grandchildren, and even great-grandchildren, may sometimes take under a will giving bequests to "children." Chancellor WALWORTH states the law upon this subject as follows: "As a general rule the testator must be presumed to have used words in their ordinary or primary sense, unless it appears from the context of the will that he probably used them in some other sense; or unless, by reference to extrinsic circumstances, the use of the words in their primary sense would render the provision of the will insensible or inoperative. Wigram, Wills, 20. The word 'children,' in common parlance, does not include grandchildren, or any others than the immediate descendants in the first degree of the person named as ancestor. But it may include them where it appears there were no persons in existence who would answer to the description of children in the ordinary sense of the word at the time of making the will; or where there could not be any such at the time or in the event contemplated by the testator; or where the testator has clearly shown, by the use of the other words, that he used the word 'children' as synonymous with 'descendants,' or 'issue,' or to designate or include illegitimate offspring, grandchildren, or step-children." Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige, 339.

Judge Redfield also states the rule as follows: "The word 'children,' as well as all other similar descriptive terms of classes or relatives, it will be borne in mind, must always be understood in wills in its primary and simple signification, where it can be done; in short, where there are any persons in existence at the date of the will, or before the devise or legacy takes effect, answering the meaning of the term. And where the term 'children' has received a larger and more extended construction, as synonymous with 'issue,' it has generally been based upon something in the will, unless it resulted, as already intimated, from the fact that there were no children in existence. And where, from the construction of the whole clause, it can be made to appear that the testator meant by 'children' to include children and the issue of such children as were deceased, that construction will be adopted. Hence the term 'children' has been held to include, in that way, all the descendants of the person named. And there are numerous American cases wherein it has been held that grandchildren and great-grandchildren will take under a bequest to children, whenever that is necessary in order to give effect to the words of the will, or that appears to have been the evident intention of the testator." Redf. Wills, pt. 11, p. 336; see, also, 1 Roper & W.'s Leg. 68.

What did the testator in this case mean by the words, "children of my deceased sister?" His sister died 42 years, and the last of her sons 7 years, before he made his will. There were at that time, then, no persons in existence who were children of his sister in the ordinary sense of that word, and could be none when the legacies would take effect. He also made the legacies payable to the children of his sister "when he, she, or they shall have arrived at the age of majority." But he knew that his sister died in 1836, and must have known, therefore, that her children, if living, could not be under the age of majority in 1878. It is suggested by counsel for respondent that the requirement that these legacies be paid when the legatees "shall have arrived at the age of majority" is obviously misplaced by inadvertence; that it should have come in at the end of the paragraph quoted. But we are unable to see that there was any obvious misplacement. Courts construe wills as they are written, and are not authorized to transpose their provisions, and thereby change their meaning and import.

The will also provides that if either of the sister's children "shall have died before the death of my said brother, Claus Schedel, leaving lawful issue," such issue should receive the parent's share. The words, "shall have died" import a death occurring after the date of the will. But the testator knew of the death of one of his sister's sons in 1869, for he attended his funeral, and must be presumed to have known, seven years after it occurred, of the death of the other one. Taking, then, the whole will, and looking at all of its provisions in the light of the well-settled rules of law, it seems to us that the word "children," as used by the testator in describing the issue of his deceased sister, should be construed to mean "grandchildren."

It follows that the decree of distribution should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT: For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the decree of distribution is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed therein.

ENGLISH v. KORN and others. (No. 9,861.)*(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence is so conflicting that the appellate court cannot deny the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the court below, the judgment will be affirmed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Solano county; JOHN M. GREGORY, Judge.

J. F. Wendell, for appellant. J. McKenna and Geo. A. Lamont, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of ejectment for a narrow strip of land which the plaintiff claimed as against eight different defendants, who he alleged each held possession of a separate portion of it. It seems that the main question at issue with reference to the legal title involved in the action was as to where the division line between the parties actually existed upon the ground. And this depended upon the evidence introduced upon the trial. There was a very sharp and decided conflict of testimony as to that matter, and therefore it is not to be said the findings of the court in reference thereto are not supported by the evidence. And so appears to be the case with reference to the fact stated in the findings as to the defense of the statute of limitations. We have examined the very voluminous transcript filed here with care, and fail to find any prejudicial error committed by the court on the trial of the cause.

The judgment and order refusing a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BYRNE v. CRAFTS. (No. 11,793.)*(Supreme Court of California. October 31, 1887.)IRRIGATION—WASTE WATER—RES ADJUDICATA.

In a former proceeding plaintiff and others had been adjudicated to be the owners of the waste water of defendant's ranch, which was defined to be "that portion of said waters which is not necessary to irrigate the * * * ranch and for household purposes thereon." In an action by plaintiff to restrain defendants from interfering with his use of the water in question, held, under the former decision, the defendants were entitled to use the water only on their ranch, and only so much as was necessary for the immediate purposes clearly defined in the adjudication, and testimony tending to show how much water was required by defendants for those purposes, and how much had been diverted to other uses, should have been admitted.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES H. GIBSON, Judge.

Byron Waters and H. M. Willis, (W. G. Webb, of counsel,) for appellant. Curtis & Otis, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. In Cave v. Crafts, (affirmed 53 Cal. 135,) it was adjudicated "that that portion of the said waters which is not necessary to irrigate the Carpenter ranch, and which is known as the waste water of the Carpenter ranch, and for household purposes thereon, had, for more than five years prior to the commencement of this suit, been used and appropriated by defendant Leffingwell and Byrne, and their grantors, adversely to and against the owners of the lands of Cottonwood Row, and so used by them to irrigate, and for agricultural purposes, and for domestic uses; that the irrigation, cultivation, and profitable ownership of said orchards, farms, and vineyards of these plaintiffs solely and entirely depend upon these plaintiffs having and enjoying the full and entire use of the flow of said water according to their ownership, flowing without interference, hinderance or diminution thereof from any person; that plaintiffs are the owners of all the waters of Mill creek, and are entitled to have the same flowing in said zanja, to and upon their respective lands, and to use the same for the purpose of irrigating their respective parcels of land; that defendants are the owners of the waste water of the Carpenter ranch or place, and to use the same upon other places to irrigate the same."

The judgment roll in that cause was introduced in evidence in the court below on the trial of this action, and the construction placed upon the findings which we have quoted by the court is shown in its twenty-fourth finding of fact, which is as follows: "(24) That neither one-third nor any fixed portion of the water of said Mill creek constitutes the waste water of the said Carpenter ranch, but said waste water consists entirely of such water, if any, as may be allowed by the owners of said Carpenter ranch to flow past their said land when entitled to use the same, and which said owners may not care to use for any purpose thereupon."

The rulings of the court upon the testimony offered also show that the contention of counsel for defendants was sustained. That contention is thus stated by them: "The decree practically allowed to them a certain amount of water in absolute ownership to-wit, the amount that was necessary at the time of the decree for the irrigation of the Carpenter ranch. It decreed them the amount of water absolutely, and irrespective of any point of user of the same. If they had chosen to use no portion of it upon the Carpenter ranch, and to use it upon outside lands, not included within the boundaries of the Carpenter ranch, so long as they did not exceed the amount of water awarded them, we submit that plaintiff can make no complaint."

The court excluded testimony tending to show that the defendants had used water upon land other than the Carpenter ranch. We do not think that the waste water referred to in the findings quoted above "consists entirely of such water, if any, as may be allowed by the owners of said Carpenter ranch to flow past their land when entitled to use the same, and which said owners may not care to use for any purpose thereupon."

The decision of the court in the former case defines waste water to be "that portion of said waters which is not necessary to irrigate the Carpenter ranch, and for household purposes thereon;" and the judgment awarded to them in that case the use of the water "for the purpose of irrigating their respective parcels of land at the times respectively distributed to them, as aforesaid, * * * and so much of said water as may be necessary for household purposes and watering stock on their respective places." It is nowhere said in the decision or in the judgment in that case that the waste water was such as might be allowed by the plaintiffs to flow past their land, and which the owners might not care to use for any purpose thereupon. If the construction placed upon the decision of the court in the former case by the court below be correct, then the defendants here could lock up the water in lakes and ditches, and use the same for boating and fishing or any other purpose. It is clear that, under the adjudication made in Cave v. Crafts, the defendants are entitled to use the water only upon the Carpenter ranch. The quantity of water reasonable and necessary for the purposes of that ranch were matters of legitimate inquiry in the court below on the trial of this cause, and testimony tending to show how much water was required for, and how much was diverted from the Carpenter ranch, should have been admitted.

One of the objects of this suit was to enjoin the defendants from interfering with plaintiff's water rights. It is immaterial, so far as this branch of the case is concerned, that the plaintiff asked for a decree entitling him to the use of one-third of all the water. As stated by the court in its finding, neither one-third, nor any fixed portion of the water constitutes the waste water of the Carpenter ranch. But the defendants claim to own all the water, including the waste water of the Carpenter ranch, and it was admitted by the defendants that they had taken in several acres of land not included in the Carpenter ranch, and irrigated the same with the waters of Mill creek; and they denied that, "by the irrigation of said lands, any water belonging to the plaintiff had been absorbed, or used by said defendants, or either of them," and denied "that, by the taking in of new, or any lands by defendants, or any of them, not heretofore irrigated, * * * water belonging to plaintiff had been absorbed or used by defendants or any of them. The building of a reservoir was admitted, and, if the testimony offered by the plaintiff had been allowed by the court, it might have shown that the defendants had used the water wastefully upon the Carpenter ranch, or diverted large quantities to and upon other lands. If such a showing had been made by the plaintiff, it seems that he would have been entitled to an injunction, though other portions of his prayer were denied.

The twenty-eighth finding of the court upon the question of adverse user and claim of right by defendants is somewhat ambiguous; but, as we understand the respondent, no claim is made other than that for domestic and household purposes during the months of July and August of each year on the days when the Carpenter ranch is entitled to water. There was evidence to support the finding of the court to this extent, at least.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

WEEKS v. GARIBALDI SOUTH GOLD MIN. Co. and others. (No. 11,784.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 25, 1887.)

1. JUDGMENT—BY DEFAULT—VALIDITY—AFFIDAVIT OF PUBLICATION—JUDGMENT ROLL.

Where service was made by publication under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 415, and on default judgment rendered, on appeal from the judgment, held, that no affidavit of publication, as required by subdivision 3 of that section, being in the judgment roll, the court had no jurisdiction, and the judgment was invalid.

2. CORPORATIONS—FILING ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—PLEADING.

Civil Code Cal. § 299, which prohibits corporations from maintaining or defending any action relating to its property, or the rents, issues, or profits thereof, unless it shall have previously filed a certified copy of its articles of incorporation in the county where such property is situated, does not apply to an action against a corporation for work and labor done at its request; and hence in such an action it is error to render judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings simply for the reason that the answer fails to allege that the defendant has filed a copy of its articles of incorporation under the above section.

3. APPEAL—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS NOT NECESSARY.

In an appeal, where the judgment recites that it was entered on the pleadings, a bill of exceptions is not necessary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, Calaveras county; C. V. GOTTSCHALK, Judge. Reddick & Bolinsky, for appellants. F. W. Street, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to recover a certain sum of money alleged to be due for work and labor done and performed at the defendant's request, in and about certain mining property. The Garibaldi Mining Company is a foreign corporation, having no managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary, resident in the state of California. An effort was made to serve the defendants Spruance and Rodgers, by publication of summons under section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears, however, that no affidavit of the printer, his foreman or principal clerk, that such publication took place, as required by subdivision 3, § 415, Code Civil Proc., was made. Hence the proof is lacking of the service of summons, as required by law, and the record does not affirmatively show that the court had jurisdiction to render the judgment against those two persons. It has been held by this court that, upon a direct attack, as by appeal, upon the validity of a judgment, it is necessary that the record should show that the court had jurisdiction of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, and that in determining such a question a recital in the judgment cannot be regarded; that upon such a direct attack the recitals in the judgment will not be accepted as a substitute for the proof of service of a summons. McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 577.

The record on the appeal here consists of the notice of appeal and the judgment roll. Section 950, Code Civil Proc. The complaint was not answered by Spruance or Rodgers; hence, so far as concerned them, that roll, if properly made up, should consist of the complaint, the summons, with the affidavit or proof of its service, the memorandum of default, and a copy of the judgment. Sub. 1, § 670, Code Civil Proc. As we have seen, the record here shows an entire absence of any proof of publication of summons. The amended certificate of the clerk of the court filed here, shows that the transcript filed in this court "contains a full, true, and correct copy of the judgment roll in said action," and "full, true, and correct copies of all the papers contained in the judgment roll in said action on file in my office." It is not, therefore, affirmatively shown by the record that the court below had jurisdiction of the persons of the two defendants heretofore named, and on that account, as to them, it must be held on this appeal, which is a direct attack on the judgment, that the latter is invalid. The case of Mahoney v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 51, cited to us as conclusive against the views we have just expressed, is not in point. There the attack made upon the judgment was collateral; here it is direct.

The corporation defendant filed an answer traversing all the material allegations of the complaint. The plaintiff moved the court to render judgment against the defendant upon the pleadings, for the reason, as alleged, that the answer did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the action. It was claimed that such a proceeding should be had by the court, because, as was alleged, the corporation did not aver in the answer that a copy of its articles of incorporation had been duly filed in the office of the county clerk as required by section 299, Civil Code. The court rendered the judgment as moved for. The pleadings show that all the material allegations of the complaint were denied by the answer. It was not necessary for the defendant to have pleaded in the answer that its articles of incorporation had been filed with the county clerk, under section 299, supra. The action was instituted to recover money for work and labor done at the instance and request of the defendant. The section of the Civil Code, supra, upon which the respondent bases this contention, does prohibit corporations from making defense to certain kinds of actions, unless they have previously filed their articles of incorporation in the office of the clerk of the county where such corporation has its property. But that prohibition only extends to such actions or proceedings as may be brought "in relation to such property, its rents, issues, or profits." It is clear that the action under consideration is not one which is included in the provisions of that section. There is nothing contained in its provisions which necessitates that a corporation defending such an action as this shall either aver in its answer, or prove as a fact on the trial, that its articles of incorporation had been filed in the county clerk's office.

The respondent makes the point that a judgment upon the pleadings cannot be reviewed without a bill of exceptions, and urges that the minutes of the court printed in the transcript cannot be considered as a part of the record. It is undoubtedly true that the minutes of the court are not a part of the record on appeal, unless incorporated therein in some mode authorized by statute. And if the record did not show that the judgment had been rendered on the pleadings without a trial, the court would have to presume in support of the judgment that a trial had taken place. The absence of findings would not overcome this presumption, because it would be presumed that finding had been waived. Mulcahy v. Glazier, 51 Cal. 626; Smith v. Lawrence, 53 Cal. 34; Carr v. Cronan, 54 Cal. 600; Reynolds v. Brumagim, Id. 254. In such a case a bill of exceptions would be necessary to enable the court to see that the judgment had in fact been given upon the pleadings. But in this case it appears from the judgment itself that it was rendered upon the pleadings. It states that "the attorney for plaintiff moved the court for judgment on the pleadings in said action, as against the said defendant, the Garibaldi South Gold Mining Company, on the ground that the answer filed herein by said defendant did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to said action. After argument of said motion by the respective counsel for plaintiff and said defendant, and the court having fully considered the same, said motion for judgment upon the pleadings was granted."

In view of this statement in the judgment, what need is there for anything further? A bill of exceptions is only for the purpose of making something appear of record which without it would not so appear. In order to say that one is necessary in this case we should have to say that the statement above quoted had no proper place in a judgment, and must be entirely disregarded. But while there are undoubtedly some matters which it is improper to place in a judgment, yet we think that such matters as the one under consideration are not among the number, and that when placed there they must be regarded. See Hayne, New Trial, § 231, p. 694. The court having given a judgment for the plaintiff which on its face shows that it was rendered upon the pleadings in an action, where the judgment roll shows that all the material allegations of the complaint were denied in the answer, and there existing no condition precedent placed by law upon the defendant's right to file its answer and defend the action, it follows that such judgment cannot stand.

The judgment should be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views therein expressed.

FREDERICKS v. JUDAH and another. (No. 9,100.)*(Supreme Court of California. October 27, 1887.)1. QUIETING TITLE—CHARACTER OF POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff, in an action to quiet title, testified that he took possession in 1867, "to take care of the property under the same old agreement." Held, that prior leases of the property to plaintiff were admissible to show the character of plaintiff's possession; it being for the jury to determine whether plaintiff re-entered under the terms of the leases, or under a parol agreement, as testified by him.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The title of defendants' ancestor had been quieted by decree of court as against the city. The court instructed the jury that a later deed made by M. and others in behalf of the city vested the title in the ancestor. Held, that the instruction was harmless, even if the deed was void, as plaintiff's claim to adverse possession did not arise until after the making of the deed.

3. EVIDENCE—IN FORMER TRIAL—WITNESS SINCE DECEASED—PARTIES.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1870, subd. 8, providing that evidence "of the testimony of a deceased witness, * * * given in a former action between the same parties, relating to the same matter," is admissible, testimony of a deceased witness given in an action brought by the executrix of the estate of which defendants are heirs, against the plaintiff as lessee of the property in question, is admissible in a subsequent action between the plaintiff and the heirs on questions of tenancy and adverse possession; the testimony being exclusively as to whether plaintiff held the property as tenant or as his own.

4. NEW TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL—CORRECTION BY TRIAL COURT—PRESUMPTION.

Affidavits on motion for new trial, claiming that defendants' attorney, in his argument to the jury, referred to facts of which there was no evidence, and to testimony ruled out by the court, do not sufficiently show misconduct to warrant a new trial. It must appear that the court, on objection to the statements, failed to correct them; the presumption being that it did so if they were improper.

5. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—AFFIDAVITS OF JUROR TO SHOW GROUNDS OF VERDICT.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 657, subd. 2, the verdict can be attacked by affidavits of the jury, only to show that it was obtained by resort to the determination of chance. Affidavits of a juror showing the grounds upon which the verdict was rendered are inadmissible for that purpose.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco;

J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Bill to quiet title.

The plaintiff alleged title in fee to the property in question by purchase from defendants' ancestor. The defendants alleged that they were the heirs of one John Ferguson, deceased, who at his death was seized in fee of the premises, and that the plaintiff was at that time in possession as his lessee; that in an action in the county court of San Francisco the defendants recovered judgment against the plaintiff, decreeing that he held the lot as defendants' lessee. They further claimed under tax titles. The jury found in their favor and the court entered judgment that they have possession of the property. The plaintiff appealed.

P. B. Ladd, for appellant. Wm. H. Shays, (Wilson & Otis, of counsel,) for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The transcript contains copies of affidavits filed by the plaintiff in the court below in support of his motion for a new trial, showing, in substance, that the defendants' attorney persisted in arguing to the jury that the defendants had paid all of the taxes on the premises in controversy from 1861 to the time of the trial; that plaintiff had never paid any taxes thereon; that, as a fact, no evidence whatever was before the jury on the question of taxes, and that he also persisted in arguing to the jury that the county court had decided that the plaintiff was the tenant of defendants, notwithstanding the fact that the court had ruled out all evidence relating thereto, and there was no evidence before the jury on that subject. There is here no sufficient showing of irregularity or misconduct to warrant a new trial. We are not informed whether the court, on the objection of plaintiff, corrected the statement of defendants' attorney. If the objection of plaintiff was well taken, we must presume that the court instructed the jury to disregard the assertions made by the defendants' attorney.

The affidavits of the jurors, in which it is stated that "the principal grounds of the verdict were that the plaintiff proved no title by the deed; that defendants had three tax deeds; that plaintiff never paid any taxes, and that defendants paid all the taxes; and the county court had decided that plaintiff was a tenant of defendants,"—were inadmissible and cannot now be considered. A juror cannot thus impeach his own verdict. There is but one ground upon which a verdict can be assailed in this way. It is expressed in the Code: "Whenever any one or more of the jurors have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict, or to a finding on any question submitted to them by the court by a resort to the determination of chance, such misconduct may be proved by the affidavit of any one of the jurors." Section 657, subd. 2, Code Civil Proc.; Polhemus v. Heiman, 50 Cal. 438; Turner v. Tuolumne W. Co., 25 Cal. 397.

The leases were properly admitted in evidence. They were admissible to show the character of plaintiff's possession,—whether for himself, or as tenant of Ferguson. The plaintiff testified that he took possession in 1867, "to take care of the tract under the same old agreement." The leases contained this provision: "And to pay the rent as above stated during the term; also, the rent as above stated for such further term as the lessee may hold the same." It was for the jury to determine whether plaintiff re-entered upon the premises under the terms of the lease, or under the parol agreement testified to by plaintiff.

It was not error to admit in evidence the testimony of Dean, deceased, which had been taken down by the short-hand reporter, on a trial in the county court. Evidence may be given "of the testimony of a witness deceased, or out of the jurisdiction, or unable to testify, given in a former action between the same parties relating to the same matter." Section 1870, subd. 8, Code Civil Proc. Although in that action Mrs. Judah, as executrix, was plaintiff, it was an action between the same parties, within the meaning of this provision, for the executrix represented the heir therein, and the judgment in such cases is binding upon the heirs, whether they be made parties or not. McLeran v. Benton, 14 Pac. Rep. 879, and cases cited therein. It was an action "brought against the plaintiff, as lessee, under and by the terms of the lease." The testimony of the witness Dean was directed exclusively to the question whether the plaintiff held possession of the lot in controversy under the terms of the lease, and as tenant of Ferguson, or for himself, claiming the property as his own. The judgment in unlawful detainer is conclusive on the questions of tenancy and refusal to surrender, (Willson v. Cleveland, 30 Cal. 201;) and the judgment in an action for forcible entry is admissible in a subsequent action of ejectment to show adverse possession. Unger v. Roper, 53 Cal. 39. Conceding, therefore, that the test as to the admissibility of such evidence is as stated by appellant, would a judgment in the first case be evidence in the second, and was the witness open to cross-examination? The testimony of Dean was admissible upon the questions of tenancy and adverse possession.

The court instructed the jury in effect that by virtue of a deed made by Frank McCoppin and others, on behalf of the city and county of San Francisco, in pursuance of the provisions of certain ordinances, acts of congress, and the legislature of California, "all the estate and interest, present and future, of the said city and county of San Francisco, in and to such lands," had been granted unto the said Ferguson, and to his heirs and assigns forever. We are unable to see any prejudicial error in the giving of this instruction. There can be no doubt that Ferguson was the beneficiary under the ordinance and the acts of congress. He was in the bona fide, actual possession thereof, by himself and his tenants, on the date of the passage of the act of congress, approved March 8, 1866.

Prior to the execution and delivery of the McCoppin deed, by a decree rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the case of John Ferguson v. The City and County of San Francisco, in the twelfth district court, July 8, 1865, the title of plaintiff as against the said city to the premises in controversy had been quieted. This appears from a statement in the transcript, and from evidence admitted on behalf of the defendants without objection. The plaintiff does not claim to have been in possession for himself in 1866, when the ordinance title passed. On the contrary, he recognizes Ferguson as the possessor and owner of the property down to the fall of 1867, when he, the plaintiff, claims to have gone into possession, under a verbal contract to purchase the same from Ferguson. He testified that in July or June, 1867, Miller was in possession, and refused to let him enter until Ferguson returned. He testified further: "Miller delivered up the premises to me because I was to re-enter under an agreement to take care of the tract under the same old agreement." At the request of the plaintiff, the jury was instructed: "If you find that the plaintiff went into possession of the lot in question under a lease or leases in 1861 or 1864, and that he thereafter surrendered and gave up the possession of the lot, then the relation of landlord and tenant ceased. * * * Any subsequent taking possession by plaintiff would not necessarily restore the relation of landlord and tenant. * * * If you find that he, after such surrender, took possession of the lot under an agreement with the owner that he (the plaintiff) was to have the lot as his own property in consideration for certain services, and he performed such services, he thereby became the absolute owner of the lot." In his evidence and in his instructions, he recognized Ferguson as the owner of the lot in 1867, and the evidence of the defendants shows beyond all controversy that the title of the city vested in Ferguson and his heirs. If it be conceded, therefore, that the McCoppin deed was void, the instruction of the court referred to was harmless.

Other instructions, excepted to by the plaintiff, correctly stated the law under the evidence. The order is affirmed.

BARKLY v. COPELAND. (No. 11,878.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER—MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES KNOWN TO DEFENDANT AFTER PUBLICATION.

Defendant, in his answer in a suit for slander, alleged circumstances in mitigation, which came to his knowledge after the words complained of were spoken. The court instructed the jury that only circumstances within the knowledge of defendant before the words were spoken could be shown in mitigation of damages. Held, that the refusal of the court to strike out that portion of the answer worked no injury to plaintiff, in view of the charge of the court.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In an action for slander for charging plaintiff with connection with one S. in the theft of certain cattle, it is admissible for defendant to introduce the testimony of S. as to agreements with plaintiff in regard to the theft of other cattle.

3. SAME—CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN PLAINTIFF'S AGENT AND THIRD PARTY.

Testimony as to conversations between plaintiff's driver and S., when it appeared that plaintiff had told S. he would report to him through the driver, held admissible.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S WEALTH.

Testimony as to the wealth of defendant is admissible in an action for slander.

5. EVIDENCE—OFFERING DECLARATIONS OF WITNESS TO SUPPORT TESTIMONY BEFORE IMPEACHMENT.

It is no ground for reversal that prior declarations of the witness were given in evidence to support his testimony before it was impeached, when the record shows that evidence was subsequently introduced, which, if offered before the declarations were testified to, would have made them competent.

6. SAME—IMPEACHMENT—FOUNDATION.

Evidence as to a conversation with a witness, whose attention had not been called to it, held properly excluded.

7. TRIAL—ORDER OF—DISCRETION OF COURT—PERMITTING DEFENDANT TO TESTIFY AFTER PLAINTIFF HAS CLOSED.

After plaintiff had closed his case in rebuttal, defendant, who had been present during the entire trial, was permitted to testify fully as to his defense. Held, that this was in the discretion of the court, and can only be reviewed when the discretion is abused.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHAS. P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

Plaintiff sued defendant for slander, alleging that defendant had stated that he knew the cattle he bought of S. were stolen, when he bought them, and that he was in with S. Defendant, in his answer, pleaded the truth of the words spoken, and also set up matter in mitigation of damages. The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of one dollar, and plaintiff appealed.

Jackson Hatch and Clay W. Taylor, for appellant. Chipman & Garter, John F. Ellison, and L. V. Hitchcock, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action to recover damages for slanderous words spoken by defendant of plaintiff. The plaintiff recovered a verdict of one dollar damages. He then moved for a new trial, which was denied, and from the judgment and the above order plaintiff appealed.

In regard to the motion of plaintiff to strike out certain portions of defendant's answer, to which our attention is first called, we will remark that only such mitigating circumstances as were within the knowledge of the defendant when he spoke the words complained of can be alleged in the answer. See Willover v. Hill, 72 N. Y. 36; Hatfield v. Lasher, 81 N. Y. 249. But, as the jury were instructed as to such circumstances in accordance with the above, the error of the court below in refusing to strike out that portion of the answer which set forth the circumstances of mitigation, not known to the defendant when he uttered the words counted on, worked no injury to the plaintiff.

The defendant offered in evidence the deposition of Russell Speegle, who had been convicted of stealing the cattle of Thomas Polk, in relation to which theft the disparaging words uttered by the defendant had been spoken. Speegle testified to statements made by him to several persons in regard to the theft of the cattle. The statements or declarations were made to Laura Moore, David Burke, Pope, Costello, Mitchell, and I. Speegle, and were testified to by all of the last-named except Laura Moore, who does not appear to have been called. They tend to corroborate his testimony in regard to the connection of the plaintiff with the stealing of the cattle, by showing that, about or not long after his (Speegle's) arrest for the larceny of the cattle, he made statements in regard to it similar to those which he made in his testimony. The statement to Laura Moore was made shortly before the cattle were taken to the plaintiff. The statements made to the other witnesses were made after his arrest. The statements were allowed to go to the jury against the objection and exception of plaintiff, and before any evidence impeaching the witness Speegle had been introduced.

It has been held in this state that, where an attempt has been made to impeach a witness by proving former contradictory statements, he cannot be supported by evidence that he has made to other persons declarations consistent with his testimony. This ruling was made in People v. Doyell, 48 Cal.

90, 91. But in the same case it was said: "Such declarations may, however, be admissible in contradiction of evidence tending to show that the account is a fabrication of late date, when it may be shown that the same account was given before its ultimate effect and operation, (arising from a change of circumstances,) could have been foreseen; and also, perhaps, in other peculiar cases." 48 Cal. 91. It has been frequently held that, when the witness is charged with testifying under the influence of some motive prompting him to make a false statement, it may be shown that he made similar statements at a time when the imputed motive did not exist. See Gates v. People, 14 Ill. 438; Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 543; State v. Dennin, 32 Vt. 158; State v. Vincent, 24 Iowa, 570; Whart. Ev. § 570.

When the evidence objected to was admitted, no evidence impeaching Speegle had been put in. The declarations of Speegle were offered by defendant in putting in his defense, and the impeaching evidence was offered by plaintiff in rebuttal. The impeaching evidence consisted of the depositions of three convicts in the state prison, and was to the effect that soon after certain persons representing the defendant had visited the state prison, and had an interview with Speegle. Each of them had had a conversation with Speegle in which he had said that Barkly had sued Copeland for damages, for saying that he was in with him in stealing cattle; that these representatives of the defendant had told him that if he would swear that Barkly was in with him in stealing the cattle they would get him pardoned right away; that Speegle also stated that Barkly was not in with him, but that if there was any way to get out of prison he was going to do it. This testimony introduced by plaintiff tended to show that Speegle was testifying at the trial under the influence of a promise to procure his pardon in case he would so testify as to inculpate the plaintiff; that his testimony had been given under the influence of a motive prompting him to make a false statement. This state of things would undoubtedly bring the case within the rule allowing the prior declarations of like character to be given in evidence to support his testimony, if the impeaching evidence had been offered before the prior statement had been testified to. Is it error for which a judgment of reversal should be here given, because impeaching evidence was put in before the statements objected to were introduced? There can be no doubt, we think, that, if the court had ruled out the prior declarations of Speegle when offered, it would have ruled correctly. But, having admitted the declarations before the introduction by plaintiff of the evidence to impeach, we do not think we should pronounce a judgment of reversal, when we find in the record, though subsequently introduced, evidence which would have authorized the admission of the prior declarations or statements, if offered before they were testified to. The evidence of the witness Snelling, detailing a conversation had by him with Russell Speegle, which came in after the impeaching evidence had been put into the case, was of the character of those just above considered, and was admissible on the same grounds.

The testimony of Russell Speegle concerning an effort of plaintiff made in June, 1884, to get the witness to steal cattle belonging to Dicus, and drive them to him, was admissible. Speegle details this as a part of the general understanding between him and plaintiff, by which the former was to steal cattle, drive them to plaintiff to be butchered, and the proceeds to be shared between them. We think this evidence was admissible to show the relations and transactions between the witness and the plaintiff as bearing on the question of the stealing of Polk's cattle, and to sustain defendant's plea of justification.

There was no error in admitting the declarations of N. Barkly, plaintiff's driver, to R. Speegle. There was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff had told Speegle, (who testified to these declarations,) that he could trust this driver, and that plaintiff would report through him to Speegle. The tendency of the above was to show that this driver was to be the medium of communication between Speegle and the plaintiff. The declarations objected to appear to have been made in a report to Speegle of the condition of the cattle stolen by him and turned over to the plaintiff. The above was evidence of such a relation between Barkly and the driver as rendered his declarations admissible.

Plaintiff offered to prove by defendant that in June, 1885, and at the time of the utterance of the language admitted by him in his answer, he was worth, at least in property, $100,000. The offer was disallowed, and there was exception by plaintiff. In actions of slander and libel such evidence has been held admissible in many of the states. We cite the following cases: Brown v. Barnes, 39 Mich. 211; Hayner v. Cowden, 27 Ohio St. 292; Bennett v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 24; Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 153; Hosley v. Brooks, 20 Ill. 115; Humphries v. Parker, 52 Me. 502; Karney v. Paisley, 13 Iowa, 89; Adcock v. Marsh, 8 Ired. 363; Lewis v. Chapman, 19 Barb. 252. See, also, 1 Suth. Dam. 743, 745. Such evidence is admitted on the ground that defendant's wealth is an element in his social rank and influence, and therefore tends to show the extent of the injury suffered from the defendant's words, (Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 163; Bennett v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 24-27; Lewis v. Chapman, 19 Barb. 252;) and, where punitive or exemplary damages are allowed, the evidence is admitted by which to graduate the punishment. 6 Conn., supra. In this case, if the jury had rejected the evidence of the mitigating circumstances, it might have found punitive or exemplary damages. We are of opinion the court erred in rejecting the offer of plaintiff to introduce the testimony as to defendant's wealth.

The court committed no error in excluding the testimony of Clark, concerning a conversation had with Speegle the night after the arrest of the latter, as the proper foundation had not been laid for it, by calling Speegle's attention to it.

When the plaintiff had closed his case in rebuttal, the court, against the objection and exception of plaintiff, allowed the defendant, who had been present during the entire trial, to be called, and to testify fully as regards his defense. While this was a most unusual course, and one not to be commended, still we consider it, under the decisions of this court, as within the discretion of the court, and one which, unless such discretion is abused, cannot be reviewed here. As the plaintiff was not inhibited from offering evidence in reply to that of defendant, and, in fact, did offer some evidence in reply, we cannot say that there was here such an abuse of discretion as would justify this court in ordering a reversal.

A large number of requests for directions to the jury were asked by both parties; and while some of those asked by plaintiff, and refused, might well have been given, yet we are of opinion that the instructions as given covered substantially the same points, and fairly presented to the jury the law bearing on the case.

For the error above pointed out the judgment and order must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

APPEAL—NOTICE OF—MUST BE SIGNED BY ATTORNEY OF RECORD—ATTORNEY NOT QUALIFIED TO PRACTICE IN APPELLATE COURT.

In California an appeal from a superior court must be initiated in that court by a notice signed by the appellant's attorney of record in that court; and the fact that such attorney is not qualified to practice in the appellate court will not affect the validity of the appeal.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. LUNING. (No. 11,718.)

1. TAXATION—ACTION BY CITY AND COUNTY TO RECOVER—LIMITATION OF.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 338, provides that an action on a liability created by statute must be begun within three years. Section 339 provides that an action upon a liability not founded upon an instrument in writing must be begun within two years. Section 345 provides that these limitations shall apply to actions by the state, or for its benefit. Held, that an action by the city and county of San Francisco to recover city, county, and state taxes, more than seven years after right of action accrued, is barred by these sections.

2. SAME—LIMITATION OF ACTION FOR PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

Pol. Code Cal. § 3716, provides that every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by the same the effect of an execution, and that the judgment is not satisfied nor lien removed until the tax is paid. Section 3717 provides that a tax upon the personal property shall be a lien on the real property of the owner. Held, that an action to recover a personal judgment on the original tax was subject to the statute of limitations, it not being an action on a judgment or to enforce a lien.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

John P. Bell and Louis H. Sharp, for appellant. Sidney V. Smith & Son, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. It is averred in the complaint that "defendant is indebted to plaintiff" in a certain sum of money for city and county taxes, with certain penalties for non-payment, and interest at a certain rate per month, from the fifth day of August, 1874; and, further, that "defendant is also indebted" in a certain other sum of money for state taxes, with like penalties and interest, from the sixth day of January, 1876. And judgment is prayed for said several sums, with interest and costs. Defendant filed a demurrer by which, in addition to the general ground of demurrer, he also pleads that the alleged cause of action is barred by the provisions of sections 338, 339, and 345 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was rendered for defendant. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, from 335 to 348, inclusive, being chapter 3, tit. 2, p. 2, prescribe the period within which "actions other than for the recovery of real property" may be commenced. Section 338 provides that "an action upon a liability created by statute" must be commenced within three years. Section 339 provides that "an action upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon an instrument in writing," must be commenced within two years. Section 343 is as follows: "343. An action not hereinbefore provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued." And section 345 provides that "the limitations prescribed in this chapter apply to actions brought in the name of the state, or for the benefit of the state, in the same manner as to actions by private parties." The complaint in this case was filed April 25, 1883, more than seven years after the cause of action accrued. The action is therefore certainly barred by one of the sections above quoted, unless there be some principle of law, or some other statutory provision, by which it is taken out of the operation of said section.

1. The rule that statutes of limitation do not apply to the state, according to the maxim nullum tempus occurrit regi, has no force here in face of section 345, above quoted.

2. Appellant also relies on section 3716 of the Political Code, which provides as follows: "3716. Every tax has the effect of a judgment against the person, and every lien created by this title has the force and effect of an execution duly levied against all property of the delinquent; the judgment is not satisfied, nor the lien removed, until the taxes are paid on the property sold for the payment thereof." Also upon section 3717, which provides that "every tax upon personal property is a lien upon the real property of the owner thereof, from and after 12 o'clock M. of the first Monday in March of each year." But this is not an action upon a judgment, or to enforce a lien. It is possible that there is a subsisting judgment or lien for the taxes sued for which the tax collector may enforce by sale in the usual way. It is possible an action might lie upon the tax as a judgment or to enforce the lien. It is possible, also, that there is a lien without any provision for its enforcement, in which case it is simply a right without a remedy. But this is merely an action to recover a personal judgment upon the original tax itself, which, by the way, is averred to be an indebtedness. The action was brought under the act of April 23, 1880, (St. 1880, p. 136;) but, although taxes are usually collected in this state in a summary manner, there are several other statutory provisions about actions for taxes, and in none of them is it indicated that the action is deemed to be an action upon a judgment, although, in one particular instance only, it is provided that the board of equalization may "direct the foreclosure of the lien of such tax by action, which proceeding is hereby authorized to be had." Pol. Code, § 3812. This last provision shows that there is a clear distinction intended between an action for the foreclosure of a lien and an ordinary suit, such as is provided for in sections 3808, 3899, and 3900 of the Political Code, and in the act of 1880, under which this suit was brought. And it will be observed that in the case provided for in section 3900 a general writ of attachment must issue as in an ordinary civil action. It would seem clear, therefore, that a suit merely to recover taxes against a defendant personally, is not an action upon a judgment, or an action to foreclose a lien. The point upon which this case turns was elaborately argued and considered in State v. Yellow Jacket S. M. Co., 14 Nev. 220. The provisions of the statute of limitations were the same there as here. With respect to taxes, the statute of Nevada made a tax a lien on the property indefinitely until it was paid, but did not designate it as a "judgment." The court after a thorough examination of the questions presented, held that the action to recover the taxes was barred by the statute of limitations, even though the lien might not be considered as removed. And the difference above indicated between the statute of that state and this, does not make the principle upon which that case was decided inapplicable to the case at bar. Judgment affirmed.

CAREY v. CAREY. (No. 11,677.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

DIVORCE—WILLFUL DESERTION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for divorce for willful desertion, the evidence showed that the plaintiff, after the desertion, had requested the defendant, by letter, to return, and that, although they had met several times on the street, defendant had not spoken to plaintiff, nor in any way signified a willingness to live with him until more than a year after such request, when defendant, by letter, stated that she was ready to live in a fit and proper place with plaintiff, but refused to condone any offense which he might have committed against her or his marriage obligations. Held, that the court was justified in finding willful desertion, and in granting a decree for plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

The plaintiff, Wilson Carey, brings this action to obtain a divorce from the defendant, Nancy G. Carey, on the grounds of willful desertion. The plaintiff testified that the defendant had not lived with him for nearly two years, although he had sent her a letter requesting her to return to his home, which was a good house, suitable for her to live in, and located on a ranch on the Sonora road; that he did not get any response to his letter until more than a year after it was sent to her; that, though he had seen her a number of times during the year prior to the commencement of the suit, she had never spoken to him; that defendant had not lived or cohabited with him at all during the two years last past. The letter introduced in evidence bears date July 9, 1883. Plaintiff and two other witnesses, who saw the letter before it was posted, testify that it was written and mailed on that day. On cross-examination, plaintiff testified to having received a letter from his wife, July 19, 1884, dated at Stockton, July 15, 1884, signifying a willingness to reside with the plaintiff in any fit and proper place that he might name, and saying that she would await his call and request to that end; but that she could not condone any offense which he may have committed against her or his marriage obligations. The letter also stated that defendant had no means to take her to plaintiff. Defendant testified that the letter written by plaintiff was received by her July 19, 1883, and that the letter sent by her dated July 15, was mailed July 19, 1884. She testified that she had never refused to live with plaintiff, but that she delayed answering his letter for a year in order to ascertain whether he was acting in good faith; that she had no means with which to go to her husband, but had raised $800 by mortgage of her property; that she could not go to plaintiff because she did not know where he lived; that she did not consider the homestead, where he had asked her to go, a fit and proper place for her; that she had never had any conversation with plaintiff, though she had met him on the street shortly after receiving his letter; that she would not go to live with him at the homestead. Upon the evidence, the jury found that defendant had refused to live with plaintiff for more than a year previous to bringing the suit, whereupon judgment was rendered for plaintiff.

Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellant. W. L. Dudley, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiff and defendant were married in June, 1879, and thereafter lived together as husband and wife until some time in December, 1882. They had no children, and, so far as appears, no common property. In January, 1883, the defendant commenced an action against her husband for a divorce. It does not appear upon what ground the divorce was asked, but the case was tried in May, 1883, and the divorce denied. In August, 1884, this action was commenced by the plaintiff to obtain a divorce from the defendant on the ground of willful desertion. The defendant, by her answer, admitted that she had not, since the nineteenth day of December, 1882, cohabited with the plaintiff, but alleged that her failure so to do had been by reason of the refusal and neglect of the plaintiff, and not by reason of any act or fault on her part. After trial the court below, among other things, found "that for more than one year prior to the commencement of this action defendant willfully neglected and refused to live with plaintiff, and at all of said time had the intent to desert him." And as a conclusion of law it was found "that the defendant, Nancy G. Carey, has willfully deserted her said husband, and is, and at the commencement of this action was, guilty of willful desertion, and by reason thereof that the plaintiff is entitled to have the bonds of matrimony between himself and defendant dissolved." Judgment was accordingly entered, dissolving the bonds of matrimony between the parties. The defendant moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and an order denying her motion. The only point made for the appellant is that the evidence did not justify the decision and the judgment.

It is unnecessary to state the facts shown by the record. It is enough to say that, after carefully reading all the testimony brought before us in the transcript, we are of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings of fact, and the conclusion of law drawn therefrom.

The judgment and order should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

CITY OF STOCKTON v. WESTERN FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. and others.
(No. 11,864.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

1. TAXATION—COLLECTION—PLEADING—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the form of complaint to be used in an action by a city to recover delinquent taxes.

2. SAME—COLLECTION—MUNICIPALITIES.

The complaint, in an action for delinquent taxes by a city organized under a special charter, was according to the form prescribed by a section of the charter. There was nothing to indicate that such section had been repealed or modified prior to the adoption of Const. Cal. 1879, or that the city as a corporation ever reorganized under the act of 1883, (Acts Cal. 1883, p. 235,) providing for the organization of cities under general laws. Held, that the complaint was not obnoxious to Const. Cal. 1879, art. 11, § 6, providing that "corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population of cities, towns," etc.

3. SAME—VALIDITY OF ASSESSMENTS—TIME OF MAKING.

Const. Cal. 1879, art. 13, § 8, provides that "the legislature shall by law require each tax-payer to make and deliver to the county assessor annually a statement under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such tax-payer, * * * at 12 o'clock meridian on the first Monday of March." Under this section it was claimed that the mortgage assessed by plaintiff, being executed on the thirteenth of March, was not assessable for the taxes of that year. Plaintiff's charter, however, provided that "the city council shall have authority to assess, levy, and collect annually taxes upon all the property within the city taxable for state purposes;" and by another section of the charter: "It shall be the duty of the assessor to prepare between the first day of January and the first Monday in April of each year a list of all the real and personal property within the city taxable for state and county purposes," etc. Held that, under these sections, the assessment was valid; and such sections being in force before the adoption of Const. Cal. 1879, were continued in force until repealed by some general law, by virtue of Const. Cal. art. 11, § 6; providing, inter alia, that "cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINNERTON, Judge.

D. P. Terry and J. C. Campbell, for appellant. Frank H. Smith, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action instituted by the city of Stockton to recover certain delinquent taxes which had been assessed upon a mortgage for $35,000, executed by the Masonic Hall Association of said city to the Western Fire & Marine Insurance Company, on the thirteenth day of March, 1884, upon certain real estate and improvements. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrers were overruled, and, the defendants failing to answer, judgment passed for the plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken. The technical objections urged as to the form of the complaint are, it seems to us, not well founded. It is competent for the legislature, in such special action as this, to prescribe the form of complaint to be used. Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 31; Sullivan v. Mier, 67 Cal. 265, 7 Pac. Rep. 691.

The form of the complaint filed in this action is that prescribed in section 21 of the charter of the city of Stockton, which was approved on the twenty-seventh of March, 1872. It was a general form to be used in all cases for the collection of city taxes authorized to be assessed and levied under that charter. There is nothing in the record, or in the acts of the legislature, to show that, prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1879, that section was modified or repealed. There is no general law passed since that time which so affects it. There is nothing before us which indicates that the city of Stockton, as a corporation, ever reorganized under the act of 1883. Acts 1883, p. 235.¹ It must be true, therefore, that, as a matter of law, the form of the complaint is not obnoxious to anything contained in section 6, art. 11, Const. 1879. Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 618.

But the further point is made that the complaint makes it patent that the tax was illegally assessed, because it was done after the first Monday in March of the year 1884. In support of this contention, section 8, art. 13, Const., is cited. It provides that "the legislature shall by law require each tax-payer in this state to make and deliver to the county assessor annually a statement under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such tax-payer, or in his possession, or under his control, at 12 o'clock meridian on the first Monday of March." It is true that the complaint shows the mortgage was not executed until the thirteenth of March, 1884, and therefore it could not have been assessed for taxation on the first Monday in March of that year. But it does not follow from this that the assessment was invalid.

The charter of 1872 provides, among other things, as follows:

"Sec. 15. The city council shall have full power and authority to assess, levy, and collect annually taxes upon all the property within the city taxable for state purposes, not exceeding 1 per cent. upon the assessed value thereof, which shall be paid into the general fund for current expenses."

"Sec. 17. It shall be the duty of the city assessor to prepare, between the first day of January and the first Monday in April of each year, and present to the city council, with his certificate of its correctness, a list of all the real and personal property within the city taxable for state and county purposes, with a true valuation thereof."

The assessment in controversy was made under the authority given by the sections of the charter of the city of Stockton, supra, which existed prior to the adoption of section 8, art. 13, Const. This court, in discussing the character of charters such as the one under consideration, said in Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 246-248: "All such charters must remain in force until superseded or changed in the mode prescribed by the constitution. In the absence of any positive provision to the contrary, this is necessarily implied;" and this particular rule thus laid down has not been overruled. In Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac. Rep. 618, the latest declaration upon the matter, this language occurs: "It is argued that, according to the views herein expressed, a city may have its charter changed without its consent. This is a proper deduction from the ruling herein, but this cannot be done by a special or local law applicable alone to a particular charter. The result can only be reached by a general law affecting all corporations or may be all of a class." We do not mean to imply that the legislature, even by a general law, can substitute an entirely new charter for an old one without the consent of the people of the locality. To that extent we understand the decision in Desmond v. Dunn to be the law.

It would seem, therefore, under section 6 of article 11 of the constitution, that the sections of the charter heretofore quoted are continued in force. And section 8 of article 13 of the constitution, having reference to prospective assessments for taxation, does not affect the sections of the charter, supra, because they were in force prior to its adoption, and are continued in force by section 6 of article 11 of the constitution until modified or repealed by some general law enacted with reference to "all corporations, or may be those of a class."

There is nothing in the complaint which makes it evident that the money assessed for taxation was not within the limits of the city of Stockton on the first Monday of March, 1884; and, there being no answer filed in the cause, there is nothing in the record which shows that any double taxation was in fact levied.

The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

ARNAZ v. GASSEN. (No. 11,846.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

1. CONVERSION—PURCHASING CATTLE WITHOUT EXAMINING EAR-MARKS.

In an action for the conversion of certain cattle, it appeared that plaintiff lost the number claimed to have been converted; that defendant bought and slaughtered cattle, but kept no book in which he entered the brands of cattle purchased; that he went to defendant's slaughter-house, and found about 60 ears of cattle bearing his mark, and some hides with his brand, and while thus engaged was ordered away by a man who said he had charge of the place; that after the cattle were missed defendant said he bought cattle, and paid for them, and asked no questions, etc., and when called as a witness did not deny the above facts, nor that he received and killed the cattle, but said he didn't know what marks were on the cattle he purchased about the time these were lost, did not examine the brands, nor look for ear-marks, and did not know anybody's ear-mark or brand in the county. He claimed, simply, that he paid value for the cattle. Held, that a judgment for plaintiff was sustained by the evidence.

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where it appears that the errors assigned could not have prejudiced the appellant, the decision of the lower court will not be disturbed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. BRUNSON, Judge.

Wells, Van Dyke & Lee and H. T. Gage, for appellant. Howard & Scott, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of certain cattle. The court found that defendant had wrongfully converted to his own use 25 head of cattle which were the property of plaintiff, and of the value of $450.

The appellant insists that the findings were not justified by the evidence; but we think they were. It was proved that in the month of September, 1884, 32 head of cattle, consisting of cows, heifers, and steers, were missed from plaintiff's herd; 25 of them being his, 4 his daughter's, and 3 belonging to other parties. The plaintiff had not sold any cattle for a year. Diligent search was made for the lost animals, but they were never found. The defendant was engaged in the business of buying and slaughtering cattle, but he kept no book in which he entered the marks or brands of the cattle slaughtered. Between the ninth and thirteenth of October the plaintiff went, with the man who had charge of his stock, to the defendant's slaughter-house, and there found, as he estimated the number, about 60 ears of animals which had his mark upon them, and also 3 or 4 hides which were marked with his brand. While he was examining the hides, a man came out who said he was in charge of the slaughter-house, and forbade any further examination. The cattle were supposed to have been stolen, and, shortly after they were missed, one of the witnesses, who was employed to inquire into the matter, and see if he could find out anything about them, asked the defendant if he had bought from certain parties any cattle belonging to the plaintiff, and his reply was: "I buy cattle, and pay for them, and I don't ask any questions." The witness further said to him: "You bought cattle from these two young boys?" and the reply was, "I bought cattle. I don't know who I bought them from. I paid for them." The defendant was called as a witness and testified in his own behalf. He did not deny that he had received the plaintiff's cattle, nor that the slaughter-house referred to was his, nor that the marked ears and hides were found there, as testified by plaintiff. On the contrary, he admitted that he bought some twenty odd head of mixed cattle; and in reference to them, on his cross-examination, said: "I don't know anything about what marks these cattle had on them, or brands either. I did not examine the brands; there are so many brands. I do not look for ear-marks. I do not know anybody's ear-mark, or anybody's brand, in the county." The defendant claimed that he paid the full value of all the cattle he received, and seems to have thought, if he did that, he was not liable.

Upon these facts—and they were uncontradicted—it is difficult to see how the court could have come to any other conclusion than that shown by its findings.

It is further insisted that the court erred in overruling objections made by counsel for defendant to certain questions put to witnesses for plaintiff, and in refusing to strike out the answers of the witnesses when given. We are unable to see that the defendant was, or could have been, prejudiced by any of the rulings complained of. It is unnecessary to speak of them separately. Some of the objections were frivolous, and all of them, in our opinion, were properly overruled.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte CAMPBELL on Habeas Corpus. (No. 20,324.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—GENERAL AND LOCAL LAWS—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, provides that any county, city, town, or township may enforce within its limits all such local police regulations as are not in conflict with general laws. Held, that an ordinance of the city of Pasadena prohibiting the keeping of any place for selling or giving away liquors was a police regulation, the power to pass which was, under the constitutional provision, expressly delegated to the municipality, and conflicted with no general law of the state, nor with any clause of the United States constitution. Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 708; People v. Martin, 60 Cal. 156,—followed. McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

2. APPEAL—PRACTICE—STIPULATIONS.

An appellate court is warranted in refusing to consider a question submitted for decision under a stipulation of facts which by reason of its uncertainty does not present the matter in a full and clear manner.

In bank. Proceedings on habeas corpus from county of Los Angeles; W. A. CHENEY, Judge.

Rearden & Ray, for petitioner. N. P. Conroy, City Atty. of Pasadena, and Williams & McKinley, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The petitioner is before us on a writ of habeas corpus to test the validity of an ordinance of the city of Pasadena, duly passed, approved, and published, for a violation of which he has been duly convicted. The ordinance was passed February 19, 1887, and took effect on the first Monday in May, 1887. The following provisions only are germane to the matter before us:

"Section 1. It shall be and is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons, either as owner, principal, agent, servant, or employe, to establish, open, keep, maintain, or carry on, or assist in carrying on, within the corporate limits of the city of Pasadena, any tippling-house, dram-shop, cellar, saloon, bar, bar-room, sample-room, or other place where spirituous, vinous, malt, or mixed liquors are sold or given away; * * * provided that the prohibitions of this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of liquors for medicinal purposes by a regularly licensed druggist, upon the prescription of a physician entitled to practice medicine under the laws of the state of California; nor shall such prohibitions apply to the sale of such liquors for chemical or medicinal purposes."

Violations of the ordinance are declared to be misdemeanors. The complaint under which petitioner was convicted charged that the said Campbell, at the time and place aforesaid, (May 3, 1887,) did keep and maintain a certain dram-shop, saloon, and bar-room, where spirituous and malt liquors were then sold, said defendant being then and there the owner thereof; that said defendant was not then and there a regularly licensed druggist, and the liquors then and there sold by him were not sold for either chemical or medicinal purposes.

In addition to the facts above stated, counsel for the petitioner and for the people have stipulated "that there has not since the first day of May, 1887, been any ordinance of the city of Pasadena requiring a license to sell vinous, malt, or mixed liquors in any quantity. That there was an ordinance of the city of Pasadena requiring a license to retail spirituous, vinous, malt, and mixed liquors, passed in June, 1886, which was in force up to the first day of May, 1887; and the said city issued a license under said ordinance to petitioner to retail and sell spirituous, vinous, malt, and mixed liquors up to the first day of May, 1887; but said ordinance was repealed February 19, 1887, the repeal taking effect May 1, 1887. That the petitioner has paid all county and municipal taxes assessed against the spirituous, vinous, malt, and mixed liquors owned, kept, and sold by him in said saloon in said city of Pasadena."

It is claimed by the petitioner that the ordinance is void, because it conflicts with section 13, art. 1, of the constitution of this state, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. It has been held that an act which substantially destroys the property in intoxicating liquors owned and possessed by persons within the state when the act took effect, by preventing the sale, keeping, or giving away of the same, except for medicinal purposes, is violative of this provision of the constitution, and in its application to such liquors is inoperative and void. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 516.

That question, however, is not properly before us in this proceeding. It is not shown by the record when, if ever, the petitioner became the owner of the liquor sold. The last paragraph of the above stipulated facts, as to payment of taxes, was intended, no doubt, to present the question arising out of ownership for an opinion, but the language is so uncertain in its effect that it ought not be taken as the basis of a decision upon so grave and important a constitutional question. In all inquiries upon matters of this kind the facts should be full and clear, or the court should refuse to consider the question. Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129. The same may be said of the contention that the ordinance is void under section 8, art. 1, subd. 3, Const. U. S., because no distinction is made between imported wines and liquors, remaining in the original and unbroken packages, and other wines and liquors; there is nothing to show the character of the liquors sold by the petitioner. Furthermore, the petitioner is charged with keeping a bar-room, and we consider the case only upon that basis. It is further claimed that the ordinance is void, because, "under the municipal corporation act, the city of Pasadena was not authorized to pass the ordinance, (St. 1883, c. 49, § 862, subd. 1-10;) for, if the legislature had intended to confer the power to prohibit the sale of wines and liquors upon cities of the sixth class, (of which Pasadena is one,) it would have said so in direct terms, as was done in the case of cities of the fourth class."

Prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1879, the local authorities possessed only such powers as were expressly, or by necessary implication, conferred upon them by their charters. It is now provided that "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Article 11, § 11, Const. Under this provision, every county, city, town, or township may adopt and enforce such constitutional police regulations as are not in conflict with general laws. It has the same powers over its own local police and sanitary affairs as were formerly granted by the legislature, and, unless the exercise thereof will conflict with the operation of general laws, it may make and enforce the same through its local government. That such a law as the one before us is not repugnant to any clause of the constitution of the United States there can be no doubt. The supreme court of the United States has decided uniformly that "the usual ordinary legislation of the states regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors raises no question under the constitution of the United States prior to the fourteenth amendment of that instrument. The right to sell intoxicating liquors is not one of the privileges and immunities of the citizen of the United States, which by that amendment the states were forbidden to abridge," (Bartemeyer v. Iowa, supra; License Cases, 5 How. 504; Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 32;) and that the power to license, regulate, or prohibit tippling-houses is a constitutional right, which may be enforced as a police regulation through proper legislation, is no longer an open question in this state. In Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 708, it was said: "Legislatures have enacted a variety of laws, which undoubtedly, in a general sense, affect the rights of life, liberty, property, safety, and happiness by way of restraint. Of such are laws regulating the slaughter of animals, the interment of the dead, the erection of buildings in cities and towns of inflammable material, the manufacture and keeping of gunpowder and other explosive compounds, the vending of poisons and other noxious drugs, the sale of intoxicating beverages to certain classes of persons, as Indians, and even to all classes of persons, as in the case of the prohibitory liquor laws of Maine and Massachusetts." Ex parte McClain, 61 Cal. 437.

Unless we are prepared, therefore, to overrule the decisions of our own state, and disregard the opinions of the supreme court of the United States, we must hold that the ordinance in question is free from objection so far as its constitutionality is concerned; that it is not violative of any clause of the constitution of the United States, and that it is in its scope and operation within the police powers which may be lawfully enforced under the provisions of the constitution of this state.

There is but one question remaining to be considered: Is the ordinance "in conflict with general laws?" Section 11, art. 11, Const., clearly subordinates the powers conferred upon counties, cities, towns, and townships to the general laws of the state. It is claimed that the ordinance before us is in conflict with general laws, because "the one prohibits, the other makes full provision for, the granting of licenses for the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors." In support of this contention, counsel cites sections 3356, 3381, 3382, 4045, 4408, Pol. Code, and subdivision 93, § 25, of the county government act, (St. 1883, p. 303.) The provisions of the Political Code referred to are unconstitutional, and no longer operative. This was decided in People v. Martin, 60 Cal. 156, where it is said that "the taking of the power to impose such taxes [licenses] from the legislature, and vesting it in the local authorities, is but another of the many evidences to be found in the new constitution of the intention to bring matters of a local concern home to the people." Those sections of the Code, therefore, stand annulled by the constitution.

Section 25 of the county government act confers upon the boards of supervisors, in their respective counties, power to make and enforce "all such local police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." There is nothing in the case before us to show whether the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county have ever made any regulations with respect to the sale of wines or liquors in saloons and bar-rooms; but manifestly, such regulations, if made, could not operate to divest the authorities of the city of the right to legislate upon the same subject, and enforce such regulations within the city limits. The regulations of the board of supervisors would not be a general law, within the meaning of the provisions of section 11, art. 11, Const.

Our attention has not been called to any general law from which an intention on the part of the legislature to prohibit such ordinances as the one before us—local police regulations in cities—can be inferred. It is true, as claimed by the petitioner, the legislature has by many acts manifested the policy of encouraging the growth of the grape, and the manufacture of wines and brandies, by our people, and has considered the liquor traffic heretofore as a legitimate source of revenue; but no act now in force and effect is by its express terms, or by implication, a limitation upon the powers of the municipalities of the state to regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in bar-rooms. The legislature has prohibited the sale of liquors to minors, and in the lobbies of theaters, near camp-meetings, and in and about certain public buildings and institutions of learning. It has also repealed what was known as the "Sunday Law," and by an act recently passed has made it unlawful to sell, or offer to sell, under the name of wine, or under any name designating pure wines, any substance or compound except pure wine or pure grape must, as defined in the act; and has appropriated a large sum of money for the use of the state board of viticulture. All these are indicative of a policy to regulate.

There is nothing in these acts inconsistent with the constitutional authority vested in the municipalities to make and enforce such local regulations respecting saloons, etc., as may be deemed best by the local legislative bodies. Section 11 of article 11 is itself a charter for each county, city, town, and township in the state, so far as its local regulations are concerned, and nothing less than a positive and general law upon the same subject can be said to create a conflict within the meaning of that section. Ex parte Ah Toy, 57 Cal. 92.

There is nothing in this case which requires us to determine any other question than the right of the city to prevent tippling-houses, dram-shops, and bar-rooms,—a question entirely different from that sought to be raised by petitioner, arising out of the ownership and manufacture of wines, etc.

Not only is there nothing in the provisions of the ordinance before us inconsistent with general laws, but its provisions are in harmony with the authority expressly vested in cities of the sixth class by section 862 of the municipal corporation act of March 13, 1883, which provides that the board of trustees shall have power “to pass all ordinances not in conflict with the constitution and laws of this state, or of the United States.” This act of March 13, 1883, is in harmony with, and passed in obedience to, the provisions of section 6, art. 11, Const. In cases of this kind we have nothing to do with the policy of the law. That is a matter for the legislature. In determining the question whether there is a conflict, we look only at the law itself, which is the best and only evidence of the policy of the state on the question before us.

The petitioner is remanded to custody.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; THORNTON, J.; TEMPLE, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. There is no pretense that the ordinance in question is the result of the exercise of the power to regulate, or to raise revenue for municipal purposes by license or tax. Its clear purpose is practically to destroy the ownership of certain commodities which, in other parts of the state, are recognized and dealt with as property as fully as is flour, or bacon, or sugar. One of them—wine—is the product of a leading industry. It provides that these commodities shall not be sold or given away at any place within the bounds of the municipality. The power to sell or dispose of property gives to it its main valuable quality; and to take away this quality is to substantially confiscate it. Without discussing the many other grave constitutional questions which the case presents,—the discussion of which other duties prevent,—I will content myself with saying here that in my opinion the ordinance is “in conflict with general laws.” The text of a state constitution is necessarily terse and concise, and it may be assumed that its framers, in stating a rule or principle, used as few words as would fairly express the idea intended. The evident intention of the clause above quoted was to prevent any confusion or discord or incongruity between the general legislation of the state in its broad sovereign capacity, and the special legislation of its dependent municipalities. An ordinance, therefore, may be in conflict with general laws, although the latter may not in express terms forbid the passage of the former. Whatever is inconsistent or inharmonious or at variance with or contradictory of or repugnant to the general policy of the state, as expressed in its general laws, is “in conflict” with those laws. And that there is a conflict in this sense between an ordinance which substantially declares that certain commodities shall not be property, and general laws of the state which not only impliedly, but expressly, declare that they are property, seems to be too clear for discussion. From the first to the last session of the legislature of this state, wines and liquors have been recognized as property, and as a legitimate source of revenue. The policy of the state has been to encourage, not to cripple, their manufacture.

Prior to the new constitution, the state usually licensed their sale. Since the new constitution was adopted, that source of revenue has been turned over to the counties. The county government bill, which is a "general law," expressly authorizes the county governments to license such sale; and the city of Pasadena is not authorized by its charter to suppress it. The state, too, has provided for a "State Board of Viticulture," and appropriated to its use a large sum of money. Among the duties prescribed for this board is the selecting of persons competent to lecture and impart instruction "in methods of culture, pruning, fertilizing, fermenting, distilling, and rectifying." It is also provided that the board of regents of the University of California shall provide for special instruction "in the arts and sciences pertaining to viticulture, the theory and practice of fermentation, distillation, and rectification, and the management of cellars, to be illustrated," etc.; also for an examination and report upon the woods of the state "procurable for cooperage;" also for an analysis of "soils, wines, brandies, and grapes." And, furthermore, the legislature, at its recent session, passed an act expressly providing for the sale of wine, and for the prevention of fraud "in the manufacture and sale thereof." St. 1887, p. 46. It expressly provides that the state comptroller shall furnish printed labels to be put on the bottles and packages "in which wine is sold." Section 7. Section 6 provides that "in all sales, and contracts for sale, production, or delivery, of products defined in this act, such products, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary, shall be presumed," etc. Section 8 provides that "it is desired and required that all and every grower, manufacturer, trader, handler, or bottler of California wine, *when selling, or putting up for sale, any California wine, * * * shall plainly stencil, brand,*" etc. The act is quite a long one, and provides in detail for the sale of wine, and the prevention of its adulteration. Now, suppose that the legislature had passed another act providing that neither spirituous, vinous, nor malt liquors should be sold or given away at any place, is there any sensible man who would not say that the two acts were "in conflict?" But the provision above supposed has been put into an ordinance of the city of Pasadena; and is not the conflict clearly there?

The notion of local self-government was never intended to be pushed to the extreme of disregarding and defeating the will of the legislature, which speaks and acts for the state.

In my opinion the petitioner should be discharged.

74 Cal. 30

PEOPLE v. LEE CHUCK. (No. 20,311.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 1, 1887.)

1. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF STATE'S WITNESS—FACTS MATERIAL TO DEFENSE.

On the trial of an indictment for murder, where the theory of the defense is that there had been a controversy between two societies called the "Bo Sin Sear Society" and the "Guy Sin Sear Society," deceased and a prosecuting witness belonging to the former, and the defendant to the latter; that the members of the former society were specially hostile to the defendant; that the witness and deceased, as representatives of the former society, had met defendant and others, as representatives of the latter society, to settle the controversy; and that at the meeting the witness and deceased threatened the life of defendant,—it is proper, on cross-examination of such witness, and for the purpose of showing his hostility, to ask questions tending to prove such state of facts and threats, although such evidence may tend to prove a fact material to the defense.

2. SAME—SELF-DEFENSE—THREATS—EVIDENCE.

Where, on the trial of an indictment for murder, the evidence for the prosecution shows that, at the time of the killing, defendant was incased in a steel armor, and armed with four pistols, it is competent for defendant to explain this fact by showing that he had had reason to think his life in danger, and for that reason had so armed himself. And evidence tending to show that two organizations, of which deceased was a member, had threatened defendant's life, and that defendant had been informed of such threats, is competent for that purpose.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—STATING THAT DEFENDANT HAS NOT DENIED THE KILLING.

On the trial of an indictment for murder it is improper for the court, in charging the jury, to say that the defendant did not dispute that he killed the deceased, where such admission was neither made at the trial, nor implied in the theory of the defense.

4. SAME—ADMISSION OF KILLING IMPLIED BY THEORY OF DEFENSE.

Where the theory of defendant, in an indictment for murder, is that he and others were walking peacefully along a street, when they were surprised by shots fired by deceased, and that thereupon defendant and his companions began firing, and were fired at by deceased and others with him, and that in the affray deceased was killed, but by whom was uncertain, this theory does not imply an admission that the deceased was killed by defendant.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHY, Judge.

McAllister & Bergin, Lyman A. Mowry, and Wm. A. Nygh, for appellants. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant was convicted for the murder of Yin Yuen, who was killed at about noon, on Washington street, in San Francisco. The witnesses who were present when the homicide was committed are Chinese, and there is a wide discrepancy in their testimony, although the evidence of all the witnesses on either side harmonizes wonderfully with the testimony of the other witnesses on the same side. On the part of the prosecution it is made to appear that defendant, with several other Chinamen, was standing on Washington street when the deceased came peaceably along, and, just as he passed the defendant on the sidewalk, defendant presented his pistol and fired; that Yin Yuen instantly fell, and defendant again fired at him; and thereupon the others who were standing there, some five or six, commenced firing at the deceased, who was lying helpless on the ground. The defendant's witnesses all state that some five or six Chinamen were standing at the same point on Washington street, when the defendant with two other Chinamen came along up Washington street. As they passed the group, Yin Yuen fired a shot at the defendant, who stepped into the street, and looked around. As he did so Yin Yuen fired the second shot, and thereupon defendant and his two friends drew their pistols, and commenced firing, as did also the other Chinamen who were with Yin Yuen. That the two groups fired several shots at each other, and that during the firing Yin Yuen fell.

On the trial Chow Hin was the principal witness on the part of the prosecution. According to his own testimony, he was in company with Yin Yuen, or immediately behind him, walking along Washington street, at the time Yin Yuen was attacked and killed by the defendant. The defense attempted to show, on cross-examination of this witness, that he was hostile to the defendant. I will quote from the bill of exceptions sufficient to show the nature of the controversy: "Question. Who is the person who keeps that book? The Court. What is the object of it? Counsel for Defendant. The object is this, your honor: We are seeking to show the feeling of this witness, and the animus which he has in this prosecution. He is a member of the Bo Sin Sear society. There has been a feud between that society and the Guy Sin Sear society for a long time. The deceased was a member of the Bo Sin Sear society. They had quarreled for two months previous to this shooting. They had been out to the cemetery together to settle their disputes, and had gone through with certain ceremonies. Lee Chuck was out there; this witness was out there. They attacked Lee Chuck the day previous on Jackson street. They also threatened Lee Chuck on the very day previous to this shooting that he should not leave. This witness is a member of that society. The deceased is another. We want to show his connection with the society; we want to show his previous quarrels. We want to show what his animus is. We want to show that this society has subscribed money to carry on this prosecution, and we want to show this man does not stand here as an impartial witness; that he stands here as a member of the Bo Sin Sear society, with a bitter feud on the part of the society against the Guy Sin Sear society, and against Lee Chuck as a member thereof. That the Bo Sin Sear society has been indulging in threats against the Guy Sin Sear society, the result of which was that Lee Chuck went and got a coat-of-mail, and armed himself with three or four pistols, in order to protect himself, and was attacked on Washington street in this city. We have a right to show the animus of the witness, and show his feelings toward the defendant." The objection that the evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial was sustained by the court, and the defendant excepted.

The question was repeated in various forms, with the same result. The last two questions and the rulings were as follows: "Question. Did you and the deceased, two or three months before this shooting, go out to the cemetery as members of the Bo Sin Sear society, and meet there Lee Chuck and certain members of the Guy Sin Sear society? Did you go through there certain ceremonies, such as cutting a chicken's head, and trying to settle the feud between those two societies? Did you part in enmity, and did you and the deceased on that occasion make distinct threats against the life of Lee Chuck? The Assistant District Attorney. The same objection, your honor. The Court. Same ruling and exception. Counsel for Defendant. We shall except on the part of the defendant. Q. Did you and the deceased, representing the Bo Sin Sear society, with a party of other men, go out to the cemetery two or three months before this shooting? Did you meet there Lee Chuck and a number of men representing the Guy Sin Sear society? Did you have any angry controversy at that time? Did you and the deceased both then make threats at Lee Chuck? Did the deceased then draw his pistol on Lee Chuck, and threaten to shoot him at that time? The Assistant District Attorney. The same objection, your honor. The Court. Same ruling. Counsel for Defendant. We except on behalf of the defendant."

There may be some matters in the original offer which would not be proper evidence on cross-examination, but this cannot be said of the subsequent questions. It is implied that there was a feud between two Chinese societies, and that the society of which the deceased and the witness were members were specially hostile to the defendant, and it was sought to be shown, in connection with this, that the deceased and the witness, when the two societies met to arrange their controversy, threatened the defendant. This evidence was clearly admissible. It is no objection to such evidence that it would tend to prove some fact material to the defense, if it were also under the rules of evidence legitimate cross-examination.

The case of Thornton v. Hook, 36 Cal. 223, only sustains the proposition that the court, having a certain discretion to control the order in which testimony may be introduced, may sometimes refuse to allow cross-examination as to matters which would more properly be received as direct testimony from the party seeking to cross-examine. Here the object was to show that the witness was hostile. The defendant could not justly be compelled to recall and make the witness his own to do that. The court erred in sustaining the objection.

Since the case must be reversed on other grounds, it is not necessary to notice the unfortunate remark of the court, made while counsel for the defense was opening his case to the jury, further than to say that the line of defense there indicated seems to have been a proper one, and the judge was not justified in discrediting it in any way.

It appeared from the evidence of the prosecution that, at the time of the homicide, Lee Chuck was incased in a steel coat-of-mail, and was armed with four pistols. These were brought in and displayed before the jury. They were intended to have, and doubtless did have, great weight in convincing the jury that Lee Chuck had prepared himself for the deadly encounter in which Yin Yuen lost his life. To explain this fact, and to show that the defendant had reason to think his life in danger, and for that reason, and not to prepare himself to make a murderous assault upon the deceased, defendant put on a coat-of-mail and armed himself, the defense offered to show that the Bo Sin Sear society and another organization of which Yin Yuen was a member, had threatened to take the life of defendant, and that defendant had been informed of the fact. This evidence was objected to as incompetent, and the objection was sustained. This ruling cannot be maintained. The fact of the extraordinary armor worn by the defendant at the time of the homicide was important evidence for the prosecution. To refuse to permit the defendant to show that the preparation was for a different purpose, and for reasons which implied no intent to assault the deceased, was a denial of a most essential right.

It is claimed that the court erred in its charge to the jury. The first objection is stated in the bill of exceptions as follows: "The charge of the court to the jury in these words: 'It is not disputed by the defense that on the twenty-eighth day of July, 1886, Yin Yuen, the person named in the information, was shot and killed on that day by the defendant,'—was an incorrect statement of facts made to the jury, and an incorrect statement of the position taken by the defense. Neither defendant nor his counsel did ever admit on the trial of this action that the deceased, Yin Yuen, was killed on the twenty-eighth day of July, 1886, by defendant. The claim of the defense was that on the twenty-eighth day of July, 1886, an affray was commenced on Washington street by Yin Yuen and his associate shooting at Lee Chuck and some two associates who were with him, and that in the course of said affray, so commenced by Yin Yuen, deceased, Yin Yuen, was killed; that neither the defendant nor his counsel, or either of them, in the course of the trial of this case, ever admitted that Yin Yuen was killed by Lee Chuck. This incorrect statement of fact to the jury in charging the jury was never subsequently corrected by the court in any further charge, or in any further observations made to the jury."

The statement fails to show any such admission on the part of the defense, and no such admission was involved in the theory of the defense. On the contrary, the theory of the defense, which was sustained by the testimony of several witnesses, was that the defendant and two others were walking peacefully along the street when they were surprised by shots fired by Yin Yuen; that thereupon they all three commenced firing and were fired at by Yin Yuen, and five or six others, with whom Yin Yuen seemed to be associated. In this affray Yin Yuen was killed, but by whom did not appear. On the other hand, the theory of the prosecution was that defendant shot deceased while he was going peacefully along from his work, and that Yin Yuen did not shoot at defendant, and that there was no affray at all, the shots all being fired at Yin Yuen by defendant and his partisans. It is plain, therefore, that this assumption was not justified by the facts, and that it was favorable to the theory of the prosecution.

Other instructions are objected to, but we do not deem it necessary to discuss them. Some of them, if isolated from the others, are probably defective; but on the whole we think the law was fairly presented on the points complained of. The cause is remanded and a new trial ordered.

PEOPLE v. KETCHEM. (No. 20,332.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

1. INDIANS—HOMICIDE OF ONE INDIAN BY ANOTHER—JURISDICTION OF STATE COURT.

Where both defendant, in a prosecution under an indictment for murder, and the deceased, are full-blooded Indians, but it does not appear that defendant is a member of any tribe of Indians having its chief and tribal laws, nor that his ancestral tribe had been treated with by the government, but it does appear that he had lived among the whites several years, the state courts of California have jurisdiction to punish him for the crime.¹

2. CRIMINAL PRACTICE—TESTIMONY OF DEFENDANT'S WIFE—ERROR CURED BY DEFENDANT'S ADMISSIONS.

Where the testimony of the wife of a defendant accused of murder is admitted against his objection, on the ground of Pen. Code Cal. § 1322, providing that a wife shall not testify against her husband in a criminal action if he object, though the admission of such testimony is erroneous, yet it is cured by the husband subsequently testifying in his own behalf to substantially the same facts.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge. J. N. Gillett, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant was charged with the crime of murder, and convicted of manslaughter. He moved for a new trial, and has appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion.

Defendant is an Indian 29 years of age, and was born and raised in the county of Humboldt. He was accused of killing another Indian, named Billy Barlow. At the trial, after several witnesses had been examined to prove the commission of the alleged offense, an Indian woman named Jennie Bill Ketchem was called and sworn as a witness for the prosecution. The defendant objected to her testifying upon the ground that she was his wife, and, therefore, under section 1322 of the Penal Code, incompetent to be a witness against him. In support of the objection it was proved that some three or four years before the time of the homicide the defendant asked the witness to be his "woman," and she said "All right." He also asked her father and mother if he might have her for his woman, and they consented. Before that, she had lived with another Indian for about four years, but he had left her. She then lived with defendant as his woman in a cabin built by him for that purpose, until a few weeks before the homicide, when he went away and left her. While they were so living together she had two still-born children. Before leaving, he told her that he was going to leave her, and afterwards told several other parties that he would never live with her any more. Defendant admitted that he made the statements imputed to him, but said he was joking when he made them, and that he intended all the time to return and live with her. It was further proved that what is called the "marriage relation," among the Indians was formed by a male taking a squaw and living with her, and that he could dissolve the relation whenever he chose to do so by leaving her, and could then take another squaw.

Upon these proofs the court overruled the objection, and the defendant reserved an exception. The witness was then examined and cross-examined, and thereupon the prosecution rested. The defendant then offered himself, and was sworn and examined as a witness in his own behalf. He admitted that he killed Billy Barlow, and testified to all the facts connected with the killing substantially as his alleged wife had testified to them.

Whether, in view of the fact that they were Indians, the defendant and his ¹ Under the act of congress of March 3, 1885, the state courts have no jurisdiction over the Indians within the state, and on their reservations, for crimes committed by and against each other, so long as they maintain their tribal relations. U. S. v. Kagama, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1109; Ex parte Cross, (Neb.) 30 N. W. Rep. 428.

"woman" should be regarded as husband and wife, within the meaning of those words as used in section 1322 of the Penal Code, is a question which we do not deem it necessary to decide. The question, so far as we are advised, has never before arisen in this state, and upon somewhat similar facts the courts in other states have ruled differently. See Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72; Smith v. Brown, 8 Kan. 610; Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 839. Contra: Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 53; State v. Ta-chana-tah, 64 N. C. 614. If it be conceded that the parties were husband and wife, and that the court therefore erred in overruling the defendant's objection, still the error was rendered harmless and immaterial, when the defendant voluntarily became a witness for himself. Under his own testimony he was clearly guilty of manslaughter, if not of murder, and could not therefore have been prejudiced by the ruling. People v. Montgomery, 53 Cal. 576; People v. Marseiler, 70 Cal. 98, 11 Pac. Rep. 503; People v. Daniels, 70 Cal. 521, 11 Pac. Rep. 655.

The point is also made that the trial court had no jurisdiction of the case, because both the defendant and the party killed were full-blooded Indians; and in support of this position counsel cite State v. McKenney, 18 Nev. 182, 2 Pac. Rep. 171. In that case it was claimed that the state courts had "no jurisdiction of crimes committed by one Indian against another, when both are members of an organized tribe having laws for the government of their own internal affairs." And in commencing its opinion the court said: "Let it be remembered that what follows is intended to apply to the case before us, where one Indian belonging to a tribe which is recognized and treated with as such by the government, having its chief and tribal laws, is accused of killing another of the same tribe. * * * It does not refer to a case where an Indian leaves his tribe and joins the whites." Evidently the law as declared in that case, whatever might be said of the conclusion reached, has no application to this case. Here it does not appear that the defendant is a member of any tribe of Indians having its chief and tribal laws, nor that the tribe of which his ancestors may have been members was ever recognized or treated with by the government. On the contrary, it appeared that he had lived among the whites for several years. He had his own cabin, and about three acres of land around it, which he cultivated and on which he raised vegetables. He was asked what he did to support his woman, and replied: "I sheared sheep around, and hunted and worked for anybody. Herded sheep for anybody."

In our opinion the court below had jurisdiction to try the case, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

SEARLS, C. J., and TEMPLE, J. We concur in the foregoing opinion, upon the ground that the witness Jennie Bill Ketchem was not shown to be the lawful wife of the prisoner, and was therefore a competent witness.

VANDOR v. ROACH, Adm'r. (No. 11,323.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

1. GIFT—CAUSA MORTIS—FRAUD OR INCAPACITY OF DONOR, MATTER OF DEFENSE.

One claiming property by gift causa mortis, is not under obligation to disprove fraud or prove a sound and disposing mind on the part of the donor, as fraud or incapacity are matters to be set up and proved as a defense.

2. SAME—WHAT CONSTITUTES A GIFT.

A person on his death-bed took from under his pillow a package and handed it to plaintiff saying: "These bonds are for you," or words to that effect. Held, that the transaction sufficiently manifested an intention to make a gift.¹

3. SAME—ACTION TO RECOVER GIFT.

In an action against an administrator to recover five United States bonds of a certain denomination, which plaintiff claimed were given to her by deceased causa mortis, the complaint showed that plaintiff possessed five bonds, and showed their numbers, and defendants admitted the allegation, and did not prove that deceased owned other bonds, while there was evidence tending to show that the bonds claimed were the identical ones given. Held, that the court was justified in finding the bonds claimed were the ones given.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellants. M. C. Hassett, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant's intestate gave to her, on his death-bed, five United States bonds which stood in his name. There was no indorsement or written transfer, and she brought this action to obtain a decree directing the administrator "to make a good and sufficient transfer of said bonds to plaintiff, by his assignment in writing." The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

The only points made on behalf of the appellant are the following:

1. It is argued that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show that "the gift was fair," and that there was no evidence on the subject. If this means that it was incumbent upon plaintiff to show that there was no fraud practiced upon the deceased, we cannot agree to it. Fraud is never presumed. And if there is nothing in the circumstances to create a suspicion of wrong, we cannot see why the plaintiff should be required to go further and negative possibilities. Nor can we agree to it if it means that the plaintiff is required to show that the deceased was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the gift. Soundness of mind is presumed until the contrary appears. In the case of a will, proof that the testator was of sound mind is required by express provision of the statute. There is no such provision as to gifts causa mortis. The point was expressly decided in Bedell v. Carll, 33 N. Y. 586, in which case the court said: "He establishes a prima facie case when he shows that the disposition has been attended by all the requisites which the common law prescribes to give it validity. Certainly he is not required to prove affirmatively that the donor was of sound disposing mind and memory when he made the gift, and that the delivery of the subject was his free and voluntary act. These are matters of defense equally applicable to gifts inter vivos and causa mortis."

2. It is argued that what was done did not show sufficient intention of giving. The counsel says that "the operative words of a gift are: 'I give' or 'I have given;'" and that these words are wanting. But we do not think that any formula or set phrase is necessary. It is sufficient if there was delivery, and any words importing an intention to give. The only evidence on the subject was that of the physician, who testified that the dying man took a package from under his pillow, and handed it to the plaintiff, saying: "These bonds are for you." The witness did not pretend to give the precise words uttered, but stated that this was the substance of what was said. This, we think, was a sufficient manifestation of intention to give.

¹To sustain a gift, the intention of the donor must be established by clear and precise evidence. Appeal of Madeira, (Pa.) 4 Atl. Rep. 908. And a donatio mortis causa must be completely executed, precisely as required in the case of gifts inter vivos, subject to be divested by the happening of any of the conditions subsequent. Basket v. Hassell, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415; Shuckelford v. Brown, (Mo.) 1 S. W. Rep. 390.

3. It is urged that there was nothing to identify any particular bonds. But the complaint alleges that the deceased "was the owner of five United States registered bonds, issued under an act of congress in the year 1877, and more particularly designated and known by the name of 'four per cent. consols of the United States;' and by the numbers 131,641, 131,642, 131,643, 131,644, and 131,645, each of said bonds being issued to said Frederick Biringer, and standing in his name in the registry department of the United States government." This is expressly admitted by the answer. And the statement shows that "plaintiff put in evidence five United States bonds, $1,000 each, numbers 131,641, 131,642, 131,643, 131,644, and 131,645, being the same as set out in the complaint." It does not appear that deceased had any other bonds. And the evidence tends to show that the ones mentioned in the pleadings and produced by plaintiff at the trial, were the ones given to her. The physician did not know what was in the package which he saw delivered, but heard the deceased refer to it as "these bonds;" and he thought he recognized the package produced at the trial as the one he saw given by the deceased. The plaintiff testifies that after the package was received by her, she mislaid it, but subsequently found it in the bed-clothes which deceased had used. She says that the bed-clothes had been taken to the basement, and that she "went down and found the package and these bonds."

Upon the whole we think there was a prima facie case, and, as no contradictory evidence was put in, the court below properly rendered judgment for the plaintiff. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PRICE v. BEAVER. (No. 11,889.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE OF SWAMP LAND—AFFIDAVIT OF "NO SETTLERS."

Under Pol. Code Cal. § 3443, providing that a person who makes application to purchase swamp or overflowed land must show in his affidavit for that purpose that he "knew the land applied for, and the exterior bounds thereof, and that he knew of his own knowledge that there were no settlers thereon," a person is qualified to make this affidavit by information obtained by going upon the land, and examining it as indicated by a guide, unless it is proved that the guide pointed out the wrong land. The knowledge required is not necessarily derived from a personal survey.

2. SAME—AFFIDAVIT BY FEMALE APPLICANT.

The provision of Pol. Code Cal. § 3444, as to the affidavit to be filed by one seeking to purchase swamp or overflowed land, requiring that, "if the applicant is a female, such affidavit must show that she is entitled to purchase real estate in her own name," is complied with by a statement in such affidavit that applicant "is an unmarried woman, over the age of eighteen years, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state of California, of lawful age."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; W. W. CROSS, Judge.

Chas. E. Wilson and C. A. Webb, for appellant. Lambertson & Taylor, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The defendant, on the twenty-fifth day of May, 1885, filed in the office of the surveyor general of the state her application to purchase 640 acres of swamp and overflowed land, situate in Tulare county. The land sought to be purchased had been segregated as swamp and overflowed land, by authority of the United States, for more than six months, and was subject to sale by the state to any qualified applicant. The defendant was qualified to purchase the land, and her affidavit properly stated all the facts required in such case to be stated therein. The plaintiff, on the seventeenth day of June, 1885, made application to purchase the same land. He was also a qualified purchaser, and his application was sufficient and proper in form. On demand of the plaintiff, the question as to which of the parties had the better right to purchase the land, was referred by the surveyor general to the superior court of Tulare county for determination. Proper pleadings were filed by the parties, and after a full hearing of the case, the court, among other things, found as follows:

"Third. That said defendant is a native-born citizen of the United States, and was, at the time of filing said application to purchase said land, of the age of thirty-one years, an unmarried female, and a resident of the state of California; that at said time she knew the land applied for, and the exterior bounds thereof, and knew, of her own knowledge, that there were no settlers thereon; that she desired to purchase said land under the law providing for the sale of swamp and overflowed and tide lands, and that she did not own swamp and overflowed lands which, together with that sought to be purchased, and applied for in said application, would exceed six hundred and forty acres; that she did not know of any valid claim to the said land other than her own; and that there was no other valid claim to said land at the time said defendant filed her application, or at any time since.

"Fourth. That the said land is not suitable for cultivation."

And as a conclusion of law, the court further found "that the application of the defendant, Hattie M. Beaver, to purchase the east half of section 19, and the west half of section 20, in township 22 south, range 23 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, (the land in question,) is good and valid, and said defendant has a right to purchase the same, and that she is entitled to have her said application approved by the surveyor general of said state of California," etc.

Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff then moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appealed from the judgment and order.

It is claimed for the appellant that the finding "that at said time she knew the land applied for and the exterior bounds thereof, and knew, of her own knowledge, that there were no settlers thereon," was not justified by the evidence; and this is the principal point made for a reversal of the judgment.

We do not think the judgment should be reversed for the reason urged. It was proved that the defendant was the widow of John H. Beaver, who had filed an application to purchase the land in question, and died in April, 1885. The defendant was a witness in her own behalf, and on her direct examination testified that at the time of making her application she knew the land applied for, and knew the exterior bounds of the land, and that there were not any settlers on it at that time; that, about a week before she made her application, she went on the land with J. W. Beaver, the brother of her deceased husband, and went where he said the corners of the land were. On cross-examination she said that when she was on the land her brother-in-law showed her certain stakes, but she didn't remember the marks on them and couldn't say whether they were section stakes or not; that she depended on her brother-in-law, and, as a matter of fact, did not herself know any of the exterior boundary lines of the two half sections applied for.

J. W. Beaver was called as a witness, and testified that about the fifteenth of May, 1885, he went with defendant to look at the land, and showed her, at that time, what he supposed to be the land now in controversy, and that he afterwards went back to the place for the purpose of determining whether he had correctly shown her the land in controversy or not. On his cross-examination he said, in substance, that he found a section corner between sections 19 and 20; that there was a stake there with marks on it, which he did not remember, and that he believed the stake was pulled up and lying by the corner; that he did not know whether the stake was a corner stake or not, and only judged from the marks; that he and defendant went over the land in search of the other corners, but he did not know that they found any stakes, except the one at the junction of sections 17, 18, 19, and 20; he thought they found a stake directly east,—a half-milestake,—but as to that was not positive; that they did not measure, or follow the exterior boundary lines of the land; that he informed defendant what he supposed to be the boundaries and boundary lines, but that he was not a surveyor, and had never seen the land surveyed, and did not at that time know its exterior boundaries; that he could see two or three miles in every direction, and did not see any evidence of any settlement, except what his brother had put there.

Another witness was called, and testified that he knew the land described in the complaint, and saw it surveyed; that he was with the surveyors, and saw them set the corner stake between sections 19 and 20 on the north; that about a month and a half before the trial he went on the land with J. W. Beaver for the purpose of showing it to him, and positively identifying it as the land which defendant made application to purchase; that he had lived on the land for five months in a house which defendant's husband had built; that he found a stake at the north-east corner of section 19, which had been pulled up, but was lying on the ground just where it was stuck to mark the true corner.

This was substantially all the evidence introduced upon the question in hand, and in our opinion it was sufficient to justify the finding complained of.

It is true, the Code requires any person desiring to purchase swamp and overflowed land to state in his affidavit "that he knows the land applied for, and the exterior bounds thereof, and knows, of his own knowledge, that there are no settlers thereon." Pol. Code, § 3443. And it is also true that in cases of this kind each party is an actor, and must allege and prove that he has strictly complied with the law. But it is not required that the purchaser of swamp land shall know "of his own knowledge" the land applied for, and the exterior bounds thereof. Ordinarily he does not, and, unless he is a skilled surveyor, must gain this information from others. Having gained it, however, he can and must then state, if such be the fact, that he knows of his own knowledge that there are no settlers on the land. The defendant was shown by her brother-in-law what he supposed to be the corners and boundary lines of the land in controversy. She relied and acted upon the information thus received, and there was no attempt to show that it was not correct. It is not pretended that she did not go upon the land which she desired to purchase, nor that she was incorrectly informed as to its bounds or limits, nor that there were any settlers on the land. The claim is only that J. W. Beaver did not at the time know the true lines and corners, and so, however correct her information may have been, her application must fail. If this be the correct view, then it must follow that, if defendant had employed a surveyor to show her the land, and he had made mistakes as to the corners and lines, and had incorrectly located its bounds, her application could be successfully assailed by any subsequent applicant. We do not think that such a result was intended by the law-makers, or should receive sanction from the courts.

The point is also made that the defendant's application was insufficient because she did not state in her affidavit that she was entitled to purchase real estate in her own name. Defendant stated in her affidavit that "she is an unmarried woman, over the age of eighteen years, a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the state of California, of lawful age."

The Code (section 3444, Pol. Code) provides: "If the applicant is a female, such affidavit must also show that she is entitled to purchase real estate in her own name."

It is urged that an unmarried woman, though she be more than 18 years of age, and a citizen and resident of the state, is not necessarily entitled to purchase real estate in her own name, because "she may be incompetent—an idiot or lunatic, for instance," and it is therefore necessary that she should state in her affidavit that she is entitled to purchase, etc. There is nothing in this point. The Code, as we have seen, says that the affidavit must show a female is entitled to purchase, not simply state that fact. The defendant's affidavit fully complied with the law in this respect, and was sufficient. She was presumed to be of sound mind, and was not called upon to negative in her affidavit the fact that she was an idiot or lunatic.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

CONTEMPT—OBSTRUCTING EXECUTION OF WRIT—JURISDICTION OF COURT TO PUNISH.

Petitioner was tried before the superior court for contempt against that court in obstructing and taking from a police officer, by means of legal process, certain personal property taken by such officer under a search-warrant issued by the presiding judge of the superior court, and fined and committed to the county jail. Held, on habeas corpus, that the superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and person of petitioner, and had authority to render such judgment, and that the petitioner would be remanded.

BY THE COURT. The petitioner was fined and committed to the county jail for a term of five days for a contempt of the process of the superior court, department 9, in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The alleged contempt of petitioner consisted in obstructing and taking from a police officer, by means of legal process, certain personal property taken by such officer under a search-warrant, issued by J. V. COFFEY, presiding judge of said superior court, for the purpose of securing certain documents and papers averred to have been used as a means of committing a felony. Petitioner had a hearing before the superior court, and upon the testimony, pro and con, was found guilty and sentenced as hereinbefore stated.

We have examined the record with some care, and are of opinion the superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the person of the petitioner, and that the judgment rendered was such as, upon the showing made, the court was authorized to make. The increasing volume of business brought before this court under the original jurisdiction conferred upon it, and the time necessarily consumed thereby, to the exclusion of other and equally important business, prompts us to brevity of opinion in cases where, like the present, our jurisdiction is not appellate. These are some of the considerations which restrain us in the present case from arguing in extenso from the premises up to the conclusions we have reached.

The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

EUREKA & T. R. Co. v. McGRATH and others. (No. 11,679.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 4, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—FROM ORDER REFUSING TO ANNUL JUDGMENT.

A judgment against the defendants condemning a right of way for plaintiff's road through defendants' land was recovered by plaintiff, and defendants' damages were assessed at $600. Afterwards plaintiff moved the court that "the judgment entered in said action be set aside and annulled." After a hearing on the motion, the court made and entered the following order, "that the motion of plaintiff to annul the judgment in this action be denied and dismissed." Held that, as plaintiff could have appealed from the judgment, he could not appeal from the order.

2. RAILROAD COMPANIES—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—SUBSEQUENT CHANGE OF LINE—ANNULING JUDGMENT.

Plaintiff recovered a judgment condemning a right of way through defendant's land, but afterwards determined to change its line, and filed a petition and made a motion to have the judgment rendered set aside and annulled. The court entered an order denying plaintiff's petition and motion. Held that, although the motion was based upon new matter occurring subsequently to the judgment, there was no statutory provision for such a motion, or for the proceedings which plaintiff sought to institute.

In bank. Appeal from superior court. Humboldt county; JOHN J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

S. M. Buck and J. A. McQuaid, for appellant. Horace L. Smith, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. The plaintiff, a railroad corporation, on the seventeenth day of February, 1885, filed its complaint in the court below, asking a judgment condemning a right of way for its road through and over a lot of land belonging to defendants in the city of Eureka. Defendants answered, denying all the averments of the complaint, (except ownership of the lot,) and claiming $1,600 damages in case of condemnation. The case was tried with a jury, and all the facts necessary to support a judgment for plaintiff were found in its favor, and defendants' damages were duly assessed at $600. Judgment upon the verdict was duly entered on August 29, 1885. The judgment, after reciting the proceedings in the case, decrees that plaintiff is entitled to use and enjoy the strip of land described in the complaint as the right of way for the construction of its railroad, upon paying to defendants, or depositing in court for them, the full amount of compensation or damages assessed by the jury. Plaintiff then duly moved for a new trial, which was denied, and thereafter, on October 1, 1885, it appealed to this court "from so much of the judgment as directed the payment to defendants of the damages assessed by the jury." It gave a bond to stay execution during the pending of the appeal, in form as provided in section 942, Code Civil Proc. On the eleventh of January, 1886, the appeal was dismissed by this court because the transcript was not filed in time.

After the appeal had been dismissed, viz., on January 30, 1886, plaintiff filed a petition in the court below in which it was stated that "since the trial of said action, plaintiff has determined to change its line where it passes through defendants' land, as described in the complaint herein, and substitute a line further north, which will not require of defendants' land more than a narrow strip from the north-east corner of said lot, not exceeding 10 feet in width, if any." It also served defendants with notice that upon said petition, and upon other matters and proceedings, it would, on the fourth day of February, 1886, move the court "that the judgment entered in said action on the twenty-ninth day of August, 1885, be set aside and annulled."

After a hearing of this motion—at which hearing plaintiff introduced a resolution of its board of directors declaring its determination to change its line of road as stated in said petition—the court, on March 5, 1886, made and entered on its minutes an order "that the petition and motion of plaintiff to annul the judgment herein be denied and dismissed." From this order denying the motion to annul the judgment the plaintiff now appeals; and respondent moves to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the order appealed from is not an appealable order.

In Tripp v. Railroad Co., 69 Cal. 631, 11 Pac. Rep. 219, the appeal was from an order refusing to set aside a former order dismissing the action as to certain defendants; and the court says: "As to the order of dismissal, when entered, it was a final judgment which was itself appealable. The appeal should have been prosecuted from such judgment. This court, as it is well settled, will not take the jurisdiction of an order refusing to set aside a judgment or order itself appealable." And the court in its opinion refers to Henly v. Hastings, 3 Cal. 342; Holmes v. McCleary, 63 Cal. 497; and Railroad Co. v. Railroad Co., 65 Cal. 295, 4 Pac. Rep. 13,—all of which cases clearly sustain the rule. In the case at bar, therefore, as the judgment sought to be set aside by the motion was itself appealable, there is no appeal from the order denying the motion, and the appeal should be dismissed. Counsel for appellant contends that, as his motion was based upon new matter occurring subsequently to the judgment, therefore the rule above stated does not apply. But, as there is no statutory provision for the motion which he made, or for the proceeding which he sought to institute, how can he invoke for this particular new matter any new rule that does not apply to any other kind of new matter?

Whether or not a railroad corporation, after having pushed a condemnation proceeding to the extreme of a money judgment in favor of the defendant therein, upon which an execution may issue, has the right, in any way, to avoid such judgment by a determination to change the line of its road; and if there be such right, what, if any, is the remedy,—these are questions which we are not called upon here to determine.

Appeal dismissed.

GROSS v. KELLEHER. (No. 12,338.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 31, 1887.)

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—APPEAL—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Defendant appealed from a judgment in an action for unlawful detainer, and the court granted a stay of proceedings upon his filing a bond. The sureties failed to justify and the court set aside the order for a stay. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1176, provides that an appeal by defendant shall not stay proceedings unless the trial court so directs. Defendant moved for leave to file a new undertaking for a stay. Held, that a stay of proceedings in an action of forcible entry and detainer, pending an appeal, was not a matter of right but of discretion with the trial court.

SEARLS, C. J. This is a proceeding under an order on the plaintiff and respondent to show cause why the appellant should not be allowed to file a new undertaking on appeal, and why proceedings on the judgment should not be stayed upon filing a satisfactory undertaking. Respondent has appeared, and from the showing it appears that the action is for an unlawful detainer in which respondent recovered a judgment against his tenant, the appellant, for restitution of certain leased premises, and for certain rents, etc. The court below made an order for a stay of proceedings upon filing an undertaking in the sum of $2,000. The bond was filed. Respondent excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties, who, by a mistake as to the place at which they were to appear, failed to appear and justify. The court thereupon set aside the order staying proceedings, and execution issued. The appeal having been perfected, appellant applies to this court for leave to file an undertaking for a stay of execution.

In ordinary cases for the recovery of real estate, if the judgment be for the delivery of possession thereof, the party against whom the judgment is rendered is entitled, on appeal, to a stay of proceedings of right upon filing an undertaking in such sum as the judge of the court may fix. In that class of cases this court has held that where a defective undertaking was filed in the court below, the defect could be cured here by filing a proper undertaking. Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 311, 493; Schacht v. Odell, 52 Cal. 449.

In actions of forcible entry and unlawful detainer, however, a stay of proceedings pending an appeal is not a matter of right. Section 1176, Code Civil Proc., provides as follows: "An appeal taken by the defendant shall not stay proceedings upon the judgment unless the judge or justice before whom the same was rendered so directs." As this case now stands there is no order of the court or judge staying proceedings. For me to make the order here would be to override the discretion of the court below, which may have been for good reasons properly exercised.

The order to show cause will, therefore, be discharged except so far as to permit appellant to file an undertaking, on appeal, in the sum of $300, to cover the costs of appeal.

JAHANT v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 11,868.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 31, 1887.)

RAILROAD COMPANIES—STOCK KILLING—PLEADING AND PROOF.

In an action against a railroad company for damages for killing stock, the complaint alleged that the defendant carelessly and negligently managed and ran its locomotive and cars, and killed the stock, which had casually, and without fault of the owner, strayed upon the track. Held, that the evidence of the carelessness of the company should be confined to the running and management of the locomotive and cars, and that it was not permissible to show that the stock came through an open gate upon the track, there being no averment that the gate was left open by the negligence of the company, which operated as a proximate cause of the killing.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN. R. PATERSON, Judge.

W. L. Dudley, for appellant. J. C. Campbell, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action for the recovery of damages against the defendant, a railroad company, for the killing of two horses by its locomotive and cars. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, upon which a judgment was duly rendered. From that, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant has appealed. The cause of action, as stated in the complaint, is as follows: "That on or about the twenty-sixth day of September, 1884, the plaintiff was the owner and possessed of certain live stock, to-wit: Two horses, of the value of $350, and which horses, casually, and without the fault of said plaintiff, strayed in and upon the track and ground occupied by the railroad of the said defendant, in Liberty township, county of San Joaquin, state of California. That the said defendant, by its agents and servants, not regarding its duty in that respect, so carelessly and negligently ran and managed its said locomotive and cars that the same ran against and over the said horses of the said plaintiff, and killed and destroyed the same, to the plaintiff's damage, $350." These allegations were denied by the answer. The court, against the objection of the defendant, allowed evidence to be introduced that a certain fence along-side its track was not kept in repair, and that the horses of the plaintiff came through a gate in that fence, which had been left open, out upon the track, and were there killed by the locomotive and cars. It was found by the jury, upon special issues, that the horses did come through that gate, and upon the track, and were there so killed; that the horses when first seen by the engineer were on the track; that at that time the train was running at the rate of 25 miles an hour; that when the train struck, or hit and killed, the horses, it was running 20 miles an hour; that the engineer, as soon as he saw the horses, used all possible means at his command to stop the train.

As it seems to us, under the pleadings, evidence of the carelessness of the defendant should have been confined to such as referred to its careless and negligent running and management of its locomotive and cars, by means of which only was it alleged in the complaint, that the horses of the plaintiff were run against, and over, killed, and destroyed. While under this allegation it might have been competent, according to the rule laid down in McCoy v. Railroad Co., 40 Cal. 535, to have shown by evidence that no proper fence existed along-side the defendant's track, it was not permissible to show, as was done, that the horses came through an open gate out upon the track, and were killed, without any averment whatever in the complaint that the gate was left open, or allowed to remain open, through carelessness or negligence on the part of the defendant, which operated as a proximate cause of the animals being killed.

It becomes unnecessary to determine any other point made by the appellant, but for the reasons heretofore stated, the judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

SCHAMMEL v. SCHAMMEL. (No. 11,470.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 2, 1887.)

DIVORCE—ALIMONY AND ATTORNEY'S FEES—CONFLICTING AFFIDAVITS.

An order for payment of alimony and attorney's fees to a wife pending an action for divorce against her husband, where the affidavits upon which it is based are conflicting, will not be reversed. Following White v. White, 14 Pac. Rep. 393.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDMONDS, Judge.

Fisher Ames and Dunne & Davidson, for appellant. Jas. C. Cary, J. D. Sullivan, and Davis Louderback, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order granting a wife counsel fees and alimony pending an action for divorce against her husband. The affidavits filed upon the hearing of the motion are conflicting, but it is evident that the trial judge must have arrived at the conclusion that, notwithstanding the defendant's sworn statements to the contrary, he was an unkind, cruel, and abusive husband and father; that his promises to pay $100 a month, at his office, for the support of his wife and her two daughters, were not to be relied on; that his wife was sick and bed-ridden, and could not apply for the proposed allowance; that of his daughters, one had just cause, at the least, to fear the worst kind of abusive language from her father if she went to his office, and that the other daughter was too young a child to be intrusted with such matters. The court must also have come to the conclusion that the defendant had under his control a very considerable estate in the nature of community property, and that his income from rents, salary, and other sources amounted to about $432 per month; that under these circumstances the sum of $125 per month, for the support and maintenance of a sick woman, his wife, pending her action for a divorce, was not more than the defendant should have been ordered to contribute for such purpose. And we cannot say that such conclusions were not warranted by the evidence.

It does not appear that the allowance for attorney's fees was excessive, the very voluminous record in this case illustrating the fact that the defendant was most persistent and determined in resisting his wife's effort to succeed in her cause, and that very considerable labor and time must have attended the efforts of his wife's counsel to obtain for her urgent needs that which was necessary to save her from dependency upon her friends for the means of sustaining life.

Upon the whole matter, under the rule laid down by this court in the case of White v. White, 14 Pac. Rep. 393, we see nothing which would warrant us in reversing the order of the court below, and it should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

Estate of CAHILL, Deceased. (No. 11,382.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 5, 1887.)

1. WILL—CONTEST—SPECIAL QUESTIONS TO JURY—INDEFINITE ANSWERS.

Where, in an action to contest a will on the ground of undue influence, contestant, under a stipulation between the counsel that "the foregoing questions shall be and are the issues of the contest in the matter of the estate of Ellen Cahill, deceased," submitted to the jury the following question: "Did the said Ellen Cahill, at the time of signing the instrument offered for probate, sign or execute the same under undue influence of either James H. Nolan, or of Annie Nolan, or of any other person?" to which the jury responded, "Yes." Held, that the verdict was not too indefinite to warrant a judgment setting aside the will, and the setting aside of the verdict, because too indefinite, was error.

2. INFANCY—ACTION BY—FAILURE TO APPOINT GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

In a contest of a will by a minor, no guardian ad litem was appointed until the time of the trial, and no objection had been made previously to the want of such an appointment, nor was objection made at the time. Held, that the failure to appoint the guardian did not affect the jurisdiction of the court, and was not good ground for setting aside the verdict.

3. APPEAL—MATTERS APPARENT OF RECORD—REASONS FOR SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.

An agreement that the trial court may have set aside a verdict on its own motion, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 662, on the ground that the jury acted "under a misapprehension of the instructions, or under the influence of passion or prejudice," is not well founded, when it appears from the record that the order setting aside the verdict was not made at the time of its rendition, and was made upon the formal written application of a party, and where the printed reasons given by the court for making the order show that it was not on the grounds named.

4. SAME—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where a notice of motion to set aside a verdict states that it is to be made upon the minutes of the court, but contains no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, subd. 4, such motion shall be denied, and an appellant from the order setting aside the verdict is under no obligations to furnish any of the evidence in his bill of exceptions.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

M. C. Hassett, for contestant. Wm. F. Sayers, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. William P. Cahill, a minor, commenced a contest to set aside the will of Ellen Cahill, deceased, on the ground of undue influence. No guardian ad litem was appointed to commence the proceedings, the written grounds of opposition being signed with his own name. The proponent filed an answer, in which no objection was made for the want of a guardian ad litem. After the issues were settled,—Milton C. Babb acting as attorney for the contestant,—the matter came up for trial, and then the court, upon petition of the contestant, made an order "that M. C. Hassett be, and he is hereby, appointed guardian ad litem of said William P. Cahill, to appear and act for him in the contest of said William P. Cahill to the proposed last will and testament of Ellen Cahill, deceased." As will be observed, this order did not purport to relate back to the commencement of the proceedings. So far as the record shows, no objection on account of there being no guardian ad litem at the commencement of the proceedings was made at any stage of the trial. The jury found that the will had been obtained by undue influence. The finding on this subject was as follows: "Did the said Ellen Cahill, at the time of signing the instrument offered for probate, sign or execute the same under undue influence of either James H. Nolan, or of Annie Nolan, or of any other person? Answer. Yes." The proponent moved to set aside the verdict, and the court below granted the motion on the ground of there having been no guardian ad litem at the commencement of the proceedings, and upon the ground of the indefiniteness of the verdict. In this latter regard the court said in its opinion, which is printed in the brief of counsel: "It is not specified whether the undue influence was exercised by James H. Nolan or Annie Nolan, or of some other person. This verdict is necessarily too indefinite to warrant any judgment whatever." The contestant appeals from the order setting aside the verdict.

1. We do not think that the verdict was too indefinite to warrant a judgment setting aside the will. It affirmed that the testatrix, in making it, was acting under the undue influence of James H. Nolan, or of Annie Nolan, or of some other person. The material point is that there was undue influence. It is not necessary that the undue influence should have been exercised by a beneficiary under the will. Undue influence by any one, whether he gains by the will or not, is sufficient ground for setting it aside. It is perfectly true that, as an allegation in the statement of the grounds of opposition, it would be too indefinite if objected to; for it would make it necessary to go over too wide a field of evidence, and there would be nothing to apprise the proponent of the particular case to be made against him. It would therefore be ground of demurrer. The issues submitted to the jury should likewise be sufficiently definite to narrow the case within reasonable limits; and, probably, in such a case as this, if objection had been made to the form of the issue, the objection would have been allowed. But there was no such objection. On the contrary, the attorney for the proponent expressly stipulated in writing that "the foregoing questions shall be and are the issues of the contest in the matter of the estate of Ellen Cahill, deceased." In the face of such a stipulation as this, the proponent cannot be allowed to object to the form of the issues, unless they are so uncertain as to render it impossible to say what the jury meant by their verdict, which we do not think is the case here.

2. Was the fact that no guardian ad litem was appointed for the contestant until the case was called for trial sufficient reason for setting aside the verdict? If this circumstance went to the jurisdiction of the court, and so rendered the proceedings for contest void, there can be no doubt of the correctness of the action of the court below; but if it was a mere irregularity, the proponent should have brought the matter to the attention of the court, and applied for relief as soon as the matter came to his knowledge; he could not go on and take the chances of a verdict in his favor, and keep the objection in reserve. See cases collected in Hayne, New Trial, § 27. The question stated, therefore, resolves itself into this: Did the matter go to the jurisdiction of the court? We think it did not.

The provision of the Civil Code is that "a minor may enforce his rights by civil action, or other legal proceedings, in the same manner as a person of full age, except that a guardian must conduct the same." Civil Code, § 42. And in the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that "where an infant or an insane person is a party, he must appear either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court in which the action is pending in each case. * * *" Section 372. And directions are given concerning the manner of the appointment. Code Civil Proc. § 373. So far as the mere language of these provisions goes, it would seem that the appointment is to be made after the commencement of the suit. But it has been held that the appointment of the guardian must be alleged in the complaint. Crawford v. Neal, 56 Cal. 321. In this case it was said that the necessity to show the due appointment of the guardian ad litem remains as at common law.

The old equity rule is stated by Story as follows: "An infant is incapable by himself of exhibiting a bill, as well on account of his supposed want of discretion, as of his inability to bind himself, and to make himself liable to the costs of the suit. When, therefore, an infant claims a right, or suffers an injury, on account of which it is necessary to apply to a court of equity, his nearest relation is supposed to be the person who will take him under his protection, and institute a suit to assert his rights, or to vindicate his wrongs; and the person who institutes a suit on behalf of an infant is therefore termed his 'next friend,' (prochein ami.)" Story, Eq. Pl. § 57. If the appointment was not made, the defendant could demur or put in a plea in abatement. Id. §§ 494, 725.

The common-law rule is stated by Tidd as follows: "An infant, or person under the age of twenty-one years, not being capable of appointing an attorney, must sue by his prochein ami or guardian. * * * An infant defendant must in all cases appear and defend by guardian. * * * If he appear by attorney, it is error; though, if an infant plaintiff appear by attorney, it is cured by the statute of jeofails." Tidd, Pr. (9th Ed.) 99.

It will be observed that the main reason given by these two learned authors is that the infant cannot appoint an attorney. The appointment of an attorney was one of the acts of an infant which was absolutely void at common law. And our Code provides that "a minor cannot give a delegation of power." Civil Code, § 33. But, as will be remembered, the minor did not appoint an attorney to commence the proceedings here. He commenced them in propria persona. It is not necessary, therefore, to consider what would be the result if the contest had been commenced by an attorney for the minor. That is not the case before the court. The consent of the minor himself, in submitting to the jurisdiction of the court, and applying to it for relief, does not seem to us to have been of no effect whatever, or, in other words, absolutely void; for the acts of minors are in general voidable merely, and are absolutely void only in certain cases. If this be so, then the court had jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter; and hence its action, however erroneous, was not void.

In the passage above quoted, Tidd makes a distinction between infant plaintiffs and infant defendants. It would seem that this distinction was made by St. 21 Jac. I. c. 13, § 2, which provided that, after verdict for the plaintiff, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed by reason that the plaintiff in ejectment, or other personal action or suit, being an infant under 21 years, did appear by attorney therein. See Drago v. Moso, 1 Speer, 212; Smith v. Van Houten, 9 N. J. Law, 382. This difference between action taken by the infant himself, and action taken in hostility to him, may be founded in reason. It was acted on in Tremper v. Barton, 18 Ohio, 425. It is unnecessary in this case, however, to say what would be the law with reference to infant defendants appearing and defending without a guardian ad litem. With reference to plaintiffs, it has been frequently held in this country that the want of a next friend or guardian ad litem does not go to the jurisdiction, but is a mere irregularity.

Thus in Fellows v. Niver, 18 Wend. 563, where a prochein ami was appointed after the commencement of the suit, a motion to set aside the proceedings was denied, the court saying: "The only difference between the former statutes and the present is this: Formerly the prochein ami was appointed after the issuing of the process, but before a declaration; now, it should be done before process; but now, as formerly, it is a question of regularity merely, not, as the defendant's counsel supposes, a question of jurisdiction. It is a question of practice, and the irregularity may be waived under the present statutes as well as under the old statutes."

So in Bartlett v. Batts, 14 Ga. 541, where a next friend was appointed for an infant plaintiff after the commencement of the action, the court refused to set aside the verdict, saying: "It seems very safe to say that a suit commenced and prosecuted by an infant alone is not absolutely void; and, although defective in wanting a next friend, the defect is one which before verdict is amendable, and after verdict is cured."

So in Hufern v. Davis, 10 Wis. 502, where the plaintiff signed her complaint in her own name, and proceeded without the appointment of a next friend, the court, per DIXON, C. J., said: "All objections not going to the merits of the action or defense seem to be swept out of existence. Section 40 of chapter 125 provides: 'The court shall in every stage of an action disregard any error or defect in the pleadings or proceedings which shall not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party; and no judgment shall be reversed or affected by reason of any such error or defect.' This is evidently an error or defect which does not affect the substantial rights of the plaintiff in error." The foregoing cannot be said to be a decision, for the case was reversed on another ground. The dictum, however, was approved and followed in Sabine v. Fisher, 37 Wis. 376. In that case there was no guardian ad litem or next friend appointed for the plaintiff. On the trial the defendant moved to dismiss on this ground, but the court thereupon appointed a guardian ad litem, and denied the motion to dismiss. On appeal the judgment was affirmed, the court, per RYAN, C. J., saying: "There is no error in the leave given to respondent to amend, so as to prosecute the suit by her next friend. Had she proceeded without leave, the judgment could not be reversed on that ground. Hafern v. Davis, 10 Wis. 501." And the foregoing cases were approved and followed in Hepp v. Huefner, 61 Wis. 150, 20 N. W. Rep. 923. And to the same effect are other cases: Young v. Young, 3 N. H. 345; Blood v. Harrington, 8 Pick. 554; Schemerhorn v. Jenkins, 7 Johns. 373; Kidd v. Mitchell, 1 Nott & M. 334; Smart v. Haring, 14 Hun, 276; Sims v. New York College, 35 Hun, 344. And compare Brooke v. Clark, 57 Tex. 112.

We do not regard the case of Townsend v. Tallant, 33 Cal. 52, as inconsistent with this conclusion. That was a case with reference to a sale of real estate under the direction of the probate court. It may very well be that a special proceeding by an administrator to divest the heir of title to real property is to be differently regarded. Nor do we think that section 1307 of the Code of Civil Procedure affects the question.

3. It is suggested that the court may have set aside the verdict upon its own motion, under section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that the jury acted "under a misapprehension of the instructions, or under the influence of passion or prejudice." But it is sufficient to say that it appears from the bill of exceptions that the order setting aside the verdict was not made at the time of its rendition, nor was it made upon the court's own motion, but on the formal written application of the proponent. And, furthermore, the opinion of the court shows the grounds on which it acted. It is true that this opinion is not a part of the record. But, when counsel prints a document in his brief, he must not be surprised if, so far as he is concerned, it is treated as properly before the court. Mott v. Reyes, 45 Cal. 386.

It may be added, although the point is not distinctly made, that the case cannot be treated as one of a motion for new trial granted, or sustainable on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The notice of motion states that it was to be made on the minutes of the court, but contains no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence. In such case the statute expressly provides that the motion shall be denied. Code Civil Proc. § 659, subd. 4. This being so, the contestant was not required to insert any evidence in the bill of exceptions settled after the order.

We therefore advise that the order be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment upon the verdict in favor of the contestant.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, order reversed, and cause remanded, with direction to the court below to enter judgment upon the verdict in favor of contestant.

Ex parte McNALLY, on Habeas Corpus. (No. 20,336.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 29, 1887.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—ORDINANCE IMPOSING LICENSE FOR SALE OF LIQUOR—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Const. Cal. § 11, art. 11, provides that "any * * * city * * * may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws." Petitioner was convicted of misdemeanor for violating a city ordinance, in refusing to pay a license fee of $200 per year for carrying on his business as saloon keeper. Held, that the ordinance was not in violation of that section of the constitution.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

On habeas corpus. Superior court, Nevada county; J. M. WALLING, Judge. Horace L. Smith, for petitioner. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The petitioner is a person carrying on the business of selling spirituous, malt, or fermented liquors or wines within the corporate limits of the city of Eureka, in this state. He was convicted by a jury of a misdemeanor, for violating an ordinance of said city, in refusing to pay a license to carry on his business, was fined by the court, and is in the custody of the sheriff, according to the sentence of that tribunal for non-payment of his fine, and has sued out a writ of habeas corpus to obtain his liberty.

It is claimed on his behalf that the ordinance which imposed the license in question was in violation of some of the provisions of the state constitution, but with this contention we cannot agree. In section 11, art. 11, of that instrument it is provided that "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." There is no general law which conflicts with the ordinance. There is nothing in it which goes to show that in enacting and enforcing it the city authorities of Eureka exceeded their powers granted by that section of the constitution. The mere fact that the defendant was required to pay a license tax of $50 per quarter, or $200 per year, does not demonstrate it. It does not otherwise appear but what that amount was necessary in order properly to regulate the business of liquor selling, by confining it, perchance, to fewer and more responsible persons, or in some other way tending to the preservation and enforcement of good order, and the general welfare of the inhabitants of that city. Nor is there anything in the ordinance which is oppressive, or unreasonable towards or prohibitory of the business of retailing spirituous liquors. Ex parte Wolters, 65 Cal. 270, 3 Pac. Rep. 894; In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 88-95, 10 Pac. Rep. 261, and cases cited.

The writ should be dismissed, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the writ is dismissed, and petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff.

NEWELL and others v. DESMOND. (No. 9,589.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 3, 1887.)

1. EXECUTION—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS FROM DEBTOR—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

In an action of replevin brought by a claimant of property which had been levied upon as the property of one Cadman, under a judgment against him in favor of one Sutton, the court charged the jury that if they "should find that the property levied on in the action of Sutton v. Cadman was not in existence at the time of the alleged transfer by Cadman to the plaintiff, then there could not have been a change of possession as to that property, and the provisions of the Civil Code, § 3440, in reference to a change of possession, would not apply, and the transfer would be valid, even as against creditors, without reference to the question of change of possession." Held correct.

2. SAME—CLAIM BY THIRD PARTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a sheriff levied upon goods in a book store, as the property of one Cadman, and claimant brought an action of replevin against the sheriff, and it appeared that there had previously been a sale of the store by Cadman to claimant, but that Cadman still worked in the store as before, and defendant claimed that there had been no such change of possession as would give the claimant title against a levying creditor, held, that the burden of proof rested upon defendant to show that the goods levied upon had belonged to the judgment debtor.

3. DEPOSITIONS—DEPONENT PRESENT IN COURT.

A deposition taken under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2021, subd. 1, may be read although the deponent is present in court; as section 2032 expressly provides "if the deposition be taken under subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of section 2021, proof must be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, or is dead." And the only reason for enumerating these subdivisions is to permit the depositions taken under subdivision 1 to be read though the deponent be in court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAS. G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

This was an action of replevin against a sheriff, to recover goods seized upon execution. One Sutton had obtained a judgment against one Cadman, who had been the owner and manager of a book store, but who, some time previous to this judgment, had sold, in good faith, to one of the plaintiffs, an interest therein. The firm then became Cadman & Fay, Cadman continuing to act in his usual capacity. Shortly after, plaintiff Newell succeeded Cadman, but the new firm continued to employ the latter, and he apparently occupied his usual place in the business. All of the books which were levied upon, except about $40 worth, according to Cadman's uncontradicted testimony, were new stock, placed in the store after Cadman sold out, and after the stock bought from him had been sold. Defendant claimed that there had been no such open and apparent change of possession as would make the sale by Cadman valid against his creditors. The court below instructed the jury that if they "should find that the property levied on in the action of Sutton v. Cadman was not in existence at the time of the alleged transfer by Cadman to Fay and to Mrs. Newell, then there could not have been a change of possession as to that property, and the provisions of the Civil Code, § 3440, in reference to change of possession, would not apply, and the transfer would be valid, even as against creditors, without reference to the question of change of possession."

Henry E. Highton, Calhoun Benham, and T. W. Carter, for appellant. W. B. Tyler, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. We think the court did not err in overruling the objections to the deposition of plaintiff Fay, on the ground that Fay was present in the court when the deposition was read. The deposition was taken at the instance of defendant, under section 2021, Code Civil Proc., subd. 1. It is expressly provided in section 2032, Code Civil Proc.: "If the deposition be taken under subdivisions 2, 3, and 4 of section 2021, proof must be made at the trial that the witness continues absent or infirm, or is dead." Subdivision 5 relates to cases where the oral examination is not required. Subdivision 6 expressly provides that the deposition authorized to be taken by it shall not be used if the presence of the witness can be had. The sole purpose of enumerating the subdivisions at all, in section 2032, was to provide that the deposition authorized by subdivision 1 could be read without showing the absence of the witness.

The verdict of the jury establishes the fact that the sales made by Cadman were bona fide. As to the necessity of delivery and a continued change of possession under the circumstances, the law is correctly stated in the instructions given by the court.

There was no evidence on the part of defendant that any of the books levied upon ever belonged to Cadman & Fay. Cadman testified for plaintiff that none of the books taken were on hand when the transfer was made, except one set of the value of $40. The burden of proof on this point was on the defendant. The verdict cannot be disturbed on this ground.

There was evidence which tended strongly to prove actual fraud in both transfers made by Cadman, but this was left to the jury under proper instructions, and their verdict was for plaintiff.

Order affirmed.

AUZERAIS v. NAGLEE. (No. 8,798.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 5, 1887.)

1. ACCOUNT STATED—ACTION ON—BILL OF PARTICULARS.

In an action upon an account stated, defendants demanded a copy of the account mentioned as sued upon, and in reply plaintiff furnished an account in which defendant was charged with a gross amount as a stated account, and interest thereon, and was credited with some payments, but no bill of particulars accompanied the account. Defendant's motion for a further account of the items sued for was refused. Held, that this ruling was correct, as the action was upon account stated, and no bill of particulars was necessary.

2. SAME—REFUSAL TO FURNISH BILL OF ITEMS NOT PREJUDICIAL.

Where it appeared that, previous to a demand for a bill of items of the amounts claimed by plaintiff from defendant, plaintiff had furnished such a bill as an original statement of his account against defendant, and defendant, at the time of the demand, had such original accounts in court, he was not prejudiced by a ruling refusing the order to furnish a bill of items.

3. SAME—EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN LETTER.

A letter written to defendant by plaintiff, who claimed an account stated was introduced by defendant to show that the account was not stated, and read as follows: "We would call your attention to your unsettled account. The balance due is $2,326.85. Please call and settle same, and oblige * * *" Held, that it was not error to allow the writer to explain that he used the word "unsettled" in the sense of "unpaid," and not as opposed to an account stated or agreed upon.

4. SAME—INTEREST.

In California, when it is shown to be the custom of a merchant to charge interest after 30 days upon monthly balances due upon open account, and where such account showing the interest charged regularly is received and understood by the debtor, and the account becomes stated, the debtor is bound to pay the balance due as in the account stated, with interest.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACCOUNT STATED—WHEN STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.

Where the statute of limitations has not run upon the items in an account at the time of the statement thereof, the statement creates a new cause of action, and the statute only runs thereon from the time of the account stated.

6. SAME—ACKNOWLEDGMENT IN WRITING.

Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 360, providing that no acknowledgment of an indebtedness is sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of limitations, unless the acknowledgment be in writing, and signed by the person making it, an acknowledgment in the handwriting of the debtor in the form of a receipt, as follows: "Received December 8, 1880, of Henry M. Naglee, $1,000, on account of the within," and signed by the creditor,—is sufficient to remove the bar as to the debtor, Naglee, named therein.¹ TEMPLE and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; DAVID BELDEN, Judge.

Wm. Matthews, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The complaint in this cause contains three counts or causes of action,—one upon an account stated, as of January, 1880, and the others for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered to defendant subsequent to said last mentioned date. The action was brought July 29, 1881. Defendant, in addition to the denials contained in his answer, interposed a plea of the statute of limitations to the first count, claiming the cause of action to be barred by the provision of section 339, Code Civil Proc., (two years.) Plaintiff had a verdict and judgment for $1,531.82, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

¹As to what is a sufficient acknowledgment of an indebtedness to remove the bar of the statute, see Jordan v. Jordan, (Tenn.) 3 S. W. Rep. 896, and note.

After service of summons and complaint, the defendant demanded in writing a copy of the account mentioned as sued upon in the first count of the complaint, and, in reply to such demand, plaintiff furnished to defendant an account in which defendant was charged with amount due on stated account, January 1, 1880, $2,674.90, to which interest was added, and from which sundry payments were deducted, etc., but without giving in detail the items of the original account going to make up the amount. Defendant moved the court for a further account, which was refused, upon the ground that in an action on an account stated, no account need be furnished under the law. To this ruling the defendant excepted, and the action of the court is assigned as error.

The first count or cause of action set out in the complaint, and upon which a copy of the account was demanded, is upon an account stated. A stated account is an agreement between both parties that all the items are true; but this agreement may be implied from circumstances, as where merchants reside in different places, and one sends an account to the other, who makes no objection to it within a reasonable time. Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 267; 1 Waite, Act. & Def. 191-198. In such cases the action is based upon the agreement, which has all the force of a contract. The original account becomes the consideration for the agreement, and it is not necessary to prove the items of such account, nor can they be inquired into or surcharged except for some fraud, error, or mistake, and such grounds must be according to the weight of authority set forth in the pleadings. Kronenberger v. Binz, 56 Mo. 121; Threlked v. Dobbins, 45 Ga. 144; Sutphen v. Cushman, 35 Ill. 186; Horan v. Long, 11 Tex. 230; Phillips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. 1; Hawkins v. Long, 74 N. C. 781; Kock v. Bonitz, 4 Daily, N. Y. 117; Slee v. Bloom, 20 Johns. 669.

The balance found due upon a stated account is principal; it cannot be re-examined (except for fraud or mistake) to ascertain the items or their character. McClelland v. West, 70 Pa. St. 183. The object of a bill of particulars is to apprise a party of the specific demand of his adversary. People v. Monroe, 4 Wend. 200; Matthews v. Hubbard, 47 N. Y. 428. This being true, it is difficult to discern how, upon principle, a defendant is entitled, under section 454, Code Civil Proc., to a copy of the original account upon which the contract in an action on a stated account is based. The term "stated account" is but an expression to convey the idea of a contract, having an account for its consideration, and is no more an account than is a promissory note or other contract having a like consideration for its support.

The Code of Civil Procedure (section 454) by its terms makes it unnecessary for a party declaring upon an account to set forth the items in his pleading, but requires him, on demand, to furnish a copy of the account thus pleaded, under penalty of being precluded from giving evidence thereof, in case of refusal. In an action on an account stated, it is not necessary to prove the account, or any of its items, but the proof in such a case is directed to the fact that the parties have accounted together, and agreed upon the balance due, (insimul computassent,) and, in an action on the original account, it has been held that a plea of an account stated, if supported, will bar a recovery. Driggs v. Garretson, 25 N. J. Eq. 178.

In the language of Waite, in his work on Actions and Defenses, (volume 6, p. 430,) an accounting "when accomplished, does not necessarily exclude all inquiry into the rectitude of the account. The parties may still impeach it for fraud or mistake, but, so long as it is not impeached, the agreed statement serves in place of the original account as the foundation of an action. It becomes an original demand, and amounts to an express promise to pay the actual sum stated. The creditor becomes entitled to recover the agreed balance in an action based upon the fact of its acknowledgment by the debtor upon an adjustment of their respective claims."

The penalty for refusing to furnish an account is that the party refusing to so furnish it shall be precluded from proving it, but it can have no application to a case where, as in an action on an account stated, he is not required to prove the account. We are therefore of opinion the court below did not err in denying defendant's motion for a further account.

Again, as before stated, the object in requiring an account is to enable the opposite party to make a defense to the cause of action based on such account. The defendant in this cause, as appears by the record, was in possession of the original accounts rendered him by the plaintiff, and, on notice of the latter, produced them in court. If, therefore, we concede the court to have been wrong in its ruling, the defendant was not injured thereby, and the judgment should not for that cause be reversed.

It is next urged that the court erred in permitting the witness Pomeroy to explain "what was the meaning of the word 'unsettled,' as used by him in his letter of July 26, 1880." Defendant, on cross-examination of this witness, had presented him with Exhibit Q, being a letter from plaintiff and his grantor to defendant, as follows:

"Gen. H. M. Naglee: We would call your attention to your unsettled account, the balance due us being $2,326.35. Please call and settle same, and oblige Yours, very truly, AUZERAIS & POMEROY."

"The firm of Auzerais & Pomeroy having been dissolved, we are anxious to have all our accounts settled, and we will be greatly obliged if you give us above.
E. AUZERAIS, Liq. P."

The testimony was further directed to showing that the unsettled account referred to in the letter was the very account which plaintiff had claimed and testified was settled. On redirect examination the witness was permitted to explain that he used the term "unsettled" in the sense of "unpaid," and the term "settle" in the sense of "pay." Bouvier defines the word "settle," "to adjust or ascertain; to pay. Two contracting parties are said to settle an account when they ascertain what is justly due by one to the other. When one pays the balance or debt due by him he is said to settle such debt or balance;" citing Houston v. Stanton, 11 Ala. (N. S.) 419.

We think there can be little doubt but that the term "settle" has a double meaning, and is used alike to denote an adjustment of a demand and a payment. This being so, it was proper for the author of the letter containing the declaration to explain in which of the two senses he used the expression. In other words, there was an ambiguity upon the face of the instrument which it was competent not to contradict, but to explain. Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50; Railroad Co. v. Bank, 19 Wall. 548; Jenny Lind Co. v. Bower, 11 Cal. 194; Harnickell v. Brown, 45 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 350; 2 Whart. Ev. §§ 954, 955. There is in this view nothing in conflict with the provisions of sections 1858, 1859, 1861, Code Civil Proc.

It is further urged that the court erred in holding that the cause of action accrued at the date the account was stated between the parties, (if in fact stated,) and that, therefore, the statute did not apply to any item after January 31, 1878, two years before the alleged statement; and that the court also erred in holding that by silence or acquiescence, or concurrence by unwritten words in the correction of the account, the defendant could become liable to pay larger interest than 7 per cent. per annum. An open account already barred by the statute of limitations cannot be relieved from the bar of such statute by an oral statement of such account, for the reason that, under our Code, (Code Civil Proc. § 360,) no acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take the case out of the operation of the statute, unless the same is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby. Where, however, the demand is not barred at the date of the account stated, although the statement is verbal, the statute begins to run upon the new cause of action thus brought into existence from the date of the settlement, and new promise arising thereunder, and, if verbal, an action may, under subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civil Proc., be brought within two years after such settlement.

In the language of Angell, (Ang. Lim. § 150:) "For the moment it becomes a stated account, it is at an end; and the balance, which is ascertained and admitted to be due, from one party to the other, is immediately subjected to the operation of the statute, as an original and separate demand. * * * When the parties have stated, liquidated, and adjusted their accounts, and thus ascertained the balance, it ceases to be an account, and has lost the peculiar attributes of an account. What was before an implied promise to pay what was reasonable, by such liquidation and stating of account, at once becomes an express promise to pay a sum certain." McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. 337. The statute begins to run, in cases of adjustment, when the adjustment is made. Ex parte Storer, 2 Ware, 294; Higgs v. Warner, 14 Ark. 192; Brackenridge v. Baltzell, 1 Cart. (Ind.) 333. So, too, the balance of an old account, when found and assented to, may become the first item in a new account. It was said by Chief Justice NORTH in Farrington v. Lee, 1 Mod. 270: "If, after an account stated, upon the balance of it a sum appear due to either of the parties, which sum is not paid, but is afterwards thrown into a new account, it is now slipped out of the statute again." Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. 96; Ang. Lim. § 151; Clarke v. Jenkins, 3 Rich. Eq. 314.

There was also evidence showing that on the eighth day of December, 1880, the defendant paid to plaintiff, upon the account rendered him, the sum of $1,000, which is evidenced by a receipt on the back of the account, in the handwriting of defendant, (except the signature thereto,) as follows:

"Received December 8, 1880, of Henry M. Naglee, $1,000 on account of the within.
E. AUZERALS, Liquidating Partner."

Respondent contends that this part payment, evidenced by a writing, in which the name of Naglee appears under his own hand, is a sufficient signing, under the statute, (section 360, Code Civil Proc.,) to suspend its operation; and in support of his contention cites Barron v. Kennedy, 17 Cal. 514; Pena v. Vance, 21 Cal. 142; Fairbanks v. Dawson, 9 Cal. 89; Rowe v. Thompson, 15 Abb. Pr. 377; Holmes v. Mackrell, 3 C. B. (N. S.) 789; Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 Mees. & W. 653.

The part payment was evidenced by a writing. It was in the handwriting of defendant. His signature was contained therein. The statute does not require the party to subscribe his name, and it is sufficient if it be evident from any part of the instrument of acknowledgment that the debtor named in it has given to it his assent; and, as was said in Rowe v. Thompson, supra: "As the legal definition of the word 'signed' is the act whereby a person gives or declares assent by name, sign, or mark, it follows that it is enough, if it appears in the body or upon the margin or elsewhere of the instrument, that such assent has been given. If the attestation appears anywhere upon the face of the writing it is sufficient, and the party thus attesting is bound as effectually as if he had subscribed his name at the foot."

Johnson v. Dodgson, supra, was a case under the statute of frauds, in which the latter, it appeared, had made out a memorandum in his own handwriting, and required it to be signed by the vendor as follows:

"LEEDS, nineteenth October, 1836.
"Sold John Dodgson: 27 pockets Playsted, (hops,) 1836, Sussex, at 103s.," etc.

Signed for JOHNSTON, JOHNSTON & Co.

"D. MOORE."

This was held sufficient to charge Dodgson, as the body of it was in his handwriting and contained his name.

Upon the same principle, we may say here, the body of the instrument showing a part payment is in the handwriting of defendant, who is the party charged, and contains his name. We think the evidence was sufficient to bind defendant.

Next, could the defendant become liable, under the evidence, upon a stated account for a rate of interest in excess of legal interest? It appears from the record that interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month was charged, and is included in the stated account. There was also a question as to a further sum charged as compound interest, but which was deducted by plaintiff upon protest of defendant, and that question is not necessarily involved.

In Marye v. Strouse, 6 Sawy. 205, a case in most respects similar to this, HILLYER, J., held that where a statute like our own, which does no more than prohibit a recovery of interest beyond the legal rate, when the contract is not in writing, but does not otherwise make the rate of interest unlawful, interest in excess of that rate may be included in an account stated and recovered. The case proceeds upon the theory that the interest as charged, being known and assented to by the debtor, and not being in violation of any positive law, affords a sufficient consideration for the new promise involved in an account stated.

The custom of merchants in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia to charge interest on their accounts after six months is judicially noticed in the Pennsylvania courts. Koons v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 271; Watt v. Hoch, 25 Pa. St. 411; Adams v. Palmer, 30 Pa. St. 346. And evidence of usage has rendered charges for interest under such circumstances recoverable at law. Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. 611; Knox v. Jones, 2 Dall. 193.

In Raymond v. Isham, 8 Vt. 263, it was said: "From the practice which has generally obtained in this state, (Vermont,) from the known usage and custom of Mr. Raymond, (the creditor,) as well as other merchants, to cast interest on their accounts after six months, we think there was an implied contract on the part of Dr. Isham to pay interest after the usual time of credit."

In McAllister v. Reab, 4 Wend. 483, the court said: "We do not think the charge of interest on any part of the account objectionable. The plaintiff proved that the defendant was one of his customers, and that he always charged interest on his accounts after ninety days."

The uniform custom of a merchant or manufacturer is presumed to be known to those who are in the habit of dealing with him, and in their dealings are supposed to act with reference to that custom. Meech v. Smith, 7 Wend. 315; Reab v. McAlister, 8 Wend. 109; Backus v. Minor, 3 Cal. 231.

Where a banker and his customer have carried on their business for a series of years in a particular way, it will be assumed there is an agreement to that effect, and the principle involved will be held binding in any subsequent disagreement between them. Mosse v. Salt, 32 Beav. 269; Ciancarty v. Latouche, 1 Ball & B. 420.

These were cases in which only legal interest was charged, but it was allowed upon unliquidated demands where, but for the custom or pursuant to an agreement, no interest could have been recovered. The deduction is that, there being no positive law to the contrary, the payment of interest may be the subject of contract, express or implied, in cases where, but for such contract, no interest could be recovered. In this state we are of opinion that when, as in the present case, it is shown to be the universal custom of a merchant to charge interest after 30 days upon monthly balances due upon open account, and where such account showing the interest charged up regularly is received by the debtor and fully understood by him, and where such account becomes stated, either by the prolonged failure of the debtor to object thereto, or by a settlement and adjustment thereof between the parties, a new contract arises between such parties, and the debtor is bound to pay the balance found due, and no inquiry is permissible as to the items beyond the defense of the statute of limitations, and that of fraud, error, or mistake. There is no plea of fraud, error, or mistake, and no showing in support of such plea had it been interposed. It follows from these views that the instructions given were correct.

The testimony upon the question of an accounting was conflicting, and the verdict of the jury is conclusive in this court.

We are of opinion the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur. If it be conceded that it was error to permit the witness Pomeroy to explain the meaning of the word "unsettled," still it was harmless. The letter itself shows clearly that the word was used in the sense stated by the witness. The item of interest, like any other item included in the account as stated, could be attacked only upon an allegation showing fraud, error, or mistake.

TEMPLE, J. I dissent. Under our statute a custom which would prove an agreement to pay more than legal interest is against law. I also think that assent to an account stated does not take the account from the operation of the statute of limitations. The cases which hold that the account stated is a new promise, and the statute begins to run from that time, have no force here, where the acknowledgment must be in writing.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. The motion of the defendant for a further and more particular copy of the account sued on was denied by the court below "on the ground that in an action on an account stated no account need be furnished under the law." The statute on this subject is section 454, Code Civil Proc.: "It is not necessary for a party to set forth in a pleading the items of an account therein alleged, but he must deliver to the adverse party, within five days after a demand thereof in writing, a copy of the account, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. The court or judge thereof may order a further account when the one delivered is too general, or is defective in any particular." The bill of items or particulars furnished on the action was of the most general character, and the defendant followed the usual practice in moving for one more particular. Providence T. Co. v. Prader, 32 Cal. 638. The account furnished was not a copy of the account sued on as an account stated, but something entirely different. The question to be determined is whether, in an action on an account stated, a defendant is entitled to a bill of particulars, or, as it is sometimes styled, a bill of items. Certainly the demand of defendant comes within the statute, for an account is alleged in the first count of the complaint. I cannot see that it makes any difference as to the right to make the demand that the pleader counts on an account stated, unless it is held that an account stated is not an account, and I cannot perceive that it can be so held.

In New York, where the statute is the same as regards this point as that of this state, (Code Proc. N. Y. § 158,) it was held by the superior court of New York that the account alleged in a pleading, the refusal to deliver a copy of which by the party alleging it precludes him from giving evidence of it under the Code of Procedure, (section 158,) is some written instrument existing before the commencement of the action, evidence of the existence and contents of which is material to the party alleging it; in other words, an account claimed to have been rendered and acquiesced in; that is, an account stated. Johnson v. Mallory, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 681, in which cause the point is directly decided. See, also, Barkley v. Railroad Co., 27 Hun, 516. In the last case cited the court said: "In ordinary language, the word 'account' is applied to almost any claim or contract which consists of several items. And there is no necessity for giving any limited meaning to the word as it is used in section 531, Code Civil Proc." For section 531, see Bliss, Ann. Code, N. Y. 396. Section 531 seems to have been enacted in place of section 158, above mentioned, of the New York Code.

In Brown v. Calvert, 4 Dana, 220, which was an action of assumpsit, the declaration containing only the general counts, (of which it may be said a count upon an account stated is one,) the court said: "Whenever the form of the declaration is so general as not to apprise the defendant of the nature, character, and extent of the claim set up against him, he may demand a bill of particulars. Such a bill is not only proper, by way of limiting the plaintiff in his proof to the specific demands claimed by him, but is essential to enable the defendant to prepare fully for his defense, and to guard him against surprise. The right is not only sanctioned by authority, but by reason and propriety."

In Johnson v. Mallory, supra, it is said that the provision of the statute above referred to "can only be construed to be intended to point out the mode of pleading an account, as well as to ascertain what account was intended." 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 683.

In Smith v. Hicks, 5 Wend. 51, it is held that a bill of particulars is sufficiently definite if it apprise the other side of the evidence that is to be offered, so that he cannot mistake as to his preparation to resist the claim. The office of a bill of particulars is to apprise a party of the specific demands of the adverse party when the pleadings are general, and leave uncertain what is particularly demanded, either in the complaint or answer. People v. Monroe, 4 Wend. 200; Drake v. Thayer, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 694. The bill of particulars is considered and construed as an amplification of the pleading to which it relates, and in that sense forming a part of it. Bowman v. Earle, 3 Duer, 691; Chrysler v. James, 1 Hill, 214; Brown v. Williams, 4 Wend. 360, 368; Starkweather v. Kittle, 17 Wend. 20; Gay v. Cary, 9 Cow. 44; Ryckman v. Haight, 15 Johns. 222.

The above cases show that the defendant is entitled to a bill of particulars, when the complaint is general, to enable him to prepare to resist the claim on which he is sued. It should be furnished to enable the defendant to prepare his defense; and if defendant must by his answer attack the items of the account, or any of them, for fraud, error, or mistake, in order to be heard in regard to them, (and such seems to be the law in this state when the pleadings are verified; see Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 427,) then certainly he ought to have a bill delivered to him to enable him to prepare his answer assailing the items on the grounds mentioned. As to the generality of the complaint, I cannot conceive a count more general than one setting up an account stated.

As to alleging an account in a complaint, the count on an account stated is the only one of the common counts, whether in debt or assumpsit, in which an account is mentioned. See for the common counts referred to, 2 Chit. Pl. 37-114, 385-387. I have examined the forms of these counts as given by Chitty, and do not find any other count than one on the account stated, in which an account is ever alleged. In the regule generales of Trinity term (1831) it is provided that a bill of particulars shall be delivered by the plaintiff with every declaration containing counts in indebitatus assumpsit or debt on simple contract. See appendix to 1 Chit. Pl. 726, 727. It is highly probable that the sections (158 and 531) of the New York Code of Procedure and section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure in this state were framed in view of this rule of Trinity term, following what had always been the practice.

The above authorities establish, in my judgment, the true construction of the statute (Code Civil Proc. 454) in force in this state. They show that, when the complaint counts on an account stated, the defendant is entitled as a matter of right on demand to have furnished him a copy of the account or bill of items or particulars. They show that he is so entitled to enable him—First, to ascertain the account on which he is sued, Johnson v. Mallory, 2 Rob. 683; second, to prepare his defense to the claim on which the action is brought against him; third, to frame his answer so as to attack the items of it which he desires to assail for fraud, error, or mistake, and thus be enabled to offer evidence in regard to such items. The statute was framed to promote justice between and to secure a full and fair hearing to litigants, and in construing it the rule established by the Code should be followed and regarded. This rule will be found in section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is in these words: "The Code establishes the law of this state respecting all the subjects to which it relates, and its provisions and all proceedings under it are to be liberally construed, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice."

The construction of section 454 adopted in the prevailing opinion, in my judgment, is narrow and illiberal, defeats the object of the Code provision, and must result in failure to promote justice. This is said with the highest respect for the judgment of the justices who concur in it. I think the motion of the defendant for another and further copy of the account sued on, and alleged in the first count of the complaint, should have been granted, and the court erred in denying it.

In the prevailing opinion an account stated seems to be regarded as a contract, and therefore a defendant is not entitled to a copy of it when an action is brought on it. We know of no rule of law which holds that an account stated is a contract. It is only evidence of a contract,—a contract, too, implied by law. Independent of an express promise to pay the balance, ascertained by it, it can be nothing more than evidence of a contract which the law implies from circumstances.

It is also said in the prevailing opinion that "the penalty for refusing to furnish an account is that the party refusing to so furnish it shall be precluded from proving it; but it can have no application to a case where, as in an action on an account stated, he is not required to prove the account." The plaintiff is required to prove any account on which he sues when the answer of defendant puts its existence in issue. This is true of an account stated as well as any other. And in this case the defendant denied that any account was ever stated, and the plaintiff, in opening his cause, was very careful to prove it. The account furnished is not the account to be proved. The account alleged in the pleading is the one of which proof must be made. And section 454 precludes a party failing to deliver a copy of the account, not from proving the account which he is to deliver, but from giving evidence of the account alleged in the pleadings. As here, an account stated is alleged, and it is that account he is precluded by conduct "from giving evidence thereof." He is not allowed to give any evidence showing that the account counted on was ever stated, or even had an existence. In other words, as regards such account, he must go out of court,—be nonsuited.

But it is said that there should be no reversal because the defendant suffered no injury from the denial of his motion, as he had in his possession and produced on the trial the accounts which had been rendered to him. But this production occurred some time after his motion was denied. The court, when it denied the motion, had no knowledge that any account had been rendered. The defendant was then told that, as the complaint was on an account stated, the law gave him no right to have a copy of any account furnished to him. The court below seems to have taken it for granted that the mere allegation in the complaint that an account had been stated between the parties must be taken as true, and that, under such circumstances, the defendant had no right to the relief asked for, whether an account had been rendered or stated or not. The record shows that defendant's motion was denied on the thirtieth of September, 1881, and the accounts referred to were produced on a trial which commenced on the nineteenth of December following, 80 days after the denial of the motion. If the defendant had lost or mislaid the account which seems to have been rendered more than a year before suit brought, and he had to assail particular items of the account in his answer, it would have been a hard case upon him to have to plead without having the account to show to his counsel, that he might by answer attack any items objected to. But in fact, as shown above, the defendant had a right to ascertain on what account he was sued, so as to make preparation by pleading and procuring his proof to resist the claim in suit. He had a right to have the account, even if he had it in his possession when making the demand under the statute, identified as the account which he had to meet, so that he might not be put to conjecture what account he had to answer to and furnish evidence against. If the plaintiff had, in reply to his demand, stated in writing that the account alleged in the complaint referred to the account rendered him at such a date, (specifying it,) I think it would have been sufficient unless the defendant had destroyed or lost or mislaid the account rendered. In such case of destruction or loss or mislaying, the defendant ought, on motion, to have had allowed him a copy of the account sued on. But the record furnishes conclusive evidence that the defendant was injured by this ruling.

The defendant offered evidence to impeach the correctness of certain items claimed to be in the account sued on as an account stated. The items mentioned were items of interest, and an account of Naglee & Mills charged to defendant against his objection. The same evidence was also offered to show that certain items sued for were barred by the statute of limitations. To this offer plaintiff objected upon the ground that the defendant had only denied that the account had been stated, and had not attacked the statement for fraud or mistake, and that the testimony was not admissible under the pleadings. The court admitted the evidence as to the defense of the statute of limitations only, and excluded it for all other purposes, thus sustaining the objection of plaintiff with the exception above stated. That the defendant suffered injury we think is clear. He was deprived of the means which the law afforded him of ascertaining what account he was sued on, so that he might in his answer have assailed the items he intended to impeach, and when afterwards he comes to offer his impeaching evidence he is told that his answer is defective in not attacking such items, and his evidence must therefore be excluded. We have no doubt that the court erred to the injury of defendant in denying his motion for the account. And, further, that, having denied this motion, when the defendant offered evidence to impeach items of the account for error or mistake, the court erred in excluding the evidence. No principle of law authorizes a court to deny to a defendant the means of properly setting forth his defense in his answer, and, when he afterwards endeavors to make such defense, to deprive him of it and reject it because he has not properly set it forth.

I concur with what is said by Justice TEMPLE, that, under our statute, a custom which would prove an agreement to pay more than legal interest is against law. I also agree with him that an assent to an account stated does not, under the statute of limitations of this state, take the account from the operation of the statute. The very point, in my opinion, has been adjudged in Weathervax v. Consumnes V. M. Co., 17 Cal. 345. See Wood, Lim. § 280. Nor do I think that the writing relied on, viz.: "Received December 8, 1880, of Henry M. Naglee, one thousand dollars on account of the within,"—was an acknowledgment signed by the defendant, as required by the statute. It could not be held to be signed by defendant for the reason that he did not intend to sign anything. Where in an olographic will, commencing with the pronoun "I" and followed by the testator's name, such name has been held a signing of the will, it was so held, because the court was satisfied that it was so intended by the writer. If anything appears on the face of the writing showing that the testator did not intend his name so written to be his signature, it would not be so held. Here there is nothing showing that the defendant intended his name to be a signature to anything. He never could have supposed that he was signing an acknowledgment of a debt. In fact, in writing the above words, he was doing what he had a right to demand the party to whom he paid the money should do, viz., to furnish him with a written receipt for the money.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the judgment and order should be reversed.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO v. LIVERPOOL, L. & G. INS. CO.
(No. 11,945.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 10, 1887.)

1. TAXATION—POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO TAX FOR LOCAL PURPOSES—TAX ON INSURANCE PREMIUMS—FOREIGN COMPANY.

Const. Cal. art. 11, § 12, provides that "the legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, or towns, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or municipal purposes; but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes." Pol. Code Cal. § 616, subd. 1, provides that every agent of a foreign insurance company shall at certain times pay to the treasurer of a county or city a percentage of the premiums received on property insured by him within the county or city, the money to constitute a fireman's relief fund, to be expended by the governing body of the fire department of the city or county. Plaintiff sued the defendant, a foreign insurance corporation, to recover $414.36 under the provisions of this act. Held, that the fact that defendant was a foreign corporation did not authorize the legislature to exercise a power denied to it by the constitution, and that a law passed in violation of it would be ultra vires, and as void when it operated upon a foreign corporation as on a citizen.

2. SAME—MUNICIPAL PURPOSE—FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND.

Held, also, that the object of the fund, if a public one at all, was a municipal purpose.

3. SAME—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—TAX ON PREMIUMS IN ADDITION TO LICENSE.

Pol. Code Cal. §§ 622-624, provides certain prescribed conditions under which foreign insurance companies can do business in California. These statutes were in force at the time of the passage of the act (Pol. Code Cal. § 616, subd. 1) imposing a tax on premiums collected, and have not been amended or repealed. Held, that when a business is first licensed, and then by a subsequent law subjected to a license in the form of a tax, the last law not intimating that the previous license is withdrawn unless the imposition is paid, the presumption is strong that the exaction is for revenue, and was not intended as a condition.

4. SAME—TAX FOR REVENUE—FOR PURPOSES OF REGULATION.

When a tax is partly for revenue, and partly imposed under the police power of the state, it must conform to the limitations under the taxing power, except so far as a departure is necessary to make it regulative or prohibitory.

5. SAME—IMPLIED ASSENT TO UNCONSTITUTIONAL ACT.

When a foreign corporation continues to do business after the passage of an act in relation to it, which is unconstitutional, no implied assent on the part of the corporation can be claimed to the illegal condition imposed by such act.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Stanley, Stoney & Hayes, John Lord Love, and John Garber, for plaintiff and respondent. A. L. Hart and E. W. McGraw, for appellants. Alexander and Isaac Joseph, amici curiæ.

TEMPLE, J. This action is brought to recover $441.36, with interest, under an act of the legislature entitled "An act to require the payment of certain premiums to counties, and cities and counties, by fire insurance companies not organized under the laws of California, but doing business therein, and providing for the disposition of such premiums." An answer was filed to the complaint, and thereupon on motion judgment was rendered for the plaintiff on the pleadings, from which defendant appeals.

The act requires every agent of the insurance companies designated, to pay into the hands of the treasurer of any county, or city and county, in the state a sum equal to 1 per centum upon the amount of all premiums which, during the year, or part of the year, ending on the first Monday of September, shall have been received by such agent, or which shall have been agreed to have been paid for any insurance effected, or agreed to be effected, within the limits of such county, or city and county; the money when so paid to constitute a fund known as the "Firemen's Relief Fund," of the county, or city and county, in which the property insured is situated, and to be under the exclusive control of the fire commissioners, or other governing body of the fire departments of such county, or city and county, under such general regulations as the board of supervisors thereof may prescribe. The answer does not deny any of the material allegations of the complaint, but the defendant claims that the exaction is illegal, and that the statute imposing it is unconstitutional and void; that it is violative of various provisions of the constitution, and among them is section 12, art. 11, which reads as follows: "The legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes." If this exaction is a tax, and the purpose to which the proceeds are devoted is a county, city, town, or other municipal purpose, it is plain that it is prohibited by this section. Both propositions are denied by respondent. It is claimed that the object of the act is to prescribe a condition upon the performance of which foreign corporations shall be permitted to do business in this state; that the state may discriminate against such corporations in favor of her own citizens or domestic corporations; that as such foreign corporations have no rights under the state constitution except such as are expressly guarantied to them eo nomine as foreign corporations, that the power of the state to impose conditions is not limited by general provisions of the state constitution, and is absolute unless specifically limited, either in the federal or state constitution; and, in the absence of such limitations, foreign corporations, as such, have no rights which the state cannot touch. This claim is certainly very broad, and is derived from the proposition that corporations have no absolute right to recognition in other states, but do business in such states merely by grace, depending for the enforcement of their contracts upon the assent of those states, which may be given on such terms as they please.

It is of some interest to note here that the power of the legislature to impose conditions is as absolute over domestic as over foreign corporations. There is no natural right in our own citizens to do business in a corporate name. These home corporations act as such purely by grace, and not by right, depending absolutely upon the consent of the state for the enforcement of their contracts, and that assent may be withheld or permitted on such terms as the state shall choose. It may exclude domestic corporations entirely from the state, and, in the absence of express constitutional limitation, permit foreign corporations alone within its borders, or may impose a license tax upon domestic corporations which is not imposed upon foreign corporations. It may amend or repeal its charters at any time, or impose such new terms and conditions to the right to do business as it may see fit. This absolute power over domestic corporations was never denied or questioned, except as to the right to alter or amend the charters, and that right is clear under our constitution. The whole force and effect of the decisions cited from the federal courts is that foreign corporations are not protected by section 2, art. 10, of the federal constitution, and therefore the state may deal with corporations organized in other states as absolutely as with domestic corporations. When the courts of the United States speak of the power of the state to impose conditions upon foreign corporations, they of course have reference to federal limitations. There is no intimation that such corporations are not, when permitted to do business within a state, entitled to the protection of its laws as fully as citizens. That is not a federal question, but those courts have held that a statute of Iowa which provided that any foreign corporation which should remove a cause from a state court to a federal court should forfeit its right to do business as a corporation within the state was void. Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931. In that case the statute made it a misdemeanor for any one to act as agent for any company which had forfeited its right to do business in the state under this act. Barron was convicted under the statute, and his conviction was declared illegal by the supreme court, on the ground that no such condition could be imposed. The effect of this decision is that the permit was valid, but the condition void. Following the logic of this case, the result would seem inevitable that a condition in violation of the state constitution is simply void. Indeed, this would seem too obvious to require much discussion. The fact that the party against whom a suit is brought to collect a tax may be a foreign corporation, may be very material in determining whether the tax is prohibited by the constitution; but it could not authorize the legislature to exercise a power clearly denied to it in the constitution. Such laws are ultra vires, and as clearly void when they operate upon a foreign corporation as upon a citizen.

We come now to the inquiry, is the exaction here in question a tax? The statute itself denominates it a tax, and it must be confessed that it has all the characteristics of a tax. It is a charge imposed by the legislature for the purpose of revenue. It is not founded upon contract, and does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor. It is an enforced proportional contribution, levied by authority of the state, and, as respondent claims, for public needs. That it has all the attributes of a tax is practically admitted by the respondent, but it is sought by a very subtle process of reasoning to show that, in this particular case, it must not be regarded as a tax. However deftly it is stated, the point in all this specious logic is that, unless it be held something else than a tax, it may be unconstitutional. Laws are not to be declared unconstitutional unless clearly so, and, if two constructions are possible, and according to one the law must be held unconstitutional, and under the other construction it can be sustained, that construction must be adopted which will sustain the law. This principle is not disputed, and it is often of great value, but it must not be pressed so far as to amount to an abdication of its functions on the part of the court, nor a denial of justice to suitors. If we can clearly see that a law is beyond the power of the legislature, we must so declare. It is claimed that this is a sum paid by the corporation for the privilege of acting as such in this state, and therefore not a tax. The plausibility of the claim consists in apparently identifying this case with cases in which it is clear the exaction is a condition, and from which this is made to differ only in degree. If the condition had been that the corporation should pay a fixed sum for the privilege before it was allowed to do business at all, it would, no doubt, be held a condition, and not a tax; so, perhaps, if the license were required to be renewed at stated periods; and it has been held that, when the corporation is required to pay a percentage upon its receipts, and the payment is required to be secured by a bond before the corporation is allowed to do business in the state, this special requirement distinguishes it from ordinary taxation, and stamps its character. Trustees, etc., v. Roome, 93 N. Y. 325. So the two classes of cases, one of which is plainly taxation, and the other a sum paid for a permit, may be approximated until it is difficult or impossible to say to which class a given case may belong. These difficulties to discriminate the principles underlying different cases constantly included in different classes, and to which the same rule of decision cannot be applied, constitute the perpetual debating grounds of the law, and occasion much of the confusion in the decisions. But, as was remarked by Judge MARSHALL, because we cannot easily draw the line does not prove that there is no difference in principle. No one fails to note the contrast between the light of day and the darkness of night, but no one is able to draw the line between daylight and darkness, or note the precise instant when one ends and the other begins. I have said that the act on its face denominates the exaction a tax, and that it is imposed according to the methods of taxation. It is also manifest from the act that the chief reason of the tax is to raise money. No one can read the law without being so impressed. The purpose was to create a fund, and counsel have labored here to show that this fund was for a public, and a highly meritorious and useful, purpose.

We find in the next place that, when the statute was passed, the conditions on which foreign corporations could do business were prescribed, and very full provision had been made on the subject. Sections 622-624, Pol. Code. See, also, St. 1871-72, 826. In the act in question these statutes are not alluded to, and they have never been amended or repealed. There is nothing in the law we are considering to indicate that it was intended as a condition, except when viewed in the light of the rule requiring us to so construe it rather than to declare it void. Now, a business may be licensed, and still be subject to be taxed. A license proper is a permit to do business which could not be done without the license. It is a mere permit. It may be thus licensed, and then subject to a license tax. These licenses may not differ in form, but one is a license proper, and the other is a license tax, imposed for the purpose of revenue. This business being first licensed and then in a subsequent law subjected to a license in the form of a tax, the last law in no way intimating that the previous license is withdrawn unless the imposition is paid, the presumption is very strong that the exaction is for revenue purposes, and was not intended as a condition. It is claimed, however,—First, if the exaction be a tax, it is imposed under the police power for the purposes of regulation, and therefore not liable to the objection; and, second, if it be such a tax it is a condition, and, even if unconstitutional, the corporation could waive the objection, and did so when, after the passage of the act, it continued to do business in the state.

When the police power is appealed to to justify legislation, there seems to be an impression that all claim of constitutional limitation is at an end; but let us inquire into the matter a little. With reference to the power of taxation, the principle is about this: The framers of the organic law, when they formulated limitations upon this power, had in view the burdens of taxation. They were providing for equality and uniformity only with reference to fair and just distribution of these burdens. It is not to be presumed, however, that they intended to deprive the state of the power of self-preservation, or of accomplishing those acknowledged ends of all government,—the safety and welfare of the people. The requirement of equality applies mainly, if not entirely, to taxes upon property laid upon the ad valorem principle. As to taxes upon occupation or business, the requirement is only of uniform operation, and this requirement is satisfied when it is uniform as to the class to which the law applies. Necessarily, to impose this tax, the population must be classified as to occupations, and it is not required that all occupations shall be taxed to justify a tax upon some. Perhaps it would be impossible to accomplish the end the government has in view in imposing a tax purely regulative or prohibitory, if the legislature is bound by the requirement of uniformity. These limitations are applicable only to the power of taxation, and are, therefore, held not to limit other functions of the government where entirely different ends are in view, although it is sought to reach them by a regulation having the form of a tax. I think this tax is purely one for revenue, but, admitting that the purpose is a mixed one, still it must conform to the limitations upon the taxing power, except in so far as a departure is necessary to make it regulative or prohibitory. It could be made just as effectual as a police regulation without violating the provision of our state constitution under consideration.

As to the proposition that the corporation waived the constitutional objection by continuing to do business after the passage of the act, it is enough, in my opinion, to say that it is a mere petitio principii. If the condition be void no implied assent can be claimed.

It remains to inquire whether the tax was imposed upon the counties, cities and counties, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purpose. It was quite unnecessary to call attention to the fact that the tax is not upon a county or city as a corporation, and, unless the point had been distinctly made, it would have been thought quite unnecessary to say that it was not the purpose of the section to prohibit such impositions. The constitutional convention cannot be supposed to have thought it necessary to prohibit the legislature from imposing a tax upon a municipal corporation as such, for the use of the municipality. It may also be admitted that the defendant is not an inhabitant of the municipality, within the meaning of this provision, although this is by no means a clear proposition. It is not necessary for the case to decide it. The same may be said of the claim that the imposition is not a tax upon property. In my opinion, the purpose of the section is to relegate to the local boards the whole subject of county and municipal taxes for local purposes, and that the legislature has no power to impose any tax whatever, within those territories, for local purposes. If the purpose of the fund created by the tax is a public purpose at all, it is clearly a municipal purpose. The management and control of the fire departments have always been left to local authorities. The fact that the state at large has an interest in the efficiency of the departments does not render the end any less a municipal one. The people of the state have such an interest in all the police powers granted to these municipalities. And even if the state may exercise a concurrent supervision over a subject, still, so far as actually controlled by the local board, it is a matter of municipal concern. It is claimed by the appellant that the law is in conflict with many other provisions of our constitution, and also that, no provision being made for a suit to collect the tax, this action is without authority. Taking the view I have of the objections here discussed, it is not necessary to pass upon other objections.

I think the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

MCKINSTRY, J. I concur with Justice TEMPLE. I am of opinion also that the statute in question violates sections 31 and 32 of article 4, and section 6 of article 11, of the constitution; further, that the statute did not authorize, nor does it purport to authorize, the commencement and prosecution of the present action, and that the action is not authorized by any other law.

PEOPLE v. SCOTT (No. 20,342.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 7, 1887.)

BURGLARY—CARRYING PROPERTY INTO ANOTHER COUNTY—PLACE OF TRIAL—INFORMATION.

Although under Penal Code Cal. § 786, providing that "when property taken in one county by burglary, robbery, larceny, or embezzlement, has been brought into another, the jurisdiction of the offense is in either county," a criminal may be tried wherever he carries goods obtained by burglary, yet an information charging the offense of burglary to have been committed in San Bernardino county, where the burglar was found with his goods, cannot be supported by evidence of breaking and entering a house in San Diego county, whence the goods were brought to the former jurisdiction.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

John J. Stephens, for defendant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. The defendant was accused by information in the county of San Bernardino of the crime of burglary, alleged to have been committed in said county. He interposed a plea of not guilty. Upon the trial there was evidence tending to prove the defendant guilty of a burglary committed at Indio, in the county of San Diego, and that the property (a coat and pistol) feloniously taken from a house burglariously entered, was taken by defendant to the county of San Bernardino, where he was arrested, informed against, tried, and convicted. At the trial objections were made by defendant to testimony under the information going to show a burglary committed in the county of San Diego, which objections were overruled by the court, and exceptions taken. These rulings are assigned as error. A motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial in behalf of defendant was overruled.

Section 786 of the Penal Code provides as follows: "When property taken in one county by burglary, robbery, larceny, or embezzlement, has been brought into another, the jurisdiction of the offense is in either county," etc. No question is made that the defendant might have been proceeded against in either county. The real question, however, is one of pleading: Under an indictment or information charging a burglary to have been committed in the county of San Bernardino, could evidence be received of an offense committed in the county of San Diego? In other words, should the information in the case as stated have charged, according to the facts, that the burglary was committed in the county of San Diego, and that the property was brought into the county of San Bernardino? At common law, crimes were considered as altogether local, cognizable and punishable exclusively in the jurisdiction where committed. Story, Conf. Law, § 620, and cases cited. It was said in Warrender v. Warrender, 9 Bligh, 119: The "lex loci must needs govern all criminal jurisdiction, from the nature of the thing, and the purpose of that jurisdiction." At common law it was held that a person indicted in England for robbing a house in Guernsey, and bringing the property to England, could not be convicted either of larceny or of receiving. Reg. v. Debruiel, 11 Cox, Crim. Cas. 207. In many of the United States it is provided by statutes, and in some where no such statutes exist it has been held, that where property has been feloniously taken in one state, and brought into another, the thief may be punished in the latter. These considerations go to the jurisdiction of the court, and not to the form of charging the facts constituting the offense, and are referred to only for the purpose of showing that, except as provided by statute, crime is regarded as local. This court has repeatedly held that, in cases of larceny, where property has been stolen in one county and taken into another, it is proper to charge the thief with having committed the offense in the latter county; and, where the venue is laid in that county, the facts showing the property to have been taken in the other county need not be averred, but evidence showing that the property was so taken may be admitted. People v. Mellon, 40 Cal. 654; People v. Murphy, 51 Cal. 376. These cases are in accord with many which might be cited from other states, in which it is held that, inasmuch as the owner has not parted with his property or right to possession of the thing stolen, the thief who takes it into another county is to be deemed in law to have taken it in such last-mentioned county, and, when he is charged with the felony in such last county, the facts stated warrant the legal conclusion. This reasoning and the cases cited would be conclusive in favor of the sufficiency of the information here were it for larceny, but it is not larceny, but burglary, with which the defendant is charged. It is true the court of San Bernardino may try a defendant for a burglary committed in San Diego, provided the fruits of the crime have been brought into the former county; yet it cannot be said, in fact or in contemplation of law, that the offense of burglary, essentially a local crime, and which consists in entering a house, room, etc., with intent to commit larceny, was committed in any other county than that in which the house, room, etc., are situated. We think the reasoning of DENIO, C. J., in Haskins v. People, 16 N. Y. 344, and the distinction there made, indicates the true rule. It is as follows: "The difference between the two cases is this. burglars may be tried out of their proper counties in certain special cases, that is, where the goods burglariously taken are carried into another county by the offenders; but this is by positive law, and not because the burglary was actually committed in the county where the indictment is found, or in judgment of law is considered to have been committed there. The fact must therefore be set out which brings the case within the statute; but in the case of an indictment for a simple larceny found in a county into which the thief has carried the property stolen in another county, the law adjudges that the offense was in truth committed there, and, hence, there is no occasion for a statement in the pleading of what occurred in the other county."

We are of opinion that the information in this case should have charged the facts as they existed, viz., that the burglary was committed in the county of San Diego, and that the property taken was carried into the county of San Bernardino, and, that having failed to do so, the proffered evidence was inadmissible. The judgment should have been arrested, whereupon the court was authorized, if it deemed proper, to recommit the defendant, or admit him to bail to answer a new information or indictment, as provided by sections 1187 and 1188 of the Penal Code.

The judgment and orders appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

FRANKEL v. DEIDESHEIMER. (No. 11,573.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1887.)

DEED—CONSIDERATION—MARKET VALUE—FRAUD.

Where the evidence was clear and unequivocal that a deed was made on or within a day or two of October 15, 1883, and there was no evidence to show that the property conveyed had at the time a market value in excess of the amount paid, and there was no evidence of fraud, held, that a finding of fact to the contrary, based upon presumptions could not be sustained.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Freeman, Bates & Rankin, Hundley, Gage & Ford, S. B. Davidson and Stanley A. Smith, for appellant. P. Van Clief, for respondent.

BY THE COURT. We are of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings of fact in the court below in the following particulars, viz.: That the location of the Willow quartz lode was made at the request or for the use or benefit of the defendant, Philipp Deidesheimer; that Deidesheimer conveyed an undivided half of the American quartz lode to Busch on the twenty-first of April, 1884, or at any other time than within a day or two of October 15, 1883; that the deed from Deidesheimer was antedated; that the deed was executed or accepted with the intent or for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding any creditor of said Deidesheimer; that at the time the deed was executed an undivided half of the American quartz lode was of the apparent or market value of $4,000, or of any sum exceeding $1; that Deidesheimer transferred any interest in the American quartz lode, or in the Young America Consolidated Mining Company, for the purpose of, or with the intent of, hindering, delaying, or defrauding any creditor; that the consideration for the issuance and delivery of stock to Matilda Deidesheimer and Philipp Deidesheimer was that Busch should convey to any corporation an undivided half of the American quartz lode mining claim; that the issuance and delivery of shares of stock to said Matilda Deidesheimer, and the conveyance by Busch to the corporation, were directed, caused, or procured by said Philipp for any purpose, or at all; that said Matilda, without consideration, assigned or transferred to the defendants Julia and Ritza Betts any shares of stock; that such transfer was made for the purpose, or with the intent, thereby to defraud or cheat plaintiff, or that said Julia and Ritza had notice of such purpose or intent.

The evidence that the deed from Deidesheimer to Busch was executed on or within a day or two of October 15, 1883, is clear and unequivocal, and there is no evidence substantially in conflict therewith; the argument to the contrary is based upon presumptions arising out of presumptions. There is no evidence that at the time of the conveyance the property conveyed had a market value in excess of the amount paid by Busch. The evidence shows that, at the time of the location of the Young America claim, Deidesheimer's name was inserted in the notice of location by Busch as an act of friendship; and that as soon as Deidesheimer made an examination of the ground he declared his intention not to abide by the location, and offered to and did execute to Busch a deed of the property; and that not until some months after the delivery of the deed did the claim have any apparent or market value. We find no evidence of any fraud on the part of either of the defendants; on the contrary, the facts displayed by the evidence show that their transactions were in good faith.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FOX and another v. STOCKTON C. H. & A. WORKS. (No. 12,043.)*(Supreme Court of California. August 30, 1887.)PLEADING—DENYING GENUINENESS OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

Plaintiffs alleged a joint contract by which defendant was to supply them with two harvesters. Defendant admitted the agreement to supply the harvesters, but claimed that it was several, and filed copies of the several agreements. Plaintiffs offered at the trial oral evidence to prove the contract as set up in their claim. Defendant objected on the ground that the plaintiffs had not, as provided in Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 448, filed an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the written instruments. Held that, although the plaintiffs admitted the due execution and genuineness of the two contracts pleaded in the answer, yet as the two contracts made with plaintiffs severally would not prove that there might not have been one made with them jointly, there was no admission that the two were the contracts sued on, and that plaintiffs should have been allowed to prove the contract alleged in their complaint.

W. E. Turner, L. J. Maddux, and D. S. Terry, for appellants. W. L. Dudley and W. M. Gibson, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. The plaintiffs allege that they are farmers, and jointly interested in the cultivation of land in Stanislaus county; that the defendant, a corporation, in March, 1884, by and through its duly appointed and authorized officers, contracted and agreed with these plaintiffs to manufacture and deliver to them, on or about the —— day of June, 1884, two 12-foot Shippee combined harvesters, with Shippee & Grattan improvements, at the agreed price of $3,600; and then and there warranted, covenanted, and guaranteed that each of said harvesters should do and perform good and satisfactory work in the harvesting, cutting, and saving of grain, and that each of said harvesters should give good satisfaction in the doing and performing of the work for which they had been manufactured, to-wit, the harvesting, cutting, and saving of grain in the harvest fields; that relying upon and in consideration of said representations, covenants, agreements, warranties, and guaranties as aforesaid, made by and on behalf of said defendants to these plaintiffs, said plaintiffs did agree to take, receive, and accept said harvesters with said improvements, and pay therefor the aforesaid sum of $3,600; that on or about the —— day of June, 1884, said defendant did deliver, in pursuance of said contract, two 12-foot Shippee combined harvesters, with Shippee & Grattan improvements, and these plaintiffs received the same, and thereupon paid to the defendant the aforesaid sum of $3,600; that the plaintiffs took said harvesters to their grain fields, and, with all proper precautions, aids, and management, undertook to work with said harvesters, but they failed to do any work of any value whatever in harvesting, cutting, or saving grain; and that, after ascertaining that said machines would not do the work which they were guaranteed by defendant to do, the plaintiffs returned them to the defendant, and demanded of defendant the sum paid for them, and the further sum of $3,000 damages sustained by plaintiffs by reason of the promises aforesaid.

The answer of the defendant admits that it represented to plaintiffs that said machines were of great value in the harvesting of grain; denies that in March, 1884, it contracted to manufacture and deliver to plaintiffs two 12-foot Shippee combined harvesters and Grattan improvements, as alleged in the complaint. Other allegations are denied, which it is unnecessary to enumerate, as the decision of the cause must turn upon the second defense to the action, in which it is alleged that the defendant never entered into any contract or agreement with the plaintiffs jointly, but contracted with each of them separately; that it sold and delivered one machine to Fox, and afterwards another to Tilton; that the contracts of sale and delivery are in writing, and that copies of them are attached to the answer, and made part thereof. One of the copies attached purports on its face to be an agreement between the defendant and plaintiffs for the manufacture and delivery by the defendant to Fox of one 12-foot Shippee combined harvester, with Shippee & Grat-tan improvements, for the sum of $1,800, gold coin of the United States. This is followed by other stipulations, which it is unnecessary now to consider. The other copy attached purports to be a contract between the defendant and the plaintiff Tilton, of like import with that between the defendant and plaintiff Fox.

On the trial the plaintiffs were proceeding to prove by oral testimony the contract as alleged in their complaint. The defendant objected on the ground that plaintiffs had not, as provided in section 448, Code Civil Proc., filed an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the written instruments of which copies were contained in the answer. As we construe the questions, objections, and rulings, the court regarded the plaintiffs as occupying the position they would have occupied if they had declared upon or proved a contract or contracts in writing similar to those contained in the answer. This we think to be untenable. The plaintiffs admitted the genuineness and due execution of the instruments as contained in the answer; but did not, as we view it, admit that those were the contracts under which they purchased the machines mentioned in the complaint. The plaintiffs allege a contract made with them jointly. Two contracts made with them severally would not conclusively prove that there might not have been one made with them jointly. The due execution and genuineness of the instruments were admitted, but it was not admitted that those were the contracts sued on. The plaintiffs must be deemed to have denied all the other allegations of the answer. We think they should have been permitted to prove the contract alleged in their complaint, and that the court erred in denying them the right to do so; for which reason the judgment and order denying them a new trial are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; THORNTON, J.

74 Cal. 11

WEBBER v. CLARKE. (No. 11,923.)

(Supreme Court of California. October 31, 1887.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—ADVERSE POSSESSION—PLEADING.

Adverse possession under color of title was relied on by defendant in an action to quiet title. He, however, did not plead Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 323, which states what facts constitute adverse possession. Held, that it was unnecessary to plead it.

2. SAME—PERIOD OF ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Adverse possession, commencing in May, 1875, under color of title, was relied on by defendant in an action to quiet title. Held, that his title by adverse possession became perfected in five years, which need not be next preceding the commencement of the action.

3. SAME—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 325, requiring the payment of taxes as an element of adverse possession, was passed April 1, 1878, and was not retroactive. Except for the years 1877 and 1883, defendant, who claimed by adverse possession under color of title, and his predecessors, paid all the taxes from 1873 to 1884. Held, that the non-payment for 1877 was immaterial, and the non-payment for 1883 unimportant.

4. SAME—UNINCLOSED LANDS—THOROUGHFARE FOR STOCK.

In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed the land under color of title and adverse possession. Plaintiff claimed that the track in controversy was a kind of thoroughfare for stock going to the mountains. Held, that this fact would not destroy defendant's right.

5. SAME—CONTINUOUS POSSESSION—POSSESSION DURING GRAZING SEASON.

Uninclosed land was taken possession of by defendant under color of title. He pastured his sheep upon it during the grazing season, which lasted from February to July. During the remainder of the year the land was not pasturable, and there was no one on it. Held, that this constituted continuous and adverse possession.

6. SAME—COLOR OF TITLE—TAX DEED.

Defendant entered and took possession under a tax-title deed, not void on its face, and believing that he had acquired an interest under the deed. Held, that it made no difference that his grantor had neither title nor possession.

7. SAME.

Defendant claimed under a sheriff's tax deed, executed on February 27, 1874, after a sale under a judgment of a district court, "duly made and given" on January 9, 1872, and also by adverse possession for the period required by the statute of limitations. Held, that the sheriff's deed, in due form, under a judgment regular on its face, constituted color of title, which, in connection with the possession shown, was a defense to the action.¹

8. SAME—CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION, EXTENT OF.

A tract of uninclosed, uncultivated grazing land was taken possession of by defendant, on which he herded his sheep. He claimed under a tax-title deed. Held, that he had constructive possession of the whole tract described in the document.²

9. APPEAL—FILING BRIEFS—POINTS—WAIVER OF ERRORS.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. c. 7, art. 2, § 129, (Sup. Ct. rule 2, sub. 4,) provides that "ten days before the calling of a cause for argument, the appellant shall file with the clerk, and serve upon the other party, his printed points and authorities, together with a brief statement of such of the facts as are necessary to explain the points made. Five days before the calling of the case for argument, the respondent shall file and serve his points and authorities; and when the case is called for argument, the appellant may file and serve a reply to respondent's points." In his opening brief, appellant alleged numerous errors in the admission and rejection of evidence, but argued none of them. In respondent's brief, attention was called to the fact that all the errors specified in the statement were waived by appellant's brief. The appellant replied with argument upon 17 assignments of error. Held, that the technical errors alleged were waived. Appellant should have made the points he relied on in his opening brief.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; Wm. W. Cross, Judge.

Wigington, Creed & Hawes, (Geo. W. Lewis, of counsel,) for appellant.
Atwell & Bradley, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The action is described by the appellant as "an action to quiet the title to a parcel of land described in the complaint and of ejectment for said lands." The plaintiff claims under a school-land patent from the state, dated May 25, 1875, which was issued upon a certificate of purchase, dated March 18, 1870. The defendant claims under a sheriff's deed, executed on February 27, 1874, after a sale under a judgment of a district court, "duly made and given" on January 9, 1872, and by adverse possession for the period required by the statute of limitations. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

1. Numerous errors in the admission and rejection of evidence are alleged. None of these are argued in the appellant's opening brief. The appellant's counsel there say: "There are many technical objections that exist as to the regularity of the tax proceedings sufficient to invalidate them; but we preferred to demonstrate upon principle and authority the invalidity of defendant's claim." That is all that is said with respect to the alleged errors in relation to "the regularity of the tax proceedings." As to errors in relation to other matters not a word is said. In the respondent's brief attention is drawn to the fact that all the errors specified in the statement are waived by appellant's brief. And the appellant comes back with argument upon 17 assignments of error. There was no oral argument; and, by the terms of the order submitting the case on briefs, the respondent had no reply. We think that under subdivision 4 of rule 2 the appellant must make the points he relies on in his opening brief, and that he cannot reserve them for his reply. To permit that would be unfair to the respondent, and would increase the labors of the court. And while the court is undoubtedly at liberty to decide the case upon any points that its proper disposition may seem to require, whether taken by counsel or not, we think that, under the circumstances of this case, the technical errors alleged must be considered as waived. For that reason we do not notice them. See, generally, Hahn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 404.

2. It is argued for the appellant, with much earnestness and ability, that the levy of the tax, upon which the judgment of the district court was founded, was void, for the reason that a tax cannot be imposed upon school lands before all the payments upon the certificate of purchase are made. But we do not think it necessary to pass upon that question. Whether the tax was void, and whether the judgment therefor was conclusive upon appellant, as a judgment in rem, or not, it was regular upon its face; and a sheriff's deed thereunder, in due form, constituted, to say the least, color of title, which, in connection with the possession shown, was a defense to the action.

Upon the question of possession the findings were as follows: "The purchaser, P. Byrd, during all the period from February 27, 1874, down to the twentieth day of May, 1879, * * * claimed the land by virtue of such deed, and rented the same to J. S. Williams, on the condition that the said Williams should exclude all other persons therefrom, and use and occupy the same to the exclusion of everybody. And the said Williams, during all that time, a period of more than five years, did publicly and openly, notoriously, and peaceably, and uninterruptedly occupy and possess said land, and all of it, to the exclusion of plaintiff and the whole world; and the plaintiff, her ancestors, grantors, or predecessors, were not, nor were any of them, seized or possessed of said land at any time within five years before this action was brought. * * * On the twentieth day of May, 1879, said P. Byrd sold and conveyed for a good and sufficient consideration, all the land aforesaid to J. S. Williams, who continued publicly, peaceably, openly, and notoriously in the possession thereof, to the exclusion of the plaintiff and the whole world, and paid the taxes thereon down to the twelfth day of November, 1880, claiming the same as his property under the sheriff's deed aforesaid to Byrd, and the conveyance from Byrd to him. On the twelfth day of November, 1880, said J. S. Williams, by his deed of conveyance, conveyed the land aforesaid to C. W. Clarke, the defendant herein, who went into possession thereof at once, under a claim of title founded upon said conveyances, and said defendant has ever since continued to, and does now, occupy and hold possession of said land under a claim of right and ownership, based upon said conveyances, peaceably, openly, notoriously, continuously, uninterruptedly, and adversely to the whole world, and paid all the taxes levied or assessed upon the land from the twelfth day of November, 1880, down to the time this action was brought, except in 1883, when the taxes were paid by some person unknown to defendant. The land described in the complaint constitutes but one parcel, and had been continuously occupied and used by defendant and his grantors, for more than five years before this action was brought, for the pasture of their stock." It is argued that these findings are not supported by the evidence.

The tract in controversy is the east half of section 16, tp. 16 S., R. 23 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian. It was not inclosed or cultivated, and no one resided upon it. The surrounding country "was an open, uninclosed, uncultivated, unimproved country all around there." The nearest "improvements" were half a mile distant, and the nearest sheep camp about a mile off. There is some conflict in the evidence, but, if the defendant's witnesses are to be believed, (and, in view of the findings, we must assume that they are,) the defendant and his grantors herded their sheep upon the land during the grazing season of each year; that is to say, from February to July. During the rest of the year the land was "not pasturable for sheep," and appears (during such time) to have been entirely unoccupied. The argument for the appellant is that such pasturage does not constitute a sufficient possession, and particularly that it was not continuous. And these are the questions to be resolved.

"By actual possession," said FIELD, C. J., in a leading case, "is meant a subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, and is usually evidenced by occupation, by a substantial inclosure, by cultivation, or by appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property." Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 573. And see Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 44. Where, however, there is such subjection to the will and dominion of the claimant, manifested in some appropriate manner, residence upon the property is not essential, (Barstow v. Newman, 34 Cal. 91; Goodrich v. Van Landingham, 46 Cal. 601; Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 524;) nor, in such case, is an inclosure necessary, (Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 132; McCreery v. Everding, 44 Cal. 252; Sheldon v. Mull, 67 Cal. 300, 7 Pac. Rep. 710. In the case of grazing land, in a grazing country, herding sheep upon it would seem to be an "appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property." Accordingly, we find that in two cases pasturage of cattle within an inclosure was held to be sufficient possession against intruders, (Southmayd v. Henley, 45 Cal. 102; Pierce v. Stuart, Id. 280;) and in Sheldon v. Mull, 67 Cal. 300 and 301, 7 Pac. Rep. 710, it was held that pasturage, without an inclosure, was sufficient; the cattle being confined to the land by herders.

There must, of course, be some definite boundaries to the possession. But it has been held in a long line of decisions that, where a party enters under color of title, and has actual possession of a part of the whole tract, he has constructive possession of the whole tract described in the document. Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122; Hoag v. Pierce, 28 Cal. 191; McKee v. Greene, 31 Cal. 420; Ayres v. Bensley, 32 Cal. 631; Russell v. Harris, 38 Cal. 426; Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 573; Spect v. Hagar, 65 Cal. 445, 4 Pac. Rep. 419. And it makes no difference that the grantor had neither title nor possession, (Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 487, 488,) provided the document was not void on its face, and the party entering under it believed in good faith that he acquired an interest under it, (Walsh v. Hill, supra; Cannon v. Lumber Co., 38 Cal. 674; Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 281.) A sheriff's deed, under a judgment regular on its face, is color of title within the meaning of the above rule. Russell v. Harris, 38 Cal. 427; Packard v. Moss, 68 Cal. 127, 8 Pac. Rep. 818; and compare Jones v. Gillis, 45 Cal. 542, 543, and Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 595.

The rules established by the foregoing decisions have been embodied to a great extent in the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 322 embodies the rule as to entry upon a part of a tract under color of title; and section 323, in relation to what constitutes adverse possession, is as follows: "Sec. 323. For the purpose of constituting an adverse possession, by any person claiming a title founded upon a written instrument or a judgment or decree, land is deemed to have been possessed and occupied in the following cases: First, where it has been usually cultivated or improved; second, where it has been protected by a substantial inclosure; third, where, although not inclosed, it has been used for the supply of fuel, or for fencing timber for the purpose of husbandry, or for pasturage, or for the ordinary use of the occupant; fourth, where a known farm or single lot has been partly improved, the portion of such farm or lot that may have been left not cleared, or not inclosed according to the usual course and custom of the adjoining country, shall be deemed to have been occupied for the same length of time as the part improved and cultivated."

The appellant seems to suppose that this section cannot be considered because it was not pleaded. But as was said in Hagely v. Hagely, 68 Cal. 352, 9 Pac. Rep. 305, the proper course is to plead the section establishing the period of limitation, omitting all reference to explanatory sections. It will be observed that the section provides in terms that pasturage of land, without an inclosure, may constitute an adverse possession. There can, therefore, be no further doubt upon this branch of the appellant's case. The question is whether the pasturage must continue throughout the whole year. As stated above, the defendant's pasturage was only during the grazing season, that is, from February to July,—the land during the balance of the year being "not pasturable." We think, however, that this was sufficient, there being no one on the land meanwhile. It is a settled rule with reference to cases of this character that it is sufficient if, in the language of FIELD, C. J., in Coryell v. Cain, above quoted, the dominion and control is "by appropriate use according to the particular locality and quality of the property." In this regard CROCKETT, J., delivering the opinion in Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 46, said: "The general principle which underlies all this class of cases is that the acts of dominion must be adapted to the particular land, its condition, locality, and appropriate use. The philosophy of the rule is that, by such acts, the party proclaims to the public that he asserts an exclusive ownership over the land, and the acts which he performs are in harmony with his claim of title." See, also, English v. Johnson, 17 Cal. 116, 117.

Now, we think that pasturing during the pasturing season is "appropriate use according to the particular locality and quality of the property." To pasture the land when it was not "pasturable" would not only be not an appropriate use, but an impracticable one. In the case of cultivation, there is an interval of several months between the harvesting of one crop and the preparation of the soil for another. And there would be just as much sense in holding that the interval destroyed the continuity of the possession in the one case as in the other. To so hold would be, in effect, to hold for all practical purposes that adverse possession could not be acquired by pasturage; for obedience will be paid to nature's laws rather than to man's, and the thing supposed to be necessary would never be done. It is sufficient that the use is in accordance with the usual course of husbandry in the locality. We are of opinion, therefore, that the defendant's evidence tended to make out a case of adverse possession. It must be admitted that the plaintiff's evidence in rebuttal was strong. But the question of credibility of the witnesses was for the court below, and, under the well-settled rule, its conclusions as to the facts will not, under the circumstances, be disturbed.

The fact, if it be a fact, that the tract in controversy "used to be a kind of thoroughfare for stock going to the mountains," does not destroy the defendant's right. Even if there was a right of way in the public for such purpose, it would not be inconsistent with the defendant's possession. San Francisco v. Calderwood, 31 Cal. 589.

The case of Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508, cited by counsel, does not militate against the conclusions we have reached.

It is proper to add, to prevent misconception, that in what we have said we have reference solely to the case before the court, viz., a use of land by one entering under color of title. It might be plausibly argued that, where the use is by one claiming title "not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree," section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure would operate to prevent mere pasturage from being a sufficient adverse possession. As to that we express no opinion.

3. It is urged that the defendant cannot make out a case of adverse possession, because neither he nor his predecessors paid all the taxes. The facts are that they paid the taxes from 1873 to 1884, except for the years 1877 and 1883. The non-payment for 1877 is immaterial, for the reason that section 325, which requires the payment of taxes as an element of adverse possession, was not passed until 1878, and is not retroactive. Sharp v. Blankenship, 59 Cal. 288; Railroad Co. v. Shackelford, 63 Cal. 261; Johnson v. Brown, Id. 392. Nor is the non-payment for 1883 important. Taking the adverse possession to have commenced on May 24, 1875, the date of the issuance of the patent, the defendant acquired a title at the expiration of five years, viz., in May, 1880. The five years of adverse possession need not be next preceding the commencement of the action. Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 540.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

74 Cal. 38

Ex parte KOHLER, on Habeas Corpus. (No. 20,330.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 3, 1887.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TITLES OF ACT—LAW AGAINST ADULTERATION OF WINE.

The California act approved March 7, 1887, (St. 1887, p. 46,) entitled "An act to prohibit the sophistication and adulteration of wine, and to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale thereof," is not repugnant to Const. Cal. art. 4, § 24, which provides that "every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title."

2. SAME—RESTRICTION UPON SALE OF WINE—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Neither is the act unconstitutional because so unreasonable in its restriction upon the sale of wines as to deprive the citizen of his property and liberty without due process of law.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—PROVISION FOR BRANDING WINES—VIOLATION NOT CRIMINAL.

Section 8 of the above act, providing that "it is desired and required that all and every grower, manufacturer, trader, holder, or bottler of California when selling, or putting up for sale any California wine, * * * shall plainly stencil, brand, or have printed where it will be plainly seen,—First, 'Pure California Wine;' and secondly, his name or the firm's name, as the case may be, both on label of bottle or package," etc.,—is merely directory, and no punishment can be inflicted for selling pure California wine without such label or brand, or the label furnished in lieu thereof by the state.

In bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus.

Conviction had in police judge's court, San Francisco; JAS. LAWLOR, Judge.

Morrow & Stratton, for petitioner. Edward B. Stonehill, Dist. Atty., for the People. M. M. Estee, amicus curiæ, for the People. John T. Doyle, amicus curiæ.

PATERSON, J. The petitioner was convicted in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco of the crime of misdemeanor, committed in violation of the provisions of an act of the legislature of the state of California, entitled, "An act to prohibit the sophistication and adulteration of wine, and to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale thereof," approved March 7, 1887. St. 1887, p. 46.

The salient provisions of the act are as follows: Section 1 defines pure wine for the purposes of the act. Section 2 prohibits the using of deleterious substitutes in the fermentation, preservation, and fortification of pure wines. Section 3 prohibits the use of materials injurious to consumers for the promotion of fermentation. Section 4 declares it to be unlawful to sell under the name of wine any substance other than pure wine, as defined by the act. Section 5 makes an exception in the case of pure champagne and sparkling wine, so as to permit the use of sugar in sweetening the same. Section 7 provides for the printing and furnishing of labels by the comptroller of the state, setting forth that the wine covered by such labels is pure California wine. Section 8 reads as follows: "Sec. 8. It is desired and required that all and every grower, manufacturer, trader, handler, or bottler of California wine, when selling or putting up for sale any California wine, or when shipping California wine to parties to whom sold, shall plainly stencil, brand, or have printed where it will be easily seen—First, 'Pure California Wine;' and, secondly, his name or the firm's name, as the case may be, both on label of bottle or package in which wine is sold and sent; or he may in lieu thereof, if he so prefers and elects, affix the label which has been provided for in section 7. It shall be unlawful to affix any such stamp or label as above provided to any vessel containing any substance other than pure wine, as herein defined, or to prepare or use on any vessel containing any liquid, any imitation or counterfeit of such stamp, or any paper in the similitude or resemblance thereof, or any paper of such form and appearance as to be calculated to mislead or deceive any unwary person, or cause him to suppose the contents of such vessel to be pure wine. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons other than the ones for whom such stamps were procured to in any way use such stamps, or to have possession of the same. A violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and punishable by a fine of not less than fifty dollars," etc.

The complaint charged "that said Henry Kohler, being a dealer and bottler of California wines, did sell to the prosecuting witness, one Jaspar, a bottle of California wine, which bottle, when so sold, did not have plainly or at all stamped thereon the words 'Pure California Wine,' nor did it have in lieu thereof the stamp as furnished by the comptroller of state."

Several questions are presented involving the construction of the act referred to and its constitutionality. It is claimed by petitioner that the act is not mandatory in requiring a pure-wine stamp to be placed upon pure California wine. The complaint did not charge petitioner with the sale of sophisticated or adulterated wine; it accused him merely of selling a bottle of California wine without having thereon a pure-wine stamp. It is claimed by counsel for the people that, under the act referred to, dealers in wine are prohibited from selling pure wine without the stamp designated by the act. Petitioner contends that while the pure-wine stamp may be used, there is no penalty prescribed for a failure to use it. The act is not objectionable upon the ground claimed by the petitioner that it embraces more than one subject, contrary to the requirements of article 4, section 24 of the constitution, which provides that "every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." However numerous the provisions of an act may be, if they can be fairly considered as falling within the subject-matter of legislation, or as proper methods for the attainment of the end sought by the act, there is no conflict with the constitutional provision above quoted. In any event, it is only where there is a clear violation of the constitution that the court is justified in declaring it unconstitutional. The great object to be attained by the "Act to prohibit the sophistication and adulteration of wine, and to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale thereof" must have been to secure the manufacture and sale of none but pure California wine. The first section defines pure wine; the second section prohibits the use of deleterious substitutes; the fourth section prohibits the sale of any but pure wine, and every penalty affixed is for the purpose of protecting those who make and sell pure wine, and for punishing those who make and sell impure wine. Manifestly the provisions of the act all fall within the subject named in its title, and are necessary and logical methods for the attainment of the end desired by the legislature. The act, therefore, is not repugnant to article 4, § 24, supra.

Now, is the act unconstitutional because so unreasonable in its restriction upon the sale of wines as to deprive the petitioner of his property and liberty without due process of law? The power of the legislature to impose such regulations for the conservation of the health of its citizens has been so often discussed and affirmed here that it is useless to reopen the question. The manufacture and sale of liquors of all kinds, the sale of pure milk, the inspection and sale of meats, and the control of laundries and slaughter-houses are all subject to regulation. Whatever construction may be placed upon the act, it is difficult to see how a compliance with the law would injure an honest dealer in California wine.

A more difficult question is that which refers to the proper construction of section 8. Is it mandatory in requiring a pure-wine stamp to be placed upon pure California wine? Is a failure to place such stamp upon pure California wine "a violation of any of the provisions of this section?" All legislation directed against the adulteration and simulation of articles of food and drink is aimed at a common object—the preservation of the public health. The court will take judicial notice of the evils preceding such legislation, and the mischiefs intended to be prevented thereby, the character and importance of the interests of the state which may be affected thereby, and the usual course of business. A knowledge of these matters is often necessary to a full and fair understanding of the force and effect of the law, and is a valuable help in ascertaining its true intent and meaning. The growth of the wine-growing interests of this state is a matter of world-wide publicity. It is a well-known fact that California is the only state in the Union where the grape suitable for wine-making is cultivated in vineyards, and that her wines are rapidly growing in favor, and rivaling in quality the table wines of foreign countries. With the progress and success of this industry there has grown up and increased the manufacture and sale of spurious wines, which are not only injurious to health, but detrimental to the wine industry. Several attempts have been made in congress to prevent the trade in this cheap and unwholesome stuff, but without material effect. Finally, in 1886-87, when the evil had attained so great a magnitude as to attract public attention, the Grape-growers and Wine-makers' Association of California presented a bill to the legislature of this state, which, after being amended, was passed, containing the provisions above stated. The primary objects of the act were, doubtless, to prevent the sale of spurious wine under the designation of "California Wine," and to promote the public health. But there were other objects to be obtained incidentally. The wine-grower who produced good wine would not have to suffer the effect of a blending by the trade of his article of superior merit with an inferior one. It was evidently through the efforts of wine-growers who aimed at a high degree of excellence in wine-making that the first clause of section 8 was inserted. Some expression on the part of the legislature of the state was desired as authority for affixing a badge to their productions, by which the consumer could feel sure of the purity of the wine, and the identity of the producer. That the words "desired and required" were intended to express rather a legislative wish and permission than a mandate, is indicated, too, in the discordancy of the natural meanings of the words themselves. As words of legislative command, they are singularly inappropriate and inconsistent. It is difficult to understand how it can be made a penal offense to violate simply a legislative desire. The word "desired" cannot be ignored in the construction of the act any more than the word "required," and the former is at least as forcible in its expression of a request as the latter is in its expression of a command.

The act in all other provisions containing mandates and prohibitions is positive and forcible in its language. Thus it is noticeable that the same section further along provides: "It shall be unlawful to affix any such stamp," etc., and again, "It shall be unlawful for any person or persons other than the ones for whom such stamps were procured to use," etc. Other sections of the act use the same language—words which are ordinarily employed in expressing the mandates and prohibitions of penal statutes. We do not think it was intended that the sale of wines admitted to be pure should be circumscribed, limited, or restricted. Such legislation is unusual. We know of no similar statute where anything more has been attempted than—First, to prohibit the adulteration and sophistication of food and drink, and second, if permitted, to compel the appropriate stamping and designation of such food and drink. The New York pure-wine law, approved in June, 1887, defines pure wines, half-wines, and made wines; prohibits the sale of adulterated wines, and requires the stamping of half-wines and made wines; but it does not in any manner attempt to regulate the sale of pure wines. If the legislature had intended to compel the use of stamps and labels on pure wine, it could easily have stated that the failure, neglect, or refusal so to use them was unlawful, and there would have been no ambiguity in its language. The fact that it is carefully stated in the act what shall be unlawful in other respects is strong evidence that the first clause of section 8 was not intended to be obligatory. It is always to be presumed that the legislature will express its intention in clear and explicit terms in prescribing the obligations for a violation of which a penalty is affixed. In cases of this kind the limitations and restrictions should be plain and free from doubt. Hill v. Decatur, 22 Ga. 203.

It is a general rule that statutes affixing penalties should be strictly construed, and all doubts resolved in favor of the accused. People v. Tisdale, 57 Cal. 107. When measured by the mischief contemplated by the legislature, an additional reason is presented for giving to section 8 a permissive scope, rather than a mandatory one, so far as the stamping of pure wines is concerned. The act defines pure wine, prohibits adulteration and deterioration, and prohibits the sale of impure wine. The comptroller is authorized to furnish labels, and penalties are provided for the use thereof on other than pure wines. This seems to be the natural scope of the act, and all that is necessarily indicated in its title. There can be no fraud in the sale of pure wine. The title is a part of the act, and must declare its object; and in all cases where the legislative intent is ambiguous, judicial reference may be had to the title of the act to assist in determining its meaning. Weed v. Maynard, 52 Cal. 459; Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 303.

We think, therefore, that the affixing of labels on pure wine is not obligatory, and that the proper construction of section 8, wherein it declares that a violation of any of its provisions is a misdemeanor, is to impose a penalty for a violation of only those provisions which are therein specifically declared to be unlawful. It results that the complaint states no offense, and the petitioner must be discharged.

So ordered.

TRIPP v. DUANE and others. (No. 9,490.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 5, 1887.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—DETERMINING TITLE NOT IN ISSUE—WHO MAY COMPLAIN.

When the only question at issue between parties is the title to 33-96 of a certain piece of land, and a decree is entered quieting the title in favor of plaintiff, and against defendant, of only such 33-96, defendant has no ground for complaint because the decree, as to other defendants who do not appeal, seems to quiet the title of plaintiff to the whole piece of land.

2. SAME—CONVEYANCE BY CO-TENANT—EQUITABLE LIEN OF THIRD PARTY FOR ADVANCEMENTS—WAIVER BY TAKING TRUST DEED.

It appeared that one Ellis made a conveyance of 33-96 of a tract of land to plaintiff's grantors, which Ellis had not yet paid for. Afterwards he and his co-tenants made a deed of trust to one P. as a security for $8,000 advanced by P. to the state as purchase money for such land. The deed of trust provided that the land might be sold by the trustee upon public notice for a specified time. Afterwards P., in his individual capacity, conveyed to M., who conveyed to D., one of the co-tenants of Ellis. Both of these conveyances were without consideration. Subsequently P. gave the required notice of sale, and, as trustee, sold the land to plaintiff. In an action by plaintiff to quiet his title to the 33-96 of the land as against D., held that, by taking the deed of trust as security, P. had waived his equitable lien for the advancement of $8,000, and it was not error to decree the title in plaintiff without requiring him to pay his proportion of the $8,000.

3. SAME—PURCHASE FROM TRUSTEE AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

And although a supplemental complaint showing the sale, after the beginning of plaintiff's action, by P. as trustee to plaintiff, was not admitted, as against D., yet, without evidence of the sale, plaintiff was under no obligations, so far as D. was concerned, to pay any part of the $8,000 before his title to 33-96 should be quieted as against D.; and even though a deposition by P. showing the sale, and payment by plaintiff to him of the purchase money, after this action was begun, were considered, such deposition, as against D., would be merely immaterial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

This was an action to quiet title. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion, except the text of the document therein referred to as folios 109 to 113, which is as follows:

"We, Geo. W. Ellis, Creed Haymond, and C. P. Duane, hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto Wm. H. Patterson all the estate, title, and interest which we either and all of us now have, or may hereafter acquire, of, in, and to the land described, and intended to be described, in a certain so-called pre-emption claim or pre-emption notice, record whereof is contained in the land records of the city and county of San Francisco, in Liber B of Miscellaneous Deeds, page 665; and also all the lands described in two certain deeds made by the tide-land commissioners to G. W. Ellis, and bearing date November 24, 1875. This conveyance is in trust to secure the payment of \$4,000 due to said Patterson from the said Ellis, \$2,000 due from the said Haymond to said Patterson, and \$2,000 from the said Duane to the said Patterson, and payable in U. S. gold coin, with interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month, and payable on or before 60 days from the date thereof. The said Patterson to have full possession and control of said land, and the absolute power of disposition of said land for the purposes of the trust, if such payments are not made at or before 60 days from the date hereof. Such disposition is to be made upon one week's notice in any daily paper published in the city and county of San Francisco. Upon the payment of the whole of said sum of \$8,000, and interest, the said Patterson is to reconvey said land; or upon the payment by the said Ellis of the sum of \$4,000, and interest, he will reconvey one-half of said property to said Ellis, or upon the payment of \$2,000, and interest, by said Haymond, he will reconvey to said Haymond $\frac{1}{4}$ thereof, or upon the payment of \$2,000, and interest, by said Duane, to reconvey $\frac{1}{4}$ of said property to said Duane.

George W. Tyler and E. D. Wheeler, for appellants. Philip A. Galpin, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action by plaintiff to quiet his title to 33-96 of the real estate described in the complaint. In 1853, George W. Ellis filed in the recorder's office of the city and county of San Francisco a pre-emption claim on 160 acres of salt marsh and tide land belonging to the state of California. Between that time and October 21, 1875, said Ellis executed, to different parties, bargain and sale deeds of undivided portions of said claim, amounting in the aggregate to 33-96 of the whole claim; and the grantees of said undivided interest conveyed, by good and sufficient deeds, the same to plaintiff, prior to October 21, 1875, which deeds were all recorded prior to that date. On the twenty-fourth of November, 1875, the state of California made its deed to Ellis of the lands described in the complaint; the same being portions only of the land described in Ellis' pre-emption claim. Plaintiff claims title to 33-96 of the land described in the complaint by reason of said pre-emption claim of Ellis, and the deed from the state to Ellis, of date November 24, 1875.

When the deed from the state to Ellis was ready for delivery, Ellis had no money, and $8,000 had to be paid to the state before the deed would be delivered, and thereupon defendant Ellis applied to W. H. Patterson to advance the $8,000 to the state for the purchase money of the land, and take the land as security for its repayment. Thereupon Ellis, Duane, and Haymond executed to Patterson the paper found at folios 109 to 113, both inclusive, and Patterson paid the $8,000 purchase money, received the deed from the state to Ellis, and had the same recorded. The $8,000 not having been paid in 60 days, as provided in the instrument, nor any part thereof, W. H. Patterson deeded to Morrissey, and Morrissey to Duane, "all the right, title, and interest which said Patterson derived in said land by virtue of the deed of Ellis et al. to him of date November 30, 1875," without advertising such sale for 60 days, so as to free said real estate from the trust under which Patterson held the land, which said deeds were immediately recorded. At the commencement of this suit, neither the plaintiff nor Ellis had paid Patterson or Duane any portion of said $8,000, the purchase money of said land so paid by said Patterson to the state, and plaintiff sought in his complaint to quiet his title to 33-96 of said land, without paying or offering to pay to Patterson or to Duane any portion of the said purchase money.

The paper from Ellis, Duane, and Haymond to Patterson, as above mentioned, was a conveyance to the latter of all the estate of the former in the land in question, in trust to secure the payment of the $8,000, with interest, and payable in 60 days from November 30, 1875, the date thereof, and, if not paid, Patterson was authorized to sell the property after one week's notice in any daily paper published in the city and county of San Francisco. The conveyance by Patterson to Morrissey was made after the expiration of the 60 days, but without the notice prescribed, was without consideration, and was executed by Patterson in his own name, and not as a trustee. The deed from Morrissey to Duane was also without consideration.

After the defendant Duane had filed his amended answer in the case, the interest of Patterson in the trust deed was duly sold as provided for in that instrument, and was purchased by the plaintiff herein, who thereupon applied to the court for leave to file a supplemental complaint setting up those facts, which was refused by the court as to Duane, and granted as to the other defendants. Upon the trial of this case, the plaintiff offered the deposition of W. H. Patterson in evidence, to prove the facts contained in the supplemental complaint he had filed. Defendant Duane objected, upon the ground that all these matters thus sought to be proved occurred after the joining of issue in this case, and therefore the testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that no supplemental complaint had been filed, so far as Duane was concerned. The court did not admit the testimony at the time, but reserved its ruling. Before the court decided the case, it read and considered the deposition of Patterson, which had not been admitted in evidence or read, and based in part its finding and decree thereon, and ruled and decided that defendant Duane had no right, title, or interest in the land claimed by plaintiff in his original complaint, viz., 33-96 of the premises described, and quieted plaintiff's title thereto, and to the whole of it, as against the other defendants.

Defendant Duane alone appeals from an order denying a new trial, and makes the following points: First, the court erred in quieting the plaintiff's title to the whole of the real estate described in the complaint, when he only sues to quiet his title to 33-96 of the same; second, the court erred in ruling that plaintiff was entitled to maintain this action without paying or offering to pay 33-96 of the purchase money of the land paid by Patterson, and in ruling that defendant Duane had no title or interest in the land; third, the court erred in reading and considering the evidence not admitted at the trial, and basing its findings and decree thereon.

The answer to the first point is that, as against appellant Duane, the court did not quiet the plaintiff's title to but 33-96 of the premises. This is what plaintiff demanded against said defendant in his complaint. The court found as a fact that "the plaintiff, at the commencement of this action, was seized in fee of 33-96 of said title to said premises." As a conclusion of law it was found: "(1) That, at the commencement of this action, the plaintiff was seized of 36-96 of the premises described in the complaint, and is entitled to the relief prayed for in his complaint against the defendants Charles P. Duane and H. H. Judson, as far as 33-96 is concerned."

The decree follows the findings, and decrees "that, at the commencement of this action, the plaintiff was, and now is, seized in fee of 33-96 of the premises described in the complaint; * * * that the defendants Charles P. Duane and H. H. Judson have, nor have either of them, any right, title, or claim thereto, and that the title of the said plaintiff thereto be, and the same is, quieted, as against the claim of each of said defendants; and each of said defendants is * * * restrained from bringing any action * * * against said plaintiff * * * in regard to his title or possession of said 33-96 of said premises." When the court decrees that defendants Duane and Judson have no title thereto, it must, by every rational rule of construction, be held to apply to the 33-96 part decreed to belong to plaintiff. The title to the remaining 63-96 of the tract of land was not in any way in issue as between plaintiff and Duane, and this action does not settle, or, as we construe it, purport to settle, it. The fact that, as against the other defendants between whom and plaintiff the merits of the supplemental complaint were considered, the findings and decree went beyond the 33-96, cannot alter the status of the case as to plaintiff and Duane.

The next error assigned is based upon the action of the court in quieting the title of plaintiff to 33-96 of the property without requiring him to pay 33-96 of the sum of $8,000, and interest, advanced by Patterson to pay for the land, and procure the title from the state.

It may be stated generally that where one person pays the consideration money for the purchase of land, and the conveyance is made to another, the latter holds the title in trust for the person who pays the consideration. 2 Story, Eq. § 1201; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 99; Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 575; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119; Civil Code, § 353. The trust thus raised is implied by law, is a resulting trust, and may be proved by parol. Roberts v. Ware, 40 Cal. 637. These implied or resulting trusts cannot prejudice the rights of purchasers or incumbrancers of real property for value, and without notice of the trust. Civil Code, § 856. In Leggett v. Dubois, 5 Paige, 117, it was said: "A resulting trust is the mere creature of equity, as a resulting use is of law; and it cannot therefore arise where there is an express trust declared by the parties, and evidenced by a written declaration of such express trust." So, too, a vendor of real estate has a lien on the land sold for the purchase money, unless he has taken security for his payment, though he has executed the conveyance. Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 138; Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 55; Baum v. Grigsby, 21 Cal. 172; Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186; Williams v. Young, 21 Cal. 227. But this lien, which arises in equity, is waived by taking a mortgage to secure the purchase money. The silent lien of the vendor is extinguished whenever he manifests an intention to abandon or not to look to it; and in Hunt v. Waterman, 12 Cal. 301, it was said this intention is manifested by taking other and independent security upon the same land, or a portion of it, or upon other land. See, also, Camden v. Vail, 23 Cal. 633, and Remington v. Higgins, 54 Cal. 620. We refer to the doctrine and cases in relation to the lien of vendors of real estate, because they depend upon the same principle, raise the same implied trust, and are subject to most of the same rules, with like trusts arising from the advancement of the purchase money for land, where the deed is taken in the name of another.

The case, then, stands in this wise: Ellis had conveyed to others, by deeds of bargain and sale, purporting to convey the legal title, under whom plaintiff held by like conveyances, 33-96 of the land, and the conveyances were duly recorded. The legal title was as yet in the state, but would pass by operation of law from Ellis to Tripp, to the extent of 33-96, whenever procured by the former. Under these circumstances, Patterson advanced $8,000 to Ellis to pay to the state the purchase price of the land, and it was so paid, and the patent issued to Ellis. Had Patterson stopped here, equity would have raised an implied trust in his favor to the extent of the money advanced, and as against the interest of the owners to the extent of the benefits received. But this would have been an equitable lien raised by operation of law, and could be waived by taking a deed of trust from Ellis, Duane, and Haymond for their interest in the land as security for the money advanced. Patterson must be presumed to have waived his implied lien upon that portion of the land previously conveyed by Ellis as aforesaid, and, there appearing nothing in the record to rebut this presumption of waiver, the implied equitable lien does not exist, and Patterson must be remitted to the relief afforded by his deed of trust.

It follows that, as there was no lien upon the 33-96 interest in the land held by Tripp, he was under no obligation, legal or equitable, to pay any portion of the $8,000 as a condition to the quieting of his title to the 33-96 of the land.

The deposition of Patterson was admissible in evidence in favor of plaintiff and against the other defendants than Duane. As against them, there were issues, no doubt, under his supplemental complaint, in which he claimed, or appears, to have succeeded to the rights of Patterson. The deposition was to the effect that, since suit brought, Tripp had paid Patterson the $8,000, and interest, and thereupon the court so found, all of which, as against the other defendants, was entirely proper. It is apparent that the court was of opinion that, as against the 33-96 interest held by Tripp, and decreed to him, no payment of the $8,000 was necessary. Indeed, the bill of exceptions expressly states that "the only points relied upon by defendant Duane on this motion was the error of the court in granting the relief prayed for in the complaint to plaintiff, without his paying, or offering to pay, 33-96 of the purchase money paid to the state by Patterson for the title to the property, either to Patterson or his assign, and the error of the court in considering evidence not admitted upon the trial." It does not appear affirmatively, from the bill of exceptions, that the testimony of Patterson was used as against Duane; but, if it be conceded that it was, it was simply immaterial testimony. We are of opinion he was not bound to pay the $8,000, or any part of it, and proof that he did so cannot weaken his right.

Holding, then, as we do, that any interest which Duane may have in the remaining 63-96 of the premises in question is not affected by the proceedings or decree in this action, and that, as to the 33-96 thereof, the title was properly quieted in plaintiff, Tripp, the order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GUITIERREZ. (No. 20,347.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 5, 1887.)

LARCENY—POSSESSION OF STOLEN GOODS—PRESUMPTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction "that if the defendant was in recent possession of the stolen goods the law raises the presumption that he is the thief, and this possession, if not competently explained by the defendant, is conclusive evidence of his guilt," is plainly erroneous, and although this was followed by instructions on behalf of the defendant that "the possession of stolen property, although a circumstance in determining the guilt of the defendant, is not alone sufficient to convict;" and that "the possession of stolen articles soon after the missing of the same is an insufficient circumstance upon which to convict the defendant," yet these instructions would not correct the previous error, as the mind of the jury would be left in doubt which was the correct rule of law.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

Baker & Blair, for defendant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The exceptions to the information do not seem to be well founded. The procedure was in accordance with the case of People v. Lewis, 64 Cal. 401, 1 Pac. Rep. 490, and with recent decisions of this court. Ex parte Young Ah Gow, 15 Pac. Rep. 76.

The court instructed the jury, at the request of the prosecution, as follows: "The jury is instructed that, if the defendant was in recent possession of the stolen goods, the law raises the presumption that he is the thief; and this possession, if not competently explained by the defendant, is conclusive evidence of his guilt." This instruction is plainly erroneous. The effect of testimony is a question for the jury and not for the court, although this court has held of this precise testimony—inconsistently with the general rule, perhaps—that it is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty. Then, beside assuming that the goods were stolen, the instruction states that the defendant must explain the recent possession, ignoring the proposition that the evidence of the prosecution itself may afford such explanation in whole or in part.

The instructions given at the request of the defense, however, were as follows: "(1) The possession of stolen property, although a circumstance in determining the guilt of the defendant, is not alone sufficient to convict. (2) The possession of stolen articles soon after the missing of the same is an insufficient circumstance upon which to convict the defendant." These instructions are clearly in conflict with that given at the request of the prosecution. The point was material, and read together, the jury would still be left in doubt as to the law. If we suppose the jury took the instructions given at the request of the defendant as the correct statement of the law, still it leaves that portion of the instruction given at the instance of the prosecution to stand which is not in conflict with that asked for by the defense to stand. The effect of this would be to instruct the jury that the recent possession of stolen goods raises a presumption of guilt, although not sufficient to convict. This is still a charge as to the value and effect of evidence.

We see no material error in the other instructions of the court.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Estate of STEWART. (No. 11,214.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 7, 1887.)

1. WILL—DISPOSITION OF COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

A devise to a wife of "one-half of all my estate," followed by a specific bequest of $3,000 for immediate support, where the estate was worth nearly half a million, and the devisor had been an active, energetic business man, accustomed to use and handle the property as his own, and the whole tenor of the will, in minor details, indicated the testator's intent to dispose of the whole, held, to pass one-half of the whole estate held as community property of the husband and wife.

2. SAME—ACCEPTANCE BY WIDOW.

Where the widow of a testator filed a written acceptance of the terms of the will, she thereby confirmed the disposition of the community property made in the will, and indicated her election to abide by its provisions.

McFARLAND, THORNTON, and SHARFSTEIN, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; A. VAN R. PATERSON, Judge.

The testator, Frank Stewart, died from an accident received two days before his demise, between which time and his death he made the will in controversy, the material portions of which are as follows: "First. After all my just debts are paid, I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Bettie Stewart, one-half of all my estate; the south-east quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of block No. 113, east of Center street, in the city of Stockton, including my present residence, and all of the balance of the east half of said block No. 113, except one hundred feet of the north half of said block fronting on Hunter street, by 150 feet on Flora street; also all the household and kitchen furniture, to be taken by her at ten thousand dollars, if she choose to accept such property at that price, to be included in the one-half of my estate; also give and bequeath to her in cash the sum of three thousand dollars, to be paid to her from the first sales of property, and at once; also give and bequeath to my beloved adopted daughter, Bessie Stewart Payne, twenty shares of stock of the Stockton Building & Loan Association. [Here follow several specific legacies.] Seventh. The remainder of my estate to be distributed equally between my brother and sisters, in four parts, that is to say, to Wm. M. Stewart, Amanda Brown Harris, and Lou V. Moore, and the living heirs of my deceased sister, Betty Ann Winn,—the heirs to be counted as one of the inheritors,—and the four to have share and share alike. * * *

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this twenty-sixth day of July, 1883.

FRANK STEWART." [Seal.]

The widow of deceased, after his death, filed the following acceptance of his will:

"To the Hon. the Superior Court of said County of San Joaquin: I, Bettie Stewart, the surviving wife of Frank Stewart, deceased, respectfully represent that in and by the last will of said deceased, duly admitted to probate by this court on the twenty-second day of August, 1883, the said deceased gives and bequeaths to me one-half of all his estate; the south-east quarter of block 113, east of Center street, in the city of Stockton, in said county, including his late residence, and all of the balance of the east half of said block No. 113, except 100 feet of the north half of said block fronting on Hunter street, by 150 feet on Flora street; also all the household and kitchen furniture, to be taken by me at $10,000, if I should choose to accept said property at that price, to be included in the one-half of the estate of said deceased; that I hereby make known my election, and accept the said real and personal property under the terms of said will for the said sum of $10,000, to be included in the one-half of said estate.

"Dated April 28, 1885.

Mrs. BETTIE STEWART."

In distributing the estate, the court decreed to the widow of deceased one-half of the estate, and $3,000 for her immediate support. The distribution of the estate was contested on the ground that deceased was only disposing of his half of the property held in common with his wife, and that she was entitled to three-fourths of the whole estate, as deceased left no descendants.

BY THE COURT. There is no merit in the motion to dismiss the appeal herein. It is therefore denied.

No citation of authorities is required to show that a will is to be construed according to the intention of the testator. Such is the rule prescribed by the Code. It is elementary. It has always been a cardinal canon. As said in Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337, the intention of the testator is to be kept in view as the pole star in the construction or interpretation of the will. The language of every clause in the will before us bears evidence of the fact that the testator intended to deal with the whole of the community property; and all the provisions of the will, taken together, afford most convincing proof of the fact that he believed he was dealing with the whole of the community property when he used the words "all my estate." He speaks of the home place as "my residence," and deals with the household and kitchen furniture as his own, regardless of any claim or right in his wife. He disposes of certain shares of stock as if no one but himself had any interest therein. He refers to a certain stock of grain, and the business in connection therewith, as "my [his] grain business," when he must have known (if he was dealing with a half interest only) that his wife would take the other half by operation of law, and with his executors would have the right to control and manage the same after his death, and provides that Major Batte shall wind up the business, and fixes his compensation at $2,000 therefor. The estate is worth nearly half a million dollars. According to the contention of appellant, the widow, by operation of law and the provisions of this will, will take three-fourths of the whole estate. It is singular, indeed, if the testator knew that his wife was to receive under the law and the first clause of the will over $300,000 in bank stock and lands, that he should have been so anxious to have sales of property made at once in order that she might be paid $3,000 upon which to live. It is not at all likely that a husband who loved his wife so much that he desired her to have three-fourths of this great estate, would ask her to pay $10,000 for one-half of his half interest in a piece of property, the whole of which, appellant admits, was worth only about $14,000, and that, too, for the property which had been the home of himself and his beloved wife, and the sanctuary of his household gods. Furthermore, if the testator intended the debts to be paid out of his estate, he knew that, if the specific legacy of $3,000 should be paid to his wife, twenty shares of stock and $35,000 in cash to his adopted daughter, Bessie, $2,500 to one nephew, and the same amount to another, $1,000 to Katie, the niece of his wife, $5,000 to the Stockton Free Library, $2,000 to Batte, and that his wife would, by operation of law and the terms of his will, receive three-fourths of the whole of the estate, there would be nothing left after the payment of the costs and expenses of administration, for his sister and brothers. It is admitted that he was a careful business man of more than ordinary ability, and of course he knew the value, character, and extent of his property.

When read together, the provisions of the will are the best expression—short of a direct statement to that effect—that he was dealing with the whole of the community property under the phrase "all my estate." Every clause in the will bears a clear and indisputable badge of that intention. He dealt with the property just as he had been accustomed to deal with it through a long, active, and successful business life; just as he had in accumulating and disposing of the property during his life-time, without consulting his wife, or asking her to join with him in any conveyance. He uses the phrase "my estate" in the sense that he had been accustomed to use it all his life. It was his estate. He could dispose of it absolutely without the consent of his wife during his life, and he thought undoubtedly that he could do so, and that he was doing so, by his will.

It is to be regretted that the presumption which prevails in New York and other states, where the right of dower exists, was ever applied to the construction of wills in this state. In those states, in order to cut off the right of dower, the wife must join in the conveyance. With us there is no estate in dower, (section 173, Civil Code;) and the husband is taught, through a long and active business life, to regard the community property as his own, to speak of it as his own, and to dispose of it as his own. It is true that the presumption referred to as applicable in other states has been adopted here, and it is perhaps well that we should adhere to it; but, where the intention of the testator is so clearly expressed as it is in the will before us, that presumption must give way. So long as our laws recognize the right of the husband to dispose of his property by will, the courts should strive to carry out the real intention of the testator, and for that purpose give greater weight to the natural and ordinary meaning of the language used in the will than to mere presumptions of law, which are intended as aids for the construction of wills in doubtful cases only. "The widow, having accepted the devises and bequests provided for her by the will, thereby made her election and confirmed the disposition made by her husband of the common property." Noe v. Splitalo, 54 Cal. 209; Morrison v. Bowman, supra.

WADSWORTH v. WADSWORTH. (No. 12,393.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 8. 1887.)

APPEAL—TIME OF FILING UNDERTAKING—EXTENSION—TRANSCRIPT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 940, provides that an appeal is ineffectual unless an undertaking is filed within five days after service of notice of appeal. Section 1054 provides that the time for filing undertakings may be extended, not to exceed 30 days, by the court or judge. Plaintiff filed her notice of appeal August 18, 1887. August 23d the time for filing an undertaking was extended 20 days, and on September 12th again extended 10 days. It was filed September 22d. Held, that the undertaking was filed in time, and, as the appeal was not perfected until the undertaking was filed, the period of 40 days for filing the transcript in the supreme court had not expired when the motion to dismiss the appeal was made.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

W. C. Burnett, for appellant. W. B. Tyler, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. Motion to dismiss an appeal. It appears that plaintiff filed her notice of appeal to this court on the eighteenth day of August, 1887. On the twenty-third day of August an order of the judge of the court below was made and filed, extending the time of plaintiff to file an undertaking on appeal 20 days, and on the twelfth day of September a similar order was made and filed, extending the time for a further term of 10 days. An undertaking was filed September 22, 1887, which was in due time provided, the court below or a judge thereof having authority to extend the time for filing such undertaking by said orders. Section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the appeal is ineffectual for any purpose, unless within five days after service of the notice of appeal an undertaking be filed," etc. This section, standing alone, would be conclusive; but it is, we think, subject to the provision of section 1054 of the same Code, which provides that the time for doing certain things, among which are the filing of undertakings, may be extended, not exceeding 30 days, by the court or a judge thereof upon good cause shown. It follows that the undertaking was filed in time, and as the appeal was not perfected until the undertaking was filed, the period of 40 days for filing the transcript in this court had not expired when the motion to dismiss was made.

The motion to dismiss upon the grounds, (1) that the transcript was not filed in time; and (2) that the undertaking on appeal was not filed within five days after service and filing of the notice of appeal, is denied.

McMANN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO. (No. 12,829.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 8, 1887.)

1. JUDGMENT—COSTS—REMITTITUR FROM SUPREME COURT—DURATION—WHEN STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 958, provides that, when the clerk receives a remittitur he shall attach it to the judgment roll, and enter minute of the judgment of the supreme court on the docket against the original entry. Section 1034 provides that the cost bill must be filed within 30 days after the filing of the remittitur, and that thereafter execution may issue as upon a judgment. On May 3, 1882, judgment was rendered in the supreme court for costs accruing there. The remittitur was filed in the court below May 9, 1882. The cost bill was filed May 10, 1882. Execution was issued May 10, 1887. Held, that the statute limiting the duration of judgments to five years began to run from the time of making the entry in the docket. There was, therefore, no authority for issuing the execution, and the court did not err in recalling it.

2. SHERIFF—FUNDS COLLECTED UNDER EXECUTION IMPROPERLY ISSUED—POWER OF COURT TO COMPEL RETURN OF.

The petitioner, as sheriff, had collected money on an execution improperly issued. The court ordered the money returned, and the sheriff applies for a writ of review for the purpose of having the order vacated. Held, that the sheriff being an officer of the court, it has power to control his conduct when acting under color of its authority, and has power to order him to refund the money collected under a process improperly issued.

In bank. Application for writ of review, superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

J. P. Foulds, for petitioner. Edward P. Cole, opposing.

TEMPLE, J. This is an application for a writ of review, in which it is sought to have an order vacated which required the petitioner, as sheriff, to refund certain moneys collected upon an execution, which, it is claimed, was void, for the reason that the judgment upon which it was issued had ceased to be operative, because it had been entered more than five years. The execution was for costs which accrued in the supreme court. The judgment was rendered here May 3, 1882. The remittitur was issued May 6, 1882, and was filed in the court below May 9, 1882. The cost bill was filed May 10, 1882. Execution was issued May 10, 1887.

The sections of the Code bearing upon the subject are section 958, Code Civil Proc., which provides that, when the appeal is from a judgment, the clerk, on receipt of the remittitur, must attach it to the judgment roll, and enter a minute of the judgment of the supreme court on the docket against the original entry, and section 1034, Code Civil Proc., which provides that the party to whom costs are awarded must file his cost bill within 30 days after the remittitur is filed, and thereafter he may have an execution therefor as upon a judgment. Execution may be issued upon a judgment at any time within five years after its rendition, and it is contended that the language, "he may have an execution therefor as upon a judgment," not only directs the mode and manner of issuing execution, but also makes applicable the limitation as to time. It is obvious, however, that the sole purpose of the language used was to give the party entitled to the costs an execution therefor.

The case of Kerns v. Graves, 26 Cal. 156, is analogous to the case at bar. A judgment had been obtained before a justice of the peace, and a transcript filed in the office of the county clerk. The statute provided, as in section 899, Code Civil Proc., that execution might be issued by the county clerk "as upon judgments recovered in the higher courts." This court held that execution could only issue within five years after the judgment rendered by the justice of the peace, and that the execution was still upon and by virtue of the judgment rendered by the justice.

In making the entries required by section 958, the clerk of the superior court acts by authority of this court. No action is required on the part of the superior court to authorize the entries or the issuance of the execution. The execution issues pursuant to the judgment rendered in this court, which is thus docketed and made the judgment of the superior court. It becomes the judgment in that court as soon as the remittitur is filed and the entries made. This view was taken in the case of Marysville v. Buchanan, 3 Cal. 212, approved in McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 467. In the first-mentioned case it is said: "The present appeal is from an order of the district court, refusing to set aside an order of the judge in chambers staying proceedings upon an execution for costs, issued by the clerk of the district court upon a remittitur from this court filed with him, and from an order of the district court quashing said execution. * * * By statute (Pr. Act, 358,) the remittitur from this court is transmitted to the clerk of the court below, and by him it is attached to the judgment roll and a minute of the judgment of this court is entered on the docket against the original entry. The judgment of the court, [this court,] then, stands as the judgment of the district court. If the judgment of this court orders a new trial, the clerk of the district court will proceed to place the cause on the calendar. If it award costs, he will, on application of the party in whose favor it is given, issue execution for the same. In either case he acts, not by authority of the district court, but of this court."

The statute commencing to run from the entry made in the docket, there was no authority for issuing the execution, and the court did not err in recalling it. White v. Clark, 8 Cal. 513. Nor do we think the power of the court to order the sheriff to refund the money can be doubted. He was acting as an officer of the court and under color of its process. Thus acting, he demanded and received moneys illegally. The money was paid to him in his official capacity as an officer of the court, and because of the process improperly issued. Certainly, the court must have the power to control the conduct of its officers, when acting under color of its authority or of its process. Section 1286, Code Civil Proc.

We think the writ should be denied. So ordered.

PEOPLE ex rel. LYNCH v. MARTZ. (No. 12,178.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 10, 1887.)

PUBLIC LANDS—LAND IN LIEU OF SCHOOL LAND—FORFEITURE.

In a suit brought to cancel a patent issued by the state on an application to purchase 320 acres of state land, in lieu of school land, made in 1880, plaintiff claimed that the same land had been sold to his grantor, upon his application made in 1869; that the land was a part of the grant for school purposes; and that the application was approved, and a certificate of location issued to his grantor. The grantor, however, did not present his certificate, or make any payment on his location, until after he had by law forfeited his rights to the land. In 1872 the legislature passed an act for the relief of purchasers of state lands, providing that when application had been made to purchase lands, and the whole or part of the purchase money paid, and a certificate of purchase or a patent had been issued, the title to the land vested in the purchaser, or his assigns, upon full payment therefor: provided, that no other application had been made for the purchase of the same land prior to the issuance of the certificate of purchase: and provided, that the act should not apply to school lands, except to the amount of 320 acres to one purchaser. The complaint did not allude to this act, nor claim relief by it from the forfeiture suffered by the plaintiff's grantor, nor did it allege that plaintiff's grantor had not already had the benefit of the act to the extent of 320 acres of school land. Held, that a general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained.

v.15p.no.9—29

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; JAMES A. GIBSON, Judge.

H. C. Rolfe, for appellant. Curtis, Otis & Conner, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is a suit brought to cancel a patent issued on an application to purchase 320 acres of land, in lieu of school lands granted to the state, made in May, 1880. Plaintiff claims that the same land had been previously sold to John Mullen, assignor of the relator, upon his application made in 1869, under the provisions of the act of March, 1868, (St. 1867-68, p. 507.) The land having been accepted by the register of the United States land-office in part satisfaction of the grant for school purposes, the surveyor general of the state approved the location, and issued to Mullen a certificate of location on the twenty-first day of August, 1869. Mullen did not present his certificate, or make any payment thereon, to the county treasurer, until October 15th following, which was 55 days after he received the certificate of location. The statute required the purchaser to make this payment within 50 days after the approval of the surveyor general. Section 23, Act March 28, 1868. In Eckart v. Campbell, 39 Cal. 256, this court, in construing this statute, held that the failure of an applicant to make this payment within 50 days was conclusive evidence that the applicant had abandoned his privilege; in other words, that the requirement was a condition precedent, failing in which, the applicant forfeited his rights.

The legislature, however, passed, March 27, 1872, an act entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers of state lands," the first section of which reads as follows: "When application has been made to purchase lands from this state, and payment made to the treasurer of the proper county for the same, in whole or in part, and a certificate of purchase or patent has been issued to the applicant, the title of the state to said land is hereby vested in said applicant, or his assigns, upon his making full payment therefor: provided, that no other application has been made for the purchase of the same lands prior to the issuance of said certificate of purchase: provided, further, that this act shall not apply to school lands, except to the amount of 320 acres to any one purchaser." St. 1871-72, p. 587. The complaint contains no allusion to this act, and, of course, does not show that Mullen had not already been the beneficiary of the act to the extent of 320 acres. A general demurrer was interposed, in which one of the grounds was that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant declining to answer, judgment was entered for plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken.

We think it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show affirmatively that he was entitled to the benefit of the act. There was no presumption of law upon the subject. The demurrer, therefore, should have been sustained. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

PARTNERSHIP—FICTITIOUS NAME—ACTION BY—PLEADING—FAILURE TO FILE CERTIFICATE.

Where, in an action by partners doing business under a fictitious name, the complaint is perfect in all other respects, there is no failure to state facts sufficient to show a cause of action merely because it contains no statement that a certificate of partnership had been filed, as provided by Civil Code Cal. §§ 2466, 2468, attaching a legal incapacity to maintain an action upon any contracts made or transactions had in the partnership name to a failure to file such a certificate; and an objection that no such certificate has been filed must therefore be taken by answer; otherwise, under Code Civil Proc. MAYNARD v. POLHEMUS. (No. 9,565.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 12, 1887.)

COVENANT—TO SELL ONLY TO GRANTOR—NOT BINDING ON HEIRS—RESTRAINT OF ALIENATION.

In September, 1882, N. sold to C. a tract of land; the deed containing the provision that, if C. should ever sell the land, it should be sold to N. at the purchase price. C. held possession until 1862, when he died, leaving, by will, the land to R., who remained in possession until her death in 1879. In 1864, N. conveyed to defendant all his interest in the land. In an action by the administrator of R. to quiet title, held, that the proviso in the deed was a personal covenant, invalid as a restraint of alienation, and not binding on the heirs and assigns of C.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; E. F. HEAD, Judge.

Cope & Boyd, for appellant. A. H. Loughborough, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This is an action in which the administrator and heirs of Bridget McD. Rice are seeking to have quieted their title to a tract of land in San Mateo county. The complaint alleges that Nicholas De Peyster, in September, 1852, granted and conveyed the land in controversy to one Cooper. The deed contained the following clause: "To have and to hold the aforesaid premises unto the said John B. Cooper, his heirs, and to his and their sole use forever; with the sole provision that if the said Cooper should ever sell any of the aforesaid property, it shall be sold to the said De Peyster at the aforesaid price." Cooper went into possession under this deed in 1857, and from that time until his death held the same. He died in November, 1862. By his will, duly admitted to probate, he devised the land to Bridget McD. Rice, who held possession of the premises until her death, which occurred in July, 1879. The plaintiff Maynard was appointed administrator of the estate in February, 1880. Improvements to the value of about $3,500 have been put upon the land by said Cooper and Rice, and the land itself has greatly increased in value. Defendant claims under a deed from De Peyster, executed on the thirty-first day of March, 1864, and his claim is founded solely upon the provision contained in the deed and quoted above.

The complaint set forth the facts, demurrer was filed by the defendants, which was overruled, and the defendant declining to answer, judgment went for plaintiff as prayed for. Appellant claims that this provision in the deed to Cooper is valid, and that the right to enforce it passed by De Peyster's deed of March, 1864, to the defendant.

If the proviso referred to be construed as a covenant, it was merely personal, and not binding, upon the heirs or assigns of Cooper. It does not appear that De Peyster attempted to bind the heirs of Cooper by any covenant. All claim on behalf of De Peyster and his grantees under the proviso ceased upon the death of Cooper. At common law it was necessary, in order to make the heir responsible, that he be expressly named in the covenant of his ancestor. McDonald v. McElroy, 60 Cal. 496. If it be doubtful whether a clause such as that quoted above be a covenant or a condition, the court should declare it to be a covenant. Chancellor Kent, speaking of a similar provision, said: "It is very questionable whether such a condition would be good at this day." 4 Kent, Comm. 131. Regarded as a condition, it is unreasonable and contrary to the policy of the law, because in restraint of alienation. Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363; Civil Code, §§ 711, 715. Judgment affirmed.

ST. ORES v. MCGLASHEN. (No. 9,875.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 12, 1887.)

1. DAMAGES—EXEMPLARY—MALICE—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for damages for assault and battery, defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that, before they could give exemplary damages, they should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the alleged assault was maliciously committed. Held, that a preponderance of evidence is all that is necessary to warrant a finding of exemplary damages in civil cases.

2. SAME—ASSAULT—MALICE—INTOXICATION.

In an action for damages for an assault, defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if they believed the defendant to have been so intoxicated that he did not know what he was doing, and was therefore incapable of forming an intent, they should not assess exemplary damages. Held, that the instruction was properly refused, as restricting the question of malice to too narrow limits.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Graves, Turner & Graves, for appellant. F. Adams and V. A. Gregg, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action to recover damages for an assault and battery, committed by defendant. Plaintiff had a verdict and judgment for $1,100 and costs. The appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The seventh instruction asked by defendant, and refused by the court, enunciated the proposition that, before the jury could give exemplary damages against the defendant, they should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the alleged assault and battery committed by the defendant (if any) upon the plaintiff, was maliciously committed by said defendant. The instruction does not embody the law as applicable to civil cases. A preponderance of evidence is all that is necessary to warrant a finding in such cases, and the rule that prevails in criminal cases, and which requires evidence to satisfy the mind beyond a reasonable doubt, has no place here. It follows that the instruction was properly refused.

The only other instruction refused, which it is claimed should have been given, is the third. This instruction states, in substance, that, while intoxication is in itself no excuse or defense for the commission of a wrong, yet this goes only to the justification of the wrong; "but when it is alleged, as it is here alleged, for the purpose of inflaming the damages sought to be recovered against the defendant for that wrong, and to make them not only compensatory, but vindictory," etc., then and in such a case, if the jury believed from the testimony that defendant was so intoxicated that he did not know what he was doing, and was therefore incapable of forming any intent whatever, they should not assess exemplary damages, but confine their verdict to actual damage.

The complaint does not charge or show that defendant was intoxicated, and the statement shows affirmatively that the testimony as to intoxication was introduced by defendant. No instructions on the subject were, so far as appears, offered or given on behalf of plaintiff. The statement in defendant's instruction, therefore, that intoxication of the defendant was alleged for the purpose of inflaming the damages, involved an assumption of facts not warranted by the record; and the instruction was properly refused for that cause, if for no other. "The fact that a tort was committed while a defendant was intoxicated, is no excuse whatever. This has been held in actions for slander. It is conceivable, however, that the amount of the recovery might be considerably affected by showing that the wrong was committed under such conditions that no one would have been likely to attach importance to the utterances." Cooley, Torts, 114; McKee v. Ingalls, 4 Scam. 30; Reed v. Harper, 25 Iowa, 87. In the last case cited, the court refused to instruct the jury "that, if they believed from the evidence that the defendant was so intoxicated at the time he spoke the words (it being an action for slander) that he did not know what he was about, the plaintiff could not recover." The court refused to so charge, but instructed the jury that it was their duty to consider all the facts and circumstances attending and surrounding the speaking of the words; and its action in that behalf was upheld.

In cases of tort, exemplary damages are not confined to cases in which malice on the part of defendant appears. Section 3294 of the Civil Code provides that "in any action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, the jury, in addition to the actual damages, may give damages for the sake of example, and by way of punishing the defendant." It will be observed that malice is but one of several causes for which exemplary damages may be given, yet the instruction as asked would make it the sole cause, and its absence conclusive of plaintiff's right to recover exemplary damages. Many of the statements contained in the instruction are correct as propositions of law; but the clause which would make the question turn upon the absence of intentional malice restricts the question to too narrow limits, and the instruction was properly refused.

The case as presented by the evidence shows a wanton attack by defendant upon an aged cripple, and the perpetration of personal injuries fully warranting the verdict, independent of all question of exemplary damages. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

Estate of SHILLABER. (No. 11,484.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 12, 1887.)

1. WILL—DIRECTION AS TO DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY—REFERENCE TO LETTERS SUBSEQUENTLY WRITTEN.

A will written entirely by the testatrix contained this clause: "I give and bequeath to my said executor my silverware, jewelry, paintings, organ, clothing of every description, carriage, library, bas reliefs, bronzes, statuary, excepting my three large pieces, viz., 'Delilah,' 'Saul,' and 'Lost Pleiad,' and request him to dispose of the same in the manner specified in my letter to him of this date." At the time of making the will the letter had not been written, but was afterwards dictated by the testatrix. Held that, under the evidence and the language of the will, the letter was properly excluded from probate as a part of the will.

2. SAME—BEQUESTS VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY—ADMISSION TO PROBATE.

Certain bequests were made in a will, to be disposed of in the manner specified in a letter written to the executor by the testatrix. Held, that though the bequests in that part of the will might be void for uncertainty, they being but a small part of the estate, the will was properly admitted to probate.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

McAllister & Bergin, for appellant. Wm. Hoff Cook, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The document which was admitted to probate in this proceeding is wholly in the handwriting of Mrs. Shillaber, deceased. The third clause of the will reads as follows: "I give and bequeath to my said executor my silverware, jewelry, paintings, organ, clothing of every description, carriage, library, bas relievos, bronzes, statuary, excepting my three large pieces, viz., 'Delilah,' 'Saul,' and 'Lost Pleiad,' and request him to dispose of the same in the manner specified in my letter to him of this date." After the execution of this will she dictated a letter to Carroll Cook, Esq., named in her will as executor thereof. This letter is in the handwriting of Mr. Cook, but is signed by the deceased. It commenced as follows: "SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., September 8, 1884. To Carroll Cook, Esq., San Francisco, Cal.—MY DEAR NEPHEW: In my will, which I have this day executed, I have left certain personal property to you, to be disposed of by you as I should by letter direct. I desire the following disposition made thereof, viz.," etc. (Here follow directions for the disposition of the articles above named.)

The court found—and the finding is supported by evidence—that the letter was dictated and signed after the execution of the will. Upon the objection that the letter was not in existence at the time of the execution of the will, it was excluded, and the document, which is wholly in the handwriting of Mrs. Shillaber, was admitted to probate. It is claimed by appellant that the two documents were designed to constitute one instrument; that they are such in law, and as they are not wholly in the handwriting of the deceased, they do not constitute a valid olographic will.

All the authorities to which our attention has been called agree that any paper may be referred to, and may be a part of a will, if such paper be in existence at the time of the execution thereof. If the will be duly executed and attested, the paper referred to, whether attested or not, will become a part of the will, if it be already in existence, and is clearly described and identified. The identification must be by a description given of the paper in the will. In the case at bar the letter referred to was not in existence at the time of the execution of the will. It has been held that "a reference in a will may be in such terms as to exclude parol testimony, as where it is to papers not yet written, or where the description is so vague as to be incapable of being applied to any instrument in particular; but the authorities seem clearly to establish that, where there is a reference to any written document, described as then existing, in such terms that it is capable of being ascertained, parol evidence is admissible to ascertain it, and the only question then is whether the evidence is sufficient for the purpose." Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moore, P. C. 454. We think that, under the evidence and the language of the will, the letter was properly excluded.

It is claimed that without the letter the will is incomplete, for only through the letter can the beneficiaries therein named make title to the bequests provided for them. We think, however, that the will, being effective in other parts, was properly admitted to probate, although the bequests named in the third article above quoted be void for uncertainty. George v. George, 47 N. H. 45; Brown v. Burdett, 21 Ch. Div. 667. The property named in the third article is evidently but a small part of the estate. It is all personal property, and intestacy as to any portion of the estate should be avoided if possible. Our Code provides that, "of two modes of interpreting a will, that is to be preferred which will prevent a total intestacy." It is not clear that the will without the letter is incomplete. It has been held that as to personal property a document like this letter, although not entitled to probate as a part of the will, is sufficient to enable the beneficiaries named in it to proceed in a court of equity, after the property is distributed to the executor under a clause of the will similar to that quoted above, to compel the executor to execute the trust in accordance with the directions contained in the letter. In re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. Div. 594.

In re Estate of ZEILE. (No. 11,956.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 12, 1887.)

WILL—CODICIL—CUMULATIVE LEGACIES—ADVANCEMENTS.

Decedent, a resident of San Francisco, left a will made May 19, 1883, which bequeathed to certain relatives residing in Germany, a proportionate share of the proceeds of 1,000 shares of bank stock. The will contained the proviso that any advancements the testator might personally make to the legatees, should be in whole or partial satisfaction of their respective legacies. Decedent went to Germany, and ordered that large sums of money be sent him there. In August, 1883, decedent made a codicil, in which he bequeathed to his relatives in Germany proportionate shares of the money he then had. In this codicil the testator ratified his former will, directing that it remain unchanged, and confirming the bequests he had made. Held, that the legacies bequeathed in the codicil were cumulative, and not to be regarded as advancements, within the meaning of the proviso in the former will.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

J. B. Reinstein, (J. M. Seawell, of counsel,) for appellant. Seldon S. & George T. Wright, Joseph P. Kelly, and Sawyer & Burnett, (S. Heydenfeldt, of counsel,) for respondents.

MCKINSTRY, J. Deceased died at Monte Carlo, Monaco, April 26, 1884, being then a resident of San Francisco, and leaving property in that city and county. He left a will, executed and published in this state on the nineteenth of May, 1883, which was duly probated in San Francisco, a portion whereof reads: "Item 6. I give and bequeath unto my relatives residing in Germany, one thousand (1,000) shares of the stock of the Bank of California, the same to be sold by my executors at or as soon after my decease as is practicable, for its reasonable value, and the proceeds to be divided as follows, to-wit: To my sister Mathilde, one-fourth, ($\frac{1}{4}$;) to the children, residing in Germany, of my brother David, one-fourth, ($\frac{1}{4}$;) share and share alike; to the children of my dead sister, Mrs. Maier, one-fourth, ($\frac{1}{4}$;) share and share alike; to the children of my dead sister, Mrs. Froescher, one-fourth, ($\frac{1}{4}$;) share and share alike. And I hereby declare that any advancements that I may hereafter personally make to the above-mentioned legatees, or to either of them, shall be deemed a partial satisfaction of said legacy, equal in amount to the sum so advanced, and I direct that an equal amount shall be deducted from the proceeds of the sale of bank stock, and added to my residuary estate."

Subsequent to the execution of the will in California, decedent left for Europe, and at Rottweil, Wurtemberg, on the seventeenth of August, 1883, made a supplemental will or codicil, portions whereof read:

"(I.) I have already disposed by testament of my estate in California. That testamentary disposition shall remain unchanged, and I again ratify the same.

"(II.) However, I have already made arrangements to have a sum of money sent from California to a bank in Germany or Wurtemberg, of which I shall dispose in favor of other relatives. The following sums of money shall be paid: (1) To my sister, Mathilde Zeile, unmarried, at Reutlingen, sixty thousand (60,000) marks. To my brother, David Zeile, of the town of Weil, fifty thousand (50,000) marks. (3) To the wife of the tanner Hummel, at Reutlingen, whose first name at this moment I do not remember, daughter of my deceased sister, whose name I do not just now recall, formerly widow of the baker Maier, of Tübingen, seventy-five thousand (75,000) marks. (4) To the children of my deceased sister Gottlobin, formerly wife of the tanner Froescher of Reutlingen, to-wit: (a) To the son, who is tanner in the upper country, and is married, whose first name is at this instant unknown to me, twenty-five thousand (25,000) marks. (b) To her daughter Pauline, now living, widow of the architect Fuchs at Reutlingen, that is, to each of the children of this marriage, minors, whose names are at this instant unknown to me, twenty thousand (20,000) marks; with proviso that the income is to go to the children, and that there shall be a guardianship of the estate until they become of age or marry. (c) To her daughter Mathilde, now living, wife of the manufacturer Haux, at Reutlingen, that is to the children born and to be born of this marriage, (there are four children at present,) jointly (50,000) fifty thousand marks; with the proviso that the income goes to the children; that there shall be a guardianship of the estate until they arrive at the age of majority, or until they marry, and that at that point of time they are to receive their shares; that in case of the possibility of other children being born, the guardian's court will have to determine how such shall be paid over, and also with the further proviso that, if one of these children should die during the age of minority, the share of such child shall go to his brothers and sisters. The children living shall hold in trust for the children born hereafter.

"(III.) All the personal property of any kind, as well as money which I shall leave in Germany at my decease, beyond that of which I have disposed in the foregoing paragraph, shall go to the four branches named in the foregoing paragraph, in such manner that only those mentioned in the foregoing paragraph shall be entitled, and that those of each branch are to share with each other in the proportion of the sums given them in the foregoing paragraph.

"(IV.) If, unexpectedly, the funds in Germany should be insufficient for the purpose of paying the sums in paragraph 2, then the heirs of the estate in California shall supply the deficiency.

* * * * *

"(VII.) All bequests which I have made or which I shall make by this last testamentary disposition be expressly confirmed, whether these bequests are given to relatives, strangers, or for charitable purposes and institutions. Likewise, any testamentary papers written or subscribed by me shall have the same effect as if they were here incorporated."

On application for distribution of the proceeds of the bank stock, which had been sold by the executors by order of the court, the superior court found that no part of such proceeds had been paid to Mathilde Zeile, sister of testator, or to Marie M. Hummel, daughter of testator's sister Mrs. Maier, or to Karl Froescher, son of the sister of testator, Mrs. Froescher. Also that the sum bequeathed to Marie M. Hummel (appellant) by the Rottweil will or codicil was more than her share of the proceeds of the bank stock. And the court held that the sums of money bequeathed by the Rottweil will or codicil to the persons mentioned in item 6 of the California will were intended by the testator to be, and were, "advancements," within the meaning of the term as used in item 6, and should be deducted from the legacies given to the same persons in that item. The superior court treated the legacies given by item 6 of the California will as "specific legacies," and no question has been made by either party as to the correctness of that ruling. The thousand shares of bank stock were to be sold by the executors, and the proceeds divided among the legatees named. The dividends collected by the executors were incidents to the stock, and were, of course, to be distributed in like proportions with the proceeds of sale. The will did not merely provide that sums of money should be distributed to the legatees, payable primarily out of the fund arising from the sale. The legacies were not merely demonstrative. They were specific. If the shares of stock had become worthless, the legatees would have been entitled to nothing.

There is no question of ademption, in the strict sense, here. The specific thing has never been taken away. The bank stock continued to be a portion of testator's property until his death, and was a part of his estate afterwards. But the first question, as applied to this appeal, is, what was the specific legacy left to Marie M. Hummel? The legacy to her was not of one-eighth of the proceeds of the 1,000 shares of bank stock absolutely; but of one-eighth, less the amount of any "advancements" the testator might "personally make" to her after the execution of the California will. Whatever the nature of the "advancements," they were to be personal acts of Frederick Zeile in his life-time. It would seem plain, also, that, whether or not the execution of a will containing provisions like those last above recited was intended by the testator, when the California will was made, to constitute an "advancement" to appellant of an amount equal to the legacy to her named in such an instrument, must depend upon the language of the California will, and the effect of oral testimony, if any, properly admissible to explain the intent of the testator when the California will was made. Whether the legacy to appellant in the first instrument was satisfied by a bequest in the subsequent instrument, (intended as a substitute for that legacy,) is a different question. The California will was republished at Rottweil, and all its provisions reaffirmed and ratified.

Unless the term "advancements" of itself included a legacy mentioned in a subsequent codicil, or the language of the second instrument, in connection with that of the first, or of such language with oral testimony, properly admitted to explain the first instrument, shows the testator intended the second legacy to be in substitution or satisfaction for the legacy in the California will, the second legacy must be held to be cumulative. It is well settled, except where the two legacies are for the same sum, and both testamentary instruments express the same motive for the gift, that, where a testator gives a legacy of quantity, simpliciter, and also a second legacy of quantity to the same legatee, the second legacy is regarded as cumulative, and not as substitutionary, unless the language of the second will or codicil shows an intent to the contrary.

Whether the testator meant, when he used the word "advancement," that any legacy he might give in a subsequent will or codicil to one of the persons named in item 6 should be deemed an advancement, is to be determined by reference to the language of the California will, and the evidence showing the circumstances surrounding the deceased when he made that will. Whether, when he provided a legacy for appellant in the Rottweil will, he intended the same as a substitute for the legacy left her in the California will, and not as cumulative, is to be determined by reference to the language of the Rottweil will, or of the Rottweil and California wills together, in the light of the testator's then surroundings, and of events (so far as evidence of such was admissible) which preceded its execution.

Prior to our Codes, the term "advancements," was applied to gifts by a parent, in his life-time, to a child, of the whole or a part of what it is supposed the child would inherit from the parent; sometimes also to such gifts by one standing in loco parentis. By the Civil Code the term is extended so as to include like gifts by an ancestor to a child "or other lineal descendant." Civil Code, § 1395.

It may be conceded, as claimed by respondents, the word is not employed in item 6 as in the provisions of the Civil Code. It by no means follows, however, that the testator intended the word to embrace any legacy to one of the same persons, which he might give by a subsequent testamentary instrument, not revocatory of the will in which the word is found. Webster gives as definitions of "advancement:" "The payment of money in advance; money paid in advance." A payment in advance implies a payment beforehand,—before an equivalent is received, or before the happening of an event in the contemplation of the parties to a contract. When used in a will, unless another event is mentioned prior to which the advance is to be made, or the context otherwise indicates a different meaning, the words, "payments in advance to be applied in satisfaction of a legacy," import payments prior to the happening of the event on which the will is to take effect, to-wit, the death of the testator.

Counsel for respondents cite Professor Pomeroy's work on Equity Jurisprudence as authority for the proposition that the legacy to appellant in the Rottwell will was an "advancement" within the meaning of the word as used in the California will. The learned writer, speaking of the effect of a legacy in a will made after a settlement on a child, says: "The settlement or agreement to give a portion may sometimes contain a provision to this effect: that, if the parent should afterwards, during his life-time, make an advancement to the donee, such advancement should be a complete or partial satisfaction of the portion. If, instead of making a technical advancement, the parent should afterwards, by his will, leave a legacy or a residue, the legacy given under such circumstances is held to be a compliance with the provision, and to operate as a satisfaction in full or in part of the portion." 1 Eq. Jur. § 567. He cites in a note Onslow v. Michell, 18 Ves. 490; Noel v. Lord Walsingham, 2 Sim. & S. 99; Fazakerley v. Gillibrand, 6 Sim. 591; Papillon v. Papillon, 11 Sim. 642. We have not had access to the Irish report, but it would seem the English cases, although they appear to do so, when examined and fully explained, do not support the text. See Cooper v. Cooper, 8 Ch. App. 825, 826. However this may be, Mr. Pomeroy shows very clearly in another place that the doctrine of presumptions applicable with respect to the dealings of a parent as to a child has no place in cases like the present. 1 Eq. Jur. § 548.

Lord ROMILLY, M. R., said: "It is of paramount importance to consider in all cases * * * whether the doctrine of presumption against double portions, or the doctrine of construction of instruments, applies." "If the original gift was to a stranger, the doctrine of satisfaction becomes applicable according to the words of the original donor." Cooper v. Cooper, 8 Ch. App. 819, note.

In the case before us, the testator might have used language to indicate that by "advancement" he meant not only a gift of money or property prior to his death, but also a subsequent bequest to a legatee named in the California will. But in the absence of such language there is no presumption that he used the word in a sense differing both from its technical and proper signification. As it was not employed as a technical term, the presumption is he employed it in the sense approved in general literature and by common usage. The language in immediate connection with "advancements" strengthens rather than weakens the hypothesis that the testator intended a gift in his life-time. "Any advancements that I may hereafter personally make," etc.

It is true, a subsequent codicil would be made by him, and made by him in his life-time. But the words, while apt and appropriate in respect to gifts consummated in his life-time, are such as would not ordinarily or "naturally" be resorted to when the testator was speaking of gifts to take effect only on his death. In the latter case, the substance of the thing to be conferred would not be delivered by the testator personally, but by his executors after his decease.

The testimony of the witness called by the parties contesting the application of appellant and others, (respondents,) did not establish or tend to establish that the word "advancements" was used to designate or include any subsequent legacy to appellant. The witness said: "I was about two months in drafting said will, as the doctor [testator] made frequent changes, and I had to rewrite it. It took him a long time to make up his mind about some of his property. When he came to the matter of these German heirs, he seemed already prepared. The 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Bank of California he designed for them, and he proceeded to divide it up just as it is written in the will,—four families, each one-quarter. After I had written it and read it to him, he remarked that when he arrived in Germany he intended to give some money to such of his relatives there as might need it, to distribute some money among them, and whatever that amount might be to either of them must come out of their share of the proceeds of the bank stock. It was under that instruction that that clause was framed. The will was not signed when completed. He kept it a couple of days examining it, but made no remarks to me that I remember. He made the statement about the German heirs. He seemed to be prepared and settled it as above stated. Before the will was executed, he wanted Judge Heydenfeldt to read the will. He came and read it. Judge Heydenfeldt said it was all right. I am under the impression the doctor used the word 'distribute' in reference to the German heirs. He said: 'Distribute some money among these people.'"

The statement of decedent to witness that, "when he arrived in Germany," he intended "to give" or "distribute" some money to or among such of his relatives there as might need it, accords, at least as well with a purpose to make presents to such relatives personally, as with an intention to make different and substitutionary testamentary provision for such of them as he had named in his will. It is significant that in terms he expressed no intention of providing for his relatives in Germany by supplemental will or codicil. There is no suggestion in the testimony of Taft that deceased entertained such intention. It cannot be derived from the word "distribute," a word appropriately applicable to an allotment or division of money among the German relatives by the testator in his life-time. Our conclusion is that, when the California will was made and published, the deceased intended that the legacies mentioned in item 6 should be reduced only by actual payments made by himself personally; that is, in his life-time.

The evidence shows that the decedent took with him when he left for Europe about $35,000, and that he afterwards wrote for, and there was sent him by his agent, the witness Taft, $125,000. Decedent wrote for the last sum at Nice, December 22, 1883, but in his letter, stated that he had already directed his agent to send him "every two or three months all the cash on hand." The court below found that Taft, testator's agent, sent the $125,000 from San Francisco on the sixteenth day of January, 1884, and that on the twenty-third of the same month he sent another sum of $5,000. When the California will was made and published, the testator intended that any sum of money he might personally give to the persons named in item 6 should be deducted from the legacy to such persons. His language proves, at least, that he then contemplated the probability of such advances. Neither the fact that the decedent caused very large sums of money to be placed in Europe, nor his letter of December 22, 1883, indicates any change of his original purpose to make gifts or advances personally to some of those mentioned in item 6. Can we say his intention was changed or modified prior to the making of the Rottweil will?

"Although two bequests may be made to the same person, and although these bequests may differ in their amounts, incidents, and forms, * * * still the special language used by the testator in making the second gift, or the language found in other parts of the will, may sufficiently show his intention to give the second legacy for or in satisfaction of the prior one." * * * It is impossible to lay down any general rule governing such cases; each case must stand upon its own circumstances. The question is, then, simply one of interpretation in order to ascertain the real intent of the testator. But, in arriving at this intent, the court will, if necessary, look at all parts of the will. The court may also be called upon to interpret the testamentary language, rather than to apply any rule of presumption, when the second instrument, e. g., the codicil, expressly refers to the former one. The terms of the second instrument,—perhaps codicil,—may be such, when all taken together, as to show an intent that the second gift was to be in substitution or in satisfaction, and not cumulative.” 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 548.

Paragraph 1 of the Rottweil will reads: “I have already disposed by testament of my estate in California. That testamentary disposition shall remain unchanged, and I again ratify the same.” And in paragraph 7 the testator confirms all bequests which he had already made, and declares that any testamentary papers subscribed by him shall have the same effect “as if they were here incorporated.” The two instruments are therefore to be read as one writing, the whole expressing the intent of the testator at the date of the Rottweil will so far as his intent appears from the writing, with regard to the disposition of his property.

There may be some significance in the circumstance that, after a large amount of money had been sent to him, which he might, perhaps, have given to or distributed among his relations “personally,” the testator did not make such personal donations, but proceeded to prepare a codicil wherein he inserted bequests to some of the persons named in item 6. This fact, however, if it can be considered at all, should have little weight in any inquiry, the purpose of which is to ascertain whether the testator, then at Rottweil, intended that the term “advancements” should include the second legacies. The suggestion is but conjectural, that he may have meant what his language does not imply. It is as easy to suppose the testator changed his mind and decided to give to some of those named in item 6 further and cumulative bequests out of the moneys sent to Europe, as that he determined such further bequests should be treated as “advancements.”

We may conjecture that, finding himself growing more ill, his decease, perhaps imminent, and believing that he would not be able “personally” to distribute the moneys, he concluded to make the “advancements” by new bequests. On the other hand, we may conjecture that, returning after long absence to companionship with some of his earlier friends, to whom he was connected by the ties of kindred, his surroundings recalling in his old age the home of his childhood, and all its endearing associations, he may have decided to make provision for some of his relatives in addition to that made by the California will. But all such surmises are more or less fanciful, since they are not based upon the language of the instruments, and are built on presumptions, rather than evidence,—presumptions of facts from which different inferences may be drawn, as prominence is given to some or the other of them.

By paragraph 7 of the Rottweil will the California will is to be treated as “incorporated” in the former. Item 6 of the California will contains the provision: “Any advancement that I may hereafter personally make [to the legatees named in the item] shall be deemed a partial satisfaction,” etc. Not only did the testator fail to declare, in express terms in the Rottweil will, that the legacies therein given to those named in item 6, should satisfy, in whole or in part, the former bequests, but it may be said he reaffirmed his desire that those bequests should be reduced only by advancements he might “hereafter personally make.” The force of this suggestion is, however, by no means conclusive. When it is said that the two instruments are to be read as one, it is not to be assumed that literal effect is to be given to every clause of both. This may not be possible without violating the reasonable rules of interpretation applicable to every writing. If it satisfactorily appear from other portions of the wills that the Rottweil legacies were intended to satisfy, fully or pro tanto, those given in item 6, the provision in that item as to advancements may be disregarded; or the language used at Rottweil, read with the first will, may show that, whatever its meaning disconnected from the Rottweil will, the testator at the time the Rottweil will was made, intended the word "advancements" to cover the Rottweil legacies.

In paragraph 1 of the will or codicil made at Rottweil the testator declares: "I have already disposed by testament of my estate in California. That testamentary disposition shall remain unchanged, and I again ratify the same." The bank stock was part of the estate in California, and, so far as appears on the face of the instrument, the whole purport and intent of the Rottweil will was to make disposition of the moneys he had arranged to have sent to "Germany or Wurtemberg."

In paragraph 2, immediately after ratifying the disposition of the California will, the testator says: "However, I have already made arrangements to have a sum of money sent from California to a bank in Germany or Wurtemberg, of which I shall dispose in favor of other relatives. The following sums of money shall be paid." He then proceeds to bequeath sums to relatives residing in Germany, some of whom were given legacies by item 6 from his "estate in California," and some of whom were not mentioned in the California will.

We find nothing to indicate that the legacies given to such of the donees as were mentioned in item 6 were not to be additional or cumulative, unless it be in the expression, "of which I shall dispose in favor of other relatives." Now, the sums given by the testamentary instrument executed at Rottweil to Mathilde Zeile, testator's sister, and to his niece, the appellant, were given absolutely. Whether they were intended as "advancements" or not, the right to them, subject to administration, vested unconditionally on the death of Frederick Zeile, except so far as the rights of those named in item 6 of the California will might be limited by the happening of the unexpected contingency spoken of in paragraph 4 of the Rottweil will. Whenever the second legacy is regarded as substitutionary, and not as cumulative, the satisfaction of the prior legacy, to the extent of the second, is absolute. The former legacy, to that extent, creating no right in the legatee, there is no claim of an election between the two on his part.

When, therefore, the testator proposed to dispose of the moneys sent to Europe to "other relatives," he could not have intended to exclude from his bounty those to whom it was expressly extended. Yet some of those to whom legacies were given by the Rottweil will were not named in item 6 of the California will. Those were the other relatives, and the clause can only be read as intended to give legacies, from the sums sent to Europe, as well as to those to whom donations were made by item 6 as to the "other relatives" mentioned.

In paragraph 4 of the Rottweil instrument the testator provided for an event which he regarded as possible, although not probable, and which never came to pass. If, unexpectedly, the funds in Germany should be insufficient to pay the sums in paragraph 2, the heirs of the estate in California were to make up the deficiency. In paragraph 5 he applied the word "heirs" to legatees. But if, in paragraph 4, he intended to include in the word "heirs" all the devisees and legatees named in the California will, there is nothing in the language which indicates his purpose that the bequests in paragraph 2, or the residuary interests given by the Rottweil instrument, should be "advancements" in satisfaction of the legacies of the item 6 of the California will.

Starting, then, with the presumption that the second legacy to appellant was intended to be cumulative, unless the language used by the testator shows it was to be in substitution, does the language of the testator overcome this presumption? As we have attempted to show the term "advancements" does not of itself, either in its technical or in any popular sense, cover a subsequent legacy; and, after a careful examination of the language of the two instruments published at Rottweil, we have been unable to discover therein an intention upon the part of the testator that the word should bear such peculiar signification as that its scope should include the Rottweil legacies, or any intention that those legacies should satisfy, in whole or in part, the bequests of the proceeds of the bank stock.

In re Estate of CROZIER, Deceased. (No. 12,022.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 29, 1887.)

WILL—CONTEST—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

In an action to revoke the probate of a will on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the testator, the contestant offered in evidence a part of the great register of the county to show that the age of the testator was not what he had stated it to be in the will. The evidence was admitted over the objection of the defendant. Held, that this was error, and, under the rule that all error is presumed to work injury, it is sufficient ground for granting a motion for new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; W. S. BUCKLEY, Judge. James A. Louttit, for contestant. J. C. Campbell, (S. D. Woods, A. L. Levinsky, and D. S. Terry, of counsel,) for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. James Crozier died on the seventh day of November, 1881, in the city of Stockton. He left a will made the day before his death, in which the respondent, William C. Daggett, was named as sole legatee and executor. The will was admitted to probate, and in due time Jane Crozier, the mother of decedent, commenced this proceeding to have the probate of the will revoked upon the ground that at the time of its execution the decedent was of unsound mind. The case was tried before a jury and the findings upon the special issues submitted were in favor of the contestant. The respondent then moved for a new trial upon the ground that the evidence did not justify the verdict, and for errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by him. After argument, the court granted the motion, as appears from the record, "on the ground of errors which occurred during the trial, and not for insufficiency of or conflict in the evidence," and the appeal is from that order. It does not appear what the supposed errors were which induced the court to grant the new trial, nor is it important that we should know. If any errors, prejudicial to the respondent, were committed, the order appealed from cannot be reversed by this court. Thompson v. Felton, 54 Cal. 554; McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 300.

Counsel for both sides have presented very elaborate briefs in which the testimony is reviewed, and the numerous rulings of the court are discussed. It is unnecessary to speak of many of these rulings. Most of them were undoubtedly correct, but we cannot say that of all of them. For example: In the will, the age of the testator is stated to be 65 years. Cutting, who drew the will, testified that Crozier told him that was his age, but did not tell him when he was born. Without objection the respondent introduced in evidence a copy of the great register of San Joaquin county, which showed the age of Crozier to have been 63 on the twelfth day of April, 1879, the date of his registration. In rebuttal the contestant offered in evidence a part of the great register of the same county, which reads as follows: "1,165. Crozier, James; age, fifty-two; country of nativity, Scotland; occupation, gardener; local residence, O'Neil; proved fifteen years' residence and loss of certificate; date of registration, February 14, 1867; sworn; register number, 3,232." This offer was objected to by the respondent on the ground that the offered evidence was immaterial and irrelevant, and not in rebuttal, but the objection was overruled and the evidence admitted. We think this ruling erroneous. The evident purpose of introducing the evidence was to throw doubt on the validity of the will, and, so far as we can see, it may have had its desired effect. There was no evidence to show when Crozier was born, but the argument in support of the ruling is, in substance, that he must have known and sworn to his age when he was registered in 1867; that as he is shown by the entry to have been 52 years old then, he must have been about 67 years old when he died; and that as he stated his age to be 65 and not 67 when he made his will on the day before he died, that fact tended to show weakness or unsoundness of mind, and was rightly submitted to the jury, "so that they might properly determine whether at that time he had mental capacity sufficient to dispose of his property, remember the claims of those dependent upon him, and the nature of the business he was then transacting." The argument is evidently unsound both in its logic and law. Crozier may have made an affidavit showing his age, and the other facts entitling him to registration, but he did not make the entries upon the register and may never have seen them. They were therefore irrelevant, and, in our opinion, wholly inadmissible for any purpose.

But it is said that the error, assuming that the ruling was erroneous, was an immaterial one, and a new trial should not have been granted on account of it. The rule is that every error is presumed to work injury to the party against whom it is committed, unless it clearly appears that no injury could have resulted. Here we cannot say that the respondent was not prejudiced by the erroneously admitted evidence. There were several other rulings upon the admission of evidence, and particularly upon the admission of certain testimony of the experts, the correctness of which was doubtful, but we do not think it necessary to speak of them particularly.

It follows that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

CRIMINAL PRACTICE—ISSUE OF WARRANT—JURISDICTION OF MAGISTRATE.

Penal Code Cal. §§ 811-813, provides that when an information is laid before a magistrate of a crime committed, he must take the depositions of the informant and his witnesses, if any; that the depositions must set forth facts tending to prove the guilt of the accused; and that, if the magistrate is satisfied therefrom of the commission of the offense, and that there is reasonable ground for believing the accused guilty, the magistrate must issue a warrant of arrest. Held that, under these provisions, a magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue such warrant without evidence of such guilt, and that an affidavit alone, in the form of an information, containing no evidence, is not sufficient to support such warrant.

Proceedings in police judge's court of San Francisco; HORNBLOWER, Judge. John D'Arcy, H. B. Miller, and Otto Tum Suden, for petitioner. Joseph Kirk, for the People.

BY THE COURT. Sections 811, 812, and 813 of the Penal Code are as follows:

"811. When an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense, triable within the county, he must examine on oath the informant or prosecutor, and any witnesses he may produce, and take their depositions in writing, and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them.

"812. The deposition must set forth the facts stated by the prosecutor and his witnesses, tending to establish the commission of the offense, and the guilt of the defendant.

"813. If the magistrate is satisfied therefrom that the offense complained of has been committed, and that there is reasonable ground to believe that the defendant has committed it, he must issue a warrant of arrest."

Under these provisions a magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest without some evidence tending to show the guilt of the party named in the warrant. The original information may be sufficient, though made only upon information and belief, if followed by the deposition of the complainant or some other witness, stating facts tending to show the guilt of the party charged. Of course, where there was some evidence upon which the magistrate acted, we would not interfere. It may be also true that the original information might be treated as a deposition, and in such view, if it contained positive evidence of facts tending to show guilt, it might be sufficient as a basis for the issuance of a warrant. But a mere affidavit in the form of an information, containing no evidence, and followed by no deposition stating any fact tending to show guilt, is insufficient to support a warrant. The liberty of a citizen cannot be violated upon the mere expression of an opinion under oath that he is guilty of a crime. Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443, 5 N. W. Rep. 635; *Blodgett v. GARFIELD v. WILSON and another. (No. 11,925.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 29, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—SWAMP LANDS—RIGHT TO PURCHASE.

Plaintiff and defendants were contestants for the purchase of a tract of swamp land. Plaintiff offered a certified copy of his application, which purported to have been sworn to by him before a commissioner of the United States circuit court for California. The commissioner was not authorized to administer the oath. Held, that plaintiff's application was null and void.

2. SAME—RIGHT TO CONTEST PURCHASE.

Plaintiff and defendants made applications for the purchase of the same swamp land, and the contest was referred to the superior court of Tulare county. On the trial, plaintiff failed to establish any right to purchase the land. Held, that he could still contest the right of the defendants to purchase the land.

3. SAME—TRIAL—ISSUES AND FINDINGS.

Plaintiff and defendants were applicants for the purchase of the same tract of swamp land, and defendants alleged that the land had been segregated to the state by the United States for more than six months before their applications were filed. The only proof before the court was a map of the township in which the land was situated approved by the United States surveyor general on October 14, 1884. Their applications were filed in May and June, 1884, and they commenced suit on October 1, 1885. The finding of the court was that the land had been segregated for more than six months before the commencement of the action. Held, that the finding did not meet the issue, and was insufficient.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Tulare county; WM. W. CROSS, Judge.

Chas. E. Wilson and C. A. Webb, for appellant. Lambertson & Taylor, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was commenced to determine a contest between the parties as to the right to purchase from the state a certain section of swamp and overflowed land in Tulare county. The defendant Wilson filed in the office of the surveyor general of the state his application to purchase the north half of the section, on the fifteenth day of May, 1884. The defendant Turner filed his application to purchase the south half of the section on the fourth day of June, 1884. The plaintiff filed his application to purchase the whole section on the twelfth day of June, 1885, and, on demand made by him, the contest was referred to the superior court of Tulare county for adjudication.

At the trial the plaintiff, to show his right to purchase the land, offered in evidence a certified copy of his application, which purported to have been sworn to by him before a commissioner of the United States circuit court for California. This was objected to by counsel for defendants, on the ground that it was not sworn to before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and the objection was sustained, the plaintiff reserving an exception.

It is admitted that the ruling was proper in view of the decision of this court in Winder v. Hendricks, 56 Cal. 464, but we are asked to reconsider that case and to now hold that a commissioner of the United States circuit court is competent to administer oaths under the laws of this state. Without following the argument of counsel on this point, it is enough to say that, in our opinion, the conclusions reached in the case referred to were correct, and should be reaffirmed here. It follows, therefore, that judgment was properly entered in the court below, that the plaintiff's application was null and void, and he had acquired no right to purchase the land in question from the state.

But though the plaintiff had no right to purchase the land, and even if he had not sought to purchase it, he could still contest the right of the defendants to purchase it. Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 26; Thompson v. True, 48 Cal. 605. And when the contest was referred to the court below for adjudication, that court acquired jurisdiction to hear the case, and it became its duty to determine as to the rights of each of the parties.

The question then remains, did the defendants show themselves entitled to purchase the land? In cases of this kind the settled rule is that each party must make out his own case, and to that end must allege and prove that the land is subject to sale by the state, and that he has complied with all the requirements of the statute authorizing its purchase. Lane v. Pferduer, 56 Cal. 122; Dillon v. Salonde, 68 Cal. 267, 9 Pac. Rep. 162; Gilson v. Robinson, 68 Cal. 539, 10 Pac. Rep. 193; Plummer v. Woodruff, 11 Pac. Rep. 871. And if neither party makes the necessary showing, then judgment should be entered that neither of them is entitled to make the purchase. Mosely v. Torrence, 12 Pac. Rep. 430.

In his answer to the complaint each defendant alleged that the land which he sought to purchase was swamp and overflowed land, which was granted to the state by the act of congress of September 28, 1850, and had been segregated as swamp and overflowed land by authority of the United States for more than six months when his application was filed. These averments raised material issues, for, under the provisions of the Code, since 1874, no application to purchase swamp land has been authorized until after the land has been segregated as such by authority of the United States. Pol. Code, §§ 3441, 3443, 3445.

When the defendants offered in evidence their applications to purchase the land, they were objected to by the plaintiff, on the ground, among others, that it was not shown that, at the time when the affidavits and applications were made and filed, the land had been segregated to the state by authority of the United States, and the objections were overruled. No proof was offered by the defendants to show that the land had been segregated as swamp and overflowed land, and none was before the court, except a certified copy of the plat of the township in which the land is situated, which was introduced by the plaintiff. That plat was approved by the United States surveyor general on the fourteenth day of October, 1884, and under the decisions of this court that date must be treated as the date of the survey. Finney v. Berger, 50 Cal. 248; Medley v. Robertson, 55 Cal. 393. Running across the plat, from a point on the north line of section 4 to the south-west corner of section 25, is a line marked "Shore Line of Tulare Lake, in 1855," and west of that line, and nearly parallel with it, is another line marked "Shore Line, in 1880." On the margin of the plat are entries showing the number of acres in the "area of public land surveyed in 1854," and of swamp land surveyed in 1880 and 1884. But there was nothing to show that any map or plat of the township, or of any part of it, except the one introduced by the plaintiff, was ever approved or made. The section in controversy lies west of the "Shore Line, in 1880;" and, conceding that the defendants could use the plaintiff's plat, still we are unable to see any evidence that that section was segregated as swamp land before the fourteenth of October, 1884, when the plat was approved.

The court found that all the land in controversy was swamp and overflowed land, and was granted to the state by the act of congress of September 28, 1850, entitled "An act to enable the state of Arkansas and other states to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits." It further found that the said land had been segregated to the state of California as swamp and overflowed land for more than six months prior to the commencement of the action. The action was commenced on the first day of October, 1885, and six months prior to that date would be April 1, 1885. As the defendants' applications were filed in May and June, 1884, the finding evidently did not meet the issues, and was insufficient.

In our opinion, therefore, the judgment against the plaintiff, and the order denying him a new trial, should be affirmed; and the judgment in favor of the defendants should be reversed, and as to them, the cause should be remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment against the plaintiff, and the order denying him a new trial, are affirmed; and the judgment in favor of defendants is reversed, and as to them the cause is remanded for a new trial.

PFEIFFER v. REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 11,772.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 18, 1887.)

I. TENANCY IN COMMON—RIGHTS OF CO-TENANTS—CONVEYANCE BY CO-TENANT—RESERVATION OF EASEMENT.

Plaintiff and defendants and others were tenants in common in a certain tract of land. In 1870 defendants conveyed their undivided interest, but reserved the right to use the water on a certain portion of the land. In 1875 the land was partitioned, and to plaintiff was assigned that portion of the land on which was the water. Held, that the defendants, as tenants in common, could not by reservation in their deed create an easement or servitude on the common land as against their co-tenant.

2. PARTITION—BY JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—PARTIES—GRANTEE FROM A CO-TENANT OF AN EASEMENT.

Defendants and others were tenants in common of a certain tract of land. Defendants conveyed away their undivided interest, reserving a right to use water. A co-tenant also granted them the right to take water from a portion of the tract occupied by him. Held, that neither the reservation nor the grant gave the defendants such an interest in the land as entitled them to be made parties to an action for partition.

L. E. Bulkely, for appellant. Mastic, Belcher & Mastic, for Laura Pfeiffer. Flournoy, Mhoon & Flournoy, for respondents. Jarboe, Harrison & Goodfellow, amici curiæ.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain piece of land; to enjoin defendant from diverting any water from said land; and to recover damages for past diversion of such water. The action was tried in the court below without a jury, and judgment went for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The material facts in the case—omitting certain deraignments of title and other matters which need not be recited here—are these:

1. In 1865 plaintiff became the owner in fee of a certain undivided interest in "2,900 acres or thereabouts" of mountain or hill land in Alameda county, California. This land was a part of the Rancho San Antonio, granted by the Mexican government in 1823 to Louis Peralta, and confirmed to his sons and grantees by a patent of the United States government, dated February 10, 1877. Plaintiff continued to be the owner of said undivided interest until the year 1875, when a certain partition suit entitled Le Roy v. Gwinn et al. was instituted in the proper district court for the purpose of terminating the co-tenancy of the various owners of undivided interests in said land, and apportioning it among said owners in severalty. A judgment was rendered in said partition suit on the twenty-first of August, 1875, by which the particular land described in the complaint in this present action, and which is designated as "Plot O," was set off in severalty to plaintiff. She was put into possession of said plot O by the sheriff, and has been in possession ever since, except so far as her possession has been interrupted by defendant as hereinafter stated.

2. On August 10, 1864, Owen Simmons and wife, being also the owners in fee of an undivided interest in said 2,900 acres of land, conveyed the same to the College of California, a corporation, who remained the owner thereof until June 1, 1870, when it conveyed said undivided interest to the defendant herein, the regents of the University of California. At the time of said conveyance by Simmons and wife to the College of California, said Simmons was in the actual occupancy of that part of said land described in the complaint, which contains the springs of water about which this litigation has arisen, although he was only an owner, as tenant in common with others, of an undivided interest in the whole tract of 2,900 acres, which fact was well known to the college. After the conveyance to the college, the latter remained in occupancy of said piece of land until its conveyance to the defendant on June 1, 1870. This particular part of the land was wet and springy. It has several springs on it, which usually sunk into the ground within short distances from their sources. In 1866 the college commenced to clear out two of said springs; and within a year or two, by excavations, etc., it developed a stream of water, which by means of dunes, pipes, reservoirs, etc., it converted and conveyed entirely away from said undivided lands onto other lands held by said college in severalty. The college, and its successor, the defendant, continued to so divert and convey said water from 1866 until after the judgment in said partition suit in 1875, without any interference or complaint by any of their co-tenants. In developing this water, and in erecting works for its diversion, the college and the defendant expended about $17,000. After the judgment in partition, which set off this piece of land in severalty to plaintiff, she protested against any further diversion of the water by defendant, demanded payment for it, etc. She commenced this action within a day of the expiration of five years after the issuance of the patent.

3. On the twenty-eighth day of November, 1870, the defendant executed to Mary E. Brayton a conveyance of all its interest in said undivided tract of 2,900 acres of mountain. Said conveyance also describes three other tracts of land not involved in this controversy, and has in it the following clause: "Excepting and reserving out of and from this conveyance, and out of the premises firstly, secondly, and fourthly above described, the right of the water arising upon or flowing across the same, so far as it shall be needed for the University of California, and the right to enter upon said land for the purpose of constructing and laying the necessary pipes, and making the same available, the same to be exercised in such manner as not to interfere with the use and occupation of the land for cultivation, and to do no damage to the crops thereon." Mary E. Brayton afterwards conveyed to H. G. Livermore, who was made a party to said partition suit, and had set off to him, a certain part of said 2,900 acres, designated as "Plot H." The word "fourthly" in said clause of reservation refers to said undivided interest in said 2,900 acres.

4. There is another fact which must be here stated, because, while it has no direct reference to the land or water described in the complaint, it has a bearing on the question: Who were necessary parties to the partition suit? Z. B. Heywood, being the owner of an undivided interest in said tract of 2,900 acres, and having entered upon the occupancy of a certain part of it called "Ramsey Ranch," on the fourth day of September, 1860, executed a deed to the president and board of trustees of the College of California, by which he gives, grants, bargains, sells, and quitclaims to them "the exclusive right in perpetuity to enter upon my land known as the 'Ramsey Ranch,' being a portion of the Rancho San Antonio in the county of Alameda, California, and thereon to collect and take away, with the reservations hereinafter mentioned, the waters of the various springs which open into and along the gulch and ravine, and its branches that debouch at or near the point where the present road crosses the boundary line between sections 83 and 84, as laid down in Kellersberger's map; and also of the said springs above said ravine that rise to the southward of and run past and near my present farm-house, and for the purposes aforesaid to take, hold, use, occupy, and clear up so much of said land as may be proper and necessary for collecting said waters in basins or reservoirs, or for flooding by dams, and for canals and conduits, and the laying of pipes; and the right at all times to enter upon so much of said lands as their convenience may require for all the purposes aforesaid, and for repairs or viewing the same, and the right to protect said waters from waste or damage by such works, and in such manner as they may judge best." The reservations referred to are not material. Heywood remained owner of said undivided interest until the commencement of said partition suit; was made a party thereto; and had set off to him in severalty a part of said 2,900 acres designated as "Plot P," said plot P including the said Ramsey ranch. On the twenty-sixth day of November, 1869, the said president and board of trustees of the College of California conveyed to "the state of California, represented by the regents of the University of California," all the rights and property (if any) which were conveyed to the former by said deed of September 4, 1860, executed by said Heywood as aforesaid. Neither the state of California nor the defendant was made a party to said partition suit.

5. The defendant continued to divert water from said plot O, from the time plaintiff became several owner thereof until the trial of this present action, and to convey the same to its university lands, which never were part of said 2,900 acres of mountain land. The court below finds that for three years and ten months immediately preceding the trial, the defendant so diverted and used 10,000 gallons per day, in addition to water sold by it to others, for which it received $4,804; but it is not found how much plaintiff was injured by such diversion. It appears from the findings that defendant has taken the water from only two springs on said land, and that there are several other springs on the land which seem not to have been developed or used in any way by plaintiff.

Upon these facts the court below rendered judgment for defendant upon the sole ground—as stated in the first finding—that by the reservation in said deed from the defendant to Mary E. Brayton, and by said deed of the College of California to the state of California, represented by the regents of the University of California, conveying to the latter the rights conveyed to the former by said Z. B. Heywood as aforesaid, the defendant and the state of California acquired and retained such interests in said 2,900 acres of land as made them necessary parties to said suit for partition; and that, not having been made such parties, the judgment in said suit setting off said plot O in severalty to plaintiff was and is void as against the defendant.

In taking this view of the case we think that the court below erred. It is not necessary to discuss the question whether, if respondent had been the sole owner of the land at the time of its deed to Mrs. Brayton, the reservation would have left in respondent a mere personal privilege or right in gross, or an interest in the land itself capable of partition. At the time of the execution of said deed, respondent was the owner of only an undivided interest in the land as tenant in common with the appellant and others; and, as such tenant in common, it had no power to convey to a stranger, or to reserve to itself, after parting with the fee, the right to divert water entirely away from said land. A tenant in common cannot create an easement or servitude upon the common land. In Goddard, on the Law of Easements, on pages 93 and 94, the result of the authorities on the subject is correctly stated as follows: "So the grantor must be the sole owner of the fee. One joint owner or tenant in common cannot create an easement in the common estate as against his cotenant—though probably he would be himself estopped to dispute a grant thus made. For the same reason one tenant in common cannot, when conveying his own interest in the common property, create by reservation a personal and separate easement over the same for the benefit of his adjoining separate property." In Boston F. Co. v. Condit, 19 N. J. Eq. 394, it was held that "a grantee of the right to dig ores from one tenant in common cannot call for a partition of the premises." See, also, 3 Kent, Comm. (11th Ed.) 554; Freem. Co-Tenancy, § 198; Adam v. Iron Co., 7 Cush. 361; Marshall v. Trumbull, 28 Conn. 183.

We do not understand counsel for respondent as denying this to be the rule clearly established by the general authorities, and they cite no cases to the contrary. But they argue that, logically, the rule ought to be different in this state on account of certain decisions made by this court (about another matter) in Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361; Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 576, and some other cases which follow them. It was quite customary at one time for individual tenants in common of large Mexican grants to convey, or to undertake to convey, their interests in particular parts of the common land by metes and bounds, called "special locations;" and the decisions last above referred to simply held—First, that the grants of such special locations were good as against naked trespassers; and, second, that they were not absolutely void as against the co-tenants of the grantor, but were taken subject to the co-tenants' right of partition of the whole tract, and might be lost to the grantee when such partition took place. These decisions are admitted to have been in conflict with many authorities of high standing, and were based no doubt, to some extent, on equitable considerations growing out of particular circumstances; and they should not be pushed further than the limits of their express terms. But there were no questions about easements in those cases. Whatever interest the grantor undertook to convey was all his interest or estate in the whole land described in the conveyance. There was no attempt to create or reserve a right to dig for minerals in the land, or to cut wood on it, or to take water from it, or to have a way over it,—no attempt to divide up the very body of the land and distribute it around. There is nothing, therefore, in those decisions that alters the well-established rule as above stated, which determines the main point in the case at bar.

Of course, the deed from Heywood to the College of California, and the deed from the latter to the respondent, or the state of California, are upon the same footing with the "reservation" in the deed from respondent to Brayton. Neither the respondent nor the state of California had an estate or interest in the land, and neither was a necessary party to the suit for partition.

The defenses founded on appropriation, acquiescence, estoppel, and the statute of limitations were not maintained. The findings on those issues, as we understand it, were all in favor of appellant, and respondent has not appealed.

Our conclusion is that upon the findings judgment should have been rendered for appellant according to the prayer of her complaint, except as to damages, about which there is no finding. But as appellant now waives all claims for damages, there appears to be no necessity for a new trial. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the superior court is directed to enter judgment for plaintiff according to the prayer of the complaint, without damages.

MOORE and others v. BOYD and others. (No. 9,792.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 29, 1887.)

1. CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—LIMITATION.

The liability of a stockholder for a debt of a corporation is a liability "created by law," referred to in Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 359, which enacts that an action to enforce a liability created by law must be brought within three years after the "discovery * * * of the facts upon which * * * the liability was created."

2. SAME—WHEN STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.

Defendants were sued as stockholders for an indebtedness contracted by a company. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 559, limits the time for bringing such an action to three years "after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts upon which * * * the liability was created." Held, that if the plaintiffs desired to rely on the stockholders it was incumbent upon them to examine the books of the company to discover how the stock stood, and that, as the books of the company were open to inspection by the plaintiffs, they would be charged with that knowledge which could have been ascertained by such inquiry, and that the time commenced to run when the debt was incurred.

3. SAME—ESTOPPEL TO DENY OWNERSHIP OF STOCK.

The defendants were sued for an indebtedness contracted by a corporation in which they were shareholders. One of the defendants had stated in a letter to a third party that he owned 11,000 shares of stock in the company. Held, that the admission not being made to the plaintiffs, but to a third person, did not operate as an estoppel to prevent said defendant from denying the ownership.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

James A. Wagner, for appellants. McAllister & Bergin, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is an action against certain stockholders of the South Mountain Consolidated Mining Company, a corporation having a capital stock of 100,000 shares, upon an indebtedness of the company to plaintiffs of $46,953.50, incurred by the company during the months of July and August, 1875. The defendant Lent is alleged to have owned at that time 33,145 shares; the defendant Boyd, 11,000 shares; and the defendant Willis, "a large number of shares." The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal.

As the positions of the defendants are somewhat different, we will consider them separately.

1. The defendant Willis disposed of all the stock in which he had any actual interest before the months of July and August, 1875. Other stock, however, stood in his name, "as trustee," upon the books of the company. In 1874, 30,000 shares belonging to the company were placed in the name of "William Willis, Trustee." These shares were disposed of under the direction of the president in the acquisition of outstanding titles to the mine. As we gather from the evidence, no change was made in the way this stock stood upon the books of the company. Before July, 1875, about 60,000 other shares belonging to one Minear were placed in the name of "William Willis, Trustee," as collateral security for a debt of the company, for which Willis had made himself responsible. These shares stood upon the books of the company in this way during the months of July and August, 1875. But before that time the greater part had been sold to outside parties, and the proceeds applied to the reduction of the debt for which it was security. Most of the remainder was sold during said months of July and August. Whenever the stock was sold, Willis simply indorsed the certificates in blank, and delivered them to the purchasers, leaving the stock to stand upon the books of the company in the name of "William Willis, Trustee." As a matter of course, after this, he did not know what became of the stock, or who owned it,—the certificate being transferable by delivery "in the ordinary course of business, just like a 20-dollar piece."

The position of appellants' counsel is that this made Willis liable as a stockholder. The argument is that after the stock pledged was sold he no longer held it as collateral security; that its being on the books in his name enabled him to vote it, and control the company; and that the mere addition of the word "trustee" to his name, without stating for whom he was trustee, amounts to nothing, under the decisions in Brewster v. Sime, 42 Cal. 142, and Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 113. In other words, that he appeared upon the books of the company to be a stockholder, and that this made him liable. We do not find it necessary to examine the validity of this argument. The condition of affairs above described existed at the time the indebtedness was contracted. And, if we assume in favor of the appellants that it made Willis liable as a stockholder, it made him liable in July and August, 1875; and the claim against him is barred by the statute of limitations.

Section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:

"Sec. 359. This title does not affect actions against directors or stockholders of a corporation, to recover a penalty or forfeiture imposed, or to enforce a liability created by law; but such actions must be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts upon which the penalty or forfeiture attached, or the liability was created."

The liability of a stockholder for the debt of the corporation is a liability "created by law," (Green v. Beckman, 59 Cal. 545;) and therefore the above section applies to it. More than three years having elapsed before the action was brought, the claim was barred by limitation unless there was no "discovery * * * of the facts upon which * * * the liability was created." What were such facts? Manifestly the existence of the indebtedness of the corporation, and the fact that the defendants owned a certain proportion of the stock. Now, the plaintiffs, having advanced money directly to the corporation, could not have been ignorant of the indebtedness arising therefrom. The inquiry, therefore, is reduced to this: Were they ignorant of the fact that during the months of July and August, 1875, the stock stood upon the books of the company in the name of "William Willis, Trustee?"

For the purposes of the statute of limitations, if the means of knowledge exist, and the circumstances are such as to put a man of ordinary prudence on inquiry, it will be held that there was knowledge of what could have been readily ascertained by such inquiry. This rule is applied both in equity (New Albany v. Burke, 11 Wall. 107; Bank v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 567) and at law, (Bailey v. Glover, 21 Wall 349; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 141.) In the present case the plaintiffs could have discovered how the stock stood upon the books of the company by looking at the books; and we think that it was incumbent upon persons advancing money to the corporation, and relying upon the stockholders for payment, to have done so. It is not shown that they made any effort to do so; and therefore they cannot claim the benefit of the exemption made by the section above quoted as to the running of the statute. If, therefore, there was any liability upon Willis from the way the stock stood upon the books of the company, it is barred by limitation.

2. The defendant Boyd never had any stock in his name upon the books of the company, either as trustee or otherwise, except the five shares put in his name to qualify him to act as director. He admits being interested in some of the stock at one time; but he disposed of it before July, 1875. The court finds that, "in the months of July and August, 1875, said defendants did not, nor did any of them, own any other or more of the capital stock of said South Mountain Consolidated Mining Company than the five shares thereof standing in their names as aforesaid." This finding is as broad as the issue; and no objection is taken to its sufficiency in point of form. And it responds to the questions presented by the evidence. Was the evidence sufficient to support it?

As an original proposition we should have had much difficulty in coming to the conclusion that this defendant did not own 11,000 shares of the stock at the time the indebtedness was incurred; for in a letter to a third party, dated September 28, 1875, he said: "I am compelled to pay assessments on over eleven thousand shares of my own stock;" and the letter displays much indignation over the conduct of one Townsend, who was supposed to have depressed the value of the stock in the market. But Boyd denied that he owned any stock, and explained his letter by saying that the company owed him money, which he expected to get out of the sum raised from the assessment; and that he wrote the letter in the expectation that it would be shown to other stockholders, and would encourage them to pay the assessment on their stock. This explanation seems open to doubt. But the court below heard and saw the witness, and therefore had a better opportunity for arriving at a conclusion than is afforded by a record; and under the well-settled rule its conclusion as to the fact will not be disturbed.

It is contended, however, that the letter referred to operated as an estoppel upon the writer, and prevented him from denying that he was a stockholder. But the admission was not made to the plaintiffs, or any of them, and therefore did not operate as an estoppel. Reynolds v. Lounsbury, 6 Hill, 536. To hold that an estoppel exists under these circumstances would be to make every admission an estoppel.

The foregoing disposes of the claim as to the defendant Boyd, and it is unnecessary to consider the question of the statute of limitations as to him.

3. The defendant Lent never had any stock in his name upon the books of the company except the five shares necessary to qualify him as a director. He admits having been interested in a large number of shares, but testifies that he disposed of them before the months of July and August, 1875. We see nothing in the evidence to cast doubt upon the finding above quoted, that he owned no stock at the time the indebtedness was incurred. He says, however, that a large part of this stock was given away or disposed of in a way he does not distinctly remember. His testimony is as follows: "I cannot remember at this time what disposition I made of it, but I am positive it was all sold at about the sum I gave for it. In the first place, in organizing a company, the first men that come in are newspaper men who want to know what is this company,—want me to carry some stock. Another will want me to carry some stock, and I think every share of that stock went in that way; but I cannot remember. * * * I cannot remember now the disposition of my 500 shares. I think I gave it out at different periods as presents to persons around the office or some one else. I think I gave it to somebody or other. I don't know who it was, but after we got through with the 3,500 shares, I know that Boyd, Willis, and myself said, 'We will give this away.' Willis said: 'I am going to give my mother mine.' Boyd said: 'I will give mine to Mrs. Blank;' I forget the name. And I said: 'I will do the same thing,' and what I did with it I don't know. I am so sure I had no stock after that," etc.

The learned counsel for the appellants argues that stock cannot be transferred in this way, as against creditors of the corporation, and among other authorities cites Bowden v. Johnson, 107 U.S. 251, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246, and Thomp. Stockholders, § 215. But the rule he invokes requires that the transfer should be for the purpose of escaping liability, and to a person whom the stockholder knows to be irresponsible. The evidence shows no such case. And if the rule is to be applied in this state, (as to which we express no opinion,) this is not a case for its application.

4. All three of the defendants were directors, and each had five shares of the company's stock transferred to their names upon the books of the company. This, we think, made them liable as stockholders. Wolf v. St. Louis I. W. Co., 15 Cal. 319. But under the views above expressed this liability was barred by limitation. And, if this were not so, the matter is too trifling to require the reversal of the judgment. This seems to be the view of the counsel for the appellants; for on page 6 of his brief he says: "Even if the defendants had owned the five shares each, standing in their names, the amount for which they would be liable would be such a trifling sum that it would not justify them in taking up the time of a court with a suit, to say nothing of the costs to themselves. Five shares to each of the defendants would be 15-100,000 of 46,963, or just a little over 70 cents; or, with interest, about $1.40." We quite agree with counsel that this is too trifling a matter to take up the time of a court. It is a case for the application of the maxim, de minimis non curat lex. Wolff v. Prosser, 14 Pac. Rep. 852.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

WE CONCUR: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

LITTLE v. SUPERIOR COURT (No. 12,188.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

APPEAL—REVERSAL—NEW TRIAL—PARTIES NOT PARTIES TO THE APPEAL—INJUNCTION.

In a proceeding to restrain the trial court from retrying a case, so far as the petitioners were concerned, it appeared that in a foreclosure case in 1878, the mortgagor's (petitioner's) property was sold to pay two mortgages. The decree was satisfactory to the mortgagors, but not to one of the mortgagees, whose lien was subordinated to the other, and he appealed to the supreme court, where the mortgagors objected that, as to them, no appeal had been taken. The supreme court reversed the decree, and ordered a new trial, and in the course of the decision stated that, in considering the case, they had regarded the appeal as to the mortgagors not well taken. Held, that though the mortgagor's objection was not directly passed upon, yet the statement was in effect a decision that, as to the mortgagors, no appeal had been taken; that the only question on appeal was as to which mortgage had priority, in which question the mortgagors had no interest, and a new trial as against the mortgagors would be restrained.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; J. K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

M. Delmas, for petitioner. T. O. Houghton, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is a proceeding to restrain the superior court of Monterey county from trying the case of Withers v. Little, so far as these petitioners are concerned therein. The action referred to is a foreclosure suit, commenced by Withers against David Jacks and petitioners herein, Milton Little and Mary Little, in 1878. It is alleged there that the Littles are indebted to Withers upon a certain promissory note; that they gave a mortgage on lots 1 and 2, in Monterey, to secure the payment of the note, and that Jacks claims some interest in the property. The Littles made default, Jacks put in an answer denying that his mortgage was subsequent in time or in equity to that of Withers upon lots 1 and 2, and in a cross-complaint, alleged that the Littles were indebted to him upon a promissory note secured by a mortgage upon said lots 1 and 2, and also upon lots 3, 4, 5, and 6. The Littles consented in open court to the entry of judgment against them as prayed for by Jacks in his cross-complaint. The cause was tried by the court, and a decree entered in favor of Withers against the Littles for the sum claimed by him, and in favor of Jacks for the sum claimed in his cross-complaint. It was further adjudged that the Withers mortgage upon lots 1 and 2 had priority. At the foreclosure sale, Withers purchased lots 1 and 2. Jacks purchased lots 3, 4, 5, and 6, and certificates of sale were regularly issued to them, and were duly recorded. Thereafter Jacks filed a notice of appeal, which reads as follows:

"[Title of court and cause.] You will please take notice that the defendant, David Jacks, in the above-entitled action, hereby appeals to the supreme court of this state from the judgment made and entered in said district court on the twenty-fifth day of July, 1878, in favor of plaintiffs in said action, and against the defendants therein, and from the whole thereof.

"Dated this twenty-first day of July, 1879.

"HOUGHTON & REYNOLDS, Attorneys for Defendant David Jacks."

An objection was made by the Littles in the supreme court to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that as to them no appeal had been taken. The decision of this court is printed in 56 Cal. 370 et seq. The court did not directly and fully sustain the objection thus made, but in the opinion said: "In considering this cause we have regarded the appeal as to the administrator of Milton and Mary Little, his wife, not properly taken." The judgment was reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment, giving Jacks' mortgage priority. A rehearing was asked, which was denied, but the court remanded the case for a new trial. See report of the case.

The court below (respondent herein) has evidently been in doubt as to the effect of this decision upon future proceedings in the case to determine the rights of Withers and Jacks, respectively, and is now of opinion that it is necessary to proceed against all the parties, as if the case had never been tried. But the judgment rendered against the Littles is final. They have never been heard on appeal.

There was but one issue over which there was any contest, viz., as to which was the prior mortgage. That issue was between Withers and Jacks, and was the only issue considered by this court. Furthermore, the statement in the opinion as to the appeal is in effect a decision holding that the appeal, so far as the Littles were interested, was ineffectual,—there was no appeal as to them. That portion of the decision is not affected by the order made upon the petition for a rehearing. No other conclusion could have been reached than that the judgment, so far as it affected the Littles, was not before the court on appeal. The Littles were not before this court, and the reversal and order for a new trial affected only those who were before the court,—Withers and Jacks. Nichols v. Dunphy, 58 Cal. 605.

The court below will not be embarrassed because of the absence of the Littles as parties in determining the rights of Withers and Jacks as the case stands. The only question between them is which mortgage takes priority. The Littles care nothing how that is decided. But the Littles are interested in the question as to whether the judgment fixing the amount due to Jacks shall stand. It has stood for nine years; was entered by their consent; no one appealed from it; and the property, lots 3, 4, 5, and 6, was sold to satisfy the debt. It would be a manifest injustice to now reopen the judgment, put the note with accrued interest in a new judgment, and again sell the property (which Jacks purchased) to pay the increased amount of indebtedness and costs, or docket a personal judgment against the Littles for the deficiency.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

BATES v. PORTER, Treasurer, etc. (No. 11,575.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 1, 1887.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CORPORATE LIABILITIES—SINKING FUND—"REVENUE" DEFINED.

Act Cal. 1858, § 35, incorporating the city and county of Sacramento, provides that 55 per cent. of the revenue derived from the water-rents, when paid into the treasury, shall be set apart and appropriated to the interest and sinking fund, which shall be applied for the payment of the annual interest and the final redemption of bonds issued for the city indebtedness of Sacramento. By section 28 it is made the duty of the water-works collector to pay into the treasury every week all the moneys collected. In an application by a bondholder for a writ of mandate to command the treasurer to set apart and appropriate to the sinking fund 55 per cent. of all moneys received by him, collected for water-rents in the city of Sacramento, held, that the meaning of the word "revenue," is not the excess of receipts over expenditures, but, as clearly denoted by the context of the statute, is the gross revenue derived from the water-rents collected and paid into the treasury, and that a writ of mandate should be issued. SEARLS, C. J., PATERSON and MCFARLAND, JJ., dissenting.

2. SAME—MANDATE TO SET APART FUND—MONEYS EXPENDED BEFORE APPLICATION.

The city treasurer of Sacramento had collected the water-rents, and, after paying all expenses, including salaries for operating the water-works, set apart and appropriated 55 per cent. of the amount remaining to the interest and sinking fund. Upon petition that the court issue a mandate to the treasurer to set apart and appropriate to the interest and sinking fund 55 per cent. of the amount received from the water-rents since the first Monday in April, 1885, (a date prior to the filing of the petition,) held, that as that amount had already been paid out by the treasurer, although in violation of the law, the court could not grant the relief sought in that portion of the petition.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county; T. B. McFARLAND, Judge.

W. C. Belcher, Freeman, Bates & Rankin, Rosenbaum & Sheeline, and S. C. Denson, for appellant. A. P. Catlin and W. A. Anderson, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to command the respondent to set apart and appropriate to a fund known as the sinking fund, 55 per cent. of all moneys received by him collected for water-rents in the city of Sacramento. It is urged on behalf of respondent that the treasurer is bound to set apart the net receipts of the moneys above mentioned; that is, what remains of such receipts after deducting therefrom various items of expense in conducting the water-works, including salaries of its officers and employes. The contention of appellant is that the respondent is bound to set apart the gross receipts without deducting anything. We are of opinion that the contention of appellant is sustained by the law, which we shall proceed to show.

The city of Sacramento was incorporated by an act passed on the twenty-seventh of February, 1850. See St. 1850, p. 70. This act is referred to in the opinion in the case of Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 583, 4 Pac. Rep. 25, 625, and some of the features of the organization of the city are there detailed. See 65 Cal. 584, 4 Pac. Rep. 25, 625. This act was amended as to the fifth and twentieth sections at the same session of the legislature by an act passed on the twenty-sixth of March, 1850. St. 1850, p. 96. By an act passed in 1851, (St. 1851, p. 391,) which became a law by permission of the governor, who neither approved nor vetoed the bill, a new act of incorporation was enacted. This act repealed the former acts above mentioned, (section 44, Act 1851, p. 401.) The act of 1851 was modified by the act of April 28, 1852, (see St. 1852, p. 19,) by amending the seventh and sixteenth sections thereof. On May 3, 1852, (St. 1852, p. 196,) an act was passed authorizing the mayor and common council of the city to contract, by special ordinance, in such manner as they might choose, with any association, person, or persons, to supply the said city with water, the act declaring that "any contract or contracts so made and entered into, shall be valid and binding in law." The act of 1851 above mentioned was again amended in 1855 by the act of thirty-first of March, (St. 1855, p. 63.) By section 9 of this act, the common council was empowered on their first meeting after a general election, or as soon thereafter as the same could conveniently be done, to appoint, in such manner as the council might prescribe, the following officers, inter alia, to serve during the pleasure of the council, to-wit, one superintendent of water-works, and one engineer of water-works, the salary of the latter office not to exceed $150 per month. By section 4 of this act, amending section 30 of the act of 1851, the salary of the superintendent of the water-works was fixed at $2,000 per annum. St. 1855, p. 64. By section 12, provision was made for the collection of water-rents by the city collector, with power in the common council by ordinance, to require the superintendent of the water-works to collect the water revenue. St. 1885, p. 66. The powers conferred in the act of incorporation of the city on the city council, (see act of 1851, § 7, St. 1851, p. 393, and the amendatory act of 1852, p. 195, amending section 7 of the act of 1851) and the act of May 3, 1852, above stated, are ample to enable the authorities of the city of Sacramento to erect and maintain water-works, and to charge and collect water-rents.

Frequent references in subsequent acts of the legislature are made to the water-works as existing, and the revenue arising therefrom in the shape of water-rents. These may be found by examining the statutes. On the point of authority in the city authorities in the matter of erecting and maintaining the works above mentioned, and to collect water-rents, therefore, it is unnecessary to make more particular reference to these enactments. All the statutes affecting the city and county of Sacramento may be found mentioned in 1 Hitt. Gen. Laws, on pages 970-972

Early in its existence the city became indebted. It had power to borrow money which it had used for purposes not improper, and it had creditors who, as is usually the case, demanded payment. Provision was made by the legislature empowering the city to fund its indebtedness, and to issue bonds therefor. The legislation on this subject, so far as regards the case in hand, (for the action here was brought by a creditor and bondholder of the city,) will be referred to in the further progress of this opinion.

The main question in this case turns upon the construction of the act of 1858, (St. 1858, p. 267) This act is entitled "An act to repeal the act passed March 26, 1851, entitled 'An act to incorporate the city of Sacramento,' and the several acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, and to incorporate the city and county of Sacramento."

By its first section the city and county of Sacramento were consolidated, and for the government of the territory then known as the city and county of Sacramento there was created a board of supervisors, and this board of supervisors and their successors in office it was declared should be a body politic and corporate, under the name and style of "The City and County of Sacramento," and by that name shall be known in law. It was in the same section invested with extensive powers. It was further provided in the same section that "the city and county shall not be sued in any action whatever, nor any of its lands, buildings, improvements, property, franchises, taxes, revenues, actions, choses in action, and effects be subject to attachment, levy, or sale, or any process whatever, either mesne or final."

By the second section of this act, the corporation constituted by it was made the successor of the corporation by this act dissolved, and heretofore known as "The Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento." It was declared to be the owner of all the property, actions, rights of action, moneys, revenues, income, and trust at that time vested in or belonging or in anywise appertaining to the corporation known as "The Mayor and Common Council of the city of Sacramento."

The act of 1858 contains, inter alia, the following sections:

"Sec. 12. The treasurer of said city and county shall receive and safely keep in a secure, fire-proof vault, to be prepared for the purpose, all moneys belonging to, or which shall be paid into, the treasury, and shall not loan, use, or deposit the same, or any part thereof, with any banker or other person, nor pay out any part of said moneys, except upon demands authorized by law, and after they have been duly audited and ordered paid. He shall keep the key of said vault, and not suffer the same to be opened, except in his presence. At the closing up of the same each day, he shall take an account, and enter in the proper book the exact amount, of money on hand; and at the end of every month he shall make and publish a statement in one of the daily papers published in the city of Sacramento, of all receipts into, and payments from, the treasury, and on what account. If he violate any of the provisions of this section, he shall be considered a defaulter, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and he shall be liable to removal, and shall be proceeded against accordingly. If he loan or deposit said moneys, or any part thereof, contrary to the provisions of this section, or apply the same to his own use, or to the use of any other person, in any manner whatsoever, or suffer the same to go out of his personal custody, except in payment of audited demands upon the treasury, he shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof, shall suffer imprisonment in the state prison for a period not less than three nor more than ten years.

"Sec. 13. The treasurer shall keep the moneys belonging to each fund separate and distinct, and shall in no case pay demands chargeable against one fund out of moneys belonging to another. The said treasurer shall give his personal attendance at his office during office hours; and if he absent himself therefrom, except on account of sickness or urgent necessity, he shall lose his salary during his absence. For the purpose of collecting licenses he may employ a deputy, whose compensation shall be fixed by the board of supervisors, at a rate not exceeding $5 per day when necessarily and actually employed."

"Sec. 16. Every demand upon the treasury, except the salary of the auditor, and including the salary of the treasurer, must be acted on by the board of supervisors, and allowed or rejected in the order of presentation, and must, after having been approved by the board of supervisors, before it can be paid, be presented to the auditor of the city and county to be allowed, who shall satisfy himself whether the money is legally due and remains unpaid, and whether the payment thereof from the treasury is authorized by law, and out of what fund. If he allow it, he shall indorse upon it the word 'allowed,' with the name of the fund out of which it is payable, with the date of such allowance, and sign his name thereto. No demand shall be approved, allowed, audited, or paid, unless it specify each several item, date, and value composing it, and refer to the law, ordinance, contract, or authority, by title, date, and section, authorizing the same: provided, that in all cases demands shall be paid in the order of their approval by the board of supervisors.

"Sec. 17. The auditor must number and keep a record of all demands allowed by him, showing the number, date, date of approval, amount, and name of the original holder, on what account allowed, and out of what fund payable. The demand of the auditor, on account of his monthly salary, may be audited and allowed by the board of supervisors. The auditor is required to be constantly acquainted with the exact condition of the treasury, and every lawful demand upon it, and shall report to the president of the board of supervisors on the Monday of each week, or oftener if required, the condition of each fund in the treasury. He shall keep a complete set of books for the city and county, in which shall be set forth, in a plain and business-like manner, every money transaction of the city and county, so that he can, at any time when requested, tell the state of each and every fund, where the money came from, to what fund it belonged, and how and for what purpose it was expended; and also the collections made and the money paid into the treasury by each and every officer. He shall issue all licenses and permits, except as otherwise provided in this act, and countersign all warrants on the treasury. And until the general election, in the year 1859, he shall receive for his compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, payable from the salary fund, as provided in section 36 of this act.

"Sec. 18. No demand upon the treasury shall be allowed by the auditor, or approved by the board of supervisors, in favor of any person or officer in any manner indebted thereto, without first deducting the amount of such indebtedness; nor to any person or officer having the collection, custody, or disbursement of public funds, unless his account has been duly presented, passed, approved, and allowed, as required in this act; nor in favor of any officer who shall have neglected to make his official returns, or his reports, in writing, in the manner and at the time required by law, or by the regulations established by the board of supervisors; nor to any officer who shall have neglected or refused to comply with any of the provisions of this or any other act of the legislature regulating the duties of such officer, on being required in writing to comply therewith, by the president of the board of supervisors, or the supervisor of his respective district."

"Sec. 28. Every officer, or other person, having the control, collection or custody of any money collected for taxes, licenses, water-rents, fees of office, or for any other account not otherwise herein provided, shall pay the same into the treasury on the Saturday of each week; and shall on the same day file the treasurer's receipt with the auditor; and shall at the same time file with the auditor a statement, under oath, of the sources from whence the money came, and that the money so paid over is the total amount collected since his last payment; and such statement shall also be filed in duplicate with the clerk of the board of supervisors. If the county clerk, recorder, sheriff, clerk of water-works, harbor master, or any other officer or person having the control or custody of any money collected for or belonging to the state or city and county, or any money collected for fees which this act provides shall be paid into the treasury, shall fail or neglect to pay over the fees or moneys collected by him, as required by the preceding section, or shall fail to make his affidavit, he shall forfeit his office; and it shall be the duty of the auditor to inform the president of the board of supervisors, in writing, of such failure; and at the next meeting of said board, after the said president shall receive such information, the said board shall enter an order requiring such officer to show cause, on a certain day, why such office should not be declared vacant; and, upon the return-day of such order, or at such time as the matter may be adjourned to, they shall proceed to hear and determine the matter; and, if such officer shall be found guilty of such failure, his office shall be declared vacant."

"Sec. 34. The board of supervisors shall not have power to levy any greater taxes than as follows, viz: On the real and personal estate, except such as is exempt by law, throughout the city and county, a tax of 100 cents on the $100; such state taxes as the laws may require, and, in addition thereto, they shall levy for municipal purposes, on all real and personal property within the city limits, except such as is exempt by law, a tax of 100 cents on the $100; also, a tax for road purposes of 5 cents on the $100 on the property outside the city limits. All of which taxes shall be levied and collected strictly in accordance with the revenue laws of the state, except as may be otherwise provided in this act; provided, that nothing contained in this section shall prevent the board of supervisors from levying, in addition, a tax in accordance with an act passed February, 1858, entitled 'An act to amend an act passed April 27, 1857, entitled "An act to submit to the people of the counties of Sacramento and El Dorado, a proposition for the construction of a wagon road."'

"Sec. 35. The revenue derived from and within the city limits for municipal purposes, viz., taxes, licenses, harbor dues, water-rents, and fines collected in the mayor's court, or otherwise, when paid into the treasury, shall be set apart and appropriated as follows: 55 per cent. to an interest and sinking fund, which shall be applied for the payment of the annual interest and the final redemption of bonds issued for city indebtedness, in accordance with the provisions of this act; 15 per cent. to a salary fund, which shall be applied to the payment of the salaries of municipal officers as provided in this act; 8 per cent. to a school fund, which shall be applied to the support of schools within the city limits; and the balance, 22 per cent., to a fund to be used for all such necessary municipal expenses as are not otherwise provided for in this section, and shall be called the 'Contingent Fund.'

"Sec. 36. The revenue collected or accruing prior to the first day of January, 1859, throughout the city and county, except such as may be collected for municipal purposes within the city limits, is hereby set apart and appropriated as follows, viz.: Twelve per cent. to a school fund, to be used for school purposes as provided by law; 8 per cent. to the pauper and indigent sick fund; 18 per cent. to the salary fund; 12 per cent. to the contingent fund; and the balance to a general fund, which shall be applied to the payment of the outstanding auditor's warrants lawfully drawn on the treasury, and payable in the order of their registry; and the revenue accruing and collected for the county after the first day of January, 1859, when paid into the treasury, 25 per cent. shall go to the interest and sinking fund; 10 per cent. to the school fund; 8 per cent. to the pauper and indigent sick fund; 25 per cent. to the salary fund, and the balance, 32 per cent., to the general fund, all of which shall be exclusively applied to the several purposes for which such funds were set apart; and if, at the close of any fiscal year, there shall remain a surplus in either of the funds mentioned in section 35, such surplus moneys shall be transferred to the interest and sinking fund provided in such section 35; and if a surplus shall be found at the end of any fiscal year in either fund mentioned in section 36, such surplus shall be transferred to the interest and sinking fund mentioned in said section 36, and any transfer of any sum or surplus from one of the funds mentioned in section 35 and section 36 to another fund made at any other time, or in any other manner than as provided in this act, is hereby strictly prohibited, and any violation of such provision, on the part of any officer, shall constitute a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not less than $500, or imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months. All money now in the treasury shall be appropriated as provided in this section.

"Sec. 37. For the purpose of liquidating, funding, and paying the claims against the city and county of Sacramento hereinafter specified, the treasurer shall cause to be prepared suitable bonds of the county of Sacramento, not exceeding the sum of $600, and for the city of Sacramento, not exceeding the sum of $1,600,000, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from the first day of January, 1859, and payable at the office of the treasurer. Said claims shall be funded in the order of their reception; shall, in the order of reception, be entitled to the shortest time; and one-fourth of the whole amount made payable on the first day of February, 1888; one-fourth on the first of February, 1893; one-fourth on the first of February, 1898; and the balance on the first of February, 1903. The interest on said bonds shall be made payable at the office of the treasurer, on the first day of January of each year. Said bonds shall be signed by the president of the board of supervisors, countersigned by the clerk of the board of supervisors, and indorsed by the treasurer, and shall have the seal of the city and county affixed thereto. Coupons for the interest shall be attached to each bond, so that they may be removed without injury to the bond. Said coupons consecutively numbered, shall be signed by the treasurer. It shall be the duty of the book-keeper of the city and county, and the treasurer, each, to keep a separate record of all bonds issued, showing the number, date, and amount of each bond, to whom issued, upon what claim, and its amount; and none of the claims herein specified shall be liquidated or paid, except in the manner herein provided.

"Sec. 38. The following claims shall be received and funded under the provisions of this act: First. All legal debts or liabilities against the county of Sacramento, which may be unpaid and unprovided for by this act on the first day of January, 1859. The annual interest and principal of all bonds issued for claims mentioned in this section shall be paid from the interest and sinking fund, as provided in section 36, and in the manner otherwise provided in this act. Second. All legal debts or liabilities against the city of Sacramento, which may be unpaid and unprovided for by this act on the first day of January, 1859. The annual interest and principal of all bonds issued for claims against said city, shall be paid from the interest and sinking fund provided in section 35, and in the manner otherwise provided in this act."

By section 24 the salaries of certain officers are fixed, and it was declared that these salaries shall be paid out of the salary fund provided in the act. See sections 35, 36, St. 1858, p. 279. The salaries of the president, members and clerk of the board of supervisors, county auditor, and treasurer were to be paid one-half out of the salary fund provided for in section 35 and one-half out of such fund provided for in section 36 of the act, and the salaries of the sheriff, county clerk, assessor, district attorney, county judge, and superintendent of public schools were to be paid out of the salary fund provided for in section 36. By the last clause of section 24 it was provided that "all municipal officers shall be paid out of the salary fund provided for in section 35 of this act." Among the officers mentioned in section 24 are clerk and engineer of the water-works. Laborer at water-works is also mentioned. The salary of the clerk is fixed at $1,500 per annum, of the engineer at the same sum, and the pay of the laborer at $75 per month. The board of supervisors is, by section 7, of the act, empowered to elect a clerk and engineer of water-works. These are all of the municipal officers who are to be paid out of the salary fund provided in section 35. The laborer of the water-works is doubtless to be paid out of the same fund.

It will be seen that all moneys collected by any officer who has the control, collection, or custody of any money collected for taxes, licenses, water-rents, fees of office, or any other account not otherwise provided in the act, are required to be paid into the treasury on the Saturday of each week. Section 28. This duty is enforced under the heaviest penalties, which are prescribed by section 28. It must be further observed that the revenues of the city and county are set apart and appropriated to certain funds therein mentioned. By section 35, the revenue derived from and within the city limits for municipal purposes is to be set apart and appropriated as follows: First, 55 per cent. to an interest and sinking fund; second, 15 per cent. to a salary fund; third, 8 per cent. to a school fund; fourth, 22 per cent. to a contingent fund.

A perusal of section 36 will show the funds created by that act, and the distribution to be made between them. But let it be noted that of the sinking and interest fund of section 35 (55 per cent. of the revenue mentioned therein) it is enacted in these words: "Which shall be applied to the payment of the annual interest of and final redemption of bonds issued for city indebtedness, in accordance with the provisions of this act." Section 35. The most cursory perusal of sections 35 and 36 will show that the funds therein mentioned were to be devoted strictly and exclusively to the payment of the demands on them as defined by the act. The revenue mentioned in section 35, derived from and within the city limits for municipal purposes, is clearly defined by section 35 as follows: "Taxes, licenses, harbor dues, water-rents, and fines collected in the mayor's court, or otherwise," and "when paid into the treasury" they shall be set apart and appropriated to the several funds as set forth above. It should be further noted that the annual interest and principal of all bonds issued for claims against the city of Sacramento are by section 38 to be paid from the interest and sinking fund provided in section 35 of the act. By this means the interest and sinking fund thus created is exclusively devoted to the payment of the interest and principal of the bonds mentioned.

The plaintiff in this action is the holder of such bonds issued under the act of 1858. The act of 1858 was before this court in Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 583, 4 Pac. Rep. 25, 625, and it was there held to be a contract between the bondholders and the city of Sacramento which could not be changed to the hurt of the bondholders by subsequent legislation of any sort. The court, in its opinion, drawn up by Justice Ross, after quoting several sections of the act, among others section 35, and referring to others, said: "Having thus made provision for the payment annually of the interest on the bonds, and ultimately for their redemption, the legislature offered them in payment of the legal claims against the old city government. The offer was accepted, and the holders of the latter surrendered their claims, in consideration of which the consolidated government issued to them its bonds, pursuant to the provisions of the act. The bonds carried with them the pledge of an annual tax for municipal purposes, on all real and personal property within the city limits, except such as is exempt by law, of 100 cents on the $100, 55 per cent. of which to be set apart and appropriated to an interest and sinking fund, to be applied to the payment of the annual interest upon the bonds, and to their final redemption. The tax was the chief security offered the creditors as an inducement to accept the bonds in payment of their claims. When the bonds for whose payment, with interest, provision was thus made, were issued and accepted by the creditors of the old city government, a contract was made, as solemn and binding and as much beyond subsequent legislation as it would have been if made between private persons. These views will be found sustained and amplified in an able opinion recently rendered by the supreme court of the United States, in a case entitled Louisiana v. Pillsbury, reported in 105 U. S. 278."

This should be regarded as settling the law on this point. Regarding it, then, as settled to be a contract between the city and the bondholders, the question arises as to the terms of this contract. The point, then, to be considered is whether this contract extends to and embraces within its terms the gross receipts from water-rents, or does it only include the net receipts after deducting salaries, expenses, etc.? This must be determined by the language of the act. That part of the act to which our attention is particularly called is the first clause of section 35. That clause is as follows: "The revenue derived from and within the city limits for municipal purposes, viz., taxes, licenses, harbor dues, water-rents, and fines collected in the mayor's court, or otherwise, when paid into the treasury, shall be set apart and appropriated as follows," etc. The section then proceeds to designate the funds, as stated above.

Now, it is said that the word 'revenue' is defined by Worcester to mean: "(1) Income or annual profit received from lands or other property;" and "(2) the income of a nation or state derived from the duties, taxes, and other sources for the payment of the national expenses;" and we are referred to the definitions given by Bouvier and Burrill. Webster gives several definitions, as follows: "(1) That which returns, or comes back, from an investment; the annual rents, profits, interest, or issues, of any species of property, real or personal. (2) Hence, return, reward; as a rich revenue of praise. (3) The annual product of taxes, excise, customs, duties, rents, etc., which a nation or state collects and receives into the treasury for public use." According to the last definition given by Webster, the annual produce of taxes, excise, customs, duties, rents collected and received into the treasury for public use is revenue. Then whatever of taxes is received into the treasury is revenue, and this accords with the contention of appellant here.

Bronson, J., in explaining the word "income," used in a statute, in People v. Supervisors Niagara, 4 Hill, 20, said: "It is undoubtedly true that 'profits' and 'income' are sometimes used as synonymous terms, but, strictly speaking, 'income' means that which comes in, or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures, while 'profits' generally mean the gain which is made upon any business or investment when both receipts and payments are taken into the account. 'Income,' when applied to the affairs of individuals, expresses the same idea that 'revenue' does when applied to the affairs of a state or nation; and no one would think of denying that our government has any revenue because the expenditures for a given period may exceed the amount of receipts."

The word "revenue" is used in many senses. It is like thousands of words in our language,—ambiguous in meaning, the significance of which can only properly be determined by the words with which it is connected. Let it be conceded that the usual and ordinary meaning of the word when used alone is net income,—that which remains of the annual income of property after deducting from gross receipts the expenses incurred in producing the gross income: still we must resort to the context to find the sense in which it is used in the writing presented for interpretation. If the context indicates a meaning different from its ordinary and popular signification, we must adopt the meaning so indicated; that is, indicated by the words of the statute or instrument in which it is used. And here the context clearly denotes its meaning. It is the revenue derived from water-rents, collected and paid into the treasury which is spoken of. It is so said in the thirty-fifth section. By section 28 all water-rents are to be paid into the treasury. None can be held back. The collecting officer who fails to pay in all the water-rents, forfeits his office. This officer must pay into the treasury all such moneys on Saturday of each week, and must on the same day file the treasurer's receipt for such payment with the auditor, and shall at the same time file with the auditor a statement, under oath, of the sources from whence the money comes, and that the money so paid over is the total amount collected since his last payment; and such statement shall also be filed in duplicate with the clerk of the board of supervisors. The above provisions are enacted in section 28 of the act of 1858, quoted above in full. The penal provisions above referred to follow in the succeeding part of section 28.

The word "revenue" has the same meaning in section 36. The intent is a plain one. That the above represents its terms and stipulations we have no doubt. Any act or acts of the legislature making any change in it, to the detriment of the creditor, without the consent of the bondholder, are utterly void. This court so held in Meyer v. Brown, supra, and still adheres to that judgment.

Much is said as to the expense of constructing the water-works, and that the city has been obliged to build a new water-works. We cannot hold that any such considerations can alter the contract, or abridge the right of the creditor. The payment of the expenses of conducting the works is provided for in the act. The officers and employes are salaried, (section 24,) and there is a fund, called a "Salary Fund," created for their payment, (see section 35;) and it is declared of the salary fund that it "shall be applied to the payment of the salaries of municipal officers, as provided in the act," and for all other expenses, if any there shall be, a contingent fund of 22 per cent. of the taxes, licenses, harbor dues, water-rents, etc., is provided for their payment. Of this it may be said that if the funds provided for in the act are not sufficient to pay such expenses, resort must be had to the legislature to procure further powers to raise the money by a constitutional act of that body, which is not allowed by any act to divert from the interest and sinking fund any portion of it, without the consent of the creditor.

As to the new water-works, and the payment of the expense of building them, it may be said that the act of 1858 has no reference to such a matter. If new water-works had to be built, the legislature could provide for their erection without interfering with the funds set apart for the payment of the bonds, and, if it did not do so, the act must stand as it passed. It would not be held that if a person mortgaged the gross proceeds of his farm to his creditor, that he could take part of these funds to build a new house, when the old one, from decay, had fallen and ceased to be habitable, without the consent of the creditor; or, if fertilizers were required to make his farm productive, that he could spend any portion of the gross proceeds to purchase the fertilizing material. The necessities of the farmer may have great weight with his mortgagee, and induce him to consent to the expenditure; but the contract would bind him without such consent.

It is hardly necessary to refer to the position that for a long time the bondholder consented to a withholding of the moneys due him. The embarrassment of the city may have induced this waiting on the part of the bondholder; but we know of no rule of law which would authorize us to hold that this conduct on the part of the bondholder abridged or altered his rights under the contract as made. The foregoing conclusions are strengthened by the fact that the bondholder took his securities without the right to sue the city and county. Section 1. The city had no existence as a corporation after the act took effect, and could not, therefore, be sued. In accordance with the foregoing views, the judgment must be reversed.

The prayer of the complaint, which was filed on the twenty-ninth of January, 1886, is as follows: "Wherefore this petitioner prays that a writ of mandate issue from this court, ordering and directing the respondent, the treasurer, James N. Porter, to set apart and appropriate to said interest and sinking fund 55 per cent. of the amount received from the water-rents since the first Monday in April, 1885, and for general relief in the premises, and for costs. Also that the respondent, as treasurer as aforesaid, be ordered, and directed, from time to time, as money collected from water-rents is received by him as treasurer, to set apart and appropriate 55 per cent. thereof to the interest and sinking fund of said city."

The court, among other facts, finds the following: "That since the first Monday in April, 1885, (the beginning of the fiscal year for the city of Sacramento,) and prior to the filing of petitioners' petition herein, there had been collected for water-rents within the city of Sacramento the sum of $43,763.15, and said sum had been paid to the respondent as treasurer of said city. Of this sum there has been set apart and appropriated to the interest and sinking fund the sum of $6,600, which sum is 55 per cent. of the amount remaining of said sum of $43,763.15 after paying all expenses, including salaries for operating and maintaining the water-works of said city. That all of said $43,763.15, except the said sum of $6,600, and except $5,400 paid to other funds, the balance, to-wit, $31,763.15, was paid out by said treasurer upon warrants drawn by the auditor to pay bills for the expenses of carrying on said water-works, which bills were audited and allowed by the board of trustees."

It appears from this finding that the sum of $43,763.15 had, since the first Monday in April, been collected for water-rents and paid into the treasury. Of this sum $6,600, 55 per cent. of the amount, remained "after paying all expenses," including salaries of operating and maintaining the water-works. That of this larger sum, except $6,600 and $5,400 paid to other funds, all of it had been paid out by the treasurer upon warrants drawn by the auditor, to pay bills for the expense of carrying on the water-works, which bills were audited by the board of trustees.

That the creditors were entitled to have 55 per cent. of the sum of $43,763.15 set apart to the interest and sinking fund under the law we have no doubt. But all the money, except the sums mentioned, has been paid out as above stated, and though it was a violation of law and of the rights of the bondholders, such wrong cannot be redressed in this action. That portion of the prayer of the complaint cannot then be granted. The only relief which we can grant is to command the treasurer, as money collected from the water-rents above mentioned is, from time to time, paid to and received by him as treasurer, he shall set apart and appropriate 55 per cent. of all such moneys, without any deduction whatsoever, to the interest and sinking fund of the city of Sacramento.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the court below, and said court is directed to enter judgment as above stated. Ordered accordingly.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J., (dissenting.) I dissent. The legislative acts upon which petitioner bases his demand for a writ of mandate herein are fully set forth in Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 584, 4 Pac. Rep. 25, 625. The court did not in that case define the word "revenue" as used in the act of 1858. In this case the meaning of that word is the direct question in the controversy. By an act approved, and which took effect May 20, 1861, section 35 was amended by adding the following provision: "Provided, however, that all moneys received from water-rents shall be applied, so far as may be necessary, to the payment of the current expenses of the water-works, exclusive of the salaries and fees of the officers thereof, and the balance, if any, shall be distributed as is hereinafter in this section provided."

The act of April 25, 1863, repealed the act of April 24, 1858, consolidating the city and county governments, and the acts amendatory thereof, and emancipated the one from the other, and incorporated the "City of Sacramento." In section 26 of this act the language of section 35 of the act of 1858 is used, except that the word "net" is inserted before the words "water-rents," and in section 27 it is provided that "all revenues derived from the water-works shall be paid into a fund to be known as the 'Water-Works Fund,' and at the end of every three months, after the payment of all necessary expenses, including salaries, to carry on and keep in order the said water-works, it shall be the duty of the auditor to apportion the residue, if any there may be, in the said proportions as the other funds of the city, provided in section 26." St. 1863e p. 426.

The court found that, "from and after the twenty-fifth day of April, 1863, there has been apportioned to the interest and sinking fund only 55 per cent. of the amount of moneys collected from water-rents, which remained after the payment of all expenses, including salaries, to carry on and keep in order the water-works, as is provided for by the act of April 25, 1863, referred to in the pleadings in this cause."

Assuming that the meaning of the word "revenue" must be gathered from the provisions of the act of 1858, it is by no means clear that it was intended to be there used in the sense claimed for it by appellant. "Revenue" and "income" are used interchangeably. Thus Bouvier defines "revenue" to be "the income of the government arising from taxation, duties, and the like," and defines "income" by saying, "The word 'income' means the gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business. It is applied particularly to individuals. The income of the government is usually called revenue." Burrill says it is "that which returns or is returned; a rent, income; amount of profit received from lands or other property." He defines "income" to be, "in a strict sense, that which comes in, or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures. In a looser sense, income is used as synonymous with profits."

Under a will which required the executor to pay the income of the estate to the widow during her life, Chief Justice SHAW decided that "the 'income' mentioned in the will must be considered the net income, after deducting the taxes, repairs, and ordinary current expenses attending the estate, from the gross receipts for rents." Watts v. Howard, 7 Metc. 482.

In Andrews v. Boyd, 3 Metc. 434, the court said, "It does not appear to us that any fair distinction can be raised between 'income' and 'net income.' 'Net' is a term used among merchants, to designate the quantity, amount, or value of an article or commodity, after all tare and charges are deducted. The income of an estate means nothing more than the profits it will yield after deducting the charges of management, or the rent which may be obtained for the use of it. The rents and profits of an estate, the income or the net income of it, are all equivalent expressions."

In view of the uncertainty as to the meaning the legislature intended to attach to the word "revenue," in the act of 1858, the mandatory and supplemental acts may be regarded as simply rendering its true meaning certain, and as in no way changing, adding to, or taking from it. They should not be declared void because of the insertion of the word "net," unless it is clearly repugnant to the sense in which the words "revenue from water-rents" had been used in the original act.

But conceding that a change in the meaning and operation of the act has been worked, we think it is one the legislature might make without impairing the obligation of the contract. As was said in Meyer v. Brown, "the tax was the chief security offered the creditors as an inducement to accept the bonds in payment of their claims." That fund is fixed, certain,—at least to a minimum,—and can never be made less until the bonds are paid. Section 34.

The receipts to be derived from the other sources are not fixed, but depend upon ordinance or statutory regulation as to rates, and are subject to be discontinued at any time. The city authorities may, subject to legislative control, fix water-rates as they deem best, without violating any vested right. The city was not bound to keep up the water-works for any time by any provision in the act of 1858. When the old works became worn out and useless, the city was under no obligation to put up new works. But it is said in answer to this that the city did build new works, and is receiving rents, and so long as the rents are received, the city is bound to set apart 55 per cent. of the gross receipts. This answer would be sound if there were anything in the act of 1858 requiring the city to fix any particular rates, or any provision fixing a minimum, as in the matter of taxes. The contract still exists, its obligations are still as solemn and binding as they were under the act of 1858, and, for aught appearing to the contrary, the changes, if the new provisions can be regarded as changing the original, not only have worked no injury to the creditors, but have been a benefit to them as well as to the inhabitants of the city. The contract being one which by its nature, so far as certain sources of revenues or receipts are concerned, depends upon contingencies and expectancies, we think it clear that the mode and manner of its performance is within the control of the legislature.

There has been no attempt to repudiate. On the contrary, the interests of both creditor and city have been advanced. In 1876 the net receipts exceeded the gross receipts of 1863. If new water-works had not been erected, the revenue from this source would long since have ceased entirely. That the acts of the legislature and of the city authorities have operated beneficially to all interested is apparent, we think, from the second finding of the court below, which is as follows: "That the water-works of the city of Sacramento, which supplied the inhabitants thereof with water at the time of the passage of the act of April 24, 1858, and at the time of the issuance of the bonds for city indebtedness provided for by said act, gradually became, by reason of decay and the growth of said city, insufficient to supply the necessary amount of water; and in 1872 the city of Sacramento, in pursuance of an act of the legislature of said state, entitled 'An act to provide the city of Sacramento with a better supply of water,' which act was approved March 30, 1872, adopted the Holly system of water-works, and purchased a new site, and built thereon another building, and put in the necessary machinery of that system.

"By the old system for supplying water, the water was pumped from the Sacramento river into tanks or reservoirs, and from thence it flowed into the city mains or water-pipes by gravitation pressure. By the Holly system, the water was pumped from the Sacramento river and forced directly into the city mains by means of force pumps used by said system. Two new and costly pumps were purchased for this purpose. By said Holly system, the pressure on the mains or pipes was greatly increased, and a new main pipe of increased strength was laid along I street of said city for the purpose of conducting the water to the lesser pipes running throughout the city and in use under the old system, and other new pipes were provided when necessary."

The petition shows that for the 10 years, including and next preceding the fiscal year 1872-73, the gross receipts from the water-works amounted to the sum of $417,891, and the net receipts $79,650; and for the 10 years following the gross receipts were $662,307, and the net receipts $258,664.

There is nothing in the decision in Meyer v. Brown opposed to the views herein expressed. That was a proceeding to compel the municipal authorities to levy a tax of 100 cents on the $100, as required by the act of April 24, 1858. The petitioner alleged that said officers, "although requested by plaintiff to levy a tax of 100 cents on the $100 as required by said act passed April 24, 1858, have failed and refused to levy the tax for the year 1883 as required by said act, but have levied a diminished tax of 50 cents on $100." The defendants denied that they were required to levy the tax claimed by petitioner, and averred "that the tax required to be levied by section 34 is not an annual or continuing tax, and that the same was levied in the year 1859, and the power to levy a further tax under said section is exhausted." That was the issue and the only issue in that case, and what is said in the opinion must be considered as referring only to the question there determined.

I concur: SEARLS, C. J.

McFARLAND, J., (dissenting.) I dissent from the conclusion of the majority of the court, and concur in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice PATTERSON. It must be remembered that the water-works in question are conducted by the city of Sacramento as a business, just like the business of any other water company, or of any mining, manufacturing, railroad, or mercantile company. In such a case the "revenue" is, of course, the excess of receipts over expenditures. If other financial miracles could be wrought as easily as the turning of the gross proceeds of a business into revenue, "then chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces."

PEOPLE v. BITANCOURT. (No. 20,234.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—SETTLEMENT—APPLICATION TO SUPREME COURT—PETITION.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1174, provides that, when the judge in any case refuses to allow an exception in accordance with the facts, the party may apply to the supreme court to prove the same. Defendant's counsel moved the supreme court to have a bill of exceptions settled according to the facts, but did not set out in the petition wherein the bill as settled was incorrect, nor specify the facts to be proven, and their materiality. Held, that the application was defective and must be denied.

2. BURGLARY—INDICTMENT—OWNERSHIP OF BUILDING—VARIANCE.

An information charged that the defendant burglariously entered the building of one B., "situated," etc. The proof was that another party was interested in the building with B. It did not appear that there was any other building in the locality corresponding to the description in the information. Held, under Pen. Code Cal. § 956, providing that, where the offense involves the commission of a private injury, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured is not material, that the variance was immaterial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; D. J. TOOHEY, Judge.

G. H. Perry, for defendant. Geo. H. Johnson, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BY THE COURT. In this case there is a preliminary matter as to the bill of exceptions, concerning which the facts are as follows: The proposed bill was presented to the judge of the court below on June 6, 1887. On June 7th the appellant's counsel filed a verified petition stating the presentation of the proposed bill, and that the judge "refuses to allow certain exceptions of said defendant," and praying for leave to make proof of said exceptions. Upon this petition an order was made on the same day referring the bill to the Honorable WILLIAM T. WALLACE for settlement. On June 15th the appellant's counsel filed another verified petition in the appellate court, stating that when he appeared before Judge WALLACE on June 14th, in pursuance of notice, "it was then and there discovered" that the bill of exceptions had been settled by the judge before whom the case was tried on June 13th, and forwarded by him to the appellate court; and that "said bill of exceptions, as settled, does not conform to the truth," and praying for an order directing Judge WALLACE to proceed with the settlement of a bill in conformity with the facts. Upon this second petition the judge of the court below filed an affidavit stating, in substance, that he never had refused to allow any exceptions, but had taken the whole matter under advisement; and that the bill had been settled by him on June 6th, "before the issuance of the order herein by the supreme court." The statement that the judge never refused to allow any exceptions is corroborated by the affidavits of the district attorney and the short-hand reporter. On June 28th the appellate court rendered a decision that the order of June 7th be set aside for insufficiency of the petition, and because no notice of the application had been given to the judge or the district attorney, and that the petition of June 15th was insufficient, and that it be denied without prejudice. On June 20th the appellant's counsel, pursuant to notice, made a motion "for an order to have the bill of exceptions in the above-entitled action settled according to the facts;" and this motion was submitted.

It is settled that if the judge before whom a case was tried, refuses to settle any bill of exceptions,—that is to say, if he refuses to take any action in the matter,—and the refusal is without cause, he may be compelled to take action by a writ of mandamus, (People v. Lee, 14 Cal. 510; People v. Keyser, 53 Cal. 184; Lin Tai v. Hewitt, 56 Cal. 117; People v. Crane, 60 Cal. 279,) although the writ will not issue to compel the settlement in any particular way, (People v. Judge of Tenth District Court, 9 Cal. 20.) If the refusal is not to take any action whatever, but merely to settle the bill in accordance with the facts, application may be made to the appellate court for redress. The provision is that, "if the judge in any case refuses to allow an exception in accordance with the facts, the party desiring the bill settled may apply by petition to the supreme court to prove the same. The application may be made in the mode and manner and under such regulations as that court may prescribe." Pen. Code, § 1174. Where, however, as in the present case, the bill has been settled by the judge, the application to this court for leave to prove the facts in support of the bill of exceptions should set forth distinctly wherein the bill as settled is incorrect, and specify the facts which it is desired to prove, as well as their materiality. It may well be that the facts which the applicant desires to substantiate, and the exceptions founded thereon, are of no importance to an adjudication of the cause. The remedy provided by section 1174 of the Penal Code should be resorted to only in aid of justice, and upon such affirmative showing as proves the judge of the court below derelict in some particular whereby the rights of the applicant are jeopardized.

The application is defective in all the particulars indicated, and must be denied.

Upon the merits, the question is whether there was a variance between the information and the proof. The information charged that the defendant burglariously entered the building "of one C. E. Benedict, situated on Nineteenth avenue, between K and L streets, south of Golden Gate park, in the city and county of San Francisco." The proof was that one J. S. Benedict was interested in the building with C. E. Benedict. It is argued that the ownership of J. S. Benedict was matter of essential description. It does not appear that there was any other building in the locality which would correspond to the description in the information, and we think the variance was immaterial. Pen. Code, § 956; People v. Edwards, 59 Cal. 359.

The motion for an order of reference is denied, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re Estate of McCONNELL, Deceased. GRAHAM v. SUPERIOR COURT OF COLUSA CO. (No. 12,246.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

CERTIORARI—WHEN LIES—REVIEW OF ORDER AUTHORIZING EXECUTOR TO MORTGAGE—DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

Leg. Acts Cal. 1887, p. 115, provide for the mortgaging by an executor of his decedent's land. Code Civil Proc. § 963, provides for an appeal to the supreme court from an order in favor of, or against the sale or "conveyance" of, real property. Section 1215, which is part of the article treating of recording written instruments, provides that "conveyance," as used in this article, includes every instrument in writing by which any estate in real property is created, aliened, or mortgaged. Held, that the word "conveyance" in section 963 included mortgages, and that a writ of certiorari will not lie to review an order of the superior court allowing an executor to mortgage his decedent's estate.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

In superior court, Colusa county; E. A. BRIDGFORD, Judge.

Geo. A. Blanchard, for appellant. H. M. Abbey, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. The petition in this case is for a writ of certiorari to review the decision of the superior court of Colusa county, in making an order authorizing an executor to mortgage the lands of his decedent, under a statute approved March 15, 1887, to be found on page 115 of the Legislative Acts of the year 1887. It is contended that the petition should be dismissed, because a right of appeal exists (under section 963, Code Civil Proc.) from the order of the court, which it is sought to have reviewed by this tribunal. The words of that section pertinent to the matter in hand are: "An appeal may be taken to the supreme court from a superior court in the following cases: (1) * * * (2) * * * (3) From a judgment or order granting or refusing a new trial, * * * or against or in favor of directing the partition, sale, or conveyance of real property."

If the word "conveyance," as above used, can be held to include "mortgage," then undoubtedly the right of appeal existed from the order made in the premises, and the petition filed herein must be dismissed. It is true that it is a well-settled rule of this court that a mortgage "is merely a lien upon and passes no estate or interest in the mortgaged premises, except for purposes of taxation." Williams v. Mining Ass'n, 66 Cal. 201, 5 Pac. Rep. 85, and cases cited. But that was intended merely to define the nature of the interest which passed to the premises included in the mortgage. It did not declare what the legislative intent was in using the word "conveyance" in section 963, supra, as affecting the right of appeal. Section 1215 of the Civil Code, which is a part of the article treating of the recording of written instruments, is as follows: "The term 'conveyance,' as used in sections 1213 and 1214, embraces every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged, or incumbered, or by which the title to any real property may be affected, except wills."

In Hassey v. Wilke, 55 Cal. 528, the word "conveyance," as used in sections 1213 and 1215 of the Civil Code, is held to embrace mortgages. From this it will be perceived that the word "conveyance" has been used by the legislature in a sense which would include the term "mortgage." And, considering that much importance must necessarily be attached to such an order as that which authorizes the "mortgaging" of a decedent's land by his executor, it would appear that when the legislature placed the word "conveyance" in section 963, supra, it must have intended it to be taken in a broad and comprehensive sense, similar to that given to it in the sections of the Civil Code, supra.

Since the right of appeal existed from the order under consideration, it follows that the writ of certiorari cannot be invoked. Section 1068, Code Civil Proc; Hayne, New Trials, § 302.

For these reasons the writ prayed for should be denied, and the petition dismissed.

I concur: BELCHER, C. C.

HAYNE, C., took no part in this decision.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the writ is denied and the petitioner dismissed.

PEOPLE v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(Supreme Court of California, November 30, 1887.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—DECREE AND PATENT—BOUNDARIES—CONFLICTING TITLES.

A decree of the United States circuit court, confirming a Mexican grant of lands, described them as a tract lying above high-water mark, bounded on three sides by the sea, and on the other by a direct line to be so run as to include the required quantity. The patent, issued by virtue of the authority of the decree and in pursuance thereof, granted a tract of land described by courses and distances which, if followed, would include a large tract lying below high-water mark, to which the state claimed title by virtue of act of congress of September 28, 1850. Held, in an action by the state to quiet its title, that the patent was not conclusive, but that the decree, by virtue of which it was issued, was entitled to be read in connection therewith in determining what lands were conveyed, and that the natural boundaries called for in the decree would overrule the courses and distances of the patent.¹

2. SAME—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—PLEADING.

In an action to determine an adverse claim to certain lands wherein the state was plaintiff, the complaint alleged that the lands were below high-water mark, and consequently belonged to the plaintiff as swamp lands, by virtue of act of congress of September 28, 1850; that the defendant, as successor in interest to a Mexican citizen, obtained a decree from the United States circuit court, confirming its title to a tract of land described as included between certain boundaries, and as lying above high-water mark. The patent, issued by virtue of this decree, described a tract of land by courses and distances which, if followed, would include the lands in dispute. Held, that the complaint stated a good cause of action, in that if the allegations were true the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree, and a demurrer thereto should be overruled.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco;

J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Phillip G. Galpin and E. C. Marshall, Atty. Gen., for appellant. John Lord Love, City & Co. Atty., and Garber, Thornton & Bishop, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to determine an adverse claim to 150 acres of land, more or less, situated at the northern extremity of the peninsula of San Francisco, and the appeal is from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant on demurrer to the complaint.

It is alleged in the complaint that the premises in dispute were below ordinary high-water mark at the date of the purchase from Mexico, and ever since have been; that on September 28, 1850, the congress of the United States passed an act granting to the state the swamp lands within her limits; that the lands in dispute were and are swamp lands, and that the title thereto is in the state; that by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and the act of March 3, ¹In cases of conflict in the description of land in a deed, between courses and distances on the one hand, and monuments on the other, the latter must control. Church v. Stiles, (Vt.) 10 Atl. Rep. 674; McAnninch v. Freeman, (Tex.) 4 S. W. Rep. 369, and note.

1851, the United States guarantied the protection of the property of all Mexican citizens within the state at the date of the conquest; that under said act of March 3, 1851, the city of San Francisco, claiming to be successor in interest of the pueblo of San Francisco, a Mexican citizen, filed a petition before the board of commissioners established by the act for a determination of its claim to four leagues of land on the peninsula of San Francisco; that the board, after due proof, made a decree in the premises; that the cause was afterwards appealed to the United States district court for the Northern district of California, and was thence transferred to the circuit court of the United States for the circuit of California under a special act of congress of July 1, 1864; that the circuit court made a final decree adjudicating the case as between the United States and the city of San Francisco, and confirming the claim of the city to the lands therein described, which decree is recited in the amended complaint and describes the premises confirmed as a "tract situated within the county of San Francisco, and embracing so much of the extreme upper portion of the peninsula above ordinary high-water mark (as the same existed at the date of the conquest of the country, namely, the seventh day of July, 1846) on which the city of San Francisco is situated, as will contain an area of four square leagues, said tract being bounded on the north and east by the bay of San Francisco, on the west by the Pacific Ocean, and on the south by a due east and west line drawn so as to include the area aforesaid, subject to the following deductions," etc. It is then alleged that the premises in question are not within these boundaries, and that under the laws of Mexico the pueblo could not and did not own land below ordinary high-water mark, nor said premises.

The complaint further avers that, for the purpose of carrying out the decree, a survey was made and approved by the United States surveyor general in 1867-68, of which notice was duly given and advertised as required by statute; that objections were made to the survey by parties interested in lands embraced therein, and affidavits and proofs were taken in support of the survey; that the surveyor general forwarded to the commissioner of the general land-office a copy of the survey and objections and proofs, with his opinion thereon; that after a full hearing of the parties interested, the commissioner, in November, 1878, decided in favor of the survey, but allowing an appeal to the secretary of the interior; that no appeal was taken by the city, but the military authorities appealed from that part of the decision which related to the Presidio Reservation, within which the premises in dispute were not included; that on the appeal the secretary reversed the commissioner's decision, disapproved the survey, and ordered a new survey, and transmitted his decision, directions, and instructions to the commissioner; that a new survey and plat were therefore ordered by the commissioner, and in December, 1883, a new survey and plat were made by the surveyor general, which included the premises in controversy; that the surveyor general indorsed on the new survey his certificate that the same was made in accordance with the instructions of the commissioner, and then, having signed and sealed the same with his official seal, returned it and the field-notes of the survey to the commissioner of the general land-office; "that thereafter a patent in due form of law, based upon the said last-mentioned plat and survey, was issued under the great seal of the United States, and signed by the president thereof, which purported, by virtue of the authority of said decree, and in pursuance thereof, to grant and convey to the city of San Francisco" the land embraced in said last-mentioned survey, and including the premises in controversy. The complaint then alleges the consolidation of the city and county, and its succession to all the rights, title, and interest of the city under the decree, survey, and patent; that under the patent and otherwise the defendant claims an interest in the premises, and that the patent is a cloud on plaintiff's title. The premises are then described by courses and distances referring to "Alardt and Minto's survey of the pueblo of San Francisco, filed in the office of the surveyor general of the United States, in the city of San Francisco, June 23, 1882."

The only question is, does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? Upon her admission into the Union, the state of California became the owner by virtue of her sovereignty of all tide-water lands within her borders, lying below high-water mark, except such as had been disposed of by the Mexican government prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The territory acquired from Mexico was by the express terms of that treaty taken by the United States subject to the trust of protecting all legal and equitable interests of prior grantees under the former sovereign. The state could not take more than the United States received. Necessarily, therefore, the claim of the state by virtue of her admission and her sovereignty was subordinate to such prior equities, and subject to the power of the federal government to confirm prior Mexican grants, and to locate grants of specific quantities of land within the extreme boundaries of larger tracts. Teschmaker v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 11; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. Rep. 674; Le Roy v. Dunkerly, 54 Cal. 452.

There is a distinction between the case of Goodtitle v. Kibbe, 9 How. 471, and cases like the one at bar, which is clearly shown and explained by Chief Justice FIELD in Teschmaker v. Thompson, supra.

The United States government has exercised the power vested in it, and has, through its courts, and the officers of its land department, attempted to define the boundaries of the four leagues of land to which the city of San Francisco, as successor in interest of the pueblo of San Francisco, a Mexican citizen, was entitled. The court, having jurisdiction to hear and determine the right of this claimant, finally confirmed its claim to four square leagues of land in the extreme end of the peninsula, giving as the boundaries thereof on the west, the north, and the east the natural lines of high-water mark, leaving the southern boundary to be fixed by the surveyor on such a line as would include between it and the high-water lines north of it said four square leagues of land. This, it seems, the surveyor did not do; but ignoring the natural boundaries, fixed by the court in its decree for the west, north, and east, ran his lines into the sea below high-water mark, and included within his description of the tract by metes and bounds about 150 acres of land belonging to the state. Following the survey, the patent describes the land by metes and bounds, and the only questions to be considered—if it be true that the United States has the power which we have said it possesses—are, can the decree be read in connection with the patent? And which shall control, the boundaries given in the decree, or those given in the patent?

It is claimed by respondent that the patent is conclusive against the state as to location and boundaries of the pueblo grant, and it must be conclusively presumed in this action that the description by metes and bounds conforms to the decree. We do not think that this contention can be maintained in reason or upon authority. In the cases cited there was no variance between the decree of confirmation and the patent. In Teschmaker v. Thompson, supra, the grant was assumed to be one of quantity only. The grant was confirmed by the court; and its boundaries as defined in the decree were followed in the patent, which was issued in November, 1857, at which time the federal courts controlled the surveys, and were empowered and expected to make them conform to the decree. The provisions of the act of March 3, 1851, had been regularly followed by the tribunals appointed to determine the claim and to fix the boundaries of the land. There was no variance or conflict between the decree and the patent as to description, and the court there held that the power of the government to determine the question as to the validity of the claim, and the extent and boundaries of the land having been regularly pursued, the patent was conclusive, although it appeared that it in fact included lands lying below high-water mark. The defense in that case was that the land belonged to the state of California absolutely, by virtue of its sovereignty, and that the government of the United States could not by any proceeding had under the act of March 3, 1851, deprive the state of its title thereto. Ward v. Milford, 32 Cal. 365, was in all respects like Teschmaker v. Thompson, supra, page 370.

Many of the cases cited relate to grants with no specific boundaries whatever. In none of the cases cited by respondent is the question of the power of the officer to issue a patent for land not embraced in the decree considered. That question is important here, because the land in controversy, unlike the public domain of the United States, was not within the jurisdiction of the land department of the government, unless placed there by the decree of confirmation, and because the only unknown or undetermined line is that which bounds the tract on the south side. Upon all other sides, the high-water mark is the monument between the land of the city and that of the state. The sea is a fixed boundary.

As stated before, the government of the United States is in duty bound to carry into effect the stipulations contained in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; but the power to do so must be exercised in the manner provided by congress, and it would seem that when congress vested in the federal courts the power to determine the rights of Mexican claimants, and provided (section 7) that in making the survey the surveyor general should "follow the decree of confirmation as closely as practicable, whenever such decree designates the specific boundaries," and that "it shall be the duty of the commissioner of the general land-office to require a substantial compliance with the directions of this section before approving any survey and plat forwarded to him," that the officers of the land department are as to such lands merely auxiliary to the court, with special and limited jurisdiction to carry out its decrees. Such seem to have been the views of this court as expressed in More v. Massini, 37 Cal. 432, where the patent granted certain lands described by metes and bounds, (following the survey,) but the court said: "The land confirmed is bounded on the south by the seashore, and the land included in the survey will also be held to be bounded on the south by the seashore, unless the calls imperatively demand other boundaries. When the decree of confirmation fixes the exterior bounds of a rancho, whether it is one granted with specific boundaries, or one of a specific quantity within a larger area, the presumption is that the lines of the survey coincide with, or at least do not extend beyond, the exterior limits or bounds of the decree; for the survey is not an independent act, but is an act performed under the decree, and preparatory to its being carried into effect by a patent. * * * It appears by the plat that, following the courses and distances of the survey, portions of the sea will be included in the lines of the rancho. This is inconsistent with the calls of the decree of confirmation, which confirms a tract bounded by the seashore."

In that case the patent did not show upon its face that any land below high-water mark was included in the tract granted, but the fact was shown at the trial by witnesses,—surveyors. It is true the patent recited the description of the tract as confirmed by the decree, but the land described in the patent was the tract as surveyed, giving the metes and bounds. The recital in the patent referred to in the complaint herein is sufficient, we think, to connect the decree with the patent as part of the chain of title. Recitals of this character show, and are intended to show, why the patent was issued. They preserve—like recitals in deeds between individuals—the connection in the chain of title; are binding upon the grantee; and the muniments of title referred to become links on which the strength of the title may be tested. Where the deed recites the record of the authority upon which it is made, the record referred to becomes a part of the deed, and the grantee takes with notice of its limitations. Cleveland v. Hallett, 6 Cush. 404; Devlin, Deeds, §§ 1000, 1003.

Upon the allegations of the complaint, and the authority of More v. Massini, supra, we think that the plaintiff would be entitled to read the decree in connection with the patent, and if the facts stated be found to be true, would be entitled to a decree quieting title to the lands in controversy. In case of a conflict, courses and distances must yield to monuments. Where water-courses, or mountains, or any other natural objects, are called for in patents, distances must be lengthened or shortened, and courses varied so as to conform to those objects. Mistakes in distances and courses are more probable and more frequent than mistakes as to trees, rivers, mountains, and other objects capable of being clearly and accurately fixed. McIver v. Walker, 9 Cranch, 177.

CARIT v. WILLIAMS and others. (No. 9,747.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

1. INSOLVENCY—DISCHARGE—DEBT REDUCED TO JUDGMENT—REVIEW OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Defendant applied to the court to have an execution against him stayed, and a judgment satisfied, by reason of a certificate of discharge in insolvency proceedings. Held, that the court had the right to go behind the judgment, and examine the pleadings; and where they showed the original claim was created by fraud, and not barred by the discharge, it was not so merged in the judgment as to create a new debt subject to be discharged by the insolvency certificate.

2. SAME—DENIALS IN ANSWER—PRESUMPTIONS OF AVERMENTS OF COMPLAINT.

Defendant moved to have an execution set aside, and the issuance of any further execution stayed, and the judgment satisfied on account of his discharge under the insolvency act. In the suit in which judgment had been entered and execution issued, the complaint could not be found, but the answer was, and it showed that the only material denials were as to the commission by defendant of acts of fraud. Held, that it will be presumed that the judgment was founded upon allegations in the complaint to which the answer was responsive, and that the debt arose through the fraud of defendant, and therefore not barred by the discharge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Cook & Cook, for appellants. D. H. Whittemore, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order denying the motion of the defendant Andrew Charles to set aside a certain alias execution, to stay the issuance of any future execution, and to have the judgment marked "Satisfied." The grounds upon which the appellant based his contention that the motion should be granted were that he had been discharged as an insolvent from any and all obligation either to pay or have satisfied in any manner out of his property the judgment upon which the alias execution issued. It appears from the record in the original suit that the second amended complaint filed in the action was not to be found when the court below considered the appellant's motion, and that it was upon the issues made up by that pleading, and the answer filed thereto by the appellant, that the cause was submitted to a jury, who returned a general verdict for the plaintiff for a large sum of money.

The appellant contends that even if, in a matter of the kind in hand, the court could look behind the judgment, to the record in the action where it was rendered, to ascertain if the debt claimed to have been discharged by the certificate of the court presiding in the insolvency proceedings was created by the appellant's fraudulent acts, yet that, as the complaint was not to be found, it was not permissible for the court to determine that the original debt was founded in the fraud and deceit practiced by the appellant. In this we think he is mistaken. If the complaint is not to be found, but the answer to that complaint is, and it shows, as in this case, that the only material denials upon the part of the appellant are as to the commission by him of acts of fraud, it will be presumed that the judgment was founded upon allegations in the complaint to which the answer was responsive, and that, therefrom, the debt must have arisen through the fraud of the appellant. The latter should certainly be held to the statements of his answer; and as that is devoted to a denial of specific acts of fraud, and there is nothing else to show what the allegations of the complaint were, it will be presumed that there were none other than those to which the answer was responsive, unless admitted by the answer to be true.

But the appellant contends that the court below had no right to look at anything in the record of the action in which the judgment was recovered, except that judgment, that the original debt was merged in the judgment; that the latter had been obtained before the certificate of discharge was granted; and that the court, upon the hearing of his motion to stay the alias execution, etc., was bound to treat that judgment as covered by and included in the certificate. But such does not seem to have been the views in similar cases of learned judges other than the one who determined this contention against the appellant.

This court has, it seems to us, clearly intimated what the law is, as to such a matter, although the precise question here involved was not in issue, in Imlay v. Carpentier, 14 Cal. 177; saying, after citing numerous decisions of other courts: "The judgment is but the original debt in a new form. * * * The opposing decisions are from Massachusetts and Maine, and proceed upon the technical doctrine, so pointedly repudiated in Dresser v. Brooks, that the original debt is merged and lost in the judgment, and that the judgment is a debt newly created and conclusive in its nature. * * * The force of the reasoning and the weight of authority are against this view." And in that case (Imlay v. Carpentier, supra) this court appears to have agreed to the right of the trial court to go behind the judgment, and look into the pleadings in the original action, with a view to grant a motion to set aside an execution.

In Dresser v. Brooks, 3 Barb. 448, it is said: "These cases have arisen under our insolvent laws, and the courts have uniformly held that, in an action upon a judgment to which a discharge under the insolvent law was pleaded, they would look behind the judgment to the debt on which it was founded, in order to determine whether that was of such a character, had its origin at such a time and place, and between such parties, as to be within the provisions of the act."

Section 33 of the last United States bankrupt act is very similar in its provisions to section 52 of the insolvent act of this state, as bearing upon the right of discharge from a debt created by fraud; and in Re Patterson, 2 Ben. 156, Judge BLATCHFORD very clearly, and as we think conclusively, disposes of the point we are now considering. He says: "The only other question is whether the debt is once excepted by section 33 of the act from the operation of a discharge. That section provides that 'no debt created by the fraud or embezzlement of the bankrupt, or by his defalcation as a public officer, or while acting in any fiduciary character, shall be discharged under this act.' It is claimed by the bankrupt that, the debt in this case being in the shape of a judgment, this court cannot, in applying section 33, go behind the judgment, to see whether the claim on which the judgment was recovered was created by fraud; that the judgment, which is now the only debt, was created by the claim, and not by the fraud; and that although the judgment was created by the claim, and the claim by the fraud, yet the judgment was not created by the fraud. This view is unsound. Wherever the debt, no matter whether it be in the shape of a judgment, or in any other form, was created by fraud, had its root and origin in fraud, there it is not to be disregarded. To hold that the recovery of a judgment in an action where the gravamen of the complaint is fraud, condones that very fraud by so merging the original claim that the judgment cannot be said to be a debt created by the fraud set out in the complaint as the ground for recovering the judgment, would fritter away entirely the good sense and plain intention of the thirty-third section. The case of Bangs v. Watson, 9 Gray, 211, cited to sustain this view, does not, in my judgment, support it, and I have been referred to no case which leads to any such conclusions."

It would therefore appear that the court below had a right to go behind the judgment, and inspect the pleadings in the original action; that it was justified from an inspection of the defendant's answer in concluding that the only claims made by the second amended complaint against the defendant, which were not admitted by the answer, were founded upon his alleged fraudulent acts; and that the jury in rendering its verdict did so upon the issues thus submitted to them; and that the original claim, created by fraud, was not so merged in the judgment as to make it a new debt, and subject to be discharged by the court granting the certificate of discharge in insolvency.

It follows that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order is affirmed.

3. SAME—EXCEPTIONS TO ACCOUNT—SUBMISSION TO JURY.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1713-1716, provides that, except when otherwise enacted, the provisions of part 2 of the Code, relating to ordinary actions, shall constitute the rule of proceeding in probate matters, and that issues of fact joined in such proceedings must be tried as provided for the trial of contested wills by section 1312. Sections 1635-1638 provide that any person interested in an estate may file exceptions to the account in writing, and a method of settling the account. Held, that exceptions to an account are aids to the court in his duty of scrutinizing it, but are not issues of fact to be submitted to a jury on demand of a party in interest.

4. SAME—LIABILITIES—FAILURE TO COLLECT NOTE—PRESUMPTION.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1631, provides that an executor may be examined upon oath on rendering his account. Section 1613 provides that he shall be charged with the estate coming into his hands at the value in the inventory of appraisement. Section 1615 provides that he shall not be responsible for debts uncollected if it appear to be without his fault. Section 1635 provides that any person interested may contest the account. An executor charged himself with balance of a certain note and mortgage in his account, and credited himself with the same amount uncollected. Held, that the presumption was that he could have collected the note, in absence of showing by him that it was not collected without any fault by him, and the power of the court to examine the executor on his account was not limited by the fact that no specific objections had been filed.

5. SAME—RELEASE BY HEIRS OF CO-EXECUTOR.

An executor of an estate had at the death of his decedent a note and mortgage in his hands belonging to him, which he turned over to his co-executor, who collected part of the debt. He called the attention of his executor to the fact that the note was about outlawed, and he replied that he knew all about it, and would look after it. The statute of limitations ran against the note. The heirs agreed with the executor not to call him to account, and that an order settling his account might be filed with the probate court. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1613, provides that each executor shall be liable for all the estate coming into his hands. Held, that as the executor was not liable for the balance of the note uncollected by his co-executor, and could not be called upon by him for contribution for any sum he might have to pay for his failure to collect, the agreement of the heirs not to sue the executor could not therefore operate to discharge the co-executor.

6. SAME—INTEREST ON BALANCES—ANNUAL RESTS.

When there has been great delay in settling an estate, the court is justified in charging legal interest on balances, with annual rests.

7. SAME—ORDER SETTLING ACCOUNT—APPEAL.

An order was entered by the court that the account of an executor "be, and the same is hereby, allowed and approved, except as to the matters following," etc. Held, that it is an order settling an account, and is appealable.

8. SAME—APPEAL—REVIEW—DEFECTS WAIVED.

An executor asked for a reversal of judgment in a contest of his account because there were no findings by the probate court. There was nothing in the transcript to show that findings were not waived. The bill of exceptions recites that, when the "statement on motion for new trial was made," the court struck out an allegation that on October 3, 1883, counsel was asked to waive findings, and refused. The order settling the account was of October 11th. Held that, for aught that appears, findings may have been waived before or after October 3, 1883, and the matter struck out had no place in the statement.

9. APPEAL—REVIEW—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

Where there is a conflict of testimony, the court below is the judge of the credibility of the witnesses.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco;
JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Cope & Boyd, for respondent.

MCKINSTRY, J. 1. It is contended by appellant, L. A. Sanderson, executor, that a new trial of the contest of his account should be directed, because the court below failed to find upon the issues made by the contest. But the transcript contains no bill of exceptions which shows that findings were not waived, if findings were proper. There is a bill of exceptions which recites that, when the "statement on motion for a new trial" was settled, the judge struck out from the proposed statement an allegation, "On October 3, 1883, counsel for contestants requested counsel for the executor to waive findings of fact, which counsel for the executor declined to do," and that "the said matter so struck out recited facts." The trial of the contest took place April 12th, and the order settling the account was made and entered October 11, 1883. For aught that appears, findings may have been waived at the close of the testimony, or before or after October 3, 1883, and prior to the entry of the decree. The bill of exceptions fails to show distinctly that findings were not waived. Moreover the matter struck out has no proper place in the statement.

2. Appellant claims that, by failing to contest his verified account upon the specific ground that the balance of the "Braly note" remained uncollected by reason of the neglect of the executor, the contestants admitted that it remained uncollected without any fault on his part. Section 1631, Code Civil Proc., provides that, on rendering his account, the executor may be examined on oath touching any property or effects of the decedent. The power of the court so to examine him, and to base the terms of its decree settling the account upon such examination, is not limited by the circumstance that no person interested in the estate has filed specific exceptions to which the examination is appropriate. To hold that the executor should be entitled to the benefit of every credit to himself in his account, which is not specifically objected to by a party in interest, would be to deprive the court of its wholesome supervision over the accounts of executors and administrators, to encourage negligence, and open the way for fraud. It seems to have been held in Trotter's Case, 40 Miss. 711, that the probate courts of that state "cannot command the conscience of an administrator so as to compel him to conform his returns under oath to the views of the court." But, as we have seen, section 1631 of our Code (Code Civil Proc.) provides in terms that the executor or administrators may "be examined." And in addition to what is said in Estate of Moore, 13 Pac. Rep. 880, and in Estate of Herteman, 15 Pac. Rep. 121, the power of the court to go behind an account, and its duty to require a full and fair account, was recognized in Hirschfeld v. Cross, 67 Cal. 662, 8 Pac. Rep. 507, and other decisions. In the case last mentioned this court said: "The probate court is the guardian of the estates of deceased persons, and has control of the person appointed by it to administer the estate, subject to review as provided by law."

Even if it should be conceded that an account presented by an executor establishes its own correctness prima facie, the account should at least show on its face that a failure to collect a debt due to decedent was not the result of the negligence of the executor. Every executor is chargeable with the whole of the estate of the decedent which may come into his possession, at the value of the appraisal contained in the inventory. Code Civil Proc. 1613. No executor is accountable for any debts due decedent "if it appears that they remain uncollected without his fault." Id. 1615. But, if it do not so appear to the court, the executor must be held answerable for the amount of a debt due the decedent as appraised in the inventory. In the account herein presented, all that appears is that the executor is debited with a balance of the Braly note uncollected, and that the executor is credited with the same balance; that is, that a portion of the Braly note was not collected. That fact, if taken as true, is not a statement that it remained uncollected "without fault" on the part of the executor. There is no presumption here as to the executor having done his duty. The presumption is he could have collected the note in the absence of showing, by his own averment, at least, that a portion was not collected without any fault in him.

The Code of Civil Procedure provides that, at the hearing for settlement, "any person interested in the estate may appear and file his exceptions in writing to the account, and may contest the same." Section 1635. An exception may be taken to an account for that credits appear therein to which, as matter of law, the executor is not entitled; as if an executor shall attempt to set off, as against money or property of the estate which has passed into his hands, individual expenditures of his own, from which the estate could receive no benefit, and for which it was in no way responsible. Here the contestant of the account of the executor objected that it appeared therefrom he had failed to charge himself therein with the whole of the principal and interest of the M. A. Braly note and mortgage. The exception called the attention of the court to the fact that, by his account, the executor sought to relieve himself of responsibility as to part of the Braly note, without any showing, even by entry in the credits, that he had not been guilty of negligence. Moreover, the account is expressly excepted to "because it is not made to appear therein that the Braly note remained uncollected without the fault of said executor."

3. But appellant contends that the contestant of an account is plaintiff; that the exceptions in writing must be as fully and accurately drawn as a complaint in an ordinary civil action; that the account as presented must be taken and settled as correct in all respects, except as to the specific exceptions taken to it; that at the trial of the contest no evidence is admissible, except such as supports, not only the attack upon the particular items referred to in the specifications, but the specific averments set forth in the specifications as grounds of objection to the particular items. And appellant claims that, under the allegations in the exceptions as to the Braly note, the court below should have allowed no testimony to prove that the executor had been guilty of negligence in failing to collect that note. In New York the practice obtains of permitting objections to an account to be stated in the most general language, although the surrogate may require them to be made more specific. Under a general objection to any and all of the items, it was there held that the surrogate could inquire into and scrutinize the account, and was not bound by the executor's oath thereto, or by the vouchers produced by him; and in examining it he could allow, for his information, any person to point out errors and defects therein. Red. L. & P. Surrogates' Courts, (2d Ed.) 672; Peck v. Sherwood, 56 N. Y. 615; Buchan v. Rintoul, 70 N. Y. 1.

Appellant relies, in support of his contention, on sections 1713-1716, Code Civil Proc. By sections 1713 and 1714, the provisions of part 2 of the Code—relating to proceedings in ordinary actions—do not constitute the rules of practice in probate proceedings when "it is otherwise provided;" and the provisions of part 2—relating to new trials and appeals—are not applicable when "inconsistent" with the provisions of the title in which the sections are found. A mode and manner of settling accounts of executors and administrators is specially provided, which, if followed, is inconsistent with the provisions relating to new trials. An appeal from an order settling an account is expressly allowed within 60 days. Code Civil Proc. 963, 1715. The article and chapter referred to in section 1716 relate to contests of the probate of wills. Code Civil Proc. 1312. The suggestion of appellant is that the "exceptions" permitted by section 1635 constitute a complaint which may be demurred to on any of the grounds mentioned in section 631; and which, if sufficient in form, must be answered by the executor; that the issues made by such complaint and answer must, on the demand of either party, be tried by a jury; that judgment must be entered against the party to whom the special verdict is adverse, together with costs in favor of the prevailing party. That the procedure thus marked out is singularly inappropriate as a mode for settling an account, which it is the duty of the court of its own motion carefully to scrutinize, appears on saying it.

It may aid in ascertaining whether the legislature has required the procedure insisted upon, to look for a moment at the history of the laws with reference to the joinder of issues of fact in probate, and their trial. April 23, 1855, the twentieth section of the act of May 1, 1851, "to regulate the settlement of estates of deceased," etc., was amended so as to provide: "If any person appears and contests a will, he shall file a statement in writing of the grounds of his opposition. When issues shall be joined in the probate court respecting the competency of the deceased to make a last will and testament, or respecting the execution by the deceased of such last will and testament under restraint or undue influence, or fraudulent representations, or for any other cause affecting the validity of such will, such issue or issues shall, at the request of either of the parties interested, be certified immediately to the district court of the proper county for trial by jury. * * * Upon the determination of such issue or issues of fact, the jury trying the same shall render a special verdict thereon, and the finding of the jury shall be certified by the district court to the probate court, whereupon the probate court shall proceed to admit such will to probate or not, according to the facts found and the law." St. 1855, p. 132. Compare section 1312, Code Civil Proc. The original act of 1850 (St. 1850, p. 402, § 295) gave an appeal to the district court from certain orders of the probate court, including "all settlements of executors or administrators," and provided that, on filing the appeal papers, the district court should be possessed of the cause, to re-examine the account anew. And the act of 1851 (pages 486, 487, §§ 294, 298) attempted to give like appeals, and provided that the district court should try the matter anew. Neither act purported to declare that, on such appeal, questions of fact arising upon a settlement of accounts should be tried by jury in the district court. May 20, 1861, (St. 1861, p. 628,) section 20 of the probate act of 1851 was again amended by providing that the issues of fact arising on the contest of a will, which might previously have been sent to the district court, should be tried in the probate court, and, if so requested by a party in interest, by jury. Such is substantially the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Thus it appears that, prior to the Codes, there was no express provision of law requiring, nor any which could be construed to require by implication, that any issues of fact arising in the probate court should be tried by jury, except such as might arise upon the contest of the probate of wills. Are sections 1716 and 1717 to be read as commanding the proceedings set forth in section 1312, Code Civil Proc., and those which immediately follow, to be resorted to whenever an account is contested?

In Re Estate of Moore, supra, the question was fully considered and discussed by Justice TEMPLE, and the question above stated was answered in the negative. The court there held that sections 1716 and 1717 "should not be construed as granting an absolute right to a jury trial in cases in which, according to the course of the common law, a jury trial was denied as inappropriate, and especially upon the settlement of the accounts of administrators and executors, where so much is left to the mere discretion of the judge, and in the face of the language of the Code, in many sections, implying that the settlement shall be by the court. Sections 1636-1638, Code Civil Proc." See, also, the remarks of MCFARLAND, J., in Estate of Hertman, supra.

There may be a manifest propriety in requiring, at the request of a party, issues of fact such as ordinarily arise in the contest of the probate of a will, (was the testator of sound mind? was he subjected to undue influence?) to be tried by a jury. But the proceeding in probate for the settlement of an account is sui generis, bearing but a distant and incomplete analogy to the procedure for an accounting in equity. The executor or administrator derives his power to act as such from the will, or order of the court, but in his conduct of the affairs of the estate he is subjected largely to the discretion and control of the court. The court is bound to protect the estate, and, as far as may be, the rights of all concerned. Publication is had that all interested may have an opportunity, by written exceptions, to call the attention of the court to alleged errors or defects; but, in the absence of exceptions, the court may and should inquire into any matter which may seem to the court objectionable, and pass judgment thereon, and, in the presence of specific objections, the court is not limited to the specific objections. A special verdict must pass on all the issues by presenting the conclusions of fact bearing on all. Code Civil Proc. 624. Section 1314, relating to contests of wills, provides that the jury must return a special verdict "upon the issues submitted to them by the court," upon which the judgment of the court must be rendered. For many years it has been the practice in this state, when a special verdict is desired, to cause to be prepared and submitted to the jury special issues,—usually in the form of questions,—and it would seem that this practice is recognized by the legislature by the words, "the issues submitted to them by the court." In cases of contests of a will the issues must be such as that the determination of them will leave to the court no office except to enter a judgment admitting the will to probate or rejecting it. Section 1314.

But if, as claimed by appellant, when an account is contested, the trial and evidence must be confined to the particular items excepted to, and to the grounds of exceptions thereto, no judgment settling the account can be based on a special verdict of a jury alone, unless all of the items of the account are excepted to. This strengthens the presumption that the statute does not require that a contest of an account must be submitted to a jury on the demand of a party in interest. Even if it should be conceded that there are any issues of fact, other than those arising on the contest of wills, which, on demand, must be submitted to a jury, in conformity to the requirements of the Code as to such contests, they must at least be like—of the same kind as—those joined in contests of wills, and like those which by the former statutes were directed to be sent to the district court for trial. It would seem that they must be such the verdict whereon would be determinative of an order or judgment to be entered by the court, and not merely determinative of subordinate facts which may be considered by the court in connection with other facts in making its order of judgment.

We are clearly of opinion that exceptions to an account do not create "issues of fact joined," such as must be submitted to a jury on demand of a party in interest. The language of section 1635 does not of itself require the elaborate procedure provided for in sections 1312-1314. No time is given the executor to prepare to meet or to answer the exceptions; although, doubtless, in proper cases, the court may grant him time to secure further evidence in support of his account as rendered. On the day appointed, or on any subsequent day to which the hearing may be postponed, any party in interest may "contest the account." True, his exceptions must be in writing, but this may well be that the point of his objections shall be made clearly to appear to the court. It is proper, and we believe it has been the practice, to extend to contestants the widest latitude in amending and supplementing their exceptions. What, then, is the purpose of section 1635? To us it appears the object is that all interested may inspect, and, if it is desired, object, to the account. But it is the duty of the court carefully to scrutinize the account, and to reject all claims of the executor illegal in themselves or unjust in fact. The court might perhaps overlook particular objections which were not called to its attention; and the exceptions are permitted in aid of the court when performing its duty of making the account correct. It was not intended to deprive the court of its power to supervise in every particular the accounts of executors and administrators, a power conferred for the protection of all interested, including infants, and oftentimes adults ignorant of their rights. The only point decided in Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 485, was that an auditor, to whom objections to an account were referred by the surrogate, must confine the inquiry before him within the limits of the reference.

4. It is said by appellant that the evidence would not support a finding of such negligence on his part, with respect to the Braly note, as should render him liable for the balance thereof uncollected. But even if the testimony of the appellant tends to prove an excuse for his neglect, for the reason that he was not specifically advised by the attorney, Fabens, of the necessity of commencing an action to foreclose the mortgage, the testimony of Weeks was to the effect that the attention of appellant was called to the fact that the Braly note would "outlaw" in a few weeks, and that appellant did know of the consequences of the running of the statutory limitation. It was for the court below to determine the credibility of the several witnesses.

5. It is insisted, however, that, even if the appellant was guilty of negligence, his co-executor, Weeks, was also liable for negligence in the same matter; that their liability was joint, and, the devisees having released Weeks from all liability as executor unconditionally, appellant was thereby discharged from liability. Appellant urges that any negligence on the part of the executors constituted a tort, and as there can be but one satisfaction of a tort, the release of one of them released both. But, for a neglect of their duty as trustees, they were liable as for breach of the contract obligations they took upon themselves as executors. Appellant claims that if the executors were joint debtors, the release of one released the other. The obligations of co-executors arise from their contract, and are several. Although one may in some cases make himself liable by placing the other in a position to do wrong, or by aiding him in his acts or misfeasances, the liability is still the several liability of each. And this is so, even if it be conceded the devisees or legatees may under some circumstances claim both to be liable. Whether the executor Weeks was guilty of negligence in not taking more active measures to enforce the collection of the Braly note and mortgage, which was in the possession of the appellant, was to be determined by the evidence below, and in reviewing the evidence we must assume the testimony of Weeks to be true.

At common law, executors were generally liable for their own acts, and not for the acts of their co-executors. Each executor had an independent right over the personal property of his testator; he might sell it, and receive the purchase money, and give receipts in his own name. There were, indeed, cases in which both of the executors were made severally—perhaps jointly and severally—liable. "If an executor does any act to transfer the property into the exclusive control of the co-executor, and thus enables his co-executor to misapply the same, he will be liable; as if he joins in drawing or indorsing a bill or note, or delivers or assigns securities to his co-executor to enable him to receive the money alone, or if he gives him a power of attorney, or does any other act that enables his co-executor to misapply the money; and so it was held 'that if by agreement between the executors, one to receive and intermeddle with such a part of the estate, and the other with such a part, each of them will be chargeable with the whole, because the receipts of each are pursuant to the agreement made betwixt both.'" Probably the case would not now be followed, but it illustrates the principle." Perry, Trusts, §§ 421, 422, and cases cited in notes. And so if an executor stands by and sees a breach of trust committed, or about to be committed, by a co-executor, and does nothing to protect the estate, or to call the defaulting executor to account, he is liable. But a neglect to collect a debt which might, with proper exertion, be collected, is a devastavit, (Bouv. Dict.,) and a devastavit by one of two executors shall not charge his companion, provided he has not intentionally or otherwise contributed to it; for the testator's having misplaced his confidence in one shall not operate to the prejudice of the other. Rowland v. Milforth, Cro. Eliz. 319; Williams, Ex'rs, bottom p. 1820. In the American note to the same page are collected many decisions in this country to the effect that where one executor merely permits his co-executor to take possession of assets without going further, and concurring in a misapplication of them, he does not render himself responsible for the receipts of his co-executor.

The extent of the liability of one executor for the acts of his co-executor will depend very much upon the circumstances of each case. Fonte v. Horton, 36 Miss. 350; Noland v. Calvit, 12 Smedes & M. 273; Clark v. Blount, 2 Dev. Eq. 51. In the case before us, the note and mortgage were in the exclusive possession of the appellant, and we cannot say the co-executor failed in reasonable diligence when he relied upon the positive statements of appellant that he knew all about the matter, and that there was plenty of time to attend to the collection of the Braly note. Such was the effect of his declarations. It has sometimes been broadly stated that, if an executor turn over assets which he has received to his co-executor, he becomes responsible for the due application and administration of those assets by his co-executor. The rule, as settled by authority, however, and as laid down by Williams on Executors, (bottom p. 1823,) is: "If an executor is merely passive by not obstructing his co-executor from getting the assets into his possession, the former is not responsible. If, however, the one in any way contribute to enable the other to obtain possession, he is answerable, notwithstanding his motive be innocent, unless he can assign a sufficient excuse." In a note, many authorities are referred to in support of the text. In all the cases there seems to have been some circumstance to put the executor, when he transferred the actual possession to his co-executor, on his guard against possible misconduct or irresponsibility on the part of the co-executor, or an entire absence of any explanation to show that in delivering the asset to his companion he acted with the prudent care of a reasonable person.

The English case—Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333—goes further, perhaps, than any other cited by appellant. A bill for an accounting was filed by a widow against the three executors of the estate of her deceased husband. The master, in his report, charged all three of the defendants with a certain sum, which (upon advice of a witness) the plaintiff, in the presence of all the executors, had delivered into the hands of one of them, Spurrel, the witness not having a good opinion of the circumstances of Gascoyne, another of the executors. Spurrel immediately gave the money over to Gascoyne, who took it away. The witness, before the master, also testified: "Gascoyne was reputed not to be in good circumstances." The court, with hesitation, held that Spurrel, as well as Gascoyne, was properly charged with the amount, but that the master erred in charging the third executor with it.

In Edmonds v. Crenshaw, 14 Pet. 166, the testator by his will directed his property, real and personal, to be sold by his executors, and the proceeds to be by them invested in certain stocks for the benefit of persons named in the will. The property was sold, and the account of sales settled with the ordinary by the executors. One of the executors became insolvent. The beneficiaries named in the will filed a bill in the circuit court of the United States to compel a performance of the direction of the will. The solvent executor stated in his answer that the moneys were not invested while he remained in South Carolina, where testator died, because the sums collected were small; and that he removed to Alabama, having first delivered over to his co-executor all the assets of the estate which had ever come into his hands, and taken the receipt of his co-executor for the same, which he filed with the ordinary. The parties went to a hearing on bill and answer. The executor had proceeds of the sale of the property in his hands, which it was his duty to see were invested as directed by the will. The supreme court held that the executor could not discharge himself by paying over the assets to his co-executor, but must show that he made the investment required by the will, or applied the funds in some other manner in conformity with the trust.

In Clarke v. Clarke, 8 Paige, 152, an executor paid over all the moneys in his hands belonging to the estate to the executrix, testator's widow. The executor contended he was not liable because by the terms of the will the widow was entitled to the use of all the property during her widowhood. The court held the widow was not entitled under the will to the possession of the estate, and that the executor, who had suffered her to use the proceeds of the property for her own purposes, and to sell the last piece of real estate, when the proceeds were more than sufficient to pay all the testator owed, was liable.

In Mesick v. Mesick an executor had assets in his possession, for which he had given a receipt undertaking to collect the same, and apply the proceeds in the manner designated by the testator. He afterwards voluntarily delivered the assets to his co-executor, without any "good reason." The court held that while, ordinarily, an executor is not liable for money received by his co-executor, yet when, having it in his actual possession, he hands it over to his co-executor, he will only be exempted from liability on showing good reason for having done so. 7 Barb. 120.

Johnson v. Corbett, 11 Paige, 266, holds that where an administrator suffers or permits his co-administrator to misapply the funds of the estate, when he has the power to prevent it, he is liable, in equity, for such misapplication, if the amount misapplied cannot be collected from the co-administrator. This last decision would seem to imply that his liability was in its nature that of a surety.

Chancellor KENT has said, speaking of the liability of co-executors: "The defendant P. is not responsible for the devastavit of his co-executor C., any further than he is shown to have been knowing or assenting to it at the time. * * * Merely permitting a co-executor to possess assets, without going further and concurring in the application of them, does not render an executor liable for the receipts of the other. * * * Each executor is liable for his own acts, unless he hands over moneys collected or received to his co-executor, or joins in the direction or misapplication of the assets." Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 22.

As we have seen, the liability of an executor for acts or omissions of his co-executor depends upon the circumstances of each case. Some of the cases relied upon as authority for holding Weeks liable, are cases in which the loss to the estate was caused by malfeasance, or affirmative misapplication of the assets by one executor which the other could have prevented. Some were cases in which assets were delivered to a co-executor who was insolvent, or whose probable insolvency was known to the executor delivering them. In some, money collected or received by an executor, and for which it was his duty to account, was turned over to a co-executor. In others, the executor surrendering the money or assets was charged by the will with some special duty in respect to them; as that they should be invested in a particular manner under his direction. In all there was a failure to make it appear that there was good reason for passing the actual possession to the co-executor.

In the case at bar, the Braly note and mortgage were in the possession of the appellant from the time of making up the inventory of the estate until the debt was barred by the statute of limitations; with the exception of a brief period near the commencement of the administration, when they were in the hands of counsel, having been placed in his hands by appellant. Prior to the death of the testator, they were in the possession of Weeks as his attorney in fact. Precisely how or when they passed into the possession of appellant does not appear, although this occurred shortly after the death of decedent. The appellant was, and continued to be, amply able to respond for all the assets that passed into his hands. The asset was not collected by Weeks, and the money paid over to appellant. And the testimony of appellant supplies a sufficient reason why the note and mortgage were placed in his actual custody: "The note was, with all the balance of the papers, placed in my safe. Captain Weeds had no safe, and I kept the accounts and papers." We think that under the circumstances, neither upon principle, nor on the weight of authority, did the executor Weeks become liable for the balance of the Braly note, in part collected by appellant, merely from the fact that he was in possession of it (the note) at the time of the testator's death, and delivered it or permitted it to be delivered to appellant.

But is this the case of the "release" of one of two joint debtors? Even at law it is necessary that a technical release under seal be given to one of several debtors jointly bound, in order that the others may avail themselves of it as a discharge. Armstrong v. Hayward, 6 Cal. 183; Prince v. Lynch, 38 Cal. 531. The provisions of our Code with reference to the effect of a release of one of several joint obligors have no application here, as the liability of Weeks, if it accrued at all, accrued prior to the adoption of the Codes. At common law a release of one of several obligors, whether bound jointly, or jointly and severally, discharges the others, and may be pleaded in bar. But when two are bound jointly and severally, and the obligee covenants with one not to sue him, it does not amount to a release, but is a covenant only, and the obligee may still sue the other obligor. Rowley v. Stoddard, 7 Johns. 209. Courts endeavor to carry out the intention of the parties when the instrument appears to have been intended to be a covenant not to sue, and not a release. 2 Chit. Cont. 1155. Here the instrument signed and not sealed by the devisees amounts to a promise not to call the executor Weeks to any accounting, and a consent that an order settling his account might be entered in the probate court without notice to them. The language of the writing clearly indicates it was intended as a contract not to seek legal redress as against Weeks. If the consideration for the promise of the devisees appeared to be the payment in whole or in part of the debt due from the Braly estate, the appellant would be entitled to a credit for the sum so paid. This because it was paid; but it remained for appellant to show the fact.

When the executors give a joint and several bond, the effect is to make them jointly and severally liable, on such bond, for the misconduct of each. Williams, Ex'rs, 1820, note y. Here the will provided that the executors should not give bond, and so far as appears none was given. By our statute, when two or more persons are appointed executors or administrators, the superior court must require a separate bond from each of them Code Civil Proc. 1391. Each is chargeable in his account with the whole of the estate which may come into his hands. Id. 1613. When an executor is guilty of neglect with reference to assets in the possession of his co-executor, he is not made liable upon the theory that the assets are in the possession of both, which, in fact, they are not, but upon his neglect in delivering them to his co-executor without good cause, or in not seeing to it that they were taken out of the possession of the co-executor, or were not by him misapplied or lost.

Even if it should be conceded that Weeks could, at the option of the devisees, be charged with the part of the Braly note uncollected, by reason of his neglect in not taking measures to cause it to be collected, it would not follow that the appellant, who had the note in his possession, could assert the agreement styled a "release" as a release to him. Co-executors are not liable to each other, but each is liable to the cestuis que trust to the full extent of the fund he receives. Edmonds v. Crenshaw, supra. As between the executors herein, the primary and principal obligation was on appellant to account for the note and mortgage which was in his possession. We know of no principle by which Weeks could be held to contribute towards any sum appellant might have to pay as a consequence of his failure to collect the Braly note. The appellant, therefore, could have lost no right to contribution by the arrangement between Weeks and the devisees.

6. On the twenty-sixth of February, 1869, the appellant exchanged $500 in currency—the property of the estate—for $370 in gold. The court below directed the appellant to charge himself with the former instead of the latter sum. There is no dispute but that the $370 were paid to satisfy a coin debt due from the estate, or that the $500 "currency" were then worth $370 in gold. The transaction is treated by counsel as a "sale," but we think that is hardly the term to apply to the exchange of one currency for another. We take notice that coin was always treated as the standard of value in this state, and was so recognized by our legislation. If the executor had paid the gold debt with $500 in greenbacks, the transaction would not have been refused the approval of the probate court for that reason alone. If, indeed, he had gold at his disposal, he should have paid the debt in gold; but, if he had not, any sale of property he might have made would have produced either "currency" or a proportional less amount in gold. It is suggested he should at once have proceeded to collect the Braly note. But, although the appellant was properly held liable for the Braly note, the question whether he used a reasonable discretion in changing the paper currency into gold is to be determined by the conditions existing when it was done. The Braly note bore interest at the rate of 1 per cent. a month, and had several months yet to run. The appellant may reasonably have believed it was for the interest of the estate to dispose of the greenbacks rather than to bring the foreclosure suit, which might be pending a considerable period of time before decree. The court erred in compelling him to account for more than the $370.

7. Considering the great delay of appellant in accounting, we cannot say the superior court was not justified in charging the appellant with legal interest upon balances, with annual rests.

8. It is claimed by appellant that the right of respondents to demand an accounting was barred by the statute of limitations, and that by their laches they had lost their right to call the executor to an account. From the expiration of the time mentioned in the notice to creditors, it was the duty of the executor to account. His obligation to account was continuous, and he cannot claim that his failure to do so, at any moment of time, set the statute in motion, or cast upon the respondents the duty to demand an accounting; since their right to demand it ran with his duty, and could be asserted so long as his duty remained unperformed. There is no express provision of our law with respect to the limitations of actions which applies to the case, and we discover in the record no such laches as a court of equity will sometimes consider sufficient reason for dismissing an appeal to its jurisdiction. It cannot be claimed that the devisees and legatees consented that the executor should be relieved of his duty to account as such, and that the estate should remain open and unsettled. If any unfavorable consequences may be supposed to have been suffered by appellant by reason of the insolvency of his co-executor, he could have avoided them by more prompt action on his part; but such insolvency could not relieve him from the burden of accounting for the property of the estate in his possession. He did not and could not "repudiate his trust" entirely by his mere failure to account. He failed to perform a specific duty which still continued imposed upon him until his accounts were settled.

9. It is claimed by respondent that the order entitled, in the transcript, "Order Settling and Correcting Account," is not appealable, because not an order settling an account. But, while informal, we think the order that the account "be, and the same is hereby, allowed and approved, except as to the matters following," etc., is an order settling the account. It directs the executor to charge himself in the account with certain sums, and approves of the account as rendered in other respects. There remained only the clerical duty of making the account conform to the order. Estate of Miner, 46 Cal. 566.

The order appealed from is modified by striking therefrom the words, "The said executor is directed to charge himself in said account with the sum of $500, as of the twenty-sixth of February, 1869, instead of the sum of $370, 'amt. rec'd, sale of $500 currency found on R. A. Sanderson's body, at 74 cents,'" and the order appealed from is in all other respects affirmed.

MALONEY and another v. HEFER. (No. 9,866.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

HOMESTEAD—HOW LOST—TEMPORARY ABSENCE—FILING DECLARATION.

A married woman owned two houses and a lot, and, while residing in one of the houses, prepared a declaration of homestead, and went into another county to visit for four months. Her husband, during her absence, occupied lodgings in a house, not on the property. While she was away, the declaration of homestead was filed. Defendant obtained judgment against the plaintiffs, and levied on a portion of the lot, and sold it. Held, in an action by the husband and wife to quiet their title to the lot, that, as the claimants were not residing on the lot when the declaration was filed, it was not valid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Francisco county; JOHN F. FINN, Judge. E. J. & J. H. Moore, (Nathaniel Bennett, of counsel,) for appellants. N. B. Mulville, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. The plaintiffs were husband and wife, and brought this action to quiet their title to a lot of land in the city of San Francisco. The lot fronts on Perry street, having a width of 25 feet and a depth of 80 feet, and is claimed by the plaintiffs as their homestead.

In January and February, 1883, there were two houses on the lot, one on the front and the other on the rear part of it, and the value of the whole property was between $2,500 and $3,000. The front house had a basement, and above it two flats or stories, which were leased to and occupied by tenants. The rear house was a small one and was reached by a narrow passage-way along the side of the front house from Perry street. Between the street and the front house was a yard sixteen and one-half feet long and five feet wide, and between the two houses was a yard which was divided by a board fence from five to seven feet high. Mrs. Maloney owned the whole lot as her separate property, and had resided with her husband in the rear house for more than 10 years. On the twenty-fifth day of January, 1883, while so residing on a part of the premises, she executed and acknowledged, in proper form, a declaration of homestead on the whole lot, and on the eighth day of February following filed it for record. After executing the declaration, and on the same day, she temporarily went away to visit friends in another county, and was gone about four months. During her absence her husband occupied other lodgings in the city, and the house, with the exception of one bed-room, which with its furniture was reserved, was occupied by a tenant. On or about the first day of March, 1883, the defendant obtained a judgment against the plaintiffs, and subsequently, under an execution issued thereon, sold, bid in, and in due time obtained a sheriff's deed for a part of the lot described as 22 feet wide on Perry street, and extending back 55 feet.

At the trial it was claimed by the plaintiffs that the quality of a homestead was impressed upon the whole lot, and so no part of it was subject to sale under execution. The court thought otherwise, and adjudged that the defendant had acquired a good title to that part of the lot on which the front house stood, and the yards which were attached to it in front and rear. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, and the case comes here on appeal from the judgment and an order denying their motion.

It has frequently been decided by this court that to constitute a valid homestead the claimant must actually reside on the premises when the declaration is filed. Babcock v. Gibbs, 52 Cal. 629; Dorn v. Howe, Id. 630; Aucker v. McCoy, 56 Cal. 524; Pfister v. Dasey, 68 Cal. 572, 10 Pac. Rep. 117. Here the homestead claimants were not actually residing on the premises when the declaration was filed. Nearly two weeks before it was filed they went away and ceased to occupy any part of the premises. It is true, they went away temporarily, and were gone only about four months; but during that time they certainly did not actually reside on any part of the lot filed upon.

It follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

KAMM v. BANK OF CALIFORNIA. (No. 9,412.)

(Supreme Court of California. November 30, 1887.)

1. ABATEMENT—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING—PLEADINGS AS EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff sent to a banking firm $75,000 to be invested in loans and commercial paper. The money, with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, was taken charge of by R., one of the firm, and by him invested; it being secretly understood between him and plaintiff that a new bank was to be started, in which R. was to be interested, and these notes and securities were to be used to pay the subscription of plaintiff to its stock. Fifty thousand dollars was subscribed by R. for the plaintiff and paid, when the bank, the defendant, went into business. R. in all these matters had controlled the money and investments, and most of the time had them in his own name. Four thousand dollars of the balance was paid to plaintiff, and he sued the new bank to recover the $21,000, alleging that it received it as his agent. Defendant claimed that the money had been sent to R., as the agent of the plaintiff, and that he was liable therefor, and offered to show on the trial that the plaintiff had presented the identical claim against the estate of R., now deceased; that it was rejected, and suit was brought against the executor of R., which was then pending and being prosecuted, and that the claims of the plaintiff in that suit were the same as the facts set up as a defense by the defendant in this suit, and denied herein by the plaintiff; that the complaint was verified by plaintiff's attorney, who was authorized to prosecute the suit. Held, that the complaint in that action was admissible in evidence to show the fact of suit brought and the nature of the action.

2. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—PENDING MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

Upon the close of plaintiff's testimony, defendant moved for a nonsuit. Pending the motion, the court allowed the complaint to be amended, so as to conform more nearly to the proofs. Held, that it was in the furtherance of justice, and a proper exercise of the discretion of the court.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING THE STATUTE—DEFECT NOT APPARENT—DEMUR-RER.

A pleading contained a cause of action which was not on its face amenable to the charge of being barred by the statute of limitations. Held, that a demurrer to it was properly overruled.¹

Department 2. Appeal from superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; M. A. EDWARDS, Judge.

F. G. Newlands and S. M. Wilson, for appellant. McAllister & Bergin and Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for respondent.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an action to recover from the defendant, the Bank of California, (a corporation,) the sum of $20,810, interest, and costs of suit. The cause was tried by the court, a jury having been waived, written findings filed, and judgment entered thereon in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $32,051.60, and costs. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The action was commenced on the twenty-third day of September, 1876, and was tried upon the issues made by the fourth amended complaint, filed April 27, 1883, and the answer thereto, up to and pending the trial, when the complaint was again amended. Jacob Kamm, the plaintiff, during all the times hereinafter mentioned, was a resident of Portland, Oregon. "The Bank of California" was organized as a corporation on the fourth of July, 1864, on which day its directors held their first meeting, and on the fifth of July, 1864, the bank was opened for business. Before that time there existed the banking firm of Donohoe, Ralston & Co., composed of Joseph A. Donohoe, William C. Ralston, Eugene Kelly, and Ralph S. Fretz. With that firm the plaintiff did business, such as depositing moneys, drawing checks upon it, and other banking business. That firm dissolved about the latter part of June, 1864, by dividing into two parts, one of which was Donohoe & Kelly, and the other Fretz & Ralston. The latter under that firm name did business for the short interval between the dissolution of the firm of Donohoe, Ralston & Co., and the fifth of July, 1864, when the Bank of California commenced business.

While the firm of Donohoe, Ralston & Co. was doing business, and in the early part of the year 1864, a project was formed by William C. Ralston, the plaintiff, Jacob Kamm, R. S. Fretz, and a number of others to form, incorporate, and inaugurate a new bank, to which Ralston and Fretz were to carry as much of the business of Donohoe, Ralston & Co. as they could. Mr. Ralston was very active in procuring associates and in obtaining possession and control of a large amount of notes, bills, and commercial paper, in which the funds of the new associates were from time to time invested for the purpose of using them ultimately in payment of subscriptions to the stock of the new bank when formed, and as a nucleus upon which to start business. This matter was kept secret from Donohoe and Kelly, who were not taken into the new project, and much of the business that would have naturally flowed into the current affairs of Donohoe, Ralston & Co. was diverted by Ralston from its natural channel, and kept in such condition and control by him as would enable him to throw it at once into the new bank when it should be organized. In this Mr. Kamm was co-operating with Mr. Ralston, as will be seen by the correspondence between the parties; Kamm living at the time in Portland, Oregon, and only coming to San Francisco from time to time.

Kamm, it would seem, had concluded to take stock in the new bank to the extent of about $75,000, and, following out the plan adopted by Ralston, was to forward that amount to Ralston, to be invested in commercial paper; so that, when he should be called upon to pay up his subscription to the new bank, he would be enabled to pay in the commercial paper instead of cash, and that commercial paper would then become the property of the bank. Thus its funds to that extent would, on its opening for business, be already invested, filling the important part of a beginning and nucleus, as already stated, for its general banking business.

Kamm already had a general deposit account with Donohoe, Ralston & Co., and was remitting and drawing. For the purposes of the new project, he commenced to remit on the eleventh of April, 1864, and continued up to the twenty-fifth of May, 1864, at which time he had remitted $69,500. By adding to this the sum of $5,500, drawn from his general deposit account with Donohoe, Ralston & Co., he made up the aggregate amount of $75,000 named in the complaint. Though these amounts came nominally to Donohoe, Ralston & Co., in the beginning, for the ostensible purpose of investments, they were immediately taken charge of by Ralston, with the express knowledge and consent of Kamm and Donohoe, Ralston & Co., and invested on loans and in commercial paper, with the secret intent of Kamm and Ralston to transfer such investments and commercial paper to the new bank when formed, in payment of Kamm's subscription. In all of these matters Ralston managed and controlled the funds and investments, and most of the time had them in his own name, and secretly gave information to and corresponded with Kamm, constantly imposing on the latter the most profound secrecy. In this manner the $75,000 in cash and checks came to the possession and control of Ralston, and was by him invested, and the investments, from time to time, changed.

When the Bank of California went into business, or shortly after, $50,000 of the amount, it is admitted, went to pay up his subscription to the stock, which had been subscribed for him by Ralston at his (Kamm's) special direction. Of the remaining $25,000 Kamm admits payments to him of $4,190, but still claims as unpaid to him the sum of $20,810. This amount, with interest, he demands from defendant, upon the theory that it was his agent for these investments, and as such agent received the $75,000 in commercial paper and securities, and had failed to account to him for so much thereof as is involved in this action.

The important question of fact presented for determination at the trial was whether the Bank of California received the money and securities involved in the action as the agent of plaintiff, or whether Ralston retained custody thereof as such agent, and became liable therefor. The testimony was voluminous and conflicting, and while the court below found in favor of the plaintiff, grave doubts were expressed concerning the propriety of the conclusion reached.

We have stated these facts to the better understanding of a question raised at the trial, upon certain testimony offered by the defendant and excluded by the court, the exclusion of which is assigned as error, viz.: Defendant proved that in September, 1876, plaintiff executed a power of attorney to Joseph M. French, whereby the latter was authorized and empowered for and on behalf of the former to collect and receive all claims and demands due him, the said plaintiff, to take and prosecute all legal proceedings necessary and proper to collect the same, etc. Defendant then offered to prove that the identical claim involved in this action was presented, duly verified, by J. M. French, on behalf of plaintiff, to the executors of W. C. Ralston, (who departed this life on the twenty-seventh day of August, 1875,) on the twenty-fifth day of October, 1876, as a claim in favor of plaintiff and against the estate of Ralston, that said claim was rejected by the executors of Ralston, deceased, and that thereafter, and on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1877, an action was instituted in the district court of the Fourth judicial district of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, in the name of and for the plaintiff, against the executors aforesaid, to recover the sum of money claimed in this action, which suit against said executors was then "pending and being prosecuted against the estate of Mr. Ralston, with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Kamm, the plaintiff here." The testimony was excluded, an exception taken to the ruling, and the action of the court is assigned as error.

The complaint in the action against the Ralston estate was a part of the proffered evidence, and is signed by the same attorneys as appear for plaintiff in this case. It appears from the complaint in this cause, supported by evidence, that plaintiff remitted certain moneys, which the Bank of California agreed to invest, and did invest, for him, and had collected and appropriated to its own use $20,810, parcel thereof; that the bank was the contracting party with plaintiff, and responsible to him for the money.

In the other action pending he set up that this money was remitted to and deposited with William C. Ralston, and that Ralston had undertaken to invest for him that money; that Ralston received it, and that Ralston agreed to invest it, and Ralston agreed to keep it invested; and that Ralston reported to him, from time to time, of and concerning this money which was invested; and that he had made a request and demand on Ralston to pay him that money, and that Ralston had refused to pay it to him prior to the time of his death, and that it remained unpaid to him at the time of Ralston's death. In that suit Kamm avers the facts to be just as defendant in this action claims them to be. True, plaintiff did not verify the complaint in that cause, but it was verified by his attorney, and we find nothing to indicate that the act was unauthorized; but, on the contrary, proof was offered that the action was being prosecuted with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff.

Where a suit is brought in the name of and for the benefit of a party by his attorney in fact, thereunto duly authorized, and is being prosecuted with his knowledge and consent, he must be presumed to know these facts, and to have assented thereto, and, so far as the same is evidence for or against him, to be bound thereby.

Greenleaf, in treating of the subject of admissions, says: "So, the allegations in the declaration or pleadings in a suit at law have been held receivable in evidence against the party in a subsequent suit between him and a stranger, as his solemn admission of the truth of the facts recited, or of his understanding of the meaning of an instrument, though the judgment could not be made available as an estoppel, unless between the same parties, or others in privity with them." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 195; Parsons v. Copeland, 33 Me. 370.

In McDermott v. Mitchell, 47 Cal. 249, it was held that a joint answer by two defendants, signed by their attorneys and verified by only one of them, was not admissible in evidence, for the purpose of proving the allegations therein contained, in an action brought against the defendant who did not sign or verify such answer.

To hold a party bound by all the allegations in a pleading which he has not signed, and with which he may not be acquainted, would in many cases work a great hardship. When, however, an action is brought by or for a party, and is being prosecuted with his knowledge or consent, the complaint therein is evidence against him of the fact of suit brought, and of the nature of the action. These are special facts dependent upon the general tenor and effect of the pleading, and are independent of many of the formal allegations therein. To this extent and for this purpose we think the complaint in Kamm v. Ralston was admissible. It may well be that the proffered testimony would carry but little weight with a jury or the court acting as such. We can well see how a party, being in doubt as to which of two parties is legally liable to him, may bring separate suits against each, but these and other like considerations go to the weight of the testimony when introduced, and not to its admissibility. We are of opinion the testimony ought to have been admitted, and that its exclusion was error.

Upon the close of plaintiff's testimony, defendant moved for a nonsuit, pending which motion the court permitted plaintiff to amend his complaint so as to more nearly conform to the proofs. This action was in the furtherance of justice, and a proper exercise of the discretionary power of the court.

The demurrer to the fourth amended complaint was properly overruled. The pleading contained a cause of action, and was not on its face amenable to the charge of being barred by the statute of limitations. We find no error in the action of the court in refusing to strike out portions of the complaint as amended pending the trial. It is apparent that, through all the numerous amended complaints, plaintiff was pressing, by somewhat varied statements, the same cause of action set out in his original complaint. We are therefore of opinion the plea of the statute of limitations was not well taken.

As a new trial must be had, it can serve no useful purpose for us to enter upon the difficult task of discussing the findings of the court below, or the sufficiency of the evidence to support them.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: MCKINSTRY, J.; TEMPLE, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.

KEARNEY and others v. KEARNEY. (No. 11,547.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 27, 1887.)

HOMESTEAD—ALLOTMENT—NOTICE TO HEIRS—VALUE.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1465, provides that the probate court, in the course of administration, must set apart a homestead to the widow, if none has been selected, in the manner prescribed in article 2 of the same chapter, which provides for homesteads not exceeding $5,000 in value. A probate court, after appointing an administrator, set apart a homestead to a widow, on her own motion and without notice to the heirs, on proof that it was worth less than $5,000. In a suit to set the decree aside, it appeared that the property was worth $10,000, though no fraud was suggested in making proof of the value of the property before the probate court. Held, that the court had jurisdiction of the matter, and the decree setting apart the homestead was valid.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county; J. G. SWINERTON, Judge.

L. W. Elliott and John C. Byers, for appellants. Stanton L. Carter and Carter, Smith & Keniston, for respondents.

SEARLS, C. J. This is an equitable action brought by the plaintiffs, as heirs at law of J. W. Kearney, deceased, against the defendant, the widow of decedent, to set aside a certain decree of the superior court in probate, whereby a homestead was set apart to defendant. The cause was tried by the court, findings in writing filed, upon which judgment in favor of defendant was entered. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and the cause comes up on the judgment-roll.

The gravamen of the charge is fraud in procuring the decree whereby the homestead was carved out of decedent's estate, and that no notice was given of the application or hearing in the proceeding for such decree. The defendant was appointed administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband. There were no children, and the heirs at law other than the widow are two brothers and a sister. The property in question, upon which deceased and defendant had their residence prior to the death of the former, consisted of 320 acres of land, and was appraised at $4,200. Subsequent thereto, and on the eighteenth of March, 1878, defendant applied to the probate court by petition to have the same set apart to her as a homestead; and on a hearing before the court, but without notice to the other heirs, the property was found to be of less value than $5,000, and was, by a decree duly entered, set apart to defendant, the widow, as a homestead.

In this action the court finds that the homestead, when set apart, was of the value of $10,000, but that defendant in good faith believed the same was of no greater value than $5,000, and the findings negative any fraudulent intent on the part of defendant. Subsequently to the order setting apart the homestead, the usual proceedings for a distribution of the residue of the estate were had, of which due notice was given, and in which proceedings it affirmatively appeared that the homestead had been set apart, etc. The residue of such estate was, by decree of April 7, 1879, duly distributed. On the twenty-second of February, 1883, the plaintiffs moved the superior court, as the successor of the former probate court, to set aside the decree of homestead upon the same grounds substantially as urged here; which motion, after a hearing, was denied by the court, whereupon this action was instituted. The property in question was community property of defendant and her deceased husband, upon which they had resided for many years prior to the death of the latter, and they had no homestead under any statute.

The first contention of appellants is that the decree setting apart the homestead is void for want of jurisdiction in the court to hear and determine the same without notice. Probate proceedings, and the judgments rendered therein, are in the nature of proceedings in rem. In other words, such judgments are founded in proceedings, not against persons as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself, whose status or condition is to be determined, and the judgment when rendered is a solemn declaration of the status of the thing, and ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be. Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65. The probate of a will establishes its status, and such status adheres to the will, and concludes the whole world, subject only to be avoided by such direct proceedings to that end as may be provided by some affirmative law. 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. (6th Amer. Ed.) 669, and cases cited; Deslande v. Darrington's Heirs, 29 Ala. 95; Woodruff v. Taylor, supra; State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 234. Decrees of sale of the real estate of lunatics and deceased persons stand upon the same footing. Latham v. Wiswall, 2 Ired. Eq. 294; Wyman v. Campbell, 6 Port. (Ala.) 219.

A prominent distinction between proceedings in personam and proceedings in rem, consists in the different methods by which jurisdiction is obtained by the court. In the former, jurisdiction of the parties is obtained by personal service, or its equivalent, while in the latter, or at least in such cases coming under that head as relate to things exclusively, jurisdiction is acquired by taking possession of the thing, or by some act tantamount thereto, and a judgment in rem in such a case binds the "res, in the absence of any personal notice to the parties." The Globe, 2 Blatchf. 427. The parties in interest in such cases are deemed parties to the suit without personal notice. Bauduc's Syndics v. Nicholson, 4 La. 81; Thomas v. Southard, 2 Dana, 475.

In this class of cases, two questions only need be answered in the affirmative to uphold a judgment: (1) Did the court have the authority to determine the subject-matter of the controversy? (2) Did the court have jurisdiction over the thing proceeded against as a defendant? Freem. Judgm. § 611.

The first question is answered in the affirmative in this case by our statute, which authorizes the court to act in cases like the one at bar. Code Civil Proc. § 1465. This section provides that "upon the return of the inventory, or at any subsequent time during the administration, the court may, on its own motion or on petition therefor, set apart * * * the homestead selected, designated, and recorded. * * * If none has been selected, * * * the court must select, designate, and set apart * * * a homestead for the use of the surviving husband or wife and the minor children * * * in the manner provided in article 2 of this chapter, out of the common property," etc. The answer to the second question is that the proceeding to set aside the homestead is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and that, to obtain jurisdiction over the thing for the purpose of decreeing its status, only such notice is required as is provided by positive law. We have said that in a proceeding in rem against things no notice is required. This must, of course, be taken with the proviso that the statute has not provided for notice. It is a familiar principle of law in such cases that the local law as to notice governs, and whatever provision it makes, whether for personal or constructive notice, must be obeyed. In the language of Monroe v. Douglas, 4 Sandf. Ch. 182: "But such party cannot be permitted to show that he never had any notice of the suit, otherwise than by showing that the notice prescribed by the local law was not given, thereby proving the judgment to be void by that law. Actual notice in suits in rem is not required to be given to absentees in any system of municipal law with which I am acquainted."

The inquiry in such cases is not, was the defendant therein served with process, or did he appeal in the action? but the question is, did the court proceed according to its own municipal laws in pronouncing the judgment or decree? The record shows that the court in this case acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the estate in the usual manner, and, having such jurisdiction and authority to set apart a homestead, and the statute not requiring notice thereof to be given, we are of opinion the decree of the court in that behalf was not void for want of notice to the heirs. It follows that the proceedings by which the homestead was set aside are to be treated as though the plaintiffs were personally present thereat. Evidence was there introduced as to the value of the land, and it is not suggested that any fraud or device was resorted to by the defendant, whereby plaintiffs, had they in fact been present, would have been prevented from making proofs in reference to such value.

If the defendant believed, as the court found she did, that the value of the land did not exceed $5,000, there was no fraud or imposition practiced by her upon the court in bringing witnesses to establish such fact. Appellants also contend that the statute relating to single persons permits only $1,000 worth of land to be taken for a homestead. The section referred to provides for a homestead of not exceeding $5,000 in value by any head of a family, and not exceeding $1,000 in value by any other person. As before stated herein, the homestead is to be set apart in the manner provided in article 2, c. 5, tit. 11, Code Civil Proc.

Referring to article 2, we find it provides for a homestead not exceeding in value $5,000. It is true, the article as it now stands only treats of homesteads perfected before the death of the husband or wife. Section 1485 of that article, which provided the manner of setting apart a homestead of the value of $5,000 where none before existed, has been repealed; but as the probate act provided for a homestead of not exceeding $5,000, where the declaration is made during the life-time of decedent whether there are or are not minor children, and as it provides a means whereby the court shall set aside a homestead in cases where none has before been designated, we are of opinion that the court being called upon to do what the parties might have done, while both were living, may properly set aside for the survivor and minor children if any, or for the minor child or children if neither husband nor wife is living, a homestead of any value not exceeding $5,000. This question was before this court in Estate of Burns, 54 Cal. 223, where it was held that a homestead not exceeding $5,000 in value could be set apart without notice. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur on the authority of Mawson v. Mawson, 50 Cal. 539, and under some feeling of compulsion, in view of the consequences of a different ruling. In Mawson v. Mawson, it was intimated that the method originally provided for setting apart a homestead in article 2, c. 5, Code Civil Proc., had been repealed, and there was therefore no mode prescribed, and the court would proceed under section 187, Code Civil Proc. Section 1465 still prescribes, however, that when no homestead has been selected in the life-time of the deceased husband or wife, the court may proceed to set apart one as provided in article 2. That article formerly contained other sections specifically directing the mode of setting apart a homestead in such cases. They have been separated, but there still remains a procedure in article 2 for setting apart a homestead where one had been selected, but is found to exceed $5,000 in value. This procedure mutatis mutandis could be made applicable. In view of the very grave questions which have been raised in regard to the validity of these homesteads which have been set apart without notice, I suggest that probate judges adopt as a suitable mode of proceeding the mode still found in article 2, so far as applicable. That is the admeasurement and appraisal of the homestead, the report, the setting of a day for hearing, and the notice as there prescribed.

SEARLS, C. J. I concur in the suggestions of Justice TEMPLE as to a proper course to be pursued in the cases indicated.

PLEADING—NEW PARTIES BY AMENDMENT—CERTIORARI.

In a suit to condemn land the plaintiff obtained, in March, 1887, leave to amend complaint and summons filed December, 1886, by inserting the name of the petitioner herein as defendant, and, in April, 1887, having consolidated with other railroad companies, obtained an order to substitute the consolidated company as plaintiff. Petitioner applied for a writ of certiorari. Held, that it must be denied.

Plaintiff, in the condemnation proceedings in March, 1887, obtained leave to amend the summons nunc pro tunc by inserting petitioner's name as defendant, and later the complaint was so amended, and in August, 1887, the complaint was amended by substituting a company as plaintiff.

SANTA CRUZ WATER CO. v. KRON and others. (No. 12,025.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 1, 1887.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BONDS—ELECTION—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT OF ACT.

Under California act of March 9, 1885, entitled "An act to authorize corporations of the fifth class containing more than three thousand and less than ten thousand inhabitants to obtain public water works," an election was held in the city of Santa Cruz on March 30, 1885, and bonds were issued to pay for the works. Held that, by virtue of Pol. Code Cal. § 323, which enacts that an act shall take effect 60 days after its passage unless otherwise prescribed therein, the election was void, and a writ of mandamus to compel payment of interest on the bonds would not be granted. McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank.

Application by the petitioners, the Santa Cruz Water Company, for a writ of mandate, commanding defendants Kron, Swanton, Jeter, and Squirm, constituting the common council of the city of Santa Cruz, to allow payment of interest on certain bonds issued in payment of city water-works.

Pringle & Hayne, for petitioners J. M. Lesser and Charles B. Younger, for defendants.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate, commanding the defendants Kron, Swanton, Jeter, and Squirm, constituting the common council of the city of Santa Cruz, to audit and allow a demand for interest on certain bonds of the city aforesaid, issued to purchase and pay for water-works, and to command the mayor, Effey, who, as well as the city, is made a defendant, to draw his warrant on the city treasurer therefor. The bonds in question were issued pursuant to authority conferred by an election held, or purporting to be held, under an act of the legislature approved March 9, 1885, entitled "An act to authorize corporations of the fifth class, containing more than three thousand and less than ten thousand inhabitants, to obtain public water-works." St. 1885, p. 42. "Every statute, unless a different time is prescribed therein, takes effect on the sixtieth day after its passage." Pol. Code, § 323. The act of March 9th did not in terms prescribe when it should take effect, and hence did not become a law until the sixtieth day thereafter, viz., May 8, 1885. The election was held March 30, 1885. Conceding the act of March 9, 1885, to be applicable to Santa Cruz, the election authorizing the bonds to issue was null and void, because held before the law took effect. Andrews v. Railroad Co., 16 Mo. App. 305; McDougal v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 674.

It follows that the petition for a writ of mandate must be denied and the proceedings dismissed. Ordered accordingly.

(Supreme Court of California. December 1, 1887.)

1. PLEDGE—LIEN—EXTINGUISHMENT—TENDER.

The lien of a pledgee is extinguished when a tender of the amount due on the debt is made according to law, and is refused by the pledgee.

2. SAME—REFUSAL TO DELIVER—CONVERSION.

A refusal by a pledgee to deliver up the pledge to an assignee of the pledge, upon a sufficient tender being made by the assignee of the amount due him, is conversion, and the fact that the property pledged had been attached by a third person, with whom the assignee had no privity, is no justification.

3. SAME.

In an action of trover to enforce the redemption of a pledge, the pledgee will be held responsible for any depreciation in value of the pledge, after the tender of the amount due, and refusal by the pledgee.

4. SAME—INTERVENING CLAIMANT.

One to whom a pledge has been assigned pending litigation concerning it, may file a complaint in intervention, under section 386, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides for order of substitution.

5. TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

Where one who held certain shares of stock as security for money loaned, demanded payment of the debtor, which was refused, and afterwards an assignee of the stock tendered to the pledgee the whole amount due him, with interest, held a sufficient tender, under section 1492, Civil Code Cal., which provides that where delay in the performance of an obligation is capable of exact and entire compensation, and time has not been declared to be the essence of the contract, an offer of performance, accompanied by an offer of such compensation, may be made at any time after the obligation is due.

6. SAME.

A tender to a pledgee of the amount secured by the pledge is not vitiated by a condition that the pledge be delivered to the one tendering payment.

7. SAME.

A tender of the amount due a pledgee by an assignee of the pledge is sufficient without bringing the money into court.

DOMINGUEZ v. MASCOTTI. (No. 12,210.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. NEW TRIAL—APPLICATION—TIME TO SERVE NOTICE.

Section 659, Code Civil Proc. Cal., provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial * * * must, * * * after notice of the decision of the court, * * * serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention," etc. Held, that such a notice, given before the findings were signed and filed, was ineffectual; there being no decision, and no party aggrieved, within the meaning of section 657, which provides that "the former verdict or other decision may be vacated, and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved," etc.

2. SAME—APPEAL—RECORD.

Under section 631, Code Civil Proc. Cal., a notice of motion for a new trial is no part of the record on appeal, but must be made to appear by a statement on bill of exceptions, and, when the motion for a new trial is denied, the fact that a statement or affidavits were filed does not warrant the presumption that such notice was either given or waived.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Horace Bell and C. H. Connell, for appellant. Robert Hardie and W. I. Foley, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. The notice of motion for a new trial was given before the findings were signed, and was therefore premature and ineffectual. Under the present system the findings constitute "the decision." Until the findings are signed and filed there is no decision, and nobody is "aggrieved," within the meaning of section 657, Code Civil Proc. That a premature notice of motion is ineffectual has frequently been decided. Mahoney v. Caperton, 15 Cal. 313; Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126; Hinds v. Gage, 56 Cal. 487; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 529, 6 Pac. Rep. 381.

It is true that the notice of motion is not a part of the record on appeal. Girdner v. Beswick, 69 Cal. 112, 10 Pac. Rep. 278; Hook v. Hall, 68 Cal. 23, 8 Pac. Rep. 596. But if, for that reason, the notice printed in the transcript cannot be looked at to see when it was given, then the record does not show that a notice was given or waived, and this of itself was good ground for denying the motion. Wright v. Snowball, 45 Cal. 654; Calderwood v. Books, 28 Cal. 154. Formerly the notice was part of the record on appeal. But by careless legislation it is no longer so; and, this being the case, it must, as stated in Girdner v. Beswick, above cited, "be made to appear as part of the record, by a statement or bill of exceptions," or in some appropriate mode. If it had appeared that the respondent had proposed amendments to the proposed statement without reserving proper objection, the notice of motion would have been waived. But the record does not show this, or anything from which it can be inferred that there was a waiver. It cannot be presumed from the naked fact that a statement or affidavits were filed that a notice of motion was given or waived, where the motion is denied.

The question as to the insufficiency of the evidence cannot be considered on appeal from the judgment, because that appeal was taken more than 60 days after the decision.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PACIFIC COAST RY. CO. v. PORTER and Wife. (No. 12,122.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—BENEFITS ACCRUEING TO RESIDUE OF LAND.

Const. Cal. art. 1, § 14, provides that no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation not municipal, until compensation is made, irrespective of any benefits from the proposed improvements. Held, that the benefits supposed to result to the rest of a piece of land by the taking of part of it for the right of way for a railroad, cannot be considered in a suit to determine the compensation to be paid the owner.

2. SAME—PROCEDURE—VERDICT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1249, provides that compensation and damages on condemnation proceedings shall be assessed as of the date of the issuing of the summons. Section 1243 provides that the proceedings "must be commenced by filing a complaint and issuing a summons thereon." The verdict of a jury in a condemnation suit assessed the damages as to "the present value of the strip of land." Held, that the verdict was to be construed with reference to the issues in the pleadings, which related to the time of the beginning of the proceeding in this case identical with the summons.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

The Pacific Coast Railway Company, plaintiff, sued Uriah and Fanny R. Porter, defendants, to condemn a right of way. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

R. B. Treat, for appellant. C. W. Goodchild and W. H. Spencer, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This was a proceeding to condemn a strip of the defendants' land for the purposes of the plaintiff's road. The cause was tried by a jury, who rendered a verdict, and judgment was entered thereon and on the additional findings of the court condemning the said land, and decreeing that the plaintiff pay to the defendants Uriah and Fanny Porter: (1) The sum of $75, adjudged to be the value of the land taken; (2) the sum of $800, as damages to the remainder of the land; and (3) the sum of $275, cost of fencing and cattle-guards, which, however, the plaintiff was given the option to build at its own expense. The plaintiff appeals from that part of the judgment directing payment to the said defendants.

1. It is argued for the appellant that evidence should have been admitted of the benefits accruing to the remaining land, and that such benefits should have been deducted from the amount of damage assessed. But the constitution expressly provides that "no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal until full compensation therefor be first made in money or ascertained and paid into court for the owner irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation." Article I, § 14.

Under this provision the benefits supposed to result to the remainder of the land cannot be considered. An exception to this rule is provided when the corporation for whose use property is taken is a "municipal corporation." The cases of Butte Co. v. Boydston, 64 Cal. 110, and Tehama Co. v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57, 8 Pac. Rep. 673, fall within this exception. For, as is well said by respondent's counsel, the word "municipal," as used in the provision, refers to such corporations as are for public government, and therefore includes counties. Unless the cases mentioned proceed upon this ground, we do not see how they can be sustained.

2. It is claimed that under section 1249, Code Civil Proc., the compensation and damages should have been assessed at the date of the issuing of the summons; and that the verdict of the jury was as to "the present value of the strip of land," etc. This seems to verge close to those criticisms upon the form of the verdict which are to be made in time to admit of correction. Algier v. The Maria, 14 Cal. 170, 171. But without reference to this rule it seems to us that the verdict did relate to the time of the issuance of the summons. The verdict is to be construed with reference to the issues made by the pleadings; and the issues made by the pleadings ordinarily relate to the time of the commencement of the action or proceeding, which in this kind of case is identical with the issuance of the summons. Section 1243 of the Code provides that the proceedings "must be commenced by filing a complaint and issuing a summons thereon." Under this language, the proceedings were not commenced until the summons was issued. Compare Flandreau v. White, 18 Cal. 639; Green v. Water Co., 10 Cal. 374. In the case before us the complaint was filed and the summons issued on the same day.

We therefore advise that the part of the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion that part of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

ROACH and Wife v. RIVERSIDE WATER CO. (No. 12,079.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEDURE—NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS—PURCHASER—CLAIMANT OF HOMESTEAD.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 409, provides that from the time of the filing a lis pendens "a purchaser or incumbrancer" of the property shall be affected with constructive notice. Section 1256 provides this shall apply to condemnation proceedings. In November, 1885, defendant filed notice of lis pendens at the beginning of a condemnation of a right of way. March, 1886, the wife of the owner of the property, living with him, filed a declaration of homestead. April, 1886, judgment was rendered in the condemnation proceedings, and the damages paid into court for the owner of the property. Held, that the word "purchaser" in section 409 included those who had acquired a homestead interest in the property.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; J. A. GIBSON, Judge.

William Roach and Rufina Roach, plaintiffs, sued the Riverside Water Company, defendant, in an action of ejectment. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appealed.

H. C. Rolfe, for plaintiffs. Curtis, Otis & Conner, for defendants.

HAYNE, C. Ejectment. On November 9, 1885, the plaintiff William Roach was the owner of the land in controversy. On that day the defendant herein commenced proceedings against him to condemn a right of way over the land for a public purpose, and on November 23, 1885, duly filed a notice of lis pendens. On March 22, 1886, the plaintiff Rufina Roach, who was the wife of William Roach, and who resided on the premises with him, filed a declaration of homestead thereon. On April 1, 1886, judgment of condemnation was rendered in pursuance of a stipulation, which was as follows: "It is hereby stipulated by the respective parties that plaintiff have judgment for the right of way over the land of defendant, as claimed in the complaint, and that defendant and his wife will execute a deed of said right of way, in addition thereto, to plaintiff, upon plaintiff's paying to defendant $925." The plaintiff in said proceedings (defendant herein) paid said sum into court subject to the order of the plaintiff. It has not been withdrawn, but remains in the hands of the clerk for Roach, whose property it is. The plaintiff Rufina Roach was not a party to the condemnation proceedings, and it is argued that she was not a purchaser or incumbrancer within the meaning of section 409, Code Civil Proc., which provides, with reference to notices of lis pendens, that "from the time of filing such record only, shall a purchaser or incumbrancer of the property affected thereby be deemed to have constructive notice of the pendency of the action." This provision applies to condemnation proceedings. Code Civil Proc. § 1256. And we think the word "purchaser" must receive a liberal construction, and be held to include those who have acquired a homestead interest in the property. Any other rule would enable parties to commit frauds. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

ROYLANCE and others v. SAN LUIS HOTEL CO. and others.¹ (No. 12,000.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. APPEAL—REQUISITES—NOTICE—SERVICE.

Plaintiffs recovered a judgment against certain of the defendants, and it was adjudged that "they take nothing against the defendant * * * company, and that their complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, is hereby dismissed," etc., and "that the defendant * * * company, do * * * recover from * * * plaintiff its costs," etc. Plaintiffs then served upon that defendant the following notice: "Plaintiffs * * * appeal from the judgment * * * dismissing said action as to the defendant * * * company and for recovery by said * * * defendant from plaintiffs * * * costs of * * * action. The plaintiffs appeal from the whole of said judgment, and from every part thereof." Held to include only an appeal from that part of the judgment dismissing the complaint, and for the recovery of costs against the plaintiffs, and the appeal should not be dismissed for failure to serve notice of appeal upon the other defendants.

2. MECHANIC'S LIEN—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT FILING CLAIM BEFORE COMPLETION OF BUILDING.

Section 1187, Code Civil Proc. Cal., regulating mechanics' liens, provides that "every original contractor, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor, * * * must, within thirty days after the completion of any building, * * * file for record * * * a statement," etc. Held, that a claim of lien filed before the completion of the building was premature, and could not be enforced.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

This action is to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Appellants, plaintiffs, were material-men, and furnished material to be used in the construction of the hotel of the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company. These materials were furnished directly to the defendants, who were doing work in the hotel for the original contractors. The complaint showed that the claim of lien was filed before the completion of the building. The following is the judgment of the court below: "This cause coming on regularly to be tried, * * * the court having heard and considered the allegations and evidence of the respective parties, did * * * make and file its findings of fact and conclusions of law herein, and ordered judgment to be entered herein, that the plaintiffs take nothing herein against the defendant San Luis Hotel Company, and that the plaintiffs' complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be dismissed, and that the said hotel company, defendant, have judgment against the plaintiffs for costs, and that the plaintiffs do have and recover from John D. Armstrong and William Armstrong, partners as Armstrong Bros., the sum of," etc. Wherefore * * * it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiffs take nothing against the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, and that the plaintiffs' complaint herein, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed out of this court; and it is further ordered and adjudged that the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Co., do have and recover of and from the plaintiff its costs and disbursements herein, now taxed at $20.25."

The following is the notice of appeal: "You will please take notice that the plaintiffs Joseph Roylance, Robert Dalziel, and Frederick Delger, partners under the firm name and style of San Francisco Brass-Works, hereby appeal * * * from the judgment * * * filed and entered in the said superior court on the twenty-first day of January, 1886, * * * dismissing said action as to the defendant San Luis Hotel Company, and for recovery by said last-named defendant from the plaintiffs of twenty dollars and twenty-five cents ($20.25) costs of said action. The plaintiffs appeal from the whole of said judgment and from every part thereof."

Wm. R. Davis and Wm. Shipsey, (Wm. Lair Hill, of counsel,) for appellants. McD. R. Venable and C. W. Goodchild, (Metcalf & Metcalf and F. B. Ogden, of counsel,) for respondents.

¹For a corrected report of this case, see 20 Pac. Rep. 573.

PER CURIAM. As it appears to us, the notice of appeal in this action was intended to embrace only that part of the judgment of the court below which affected the plaintiffs in adjudging that "they take nothing against the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, and that their complaint, in so far as it seeks to foreclose a lien, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed out of this court," and "that the defendant, the San Luis Hotel Company, do have and recover from the plaintiff its costs and disbursements, now taxed at $20.25." It was not intended to include in the notice any appeal from that portion of the judgment where the plaintiff recovered a personal judgment against Armstrong Bros. for a sum of money. Taking all the terms of the notice of appeal together, it seems to us that the words "said judgment," where they occur in the last clause of the notice, refer not to the whole judgment as rendered by the court, but to that part of it which is set out in the language of the notice preceding the last clause thereof, which language, fairly interpreted, includes only that part of the judgment which affects the hotel company and the plaintiff, but does not include that portion which affects the rights of Armstrong Bros. Therefore the appeal, as taken, should be entertained notwithstanding that the counsel for Armstrong Bros. were not served with notice of the appeal.

But the complaint does not show that the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce any mechanic's lien upon the building of the hotel company; for as alleged in the complaint, the claim of lien was filed on the thirteenth of October, 1884, and the building was not completed until after that date. Hence, from that pleading itself, it appears that the plaintiffs prematurely filed their claim of lien, and according to their allegations could not enforce it. In Perry v. Brainard, 8 Pac. Rep. 882, it was said: "The court below found that the lien which was sought to be enforced by the action was filed prior to the completion of the building, and was therefore prematurely filed. The statute reads: 'Every original contractor, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, must, within thirty days after the completion of any building, improvement, or structure, or after the completion of the alteration or repair thereof, or the performance of any labor in a mining claim, file for record,' etc. Code Civil Proc. § 1187. It will be seen that the time prescribed by the statute for the filing of the plaintiff's claim was 'within thirty days after the completion of the building.' Under a similar statute, the supreme court of Kansas lately held in two cases—Davis v. Bullard, 4 Pac. Rep. 75, and Seaton v. Chamberlain, Id. 89—that a claim so filed was premature, and a lien based thereon could not be enforced. The reasoning of that court commends itself to our judgment."

WAGGLE v. WORTHY and another. (No. 12,221.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. COVENANT—ACTION FOR BREACH—DISCHARGE IN INSOLVENCY.

To an action for breach of a covenant against incumbrances, given in a deed to land dated July, 1884, which was subject to a lien of a judgment rendered in March, 1884, defendant pleaded a discharge in insolvency in February, 1884. Held that, if the discharge were a bar to the debt on which judgment was entered, it should have been pleaded at that time, and the judgment could not be attacked collaterally.

2. HOMESTEAD—ABANDONMENT—SALE UNDER EXECUTION, AND REMOVAL FROM LAND.

Under Civil Code Cal. § 1243, providing that a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment or grant, one who had claimed a homestead in lands, but permitted them to be sold under judgment, and moved out, it not appearing that this former homestead was worth more than $5,000, and that steps had been taken for admeasuring the excess as provided in section 1245 et seq., cannot claim a homestead in other lands.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; R. E. ARRICK, Judge.

William M. Waggle, Sr., plaintiff, sued Robert E. Worthy and Sarah E. Worthy, defendants, to recover for breach of a covenant of warranty. Judgment was rendered for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

Nourse & Church, for appellant. Terry & Terry, for appellees.

HAYNE, C. This an action upon a covenant against incumbrances implied by statute from the use of the word "grant" in a conveyance of real property. Civil Code, § 1113. The conveyance was made on July 5, 1884. The breach alleged is that the property was at the date of the deed subject to the lien of a judgment "suffered" by the vendor for $840.30, docketed on the twenty-first of March, 1884, under which the property was sold, and subsequently redeemed by the plaintiff. The cause was submitted on briefs, but no brief for respondent is on file. So far as we can gather, the defenses were two, viz.: (1) That on February 12, 1884, the vendor had filed her petition in insolvency, and received her discharge from such claims as existed at the date of filing her petition; and (2) that the property was the homestead of the vendor, and therefore was not subject to the lien of the judgment. The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

1. The discharge in insolvency could only affect such debts as existed at the time of the filing of the petition, viz., on February 12, 1884, (Civil Code, § 51;) and this is all that the discharge in question purported to do. The claim arising from the breach of a covenant made subsequently was not affected by it. It may be that the debt upon which the judgment against the vendor was obtained was within its operation. But that matter was concluded by the judgment. If the discharge was not pleaded in that action, it was waived. If it was pleaded, and disregarded by the court, the judgment, however erroneous, was not void, and is not subject to collateral attack. The defendants cannot retry that action here.

2. The homestead claimed by the defendants to have prevented the lien of the judgment from attaching to the property was declared on June 1, 1881. To show the invalidity of this alleged homestead, the plaintiff proved that the vendor had declared a homestead on other land on March 21, 1873; and in reply the defendants proved that this last-mentioned homestead had (previously to the declaration of the other homestead) been levied upon and sold under two judgments rendered by a justice of the peace. In relation to this the vendor testified as follows: "Immediately after the sale of my first homestead, the purchaser, Jacobs, demanded possession of me, and as I was poor, and dreaded a lawsuit, I gave up possession, and moved off the land. Jacobs went into possession, and since that time I have claimed no interest in the said land embraced in my first homestead." But, so far as this record shows, the sale to Jacobs was of no effect. A homestead is exempt from execution, and, if the land was worth more than $5,000, (which does not appear,) the proceedings provided by the Code for admeasuring the excess (Civil Code, § 1245 et seq.) should have been taken. This not having been done the attempted sale was void. The homestead still existed, and was not abandoned by the claimants moving off the premises. In this state, "a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof, executed and acknowledged" etc. Civil Code, § 1243. It results that the first homestead was a valid and subsisting homestead at the time the second was attempted to be declared. A party cannot have two homesteads, and, if he attempts to acquire a second while the first is in force, the second is void. The second "homestead" being void did not prevent the lien of the judgment from attaching to the land conveyed to the plaintiff.

We therefore advise that the order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SHAW v. STATLER. (No. 11,561.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

COUNTIES—LIABILITIES—PAYMENT OF DEMANDS—PRIORITIES.

Const. Cal. art. 11, § 18, provides that no county shall incur any liability or indebtedness in any manner or for any purpose, exceeding in any year its annual income, without a two-thirds vote of the electors. County government act, § 77, provides that claimsshall be paid "according to the priority of time in which they were presented." Petitioner had a warrant issued on a valid claim. There was money enough in the fund on which it was drawn to pay it and all other warrants on claims accruing during that fiscal year. The treasurer refused to pay it, because there were not funds enough for it and outstanding warrants for former years previously presented. Held, that the income of each year must be used to pay the debts of that year, and section 77 of the county government act must apply primarily, as between the warrants of any given year. TEMPLE, J., dissents.

Appeal from superior court, San Diego county; W. T. McNEALY, Judge.

Shaw petitioned for a writ of mandamus to compel Statler, defendant, treasurer of San Diego county, to pay two warrants. The court granted it as to one, but denied it as to the other. Defendant appealed from the judgment granting the writ.

E. W. Hendricks, for appellant. Works & Titus, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. Application for writ of mandamus to compel the payment by the treasurer of San Diego county of two warrants which had been duly issued. The court below granted the writ as to the first warrant, (No. 54,) and denied it as to the second, (No. 602.) The petitioner has not appealed from the judgment denying the writ as to the second warrant, and therefore the questions argued as to it do not arise upon the record. The case comes up on the appeal by the defendant from the judgment granting the writ as to the first warrant. This warrant recites that it was issued upon a claim allowed by the supervisors "for services as boss of chain gang, accrued January—, A.D. 1886." The claim was audited and allowed on January 18, 1886, and the warrant was issued on the twenty-seventh of the same month. The validity of this warrant is not questioned; and the fact appears to be that there was at the time of its presentation enough money in the fund upon which it was drawn to pay it and all the other warrants upon claims accruing during that fiscal year. The treasurer, however, refused to pay it on the ground that certain outstanding warrants for previous years had been previously presented, and that there was not enough money in the treasury to pay these outstanding warrants and the one involved here. And in support of his action we are referred to section 77 of the county government act, which provides that claims are entitled to payment, "according to priority of time in which they were presented." The question is whether these outstanding warrants furnish any reason why the treasurer should not pay the one sued on.

Section 18 of article 11 of the constitution provides that "no county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors." It will be observed of this provision that it refers in terms to the incurring of indebtedness, and not expressly to its payment. There is no express provision that the income and revenue of each year shall be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of such year. But we think that such is the necessary implication. For unless this is so all the income and revenue of a given year might be taken up at its commencement, in the payment of old claims, and, there being no more income or revenue for that year, no more indebtedness could be incurred, and the business of the city, county, or other body would have to stop, which could not have been the intention.

In Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 642, the court said: "Each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year." This was only a dictum, for the proceeding in that case was to compel the auditing of a demand. It therefore involved only the validity of the demand, and not the disposition of the funds then in the treasury. But we think it is a correct exposition—at least so far as the revenue of any particular year is required for the expenses of that year. It is not necessary in this case to decide whether, if anything be left over after payment of the expenses of the year, the surplus could be applied to the payment of any outstanding claims for previous years, which might happen to exist and be valid.

It results that section 77 of the county government act must be construed to apply primarily as between the warrants of any given year. We do not see that it is necessary to pass upon the question whether an indebtedness is "incurred" when a service is rendered, or when the claim is audited and a warrant therefor is issued. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

By THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

VOLLMER et al. v. DE CASTILLO. (No. 11,939.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

MORTGAGE—FORECLOSURE—ISSUES AND FINDINGS—APPEAL.

In an action to recover money due upon a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage upon certain lands given to secure it, a personal judgment was rendered against defendant, under a finding that the mortgage had never been delivered, and without findings having been made as to other questions in issue. Held that, the appeal being upon the judgment roll alone, and the material issue having been found against plaintiffs, it became unnecessary to make other findings.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

Action by Edward and A. Vollmer against Gorgonia O. de Castillo to recover $1,225 due upon a promissory note executed by defendant, and to foreclose a mortgage upon certain lands, given to secure said note, and to correct the name of defendant, alleged to have been misspelled in the acknowledgment to the mortgage. Defendant denied that the mortgage had ever been acknowledged or delivered, and claimed that execution of it was obtained by fraudulent representations. A jury having been waived, the court made, in substance, the following among other findings:

That on September 10, 1884, the defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiffs said promissory note, and that no part of the same has been paid; that on September 10, 1884, and at the time the mortgage is claimed to have been executed by her, the defendant was a married woman; that she did not at said time, and never did, execute or deliver said mortgage; that she was not at said time made acquainted with the contents of said mortgage by the notary public, or by any one; that in the certificate of the notary public attached to said mortgage the name of the defendant was not misspelled, but said certificate contains, as the name of the person purporting to acknowledge the execution of said mortgage, the name of a different person; that said mortgage was never recorded in the records of the county of San Luis Obispo, etc.

And as conclusions of law found: "(1) That plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against defendant for the amount due on said promissory note, viz., $1,225, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from September 8, 1884; (2) that the certificate of acknowledgment set forth in the amended complaint herein should not be altered, amended, or corrected; (3) that the mortgage set forth in said amended complaint is not a lien upon the lands and premises therein described, and that plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree that said land and premises, or any part thereof, be sold hereunder."

Plaintiffs appeal.

S. M. Swinnerton, for appellants. McD. R. Venable and C. W. Goodchild, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This is an action to obtain a judgment against the defendant for money alleged to be due upon a promissory note, and to enforce a mortgage lien upon certain lands for the purpose of subjecting them to judicial sale, etc. The court rendered a personal judgment against the defendant as prayed for, but found, among other things, that she had never delivered the mortgage sought to be foreclosed. Such delivery was one of the issues made by the pleadings, the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, and since that material issue is found against the plaintiff, it became unnecessary to find upon the other issues as to which the appellant complains there was no finding. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

STRONG v. STAPP, (MACK et al., Intervenor.) (No. 11,406.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 2, 1887.)

1. PARTNERSHIP—DISSOLUTION BY WRONGFUL ACT—PLEADING—ANSWER.

Plaintiff and defendant were formerly partners doing business in Missouri. Defendant sold out the business, and with the proceeds went to California, and engaged in the same business there in his own name. Plaintiff levied an attachment on the property of defendant. The intervenors, who were creditors of defendant, alleged, in substance, in their complaint, the former partnership, and that the same was not dissolved when the defendant sold out and left Missouri. The answer of plaintiff alleged, in substance, that the acts of defendant in selling out were done without plaintiff's knowledge or consent, and that there was otherwise no dissolution of the partnership, and that plaintiff had no knowledge of defendant's whereabouts for a considerable time after he had left Missouri. Held, that the answer was not an admission on the part of plaintiff that the partnership was not dissolved by the wrongful acts of the defendant.

2. SAME—CLAIM OF PARTNER—PRIORITY OVER SUBSEQUENT INDIVIDUAL CREDITORS.

Plaintiff and defendant were partners doing business in Missouri. The defendant, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, sold out the largest part of the stock of goods, good-will, etc., and removed to California, taking some of the partnership goods with him, and commenced business there in his own name. Plaintiff sought out defendant at his earliest opportunity, and induced him to give a promissory note for the payment of a bona fide debt; afterwards proceeding to attach the stock of goods in defendant's possession, a part of which had been purchased of the intervenors at a time when they had no knowledge of the plaintiff, or that he ever had been defendant's partner. Held, plaintiff having elected, under the wrongful acts of defendant, to dissolve the partnership, had a right as a creditor to collect his debt, and, having attached, was entitled, as against the intervenors, to the priority of his superior diligence.

Commissioners' decision. In bank.

Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge. J. M. Wilcoxon and Wm. Shipsey, for appellants. Venable & Goodchild and N. W. Spencer, for respondents. Ernest & Wm. Graves and J. N. Turner, for defendant.

FOOTE, C. This action was instituted by Strong, and an attachment was issued and levied upon the property of Stapp. Mack & Co. intervened, demanding a judgment against both Strong and Stapp for a certain amount of money, and praying that the goods thus attached might be subjected to the payment of that judgment. The court rendered judgment by default against Stapp, and in favor of Strong, and the latter had judgment also given in his favor against the intervenors, Mack & Co., that they take nothing by their complaint, and for costs, etc. From that judgment, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, the intervenors have appealed.

An inspection of the pleadings leads us to the conclusion that all of the material allegations of the complaint of intervention are denied by the answer thereto. Nor do we perceive, as is claimed, that the latter pleading admits the partnership was never dissolved which is alleged by the complaint to have existed in Missouri between Strong and Stapp. On the contrary, it appears to us to be alleged in the answer of Strong that Stapp sold out the goods, good-will, business, etc., in Missouri, and left that state, without Strong's knowledge and consent, taking with him to California the proceeds of the sale, and a portion of the stock of goods remaining unsold, and that Strong had no knowledge for a considerable period of time after Stapp had left Missouri where he had gone. All that the answer contains which in any manner can be said even in the remotest degree to resemble an admission that the partnership was not dissolved, after such action on the part of Stapp, is where the statement occurs (after the recital of his acts in selling out in Missouri without the knowledge or consent of Strong) that there was otherwise no dissolution of the partnership. It is clear that the answer of Strong most unequivocally negatives the declarations of the intervenors' complaint that the partnership was not dissolved when Stapp sold out and left Missouri. Such is the clear import of the language of the former's pleading, and it cannot, as we think, be held to contain any admission on the part of Strong that the partnership was not dissolved by the wrongful acts of Stapp.

It is evident from the recitals of the answer to the intervenors' complaint, from the findings of the court, and the evidence as it appears in the record, that Stapp sold out the largest part of the stock of goods, good-will of the business, etc., and removed to California, bringing some of the partnership goods with him, without the knowledge or consent of Strong, and set himself up in business here under his own name, buying goods from Mack & Co. on his own sole credit. But the intervenors contend that such acts of Stapp did not work a dissolution of the partnership as it had existed in Missouri; that between Stapp and Strong it still existed; and that Strong's claim was therefore subordinate to theirs, which they assert was entitled to prior satisfaction out of the stock of goods upon which the attachment had been levied. If Strong had agreed to the sale in Missouri, and had consented that the partnership there existing should be continued in California, we could perceive merit in the intervenors' contention. But, according to the record, the wrongful acts of Stapp towards Strong induced the latter to exercise his right of election, and treat the partnership which had existed in Missouri as having been dissolved; and it was not renewed in California. Strong sought out Stapp in the latter state at his earliest opportunity after ascertaining his whereabouts, and induced him to give a promissory note for the payment of a bona fide debt, afterwards proceeding to attach the stock of goods in Stapp's possession, a part of which had been purchased from the intervenors at a time when they had no knowledge of Strong, or that he was, or ever had been, Stapp's partner; they having given the whole credit to Stapp as an individual doing business solely in his own name, and for his own benefit, and without even a suspicion that Strong could be held responsible for any indebtedness of Stapp.

The theory of the intervenors, as we understand it, seems to be based upon the idea that the acts of Stapp were not wrongful, did not work a dissolution of the partnership, and did not authorize Strong to treat the partnership as dissolved, and himself a creditor of Stapp; and that, being still a partner of Stapp in California, Strong should not be permitted to set up his claim against that of the intervenors, and have it satisfied by a sale of the attached goods before the intervenors should have their debt due from Stapp paid in full from the same source, notwithstanding the fact that their goods were sold to Stapp without Strong being known to them in any way as a partner of Stapp, and without Strong knowing of the sale, or claiming to be a partner. As it appears to us Strong has done nothing to make himself liable in any way for Stapp's purchases in California; he has a right as a creditor to collect his debt, if he can, just as Mack & Co. have, and it was a mere question of diligence in the present matter as to which should first obtain satisfaction of his or their demand. Strong has first attached, and we see nothing in the record which should postpone his rights to those of Mack & Co., who intervened.

We perceive no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

DICK'S ESTATE. (No. 11,841.)

(Supreme Court of California, December 7, 1887.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—REQUISITES OF CONTRACT—DEATH OF OWNER BEFORE APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BY AGENT.

Where a contract for the sale of land had been made by an agent, expressing that it was "subject to the owner's approval," and it was not shown that the owner knew of its execution or that he ever signified his approval in any way, having died within a few days after it was made, held, that specific performance could not be enforced under section 1597, Code Civil Proc. Cal., which provides: "When a person who is bound, by a contract in writing, to convey any real estate, dies before making the conveyance, and in all cases when such decedent, if living, might be compelled to make such conveyance, the court may make a decree authorizing and directing his executor or administrator to convey such real estate to the person entitled thereto;" the decedent not having been bound by such contract in his lifetime.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Wm. & Geo. Leviston, for appellant. Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

SHARPSTEIN, J. This is an appeal by the executrix of the will of Stephen W. Dick, deceased, from an order and decree of the superior court directing appellant to convey certain real estate, of which the testator died seized, to Charles Mayer. The sole authority for making such a decree is found in chapter 9, tit. 11, § 1597, Code Civil Proc., which contains this provision: "When a person who is bound, by contract in writing, to convey any real estate, dies before making the conveyance, and in all cases when such decedent, if living, might be compelled to make such conveyance, the court may make a decree authorizing and directing his executor or administrator to convey such real estate to the person entitled thereto."

The only question raised by this appeal is, was the decedent in his life-time bound by a contract in writing to convey any real estate to the respondent; i. e., so bound that he might, if living, be compelled to make such conveyance? An agreement for the sale of real property, or of an interest therein, is invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent; and if made by his agent, is invalid, unless the authority of the agent be in writing, subscribed by the party sought to be charged. In this case, it is claimed that the agreement to sell, or the memorandum thereof, was made by the agents of decedent. Conceding that they were duly authorized to sell, and that the writing which is relied on as an agreement to sell was subscribed by them as such agents, recourse must be had to the writing itself, for the purpose of determining whether the decedent, at the time of his death, was bound to convey any real estate to the respondent. The following is a copy of the agreement made by said agents:

"M. J. Burke.

F. H. Burke.

"OFFICE OF MADISON & BURKE,

"REAL ESTATE AGENTS, 401 AND 403 MONTGOMERY STREET, NORTH-WEST CORNER CALIFORNIA.

"SAN FRANCISCO, April 5, 1886.

"Received of Charles Mayer one hundred ($100) dollars, being deposit on account of four thousand ($4,000) United States gold coin, the purchase price of the property this day sold to him, subject to the owner's approval, and being in the city and county of San Francisco and state of California, and described as follows: Lot on the north-west corner of Guerrero and Twenty-Second street, 61 feet on Guerrero street, by 117½ feet, more or less, to an alley. Terms of sale: Ten days are allowed to examine title, and consummate the sale. At the termination of said time the balance of said purchase money is due and payable, upon tender of the deed of the property sold. If the title is defective, thirty days are allowed to perfect the same; and if after the expiration of said term, unless extended by mutual consent, the title shall not have been perfected, the deposit is to be returned. The purchaser agrees to pay the taxes on said property sold for the fiscal year 1886, from July 1, 1886, to July 1, 1887. If the sale is not consummated according to the foregoing conditions, the deposit is to be forfeited. Time is of the essence of this contract. The said Chas. Mayer hereby agrees to comply with the conditions of this contract. Sale to be consummated at the office of Madison & Burke.

S. W. DICK,

"By MADISON & BURKE, Agents.

A counterpart of it was signed by the respondent. This constitutes the memorandum of the contract subscribed by the agents of the party to be charged; and unless it bound the decedent, in his life-time, to convey the property described in it, the decree appealed from is erroneous. No proceedings in specific performance can be had unless it be shown that a contract has actually been concluded. This contract was made "subject to the owner's approval." It is not claimed that he ever signified his approval of it in any way. He died within a few days after it was made, and it is not shown that he ever knew of its existence. He did not have an opportunity to approve of it. We think the contract relied on as the basis for a decree of specific performance has never been concluded, and for that reason we think the decedent, in his life-time, was not bound by an instrument in writing to convey the real estate described in the decree herein.

Order and decree appealed from reversed.

CALIFORNIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH v. SEITZ.
(No. 9,764.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 8, 1887.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—PRIVILEGE OF PURCHASE OF BUILDINGS—ASSIGNMENT.

Defendant entered into a contract with a third party for the lease of certain land on which the third party had erected some buildings. The contract provided that at the expiration of the term of the lease the owner of the buildings might remove them, or defendant would purchase them. This contract was assigned to plaintiff, with consent of defendant, in these words: "I hereby sell and assign all my right, title, and interest in and to the within lease to [plaintiff.]" Held that, the intention of the assignment being to transfer the ownership of the buildings, the contract to purchase passed with it.

2. SAME—AGREEMENT FOR VALUATION NOT A SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATORS.

A contract for the lease of certain land whereon buildings had been erected by the lessee provided that, at the expiration of the term, the lessee might remove the buildings, or require the lessor to purchase them at a valuation "to be ascertained by two persons, one to be chosen by each party, and, in case the persons so chosen disagree, those two shall choose an umpire, whose decision shall be final and binding on the parties hereto, and their legal representatives." Held, that this was an agreement for mere appraisal or valuation, which, though binding upon the parties, is not a submission of a controversy to arbitration, and is not subject to the rules which govern arbitrators.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

This was an action to recover $6,213 upon a contract of sale contained in a lease made by the defendant, Christy Seitz, to William Perkins, and by Perkins assigned to the California Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

W. H. Fifield, R. Thompson, and W. F. Gibson, for plaintiff. E. W. McGraw, for defendant.

HAYNE, C. This is an action to recover $6,213 upon a contract of sale contained in a lease. The defendant was the owner of a lot of land, and one William Perkins was the owner of certain buildings upon it. This being the situation of the parties, they entered into a contract by which defendant leased the land to Perkins at a rental of $120 per month, and which contained a provision that the buildings should stand as security for the rent, and that at the expiration of the term Perkins should have the option either to remove the buildings, or to require defendant to take them at a valuation "to be ascertained by two persons, one to be chosen by each party; and, in case the persons so chosen disagree, those two shall choose an umpire, whose decision shall be final and binding on the parties hereto, and their legal representatives." Afterwards Perkins, with the consent of the defendant, executed the following paper: "For value received I hereby sell and assign all my right, title, and interest in and to the within lease to the California Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church." At the expiration of the term plaintiff and defendant each selected a person to ascertain the value of the buildings; and they (not being able to agree) selected an "umpire," who decided that the value was $6,213. Defendant refusing to pay, the plaintiff brought this action for the amount. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appeals.

1. The point is made that the assignment was not sufficient to pass the right to the contract of purchase. The argument is that the right of purchase was a distinct thing from the "lease;" that the title to the buildings was in Perkins; that he did not lease his own property from himself, but only the land of the defendant; and that the assignment was only of "the within lease," no words of conveyance of the buildings being used; that, therefore, the title is still in Perkins, and the plaintiff has nothing to sell. This argument is exceedingly plausible, but we do not think it is sound. The parties to the assignment certainly supposed they were transferring the lessee's right in relation to the buildings. For it does not appear the land had any use as distinct from the buildings. A town lot covered with buildings could not well have such distinct use as long as the buildings remained upon it, which, in this case, was to be until the expiration of the lease. But, if the ownership of the buildings remained in the assignor, the right to use them would remain in him also; and upon this theory the assignee contracted for a barren right. We do not think this was the intention of the parties. It seems to us that they intended to transfer the ownership of the buildings, and that the assignment does not defeat this intention. The original parties called their contract a lease. The stipulation not to "assign this lease" without the consent of the lessor certainly included the provision in relation to the buildings. "Lease" was their name for the contract. And the parties to the assignment used the word in the same sense. "The within lease" was their phrase for "the within contract." And this meant the whole contract, including the provision as to the sale of the buildings. In other words, the original lessee assigned to the plaintiff the right to compel the defendant to purchase the buildings at a valuation. But in order to compel the defendant to purchase the buildings the plaintiff must have been in a position to sell them. Such a right assumes their ownership. One thing is necessarily implied from the other. Inasmuch, therefore, as it necessarily appears from the writing that it was the intention of the parties to transfer the ownership of the buildings, we think it must be held that such ownership was transferred. This was the practical construction of the parties, including the defendant. For he joined with plaintiff in appointing appraisers preparatory to purchasing from plaintiff the ownership which he now says plaintiff never had. The cases cited for the appellant do not conflict with this conclusion; for in none of them, except Barroilhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. 450, was there an assignment of a contract containing a right of sale to the lessor. In Barroilhet v. Battelle, the lease contained such a right; but this feature was not considered. The case related solely to the lien of the lessor upon the building as security for the rent due. The case of Demarest v. Willard, 8 Cow. 206, which is most relied upon, simply held that a transfer by the lessor of the lease was not a transfer of the reversion. There was no covenant similar to the one above mentioned.

2. The appellant makes several points which turn upon the question whether the agreement of the parties is to be considered to be a submission to arbitration in the proper sense of the term. If it was such, then the arbitrators should have been sworn, (Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 482,) the parties should have had notice of the meeting of the arbitrators, and an opportunity to be heard, (Curtis v. Sacramento, 64 Cal. 102;) and it is probable that the agreement did not constitute a sufficient submission in writing,—the appointment of the individuals chosen not having been in writing. The question presented, then, is whether the agreement amounts to a submission to arbitration. There are two time-honored rules in relation to arbitrators,—one that courts will not enforce an agreement to submit to arbitration, or, in other words, that it can be revoked; and the other that arbitrators must give notice of their sessions so as to afford the parties a right to be heard. These rules rest upon the same idea, viz., that an arbitration is a substitute for proceedings in court. It being considered against sound policy to allow parties to deprive themselves of their right of resort to the courts, agreements to that effect are not binding so long as they are executory; but if the parties choose to resort to other tribunals, such tribunals are held to the more important rules which govern courts in their proceedings. It was found, however, that to apply the above rules to all agreements in which parties regulated their action by the determination of third persons would interfere with the ordinary transactions of mankind, and put unnecessary clogs upon business. Accordingly in the well-considered case of Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811, it was held that a condition in a policy of insurance in a mutual company, that the loss should be “ascertained and settled by the committee,” was not a submission to arbitration in its proper sense, but was a condition precedent to the right of action. Similar decisions have been made in this and other states. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307; Loup v. Railroad Co., 63 Cal. 103; Coar v. McLaughlin, Id. 207; Old Saucelito Co. v. Commercial Co., 66 Cal. 253, 5 Pac. Rep. 232; Adams v. Insurance Co., 70 Cal. 198, 11 Pac. Rep. 627; Carroll v. Insurance Co., 13 Pac. Rep. 863; Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 250; Hudson v. McCartney, 33 Wis. 344; Haley v. Bellamy, 137 Mass. 359; Flint v. Pearce, 11 R. I. 577; Gauche v. Insurance Co., 10 Fed. Rep. 355; Fox v. Railroad Co., 3 Wall, Jr. 245.

These cases hold that a contract by which the value of property or the amount of damage is, for the purpose of the contract, to be fixed by third persons, is not a submission to arbitration, and therefore to enforce it does not trench upon the jurisdiction of the courts. Now, if this is so, if such a proceeding is not analogous to the investigation by a court of a controversy between the parties, why need it be conducted according to the rules which govern courts in their investigations? We think that it need not; that the proceeding is a mere appraisal or valuation, which, although binding upon the parties, is not the submission of a controversy to arbitration, and is therefore not subject to the rules which govern arbitrators. And to this effect are the best-considered cases.

The precise point was decided, after careful consideration, in Norton v. Gale, 95 Ill. 533. The counsel for the appellant admits this to be a case in point, but characterizes it as a “lonesome American case.” But it is not so lonesome. There are cases which are similar in principle, both in England and America.

In Collins v. Collins, 26 Beav. 306, the parties agreed upon a sale of real property at a price to be fixed by valuers, one of whom was to be selected by each party, and the persons so selected were to choose an “umpire.” They failed to choose an umpire, and the question was whether the case was within an act of parliament which provided that “if in any case of arbitration” there was a failure to appoint an arbitrator, the court might appoint one upon application. It was held that the proceeding was not an arbitration. And Sir JOHN ROMILLY, M. R., said: “It appears to me that the case of Leeds v. Burrows, [12 East, 1,] draws the proper and fit distinction between an arbitration, in the proper sense of the term, and an appraisal or valuation; for valuation undoubtedly precludes differences, and does not settle any which have arisen. That is the distinction which in my opinion, exists between those cases of appraisal and those of valuation.” See, also, Bos v. Helsham, L. R. 2 Exch. 78-79; Eads v. Williams, 31 Eng. Law & Eq. 203.

In Curry v. Lackey, 35 Mo. 394, the agreement was that the price of a slave to be taken in payment for another slave was to be fixed by a third party. It was held that this third party was not an arbitrator, and therefore that he need not be sworn. The court said: "A reference to arbitration occurs only where there is a matter in controversy between two or more parties. In this case there was no controversy."

In Green v. Moore, 64 Pa. St. 90, 91, the agreement was for the purchase of a stock of horses, etc., at a price to be fixed by three disinterested persons to be selected as provided by the contract. If this was a simple contract, the claim was barred by the statute of limitations; otherwise if the determination of the third persons was an award. It was held to be a simple contract, and not an award. And SHARSWOOD, J., delivering the opinion, said: "An award is the judgment of a tribunal selected by the parties to determine matters mutually at variance between them,—not merely to appraise and settle the price of property contracted for under the stipulation that this term of the contract was to be so ascertained. Had the parties made the contract, and afterwards, on a dispute arising, chosen arbitrators to determine what was due upon it, that might have been an award. The case is entirely different where the parties originally agree to buy and sell at a sum to be fixed by an appraisement to be made by a third person or persons. When the original contract is established by competent and sufficient evidence, then, indeed, the assessment thus made by the authority of the parties, or by authority of law, as in the case of the justice of the peace, may be conclusive as to the price; but there is nothing in the transaction to conclude the parties as to anything else. They may fall back—dispute the existence of any contract at all—or prove that it was tainted with fraud or illegality. Here is a clear and palpable distinction between such an appraisement and an award."

So in Palmer v. Clark, 106 Mass. 389, where certain work was to be paid for according to the certificate of a specified engineer, it was held to be no objection that the certificate was based upon the notes by a deputy, of measurements made in the absence of the engineer. The court, per COLT, J., said: "A reference to a third person to fix by his judgment the price, quantity, or quality of material, to make an appraisement of property and the like, especially when such reference is one of the stipulations of a contract founded on other and good considerations, differs in many respects from an ordinary submission to arbitration. It is not revocable. The decision may be made without notice to or hearing of the parties, unless such notice and hearing be required by express provision or reasonable implication; and it may be made upon such principles as the person agreed on may see fit honestly to adopt, or upon such evidence as he may choose to receive." See, also, Garrard v. Macy, 10 Mo. 164; Willingham v. Veal, 74 Ga. 759; Gustavesen v. McGay, 12 Daly, 427.

It is quite true that the facts of the cases above quoted are not absolutely identical with the facts of the case before us. But they proceed upon the same principle, and that makes them authority here. It must be admitted that there are cases to the contrary. But in most of them the distinction does not seem to have received attention. And the cases in which the distinction was noticed do not seem to us to be well reasoned. Certainly, if parties expressly say in their agreement that the "arbitrators" are to determine the question upon their own skill and judgment without examining witnesses or hearing argument, there could be nothing to prevent such agreement from being carried out. And if this can be expressed, it can in a proper case be implied. This is recognized in some of the cases cited for the appellant. Thus in Wilson v. Boor, 40 Md. 488-489, the court said: "Parties may waive notice, or the case may be of such a character as not to require notice." See, also, Wiberly v. Matthews, 91 N. Y. 649. This seems to be sufficiently obvious. And, if so, it is a mere question as to the intention of the parties in each case. They could stipulate for the formalities of an arbitration if they chose to do so. But in a case like the present, where the reference to a third person is provided for in a contract made long before any controversy arises, which contract is made upon valuable consideration other than the mutual promise to submit to the decision of the third party, the decision being merely one link in the chain of the claim, we think that the proceeding is not an arbitration; and, in the language of the supreme court of Massachusetts above quoted, the decision may be made without notice or hearing, "unless such notice and hearing be required by express provision or reasonable implication." Such a rule seems to us to accord with the intentions of the business men in the great majority of cases. Such transactions are very common. So much so that a provision has found its way into the Code that, where the consideration of a contract is executory, "it may be left to the decision of a third person." Civil Code, § 1610. Surely it could not have been the meaning that the omitted term was to be settled by a proceeding in the nature of a suit between the parties. In this regard ROBERTSON, C. J., delivering the opinion of the supreme court of New York, to the effect that a reference to a third person to fix the amount of loss under a policy of insurance was not within the rule that one partner could not bind the firm by a submission to arbitration, said: "There is scarcely a day in which in commercial transactions the valuation of property or estimate of damages is not intrusted to third parties, and no one has yet dreamed of looking upon them as arbitrations, and subjected to all the formalities imposed on them by the Revised Statutes, with the paraphernalia of oaths, witnesses, and notices of trials. It is most frequently confided to the personal skill, knowledge, or experience, or even acquired information of appraisers." Brink v. Insurance Co., 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 123. This was the practical construction put upon the contract by the parties here; for the defendant "was present one day there," but made no offer of evidence or request to be heard.

3. Several other points are made by the learned counsel for the appellants, which may be mentioned briefly: (a) It is said that there is nothing to show that the plaintiff entered into possession of the premises, and that therefore there was no privity between it and the lessor. But the complaint alleges that Perkins entered into possession, and that "he and his assignee continued in said possession to the end of the term." The averment in the answer related to the possession of Perkins "since the termination of said lease," which is quite a different matter. Assuming, therefore, that the objection is good in point of law, it has no foundation in fact. If the assignee went into possession of the premises under the lease, it does not matter that Perkins remained there also. (b) It is objected that the rent due at the expiration of the lease was not paid. The complaint alleges that the rent was paid by the plaintiff and Perkins. The answer denies that it was paid by the plaintiff. This admits that it was paid. If the "rent" was paid it is immaterial which of the persons in possession paid it. The defendant is not entitled to have it paid twice. (c) There was probably a variance in proving a reduced rent without pleading the agreement of reduction. But, under the circumstances, it could not have misled the defendant to his prejudice, and therefore it is to be disregarded. Code Civil Proc. § 469. (d) The testimony of the witness Wilcox was merely as to the fact of his selection as "arbitrator." And this being so it was properly admitted. The objection was in effect to the form of the question. The other points do not require special mention.

We therefore advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

BY THE COURT. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

LOVELAND v. GARNER and others. (No. 12,209.)*(Supreme Court of California. December 9, 1887.)CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS AGAINST—ANSWER OF DIRECTORS ON INFORMATION AND BELIEF—FACTS WITHIN THEIR KNOWLEDGE—JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADING.

The California act of April 23, 1880, prescribes certain duties to be performed by directors of mining corporations, and for failure to perform they should be liable in the sum of $1,000 liquidated damages, at the suit of any stockholder. Plaintiff brought action under this act, and his complaint contained all the averments necessary. Defendants denied upon information and belief. Held, that as the matters alleged in the complaint were all within the knowledge of the defendants, a denial thereof upon information and belief was insufficient, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings.¹

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county; HENRY M. WILLIS, Judge.

J. S. Loveland, as stockholder in a mining company, brought suit for $1,000 liquidated damages against W. B. Garner and others, directors of said company, for failure to comply with the provisions of the California act of April 23, 1880, requiring directors of mining corporations to make certain reports. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff on the pleadings, and defendants appealed.

Hargrave & Gray, for plaintiff. Harris & Gregg, for defendants.

McFARLAND, J. On April 23, 1880, the legislature passed an act amendatory of "An act for the better protection of stockholders in corporations," etc. It was intended for the benefit of stockholders in mining corporations, and prescribes, with great detail, the duties of directors, presidents, superintendents, secretaries, and other officers of such corporations. St. 1880, (State Ed.) 134. It is sufficient to say here that section 1 of the act provides that the directors shall, on the first Monday of each month, cause to be made and posted in the office of the company an itemized account or balance-sheet embracing a full statement of all receipts and disbursements; also all existing indebtedness or liability, the amount of money on hand, etc.; and that section 3 provides that if the directors fail to comply with section 1, they shall be liable in the sum of $1,000, liquidated damages, to any stockholder bringing an action therefor.

In the case at bar the complaint, which is verified, avers the existence of a certain mining corporation; that the defendants are, and at the times mentioned were, the directors of said corporation; and that plaintiff is and was a stockholder therein. It then avers that said corporation was seized and possessed of divers valuable mining claims and mineral lands, and also of certain mills, machinery, and other property of great value; that certain persons named were superintendent, president, and secretary; that defendants, as directors, had the management and control of its property and business; that during the months of January, February, March, April, May, June, and July, 1885, said mines and mills were operated, and large sums of money were received and disbursed, liabilities incurred, etc.; and that defendants failed to cause any itemized account or balance-sheet to be made, etc., as provided by said act. All facts necessary to make a complete cause of action under said act of April 23, 1880, are set forth in the complaint with great particularity.

The only positive and direct denial of the answer is the denial that the corporation "was seized or possessed of any mill or mills, or any machinery of ¹If the facts alleged in a complaint are presumptively within the knowledge of the defendant, he must deny positively, and a denial on information or belief will be treated as an evasion. But if the facts alleged are not such as must be within the personal knowledge of the defendant, he may deny knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief. Railroad Co. v. Railroad & Nav. Co., 22 Fed. Rep. 245. So held in Wisconsin. Stacy v. Bennett, 18 N. W. Rep. 26.

any nature or kind whatever." All the other averments of the complaint which are attempted to be denied at all are denied "upon information and belief." No new matter was set up as a defense. Plaintiff moved for judgment upon the pleadings. The motion was granted, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff for $1,000; this court having held, when the case was here before, that there could be a recovery for only one month's failure. 12 Pac. Rep. 616. From this judgment defendants appeal.

The judgment of the court below should be affirmed. It is settled practice here that judgment for plaintiff may be rendered upon the pleadings where the material averments of a sufficient complaint are not denied by the answer. Felch v. Beaudry, 40 Cal. 439; Hemme v. Hays, 55 Cal. 339; Gay v. Winter, 34 Cal. 153; Fitzgibbon v. Calvert, 39 Cal. 261. It is equally well settled "that if the facts alleged in the complaint are presumably within the knowledge of the defendant, he must answer positively; and a denial upon information and belief will be treated as an evasion." Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 38. And in such a case the defendant should at least show "how it happened that he was without knowledge as to such facts." Brown v. Scott, 25 Cal. 190. And the rule applies as well to corporations and their officers as to natural individuals. Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453. Now, the only positive denial in the answer, namely, that the corporation did not own any mill or machinery, is immaterial. The complaint is perfect without the averment of that fact. The other denials, upon information and belief, are all of matters within defendants' knowledge,—things which they presumably knew. For defendants to say, practically, that they do not know whether for seven months a certain person was their superintendent, or whether, during that time, the the corporation of which they were directors worked or developed any mine, or extracted any ores or minerals, or employed any miners or teamsters, or incurred any liabilities, or disbursed any money, or was engaged in conducting the business of mining, or received any money whatever, is to indulge in a playful frivolity not consistent with the solemnity of sworn pleadings in a court of justice. Judgment affirmed.

BREEN v. DONNELLY et al. (No. 9,566.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 10, 1887.)

1. EQUITY—REFORMATION OF DEED—MISTAKE—LIMITATION.

Two tenants in common, wishing to divide 48,000 acres grazing land, employed a surveyor in 1867, and conveyed by deeds to each other one-half each, according to his description. In 1880, upon survey for purposes of taxation by the state, it was discovered that defendants' ancestor had 500 acres too much. In less than two years plaintiff filed a bill to correct the mistake in the deed, and defendants pleaded the statute of limitations. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 338, subd. 4, provides that, in an action for relief on account of mistake, the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the mistake, and it must then be brought in three years. Held that, as there were no circumstances by which plaintiff could be held to have knowledge, before the actual discovery of the mistake, the action was brought in time.

2. BOUNDARIES—LINES ESTABLISHED BY UNITED STATES SURVEYOR.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, the boundaries of a rancho established by the final survey of the United States surveyor general, approved by the government, and incorporated into the patent, and followed in establishing a partition of the rancho, should be taken as correct.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; F. E. SPENCER, Judge.

Edward J. Breen, plaintiff, sued A. J. Donnelly and E. T. Donnelly, executors of James Dunne, deceased, and others, to correct a mistake made by James Dunne in a deed in 1867.

T. H. Laine, W. Matthews, and Montgomery & Ryland, for appellants. S. F. Leib and Briggs & Hawkins, for appellees.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to reform a deed. Judgment went for plaintiff in the court below; and from the judgment and order denying a new trial defendants appeal.

The following are the material facts: On and before December 18, 1867, Patrick Breen and James Dunne were the owners in fee and in possession, as tenants in common, of a large tract of land containing over 48,000 acres, and known as the "Sobrante de San Lorenzo Rancho," each owning an equal undivided interest. Prior to said last-named day they had agreed upon a partition of the rancho, to be accomplished by ascertaining a line drawn from the easterly to the westerly side of the land, which should divide it exactly into two halves or equal parts, and interchanging deeds of conveyance so that each would own a half in severalty. To this end they had employed one Smith, reputed and believed by them to be an honest, competent, and skillful surveyor, to run said line, who had reported that he had surveyed and established a certain line which divided the rancho into two equal areas as contemplated. This line was marked by stakes, and was afterwards designated for some distance by a plow furrow. Both Breen and Dunne were informed by Smith, and believed, that he had correctly computed the areas on each side of said line, and that they were equal. Thereupon, in accordance with their agreements, on the said eighteenth day of December, 1867, said Breen executed and delivered to said Dunne a deed of conveyance of the north-east half of said rancho, and said Dunne in like manner conveyed to said Breen the south-east half, and in each deed the description by metes and bounds included said line run as aforesaid by said Smith as a boundary line. The land was then, and ever since has been used solely for the purpose of grazing; and after the date of said deeds each party occupied separately his supposed part of said rancho as divided and designated by said Smith line. Said Patrick Breen died in December, 1868, and said James Dunne died in 1874. The plaintiff, Edward J. Breen, as heir and purchaser from other heirs, is the successor in interest of said Patrick Breen, deceased; and the defendants, as heirs and personal representatives, are the successors in interest of said James Dunne, deceased. The parties to this action have occupied said land in like manner as it had been occupied by said Patrick Breen and James Dunne in their lifetime.

As a matter of fact, the said line run by said Smith was not correct. It left in the north-east part deeded to said Dunne 1,110.64 acres more land than was in the south-east part deeded to said Breen. This mistake was not discovered until about June, 1880. Its discovery came about in this way: The state constitution adopted in 1879, and statutes passed under it, required large tracts of land to be sectionized where the same had not been done by the United States government, for purposes of assessment and taxation; and plaintiff, for the purpose of complying with this requirement, employed a surveyor to sectionize his land, who, for the first time, discovered and made known the said mistake made by said Smith. Upon the discovery of the mistake, plaintiff requested defendants to rectify it, and they refused to do so.

This case has been argued by counsel for appellants upon the theory that there should be applied to it the rule that where coterminous owners of land establish a boundary line between them, and acquiesce in its correctness during the period of statutory limitation, such line cannot afterwards, be disturbed. Such is certainly the general rule in actions of ejectment, to quiet title, etc., although it is, perhaps, not definitely settled to be the rule, even in those cases when there has been a mutual mistake. See Sheils v. Haley, 61 Cal. 157, and Smith v. Robarts, 9 Pac. Rep. 104. But this is an action to reform a deed,—to correct a mistake in a written instrument, and make it conform to the real intent of the parties. That a court of equity has power to correct such a mistake in a proper case is of course beyond doubt, and that the facts here make a proper case is equally clear. It is established beyond doubt that the two tenants in common intended to convey by deed to each other the half of a tract of land, and that by pure mistake the deed sought to be reformed failed to convey such half. There is no question here of innocent purchasers. Neither are there any equities by reason of defendants having put any improvements on the land not included in the deed. They have had the benefit of the use of the land for pasturage since the date of the deed, and have not expended upon it any money whatever. In good conscience, they ought to correct the mistake; and their only defense is founded upon the naked plea of the statute of limitations.

But we think that the action was commenced in time. Section 338, Code Civil Proc., enumerates the kinds of actions which must be commenced within three years; and subdivision 4 of said section is as follows: "An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. The cause of action in such case not to be deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake." In the case at bar the discovery of the mistake was not made until 1880, at which time the cause of action "is deemed to have accrued." The action was commenced in less than two years afterwards. It was therefore commenced in time, unless the circumstances were such that plaintiff ought to have known the mistake, and therefore should be held in law to have had knowledge of it before the time of its actual discovery. But we think that there were no circumstances from which he should be charged with such knowledge. After the partition line had been run by a surveyor believed to be competent and honest, and who had been specially employed for that purpose, there was nothing to excite the suspicion of either party that such line did not divide the rancho into two equal parts. Looking at, or walking or riding over, or using for grazing purposes, a tract of land containing over 24,000 acres, would not indicate to any one that it was 500 acres more or less than the half of another tract containing over 48,000 acres.

The court below did not err in holding that, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, the boundaries of the rancho established by the final survey of the United States surveyor general, made under the direction of and approved by the United States government, which was incorporated into the patent, and followed by said Smith in fixing said partition line, may be taken to be correct.

Judgment and order affirmed.

In re LETELLIER'S ESTATE. (No. 11,240.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 12, 1887.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—POWER TO PETITION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE.

An executor is not authorized to petition for partial distribution of an estate under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1653, 1660, providing for it upon petition by "heirs, devisees, and legatees," after the lapse of four months from the issuance of letters testamentary or of execution, and that notice of such application must be served upon the executor or administrator personally.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; N. HAMILTON, Judge.

Alexander Letellier died in the county of Alameda on the twentieth day of April, 1884, leaving a will in the French language, which was, on the twelfth day of May, 1884, admitted to probate, and letters testamentary issued to Peter Portois, the executor named therein. The will contains eight specific pecunary legacies, aggregating $1,100, and a devise of real estate and the dwelling-house thereon to Eugenie Couturier. On the thirteenth day of December, 1884, the executor filed a petition for the distribution to Madame Couturier of the real estate mentioned in the devise, which showed that the condition of the estate would make it impossible to pay any of the pecuniary legacies, but that petitioner did not know of any objection to making distribution of the real estate to the devisee. The hearing of this petition was set for December 29, 1884, on which day one Eugenie A. R. Letellier filed objections to the granting of the petition, in which she set forth that she was the widow of the deceased, and that deceased also left him surviving three children, none of whom were mentioned in the will, and all of whom, as well as the widow, resided in France.

On the matter being reached for hearing on the twenty-ninth December, 1884, the contestant appeared in court, by her attorney at law, and moved for a continuance of the hearing for such reasonable time, not exceeding two months, as would enable the heirs to present proofs of their heirship, and in support of such motion read in evidence a power of attorney from the widow to Mr. E. J. Le Breton, and another power from six persons, claiming to be children of the deceased; and also a document in the French language, known as an "Acte de Notoriete," and purporting to contain the declarations of two witnesses as to the marriage of the deceased with the contestant, and that the children were the issue thereof. The court thereupon announced its ruling upon the motion for a continuance in the following language: "This is not sufficient proof of heirship. The will leaves the property in question to Eugenie Couturier. Your remedy is by contesting the will. If there are any lawful heirs the decree setting apart and distributing the property will, in that event, be inoperative. I cannot see any objection to a distribution at this stage,"—and denied the motion for a continuance, and made the decree of distribution. Subsequently, the contestant moved for a new trial, which motion was denied. Appeals have been taken, both from the decree of distribution and the order denying the motion for a new trial.

Stanly, Story & Hayes, for appellants. Geo. E. Lawrence and E. J. & J. H. Moore, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is an appeal from a decree of partial distribution, made upon the petition of the executor. The provision of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "Sec. 1658. At any time after the lapse of four months from the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration, any heir, devisee, or legatee may present his petition to the court for the legacy or share of the estate to which he is entitled, to be given to him upon his giving bonds, with security for the payment of his proportion of the debts of the estate." And the next section provides that "notice of the application must be given to the executor or administrator personally, and to all other persons interested," etc. These sections are the only ones authorizing partial distribution to be made. It seems to us that they do not contemplate a petition by the executor, to whom it is of no concern whether an heir, devisee, or legatee gets paid in advance or not. There being no authority in the statute for the proceedings taken in the court below, they were unauthorized, and should be set aside. We think this point arises upon the record, whether the decree of partial distribution is to be considered as a judgment or as an order. We therefore advise that the decree appealed from be reversed and the cause remanded.

WEIMMER et al. v. SUTHERLAND. (No. 12,039.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 18, 1887.)

JUDGMENTS—BY DEFAULT—WHAT CONSTITUTES—SETTING ASIDE BY JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 859, provides that justices' courts can set aside judgments by default within 10 days. Defendants were served, and filed an answer, in a suit before a justice, but were not present on the day of trial, not having received notice from the justice, and judgment was rendered against them. Held, that this was not a judgment by default, and an order setting it aside was error.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

James Sutherland, plaintiff, sued E. Weimмер and wife, defendants, before A. A. Smith, justice, and obtained judgment, which the justice set aside. Plaintiff took a writ of certiorari from the superior court, which declared the order vacating the judgment void, and defendants appealed.

W. D. Grady, for appellants. Tupper & Tupper and Babcock & Mickle, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Fresno county, rendered upon a writ of certiorari directed to a justice's court. James Sutherland (the respondent therein) brought an action in the justice's court of A. A. Smith (appellant) against E. Weimмер and wife, (also appellants herein.) In said action in the justice's court, the defendants therein (Weimмер and wife) appeared, and made a motion to quash the summons. The motion was denied, and they then demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled; and then, on June 22, 1886, they filed an answer. On July 9th the case was set for trial for July 19, 1886, at 1 o'clock P. M. At the last-named time the defendants failed to appear, and the court, after having waited one hour, proceeded with the trial; and after hearing witnesses, and taking evidence on the issues made by the pleadings, rendered judgment for the plaintiff thereon, (Sutherland.) On July 26th defendants, upon affidavits, moved the court to "vacate and set aside" the judgment, upon the ground that defendants had no notice of the time of trial. The hearing of the motion was continued to September 10th, when the court found that defendants had not received notice of the day of trial, (when notice seems to have been deposited by the justice in the United States mail, directed to defendants,) and thereupon entered an order "that said judgment is hereby set aside and vacated." It does not appear that plaintiff had notice of this motion, or was present when it was heard. On the application of the plaintiff, Sutherland, the superior court granted a writ of certiorari to review the action of said justice vacating said judgment. On the seventh day of January, 1887, after a full hearing, both parties being present by counsel, the superior court rendered judgment that the said order of said justice's court vacating the said judgment in said court was void, and of no effect, etc. From this judgment of the superior court this appeal is taken.

Cal. Rep. 12-15 P.—74

Justices' courts have no power to review their own judgments, unless by some method expressly provided by law. In Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 269, it was held that a justice of the peace could not vacate a judgment rendered by him; and that an order attempting to do so, not being appealable, should be annulled on certiorari. However, at the time Winter v. Fitzpatrick was decided, the civil practice act provided that only those sections embraced in the title which prescribed the proceedings in justices' courts, and such other sections as were specially mentioned in that title, should be applicable to justices' courts. At the present time, section 925, Code Civil Proc., is as follows: "Justices' courts being courts of peculiar and limited jurisdiction, only those provisions of this Code which are in their nature applicable to the organization, powers, and course of proceedings in justices' courts, or which have been made applicable by special provisions in this title, are applicable to justices' courts, and the proceedings therein." It is therefore argued that Winter v. Fitzpatrick has no bearing on the present case; and that by virtue of said section 925 all the broad powers granted to courts of record by section 473, Code Civil Proc., may be exercised by justices' courts. The language of section 925 is certainly of difficult construction; and cases might well arise where it would be extremely doubtful whether or not certain acts of a justice's court were justified by its provisions. It will be observed, however, that the section expressly preserves the notion of the "peculiar and limited jurisdiction" of these courts; and, moreover, that its general character is negative, rather than positive. The grant is somewhat in the shape of a parenthesis in a clause of limitation. If, therefore, that part of the Code which expressly deals with proceedings in justices' courts, prescribes the powers of those courts in relation to a general subject about which the powers of courts of record are expressly prescribed in another part, then we think that the powers of the justices' courts with respect to that subject are to be looked for in the former, and not in the latter, provision.

Now, the power in question here, i. e., the power to relieve from a judgment taken through surprise, excusable neglect, etc., is expressly given to courts of record by section 473, and is expressly given to justices' courts by section 859. Both sections relate to the same general subject. But while section 473 gives this power to relieve, in general terms and in all cases, within six months in some instances, and one year in others, after judgment, section 859 confines the power in justices' courts to cases of a "judgment by default," and limits the time to "ten days after the entry of the judgment." We think, therefore, that the latter section is determinative of the question here involved, and not section 473. And, of course, in the case at bar, there was no "judgment by default." A default occurs when a defendant fails to answer or demur as described in sections 850 and 871 et seq. Not being a judgment by default, the defendants could have appealed to the superior court; and, if aggrieved, that was their remedy.

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C. J.; TEMPLE, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCKINSTRY, J.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I concur, but express no opinion upon the question as to the proper remedy. Section 850, Code Civil Proc., provides that, "when all parties served with process shall have appeared, * * * the justice must fix a day for the trial of said cause, and notify the plaintiff, and the defendants who have appeared, thereof." If this requirement be jurisdictional, and the time for appeal elapsed before defendant had notice that the case had been set for trial, a trial had, and judgment entered against him, it would seem to be a harsh rule which would preclude him from showing upon certiorari that he had never had any notice of the trial; because it must be remembered the justice is not required to enter in his docket any minute of the service of notice of the time of trial, nor is he required to file any proof of such service, (section 911, Code Civil Proc.,) and there is nothing in the record, therefore, to show that judgment has been entered against the defendant without a hearing, or notice of hearing.

STEELE v. PACIFIC COAST RY. CO. (No. 9,884.)

(Supreme Court of California. December 15, 1887.)

1. RAILROAD COMPANIES—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—FIRES—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO OTHER FIRES.

In an action for damages from a fire caused by sparks from a locomotive, the court instructed the jury that, if they found from the evidence that defendant's engines had dropped fire at other times before or after the time alleged in the complaint, such facts should be considered in determining the negligence of the defendant. The defendant objected to the instruction, on the ground that it did not set a limit as to time. Held that, as the jury could only know whether the defendant's engines had dropped fire at other times by the evidence, the range of time that was allowable to be considered by the jury should be determined when the testimony was introduced.

2. SAME—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES—ACCUMULATION OF GRASS ON RIGHT OF WAY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for damages from a fire caused by sparks from a locomotive, the complaint contained two counts of negligent acts,—negligence in running the engine, and negligence in allowing dry grass and hay to accumulate on defendant's right of way. The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that, if they found that defendant's engine had all the best appliances for preventing the escape of fire, then defendant was not guilty of negligence in the escape of the fire, nor liable therefor, unless it escaped through the negligence of defendant in managing the machinery. Held that, as the instruction ignored entirely the question of negligence in allowing dry grass and weeds to accumulate on the right of way, it was properly modified so as to distinguish the two questions.¹

3. SAME—TRIAL—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad company for damages from a fire caused by sparks from a locomotive, a witness for plaintiff testified that another fire had occurred at a certain time prior to the one complained of. He was then asked if he knew of any fire that had occurred between the two. Defendant objected, as irrelevant and immaterial and too remote. Held, that the objection was too general, and was properly overruled.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; D. S. GREGORY, Judge.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

V. A. Gregg, for plaintiff. R. B. Treat and J. M. Wilcox, for defendant.

SEARLS, C. J. Action to recover of defendant the value of a lot of hay and grain destroyed by fire on August 7, 1884, claimed to have been set on fire by the negligence of the defendant in using its railroad locomotive, and in allowing dry grass and inflammable materials to accumulate along its right of way. Judgment passed for plaintiff; from which, and from an order denying it a new trial, defendant appeals.

At the trial, there was evidence tending to prove that defendant was a corporation, authorized to run and operate a railroad, and lawfully engaged in that occupation, and was such at all times mentioned in the complaint; that David Howell, on or about the seventh day of August, 1884, was the owner and possessed of a stack of unthrashed wheat in said county, adjoining the right of way of the railroad of defendant in the field; that the stubble from which said grain was cut was continuous upon the soil of said field from the stack of wheat to the right of way of defendant's railroad, as were grasses and weeds, also, that were then dry, and capable of communicating fire; that defendant had before August 7, 1884, permitted wild oats, weeds, squirrel grass, and other grasses to become dry and inflammable on its right of way, continuous between its track and the field of Howell adjoining, and had cut the same, and had placed it in small bundles or cocks on its right of way, and near the fence inclosing the field upon which said stack of wheat then was, and had allowed it to remain there three or four weeks prior to the fire; that defendant caused a swath of said wild oats, etc., to be cut and left lying close up to its track, and adjacent to the ends of the ties upon which its rails were laid, and that it had become dry and inflammable; that the stubble from which said wild oats, etc., on said right of way had been cut was left standing, and had, at the date last set forth, and for some time prior thereto, become dry and inflammable; that said stack of wheat had been cut and placed in the field about three weeks prior to August 7, 1884; that defendant had on at least two different times prior to August 7, 1884, and in that year, attempted to burn the grass, weeds, etc., cut and lying upon its right of way, but was unable to do so because of the dampness of the same; that where the right of way of the defendant adjoins the field of said Howell as aforesaid, during all the year from about April 1st to about December 1st of each year, the prevailing winds are from the south-west and west, the track of defendant running nearly east and west at that point; that by reason of the lay of the country in that vicinity the winds generally blow very hard each day, between the dates aforesaid, between the hours of about 10 A. M. and sundown, but the weather was calm at this point for about a week prior to August 7, 1884; that in the mornings of nearly each day prior to the fifth of August, 1884, fogs were prevailing in that vicinity; that in the mornings between the dates when said grass, etc., was cut on the defendant's right of way, as set forth, and August 5, 1884, the said grasses, etc., were too wet to burn, and later in the day the winds prevailed to such an extent as to render it hazardous to burn the same, without danger of the fire escaping and getting beyond the control of the persons having charge of the same, and into the fields adjoining the right of way; that during the summer season of the year 1884 defendant caused a great portion of its right of way in other localities, but not in this, to be burned over, and most of the inflammable vegetation removed therefrom, employing servants for that purpose especially, expending thereabout money to the amount of $3,000 or thereabout; that defendant's track, where it adjoined said Howell's field, is on an up grade, going south-easterly, of about 90 to 100 feet to the mile; that locomotives emit more sparks and drop more fire going up grades than on levels or down grades; that a fire originated on August 7, 1884, on defendant's right of way, between the track and the fence inclosing Howell's said field; that said fire spread to and was communicated by vegetation in a dry state to the field of said Howell, and thence across the same to his said stack of wheat, and the same was destroyed by fire, said stack being about 200 feet from defendant's right of way; that from thence the fire was communicated to a field belonging to plaintiff, upon which was stubble and weeds in a dry state, and destroyed a lot of hay lying in said field; that said hay had been cut by plaintiff, and allowed to remain in his field, adjoining the field of said Howell, in cocks, since the month of May, 1884; that some rain fell in June and July of the year 1884 at this point; that within five minutes prior to the said fire the passenger train of defendant passed on its right of way, using fire on the locomotive thereof, and ascending the grade, hauling seven loaded cars, the locomotive pulling said train being No. 2, and graded at that amount of cars for its load; that said engine No. 2 had on several occasions emitted fire, prior to August 7, 1884, and was the worst engine belonging to defendant, and used on its road, to emit sparks and fire; that on said August 7, 1884, said engine was run by a competent and careful engineer in charge thereof, and was provided with the most approved appliances to arrest and prevent the escape of fire in both its stack and ash-pan; that all the appliances upon said engine were at that time in good condition; that an examination of the condition of the engine aforesaid was made on the same day said fire occurred, and within an hour thereafter, and its machinery and appliances for the prevention of the escape of fire from it were found to be in good condition; that said engine was on said August 7, 1884, provided with the best appliances made use of on other roads, in this state for the prevention of the escape of fire therefrom; that, in going up said grade by the engines of defendant, fire had been seen to escape from them prior to August 7, 1884; that the hay in plaintiff's field had been allowed to become dry and inflammable; that said Howell knew of the condition of the right of way of defendant, and the lay of the land adjoining his said field, and the prevailing course of the winds during the year 1884, and prior to August 7, 1884; that no fire had ever been communicated to the fields along the line of defendant's right of way in the vicinity of the one above set forth during the year 1884; that no fire had ever been communicated or originated along the defendant's right of way from any of its locomotives for a period of about two years, except once during that period, to-wit, about two years since, when it burned a field adjoining the field of Howell; that on said August 7, 1884, said engine No. 2 was being carefully and skillfully managed by the engineer thereof; that neither Howell nor plaintiff, in the year 1884, prior to August 7, 1884, and after they had harvested their said crop, ever dug up the soil, or removed the vegetation therefrom, on their lands, or took any other precaution or measures on their land to prevent the communication of fire to their fields from the right of way of defendant, except to notify an employe of defendant of the danger, which they did some three or four weeks before the seventh day of August; that the engines of defendant run on its road in the month of August, 1884, were all supplied with the same appliances to prevent the escape or dropping of fire as said engine No. 2; that said Howell assigned his claim against the defendant, prior to the commencement of this action, to the plaintiff.

Defendants assign the giving of the fourth instruction by the court as error. It is as follows: "If you find from the evidence that defendant's engines emitted or dropped fire at other times, before or after the occurrence of this fire alleged in the complaint, these will be circumstances or facts to be considered and weighed by you in determining the question of whether the fire was dropped or emitted by the engine by the negligence or carelessness of defendant." The objection urged against the instruction is that it is not limited as to time, place, or the particular engine by which the fire in question may be supposed to have been communicated. The limitations which appellant claims should have been included in the instruction, it seems to us, are those which are to be applied to the introduction of testimony on the subject, and were not necessary to an instruction. The jury could only know that defendant's engines had "emitted or dropped fire at other times, before or after the occurrence of this fire," from the evidence, and whatever range was proper on that subject in admitting evidence was a question to be determined when the testimony was offered. It has been held in this state, in like cases, that testimony of like character is admissible. This being so, the instruction is proper. As to the proximity of time and place to which the proofs must be confined, questions must arise which can only be determined in view of the circumstances as the testimony is offered.

The court gave the fourth instruction asked by defendant, but added to it a modification, to which defendant excepted. The instruction as given is as follows, the portion in brackets being the modification as added by the court: "If you believe from the evidence that the damages claimed by the plaintiff, if any has been sustained, were caused by fire escaping from defendant's engine, and find, further, that the engine was in good order, properly constructed, and supplied with the best appliances in use to prevent the escape of fire, then the defendant was not guilty of negligence in such escape of the fire, and is not liable for the escape of the fire, unless it escaped through the negligence of the agents or servants of the defendant in managing or running the engine machinery. [But this instruction applies only to negligence by the escape of fire from the engine, and not to negligence—if such there was—in maintaining, suffering, or permitting dry grass or hay or other inflammable substance to remain on its track or right of way, if it did so.]” A reference to the complaint will show that plaintiff counted upon two separate acts of negligence on the part of defendant, viz.: (1) Its negligence in conducting and running its engine whereby the fire escaped therefrom, and caused the injury complained of; and (2) negligence of defendant in cutting and leaving upon the ground upon its right of way, near and against its railroad track, the dry and inflammable grass, weeds, wild oats, etc., which had grown on said right of way, whereby the fire from its engine was communicated to such dry materials, and thence to plaintiff's property, etc. From this it will be seen that defendant may have exercised due care and caution in the construction and management of its engine, so that no liability would attach to it on account of fire escaping therefrom, and yet have been guilty of such negligence in leaving its right of way so incumbered with inflammable material as to render it liable. It was in view of this dual question of negligence that the court added, and as we think properly, the portion of the instruction in brackets.

The fifth instruction asked by defendant was properly refused for a like reason. It limited defendant's liability to negligence in the construction or management of its engine, and wholly ignored the question of negligence in leaving material adjoining its road.

There was no sufficient evidence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff to call for the instruction asked on that point by defendant. Plaintiff and his grantor had a right to cut, harvest, stack, and retain their hay and wheat upon their own land in the usual and customary manner, during the summer season, without being amenable to the charge of negligence for so doing; nor were they bound to plow, remove, or segregate the stubble left upon their land after gathering their crops, to avoid a like implication.

The instructions given by the court on behalf of plaintiff and defendant stated the law of the case clearly and properly.

The only other question necessary to be considered relates to the admission of testimony. A witness for plaintiff was asked as follows: Question. “Do you know of any fire occurring upon the right of way of this defendant subsequent to the fire you have spoken of, and prior to the one that occurred that destroyed that stack?” To which the defendant objected, on the grounds that it was irrelevant and immaterial, and being too remote. The court overruled the objection, and permitted the witness to answer the question; to which ruling of the court the defendant then and there duly excepted, and the witness answered as follows: Answer. “About two years before this fire of mine, there was a fire broke out on the place adjoining me, a little west,—before the fire of the seventh of August,—burned quite a large country.” The testimony given at the trial is not set out in the transcript. It is apparent, however, from the tenor of the above question, that the witness had already spoken of a fire upon defendant's right of way prior to the one in question in this action. To this question, or the answer thereto, no objection is apparent. He is then asked as to his knowledge of other fires subsequent to the one spoken of, and prior to the one under consideration. If the question was open to objection, it was because the time was not limited to some recent period. Had the answer shown a knowledge of other fires within a day or two of the one in question, manifestly, under our decisions, and upon the weight of authority, it would have been proper. Henry v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 176; Butcher v. Railroad Co., 67 Cal. 518, 8 Pac. Rep. 174; Field v. Railroad Co., 32 N. Y. 339; Sheldon v. Railroad Co., 14 N. Y. 218; Shear. & R. Neg. 333; Gandy v. Railroad Co., 30 Iowa, 422. The objection that the question was "irrelevant and immaterial" was too general. It did not call the attention of the court to the point that the question, although proper within a limited range, was too broad in its scope, and might call for an answer covering too remote a period. An objection to testimony should specify the grounds of the objection. Winans v. Hassey, 48 Cal. 634; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489. Had a motion been made to strike out the answer, perhaps it should have been granted as being too remote, but none was made.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.
